Considerable stress is laid upon the fact by some witnesses that a majority of the managers at each poll were my supporters, and this seems to have had some weight with the committee. The answer to this is that, with three managers at each poll and with only two candidates for Congress, the majority of managers if they supported any one at all had to support either Mr. Buttz or me. It was natural for the managers at each poll on the part of the regular republicans to support Mr. Buttz, their candidate. It was equally as natural for the managers on the part of the independent republicans to support me. If the remaining managers representing the democrats supported me it is certainly not my fault, for I did not claim to be a democrat. It therefore hardly becomes a democratic committee, in the entire absence of all testimony to that effect, to assume that these democratic managers connived at or assented to fraud in order to elect me. And yet this is just what the committee have done.

But the charge of the committee goes even further. For not only were there democratic managers, but the United States district court appointed to each of these polls two supervisors, one selected by the regular republicans, the other by the democrats, and these representatives of Federal power and purity must have combined with the managers for the perpetration of this iniquitous fraud.

If this conclusion of the committee be true, the contestant had the completest opportunity to prove it specifically by calling the seventeen managers and seventeen supervisors appointed in his interest. But an examination of the record will show that of these thirty-four competent witnesses the contestant called but five, and these, with the exception of one, to whose testimony reference will be hereafter made, failed utterly to sustain the charge. On the contrary, the returns of the election at every poll were not only signed as correct by the managers appointed in the interest of Mr. Buttz, but their correctness was further indorsed by the supervisors appointed in his behalf.

EXAMINATION OF THE TESTIMONY.

Surely under these circumstances I may properly ask the attention of the House while I briefly sift the testimony upon which the committee have based their extraordinary conclusion. This testimony is contained in the evidence of thirty witnesses. Other witnesses were examined, but the committee have rejected their testimony as illegally taken. Now, out of these thirty witnesses, four—Washington, Montgomery, Drayton, and Driscoll—testify simply to certain matters that transpired at first precinct, ward 1; four others—McPherson, Relyea, Fosberry, and Wigg—bear evidence against the second precinct of the same ward, making no reference whatever to any other poll. Five more—Abrens, Simmons, Gurney, Saunders, and Bonum—testify to the conduct of the election at first precinct, ward 4. With the exception of Bonum, who makes a slight reference to another precinct, the testimony of these five witnesses relates exclusively to that one poll. Three more witnesses—Louis Dunneman, August Dunneman, and Pompey Virgin—testify exclusively to intimidation at ward 8, and of this intimidation I shall have something more to say hereafter. So that the testimony of these sixteen witnesses—more than half of the whole number examined—relates exclusively to the four precincts named. Now, admitting their evidence proves conclusively everything the witnesses assert—and this I by no means do admit—yet I maintain it can be used only as evidence to establish a certain state of facts against these four polls, and when the committee accept it as evidence against the remaining thirteen polls, they violate all the laws of evidence. If these witnesses have proved "repeating, bribery, intimidation, and violence" at these four polls to such an extent that it is impossible to purge them, then let these four polls be excluded from the count, and it would still leave me a large majority. But since these sixteen witnesses testify only to what came under their observation, the committee cannot assume the same state of facts at any other poll, for not one of these fifteen witnesses pretends to know anything but what occurred at their own polls, nearly all of them stating in their evidence that they were stationed at their respective polls all day, which fact alone would preclude them from knowing anything of what transpired at the other thirteen polls. I scarcely suppose the position assumed by me in regard to these witnesses is open to any dispute. If it is, I would like to have it contradicted now by either of the gentlemen who sign this report.

Now, this disposes of these sixteen witnesses for the present. We have left the testimony of fourteen more witnesses upon whose evidence the committee have thrown out the remaining thirteen polls. Just think of it; thirteen polls, containing the votes of over seventy-five hundred citizens, or more than two-thirds of the voters of the city of Charleston, rejected from the count, and the voters disfranchised upon the testimony of fourteen witnesses; about one for each poll. Again, of these fourteen witnesses the testimony of one, A. T. Stevens, relates only to ward 7; and the testimony of another, J. J. Lesesne, relates only to second precinct, ward 4. Neither of these two witnesses testifies to any transactions at any other polls. Both occupied positions at their respective polls which kept them there all day, and consequently their testimony can only be used as evidence against those two polls. While their testimony is utterly insufficient to reject those two polls, throw them out with the other four, and you still fail to overcome my majority.

Now, then, there remain twelve more witnesses whose testimony is of a more general character, some testifying as to two polls, some as to three, some as to four, and so on. But it is upon the testimony of these twelve witnesses that the committee have decided to reject the remaining eleven polls; for, bear it in mind that not one word in the testimony of the other eighteen witnesses relates in any way or manner to these eleven polls. Now, in rejecting the votes of eleven polls upon the evidence of only twelve witnesses, it is reasonable to suppose that the committee would have required not only testimony of the strongest character—not vague and general, but clear and specific—but that they would have further required witnesses of reasonable good character, men of veracity and respectability, men of whom if nothing good could be said at any rate nothing bad was known. Now let us see if they have done so. On the contrary, I assert without fear of contradiction that the committee have rejected these eleven polls upon the testimony of twelve of the vilest wretches that ever lived, and I will prove it without going outside of the evidence in this case.

GREEN, WHITING, AND BARING.

To begin with, take the three witnesses, Green, Whiting, and Baring. Compare their testimony, and you will ascertain that these three witnesses, giving testimony at different times, used the same language, word for word, letter for letter.

Testimony of A. W. Green.

Question. Did you observe any illegal voting or repeating of votes on that day? and, if so, state what you saw.

Answer. Yes; I saw George Grobson and seven others vote at the city-hall, first precinct, ward 1; and then the same eight went over to the court-house, first precinct, ward 2, and voted again. I then followed them, and they went to the second precinct, ward 1, and they voted again. They then went to the Palmetto engine-house, second precinct, ward 3, and there voted. I continued to follow them, and they went to the second precinct, ward 5, and there voted; and then they went to Eagle engine-house, first precinct, ward 5, and there voted; they then went to market-hall, first precinct, ward 3, and there voted; and they then went to the Washington engine-house, first precinct, ward 6, and they there voted.

Q. Are you sure that each of the eight men voted at each of the precincts named by you?

A. Yes; I am.

Q. What ticket did they vote?

A. They voted what was known as the Green or independent-republican ticket.

Q. Whose name was on that ticket for Congress?

A. E. W. M. Mackey; and each one of the eight men had the independent-republican ticket with his name on it pinned upon the lapel of his coat all the time they went around, and the same tickets in their hands.

Testimony of C. H. Whiting.

Question. Did you observe any illegal voting or repeating of votes on that day? and if so, state what you saw.

Answer. Yes; I saw George Grobson and seven others vote at the city-hall, first precinct, ward 1; and then the same eight persons went over to the court-house, first precinct, ward 2, and voted again. I then followed them, and they went to the second precinct, ward 1, and they there voted. They then went to the Palmetto engine-house, second precinct, ward 3, and there voted. I continued to follow them, and they went to the second precinct, ward 5, and there voted; and then they went to Eagle engine-house, first precinct, ward 5, and there voted; they then went to market-hall, first precinct, ward 3, and there voted; they then went to the Washington engine-house, first precinct, ward 6, and there voted.

Q. Are you sure that each of the eight men voted at each of the precincts named by you?

A. Yes; I am.

Q. What ticket did they vote?

A. They voted what was known as the Green or independent republican ticket.

Q. Whose name was on that ticket for Congress?

A. E. W. M. Mackey; and each one of the eight men had the independent republican ticket with his name on it pinned upon the lapel of his coat all the time they went around, and the same tickets in their hands.

Testimony of Joseph Baring.

Question. Did you observe any illegal voting or repeating of votes on that day? and, if so, state what what you saw.

Answer. Yes; I saw George Grobson and seven others vote at the city-hall, first precinct, ward 1; and then the same eight went over to the court-house, first precinct, ward 2, and voted again. I then followed them, and they went to the second precinct, ward 1, and they there voted again. They then went to the Palmetto engine-house, second precinct, ward 3, and there voted; I continued to follow them, and they went to the second precinct, ward 5, and there voted; and then they went to the Eagle engine-house, first precinct, ward 5, and there voted; they then went to market-hall, first precinct, ward 3, and there voted; they then went to the Washington engine-house, first precinct, ward 6, and there they voted.

Q. Are you sure that each of the eight men voted at each of the precincts named by you?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. What ticket did they vote?

A. They voted what was known as the Green or independent republican ticket.

Q. Whose name was on that ticket for Congress?

A. E. W. M. Mackey; and each one of the eight men had the independent republican ticket, with his name on it, pinned upon the lapel of his coat all the time they went around, and the same tickets in their hands.

Q. Do you know whether these eight men were paid for their votes; and, if so, by whom?

A. Yes; they were each of them paid by a man named George, who received the money in my presence from Major E. Willis.

Q. What position did Willis occupy that day?

A. He was a member of the rallying committee, and had charge of a large amount of the money raised to buy up the votes.

Q. Did you see him pay men for voting?

A. Yes; he had his pockets full of money, and paid off the crowd as they came up to vote.

Q. Do you know any of the persons by name whom he paid through the said George to vote? and, if so, name them.

A. Yes; Clarence Rose, William Levy, Tobey Hazell, Henry Hipp, E. S. Ferrett, and many others whose names I do not recollect.

Q. Are you acquainted with Charles H. Whiting; and, if so, was he with you on election day, and did he have the same opportunity of seeing the same as you testify to in this examination?

A. Yes; I am well acquainted with him and was with him on that day, and he saw all I have testified to in this examination.

Q. Do you know whether these eight men were paid for their votes; and, if so, by whom?

A. Yes; they were each of them paid by a man named George, who received the money in my presence from Major E. Willis.

Q. What position did Willis occupy that day?

A. He was a member of the raffying committee, and had charge of a large amount of the money raised to buy up votes.

Q. Did you see him pay men for voting?

A. Yes; he had his pockets full of money, and paid off the crowd as they came up to vote.

Q. Do you know any of the persons by name whom he paid through the said George to vote? and, if so, name them.

A. Yes; Clarence Rose, William Levy, Toby Hazell, Henry Hipp, E. S. Ferrett, and many others whose names I do not recollect.

Q. Are you acquainted with A. W. Green; and, if so, was he with you on election day, and did he have the same opportunity of seeing the same as you testify to in this examination?

A. Yes; I am well acquainted with A. W. Green, and he was with me on that day, and saw all I have testified to in this examination.

Q. Do you know whether these eight men were paid for their votes; and, if so, by whom?

A. Yes; they were each of them paid by a man named George, who received the money in my presence from Major E. Willis.

Q. What position did Willis occupy that day?

A. He was a member of the rallying committee, and had charge of a large amount of the money raised to buy up the votes.

Q. Did you see him pay men for voting?

A. Yes; he had his pockets full of money, and paid off the crowd as they came up to vote.

Q. Do you know any of the persons by name whom he paid through the said George to vote? and, if so, name them.

A. Yes; Clarence Rose, William Levy, Toby Hazell, Henry Hipp, E. J. Ferrett, and many others whose names I do not recollect.

Q. Are you acquainted with Charles H. Whiting and A. W. Green; and, if so, were they with you on election day, and did they have the same opportunity of seeing the same as you testify to in this examination?

A. Yes; I am well acquainted with them both, and was with them on that day, and they must have seen all I have testified to in this examination.

Is it possible for any reasonable man, accustomed to examine witnesses and to analyze testimony, to believe that this coincidence of language is natural? Green and Whiting were examined on the 15th of February, Baring on the 27th, twelve days later, and yet their testimony does not vary one word, except that Baring was not asked the last two questions propounded the other witnesses. One of two things is certain: either these three witnesses were thoroughly drilled before they were put on the stand, or their evidence was manufactured by the contestant with the connivance of the notary public. The latter theory I believe to be the correct one, for it will be noticed no cross-examination is attached to the testimony of these three witnesses, for no one was present to represent me during their examination, if such examination was ever held. That the evidence of these three witnesses was manufactured may be doubted by some upon the ground that the contestant would hardly be guilty of such an act. Wait a minute and see.

C. W. BUTTZ.

The contestant in this case is the same Mr. C. W. Buttz who was counsel for Hon. R. C. De Large in the contested-election case of Bowen vs. De Large in the Forty-second Congress. The Committee of Elections in that case used the following language in their report, which was signed by GEORGE W. MCCRARY, GEORGE F. HOAR, William M. Merrick, G. W. Hazelton, W. E. Arthur, and E. Y. Rice:

This case came on to be heard before the committee at the December session of 1871–'72. Mr. DeLarge then applied for a postponement and for leave to take further testimony, on the ground that the counsel employed by him to prepare his cause and take testimony in his behalf had possession of the evidence and refused to surrender the same to be used before the committee, and further that said counsel had been tampered with and bribed by said Bowen to act for him. The committee found both these allegations to be proved.

If further evidence is needed to prove that much of the testimony of the contestant was manufactured in the same way let them again compare the testimony of two other witnesses, Washington and Drayton, who in answer to the same queries used the same language word for word, except in answer to one query where Washington appears to have forgotten half of the answer.

The testimony of Green, Whiting, and Baring, with its wonderful similarity, if produced by a highly honorable man would hardly be accepted as evidence, but how much less worthy of belief is it when procured in his own interest by a man whom a few years ago this House convicted of the disgraceful charge that while acting as the attorney of a contestee he had been bribed and tampered with by the contestant of that contestee? The testimony of Green, Whiting, and Baring, instead of being the evidence of three distinct individuals, is clearly the evidence of one individual with three different signatures. All three swear to one and the same thing, namely, the repeating of eight men at eight different polls. The facts sworn to by them stands upon their testimony alone. No one else saw what they claim to have seen. And yet, unsupported by a single witness, this manufactured evidence is deemed sufficient to warrant the committee in throwing out eleven polls.

Had Mr. Buttz been content to remain as the contestant in this case I should have had nothing whatever to say about him, but since he has made himself a witness in his own case, he must share the fate of the other witnesses. I have undertaken to prove that the twelve witnesses upon whose evidence the committee have decided to throw out eleven polls are all unworthy of belief. Mr. Buttz is one of those twelve, and as such I am speaking of him. His evidence, however, amounts to very little; really it ought to have been classed with the evidence of those five men which relates exclusively to ward 4, precinct 1. To the throwing out of this poll I have already stated I have no objections, though I do not think the evidence warrants it. The rest of his evidence, therefore, which is used to assist in throwing out eleven precincts, consists in one case of repeating at the first precinct, ward 3. The following extract from his evidence, which constitutes all that is left of it, is nothing more than his opinion—the opinion of a defeated candidate:

I conscientiously believe that not more than 6,500 voters deposited the 10,500 votes as returned by the board of commissioners of elections as having been cast in this city, the difference being made up of illegal and repeated votes.

What Mr. Buttz "conscientiously believes" is no evidence. He must prove it. If this is evidence, then it was unnecessary for him to take any testimony at all, for his notice of protest furnishes stronger evidence than this, and no doubt he "believes" all that is contained in his protest.

L. J. TAYLOR.

If Mr. Buttz's opinion as to how many votes were actually cast is to affect the issue, then we must contradict him with his own witness, Taylor, who swears that the 10,500 votes were cast by 7,000 voters, thus contradicting Mr. Buttz, who swears they were cast by only 6,500 voters. Is not such testimony simply ridiculous? And yet it is upon such evidence the committee have decided to throw out these eleven precincts. If not thrown out upon this testimony then there is no evidence at all against these precincts. All Taylor knows about the election is contained in the following query and answer:

Q. Did you notice anything particularly regarding the election on that day?
A. I did; I went to the different polling precincts throughout the city on that day, and closely observed what transpired in regard to the purchasing and repeating of votes by the Green-Mackey party. I am satisfied that there was more illegal voting at that election on that day, and more bribery and corruption used on that day, than at any previous general election within my knowledge. I saw William Johnson pay H. H. Rodgers $2.50 to vote the Green-Mackey, or independent republican party's ticket, at second precinct, ward 6. I tried to have both Johnson and Rodgers arrested, but neither Brown nor Dickerson could do so for fear of personal injury, from the violent threats made against them and me by the independent republican party. I saw and know that it was impossible to have any of the repeating voters or purchasers of votes arrested, because the city government and the police force were working openly in their favor and in the interest of the independent republican ticket, and would not interfere or make any arrest of any of those parties. I do not conscientiously believe that there were more than 7,000 voters or persons that voted the 10,500 votes returned as having been the number of votes cast on that day in the city. I know positively of many voters who did not go out of their houses or vote at all, and of some who returned to their homes without voting at all for fear of bodily harm and on account of the threats made against any one who would vote the union republican ticket or interfere with the Green-Mackey party's repeaters and purchasers of votes for the independent republican ticket.

W. H. THOMPSON.

Another one of these twelve witnesses is W. H. Thompson, and his testimony is cited in full in the report of the committee in support of their action. Hence I shall examine it very thoroughly. Thompson in his testimony attempts to prove the following facts:

First. That there were intimidation and bribery at the first precinct, ward 1. He swears to no specific instance, gives the name of no one that was intimidated or bribed, but simply states in a general manner that there was much bribery and intimidation.

Second. That the manager at second precinct, ward 1, was drunk, in consequence of which no objection was made to anybody voting who wanted to.

Third. That there was repeating at first precinct, ward 3.

Fourth. That there was violence at first precinct, ward 4.

Fifth. That Major Willis was bribing voters at second precinct, ward 4.

Sixth. That there was intimidation at ward 8.

Seventh. That there was bribery at certain other precincts.

Now it will be noticed that with the exception of the third and seventh points all of his testimony refers to the six polls already covered by the testimony of the first eighteen witnesses. With regard to the six polls I have already said throw them out and my majority is still unaffected. Therefore this portion of his testimony cannot possibly be used as evidence against the other eleven polls. The balance of his testimony alleges repeating at first precinct, ward 3 and bribery at all the precincts in wards 5, 6, 7, and 8. His testimony on the latter point is so remarkable that I will quote it in full:

I went to the different precincts in wards 5, 6, 7, and 8, and at each of them I saw money freely paid by the partisans of the Green-Mackey ticket.

Now, then, is this sweeping statement, contained in one brief sentence, really to be regarded as evidence against the votes of those four wards, constituting one-half of the city? If so, elections are utterly useless, for such testimony can be procured to set aside elections as fast as they are held. This evidence is nothing more than the declaration of a disappointed candidate, for it must be borne in mind that the witness, W. H. Thompson, was the candidate for State senator on the defeated ticket, and we know how usual it is for all disappointed aspirants, when defeated by the people, to attribute their defeat to fraud and bribery on the part of their opponent. Certainly the two distinguished lawyers who sign the report will hardly contend that such a general statement of a defeated candidate, even when made under oath, is to be considered as sufficient evidence for the rejection of the entire vote of four wards, comprising seven polls. If Thompson's testimony be true then the inquiry naturally follows how is it that Mr. Thompson, with a full knowledge of all these facts, failed to contest the election of his opponent, but to this day has allowed that opponent to retain his seat in the South Carolina senate without any attempt on his part to unseat him? In view of Mr. Thompson's testimony this fact is still more surprising when it is remembered that the majority of the South Carolina senate are men elected on the same ticket with Mr. Thompson. The only inference is that Mr. Thompson knew he could not sustain this declaration before any tribunal at home, and that he had a greater respect for the intelligence of the election committee of the South Carolina senate than he had for the Committee of Elections of the United States House of Representatives. Testimony which the latter committee have received he did not attempt to impose upon the former.

In connection with Mr. Thompson's failure to contest the election of his own opponent, the same fact is true of all the other defeated candidates on Buttz's ticket. In Charleston County, on the same ticket with Mr. Buttz were placed the names of eighteen candidates for representative in the Legislature of South Carolina, all of whom were defeated, some, however, by a smaller majority than Mr. Buttz. The eighteen representatives who were elected ran on the same ticket with me, received the same votes, and were elected by the same majority. They still hold their seats in the Legislature, although upon the meeting of that body in November, 1874, notice was given on behalf of the defeated candidates on Buttz's ticket that a protest would be filed against the election of the eighteen members for Charleston County, and though such protest was filed, yet no attempt was made to sustain it. The contestants virtually abandoned it for the want of evidence, and finally, on the 23d January, 1875, the committee on privileges and elections submitted the following report, the resolution appended thereto being adopted without any opposition:

In the case of the contest of the seats of the members from Charleston County, the committee on privileges and elections beg leave to respectfully report the following resolution:

"Whereas the contestants, being duly notified, failed to appear, by counsel or otherwise, before the committee to substantiate the allegations set forth in their protest: Therefore

"Be it resolved, That the contest be dismissed, and that the present sitting members be declared legally entitled to their seats."—Journal house of representatives of the State of South Carolina, regular session, 1874–'75, page 306.

Now, it must be remembered that the legislative candidates who were defeated with Mr. Buttz would have had their case tried before a house of representatives containing an overwhelming majority of their political friends not only willing but glad to seat them; hence their absolute failure to prove or even attempt to prove their protest can only be explained upon the theory that the only witnesses to be found in support of their protest were the witnesses who have testified for Mr. Buttz, and that, the character of these witnesses being so well known at home, the legislative contestants were unwilling to insult the intelligence of any tribunal there by presenting to it the evidence of such witnesses.

Now I appeal to the common sense, to the practical political sagacity of every member of this House, that if this election was the mass of fraud and corruption that has shocked the virtuous sensitiveness of the Election Committee, is it reasonable to suppose that the members of the Legislature elected on the ticket with me would have been allowed to retain their seats in that body? And yet at home, where the facts of this election were every-day history, known to every man in the State, the results remain undisturbed. It has been reserved for the committee of this House to discover that the election in Charleston was so tainted with fraud and corruption that it "ought not to be sanctioned or tolerated."

CORNELIUS M'HENRY.

Cornelius McHenry, a constable of the court of which Mr. Buttz is the solicitor, is another of the twelve witnesses whose testimony I am now sifting. To him I barely refer, however, as his testimony is of little or no consequence. With the exception of the first precinct, third ward, it relates exclusively to two of the first four polls to which I have already alluded. The balance of his testimony relates to repeating at one poll only of the eleven I am now discussing.

BURKE AND FOSTER.

This disposes of seven of the twelve witnesses. The evidence of five more remains to be examined. Before taking them up in detail, I may as well state that all of them are repeaters, and according to their own evidence they have all committed gross outrages upon the law, for which two of them, Burke and Foster, were convicted, and the evidence of their conviction is found in the printed record. The three, however, who have never been tried or convicted deserved to be convicted much more than the two who really were. The evidence of the two who were convicted is of so little importance in connection with the throwing out of the votes of eleven polls that I will first consider their testimony. Burke simply swears to one fact, namely, that he voted twice, not being a citizen, and that he was paid $1 each time for his vote. One of these votes was cast at second precinct, ward 1, which is included in the four polls first disposed of. His other vote was cast at first precinct, ward 3. Foster, the other convict, testifies to his having voted at three polls with three other men and at one poll with four men. For this little service they received $1 apiece each time they voted. Two of the polls at which they voted are included in the four to which I have so frequently alluded as being the polls to which almost the entire mass of this evidence refers, and as being the only polls affected by this testimony. The other polls at which Foster and his little gang voted are first precinct, second ward, and first precinct, third ward, two of the eleven now under discussion.

The testimony of Burke and Foster may be true, and if so it only proves a few cases of repeating, a thing which it is almost impossible to prevent entirely at elections in large cities. In considering the evidence of these men I am reminded that, notwithstanding the number of illegal votes alleged by the contestant, these two men are the only persons he has caused to be arrested for all this alleged repeating, bribery, intimidation, and violence. Is not this fact alone sufficient to discredit all these charges, especially when we remember that not only was the United States court opened to him, but that as solicitor of the first circuit, embracing the city of Charleston, he had at his complete command all the machinery of the law to punish the men who had, as he alleged, by fraud, bribery, intimidation, and violence cheated him of his election?

In reviewing the testimony of McHenry, Thompson, Buttz, and Burke, it will be seen at a glance that the evidence of these four witnesses, except where it refers to the six polls already disposed of, has reference to one poll only, first precinct, ward 3. All the facts alleged by these four witnesses occurred at that one poll. Adding this one poll to the six already disposed of and we ascertain that the remaining ten polls are to be rejected upon the evidence of eight witnesses, the other twenty witnesses not testifying to a single fact in regard to these remaining ten polls. Ten polls are to be rejected upon the testimony of eight witnesses. Of these eight witnesses we have already proved that the testimony of three, Green, Whiting, and Baring, is so clearly manufactured that it should be stricken from the record entirely, so that really the evidence against these ten polls depends upon the testimony of five witnesses only, Foster, Taylor, Rafferty, Kossell, and Rivers. The testimony of the first two I have already examined. It relates to two polls only and cannot possibly affect the others.

In examining the evidence of these three creatures, upon whose testimony the voters of eight precincts are to be disfranchised, I shall apply to it a certain principle of law applicable to such cases. This principle was laid down by the committee a few months ago in the case of Bromberg vs. Haralson. In their report of that case the committee say:

> The testimony of a conspirator swearing to his own infamy and implicating others in the same crime is always jealously scrutinized, and unless corroborated in material points by evidence coming from uncontaminated sources cannot generally be received as sufficient to establish a litigated fact.

With the application of such a rule to the testimony of Rafferty, Kossell, and Rivers it must all be rejected. Apply the same rule to the testimony of the trio, Green, Whiting, and Baring, to which I have already called attention, and it ceases to be evidence in this case.

H. T. KOSSELL.

I shall now examine the testimony of these three men with reference to the principle just cited, beginning with Kossell, who testifies that he had in charge six men who voted sixty times, each time at a different precinct, except once, when he voted them twice at the same precinct. Kossell's testimony stands by itself, being uncorroborated by any kind of evidence whatever. Of him not one of the other witnesses make the slightest mention. Kossell seems to have been unknown, and I cannot even imagine where Buttz got him.

ISAAC B. RIVERS.

Isaac B. Rivers testified that during the canvass preceding the election he supported Buttz, but that on the day of election he voted for me. After the election, however, he renewed his allegiance toward Buttz by swearing for him that he had done considerable repeating on election-day for me. Rivers, I understand, has again changed, and is now willing no doubt to testify for me that he did considerable false swearing for Buttz. Under these circumstances it is exceedingly doubtful in what capacity Rivers excels, whether in repeating or in perjury. Until that doubt is removed no faith should be placed in his testimony. Rivers, like Kossell, is uncorroborated in a single instance of repeating. How both might have been and yet were not corroborated I shall show in the analysis of Rafferty's testimony. A slight attempt at corroborating Rivers is made by two witnesses. Thompson says:

> I met Isaac B. Rivers at different times during the day, going from poll to poll with a carriage full of men.

Lesesne, in reply to the question—

> Did you see any carriages and wagons controlled by Major Willis carrying voters to and from that precinct that day?

Answers—

> Yes; I saw them all day, and Isaac B. Rivers had charge of one of them.

Neither of these two witnesses saw Rivers vote a single man; they simply saw him with "a carriage full of men;" but whether or not he voted them they do not say. What is more common on election-day than to see carriages full of men? Are such things evidences of fraud? Such vague testimony will hardly be considered evidence in corroboration of Rivers.

HOGAN RAFFERTY.

I have reserved the examination of Rafferty's testimony for the last, because he did more false swearing during his examination than all the other witnesses together. I cannot refrain from remarking here that had the committee compared the testimony of Rafferty and Rivers with that of other witnesses they never would have quoted them in full in their report as evidence to illustrate the character of the election in Charleston. Such witnesses cannot justify the action of the committee in throwing out the entire vote of the city of Charleston.

And who is Hogan Rafferty? All we know of him is contained in his own testimony. He is the witness to his own infamy. He swears to having cast 606 illegal votes himself, by taking a gang of twenty-five men and voting them twice at nearly every precinct. For which dirty work he says he was paid $10. If for $10 he would vote 606 illegal votes, how much do you think it cost to purchase his services as a witness in this case, especially when made safe against prosecution for perjury by the contestant, who was able to give him such guarantee by virtue of his position as solicitor of the first circuit. Are the rights and franchises of any community to be at the mercy of the oaths of such men? And yet the testimony of such a creature is cited as evidence by the committee in support of their report. In attaching any importance to the testimony of this witness the committee seem to have entirely forgotten that most excellent rule laid down by themselves, which I have already cited.

Apply that rule to the testimony of Rafferty and what is such testimony worth? Let us see if he is "corroborated in material points by evidence coming from uncontaminated sources." If not, as I shall clearly demonstrate, then his evidence should have had no weight with the committee. Reject the testimony of Rafferty and the contestant has no case whatever, for it must be remembered Rafferty alone proves more than one-half of the illegal votes charged by the contestant as having been cast for me. Now the best evidence from uncontaminated sources to corroborate Rafferty, as well as Kossell and Rivers, would have been the managers and supervisors at each poll appointed in the interest of Mr. Buttz, for all through the printed evidence it appears that the party of which Mr. Buttz was the candidate had at every one of the seventeen precincts in the city of Charleston one manager selected from themselves and one United States supervisor, making thirty-four respectable and competent witnesses—at least presumably so. Yet out of these thirty-four managers and supervisors, the best witnesses he could have had, the contestant has taken the evidence of only two supervisors and three managers, none of whom corroborate Kossell or Rivers in any particular whatever; and by one only of these five witnesses is Rafferty corroborated. I give their names, so that their testimony can be referred to: J. J. Driscoll, A. W. Gurney, supervisors; W. H. Ahrens, A. T. Stevens, W. E. Burke, managers. The testimony of the latter, however, has been excluded by the committee as illegally taken; still I have no objections to its being considered in connection with the testimony of the other four witnesses just named. Now these five managers and supervisors, with the exception of Ahrens, not only fail to corroborate Rafferty, but they fail to prove a solitary illegal vote. By examining their evidence in connection with that of Rafferty's, it will be seen how completely they fail to corroborate him. If Rafferty's testimony be true, the facts sworn to by him could hardly have escaped the attention of these managers and supervisors, who had been appointed to look after the interest of the contestant and his party at their respective polls.

J. J. DRISCOLL.

J. J. Driscoll, who swears he voted for the contestant, was United States supervisor at precinct 1, ward 1, (city hall,) at which poll Rafferty swears Murphy voted "twenty-five men, mostly sailors, each of whom had a green badge tied in the button-hole of the left lappel of their coats with a black ribbon." Rafferty further testifies that he voted these same men again in the afternoon at this poll. And yet when Driscoll was examined not one question was asked him in reference to these votes, which he could not have helped noticing had any such occurrence taken place at this poll. On the contrary, when asked "do you know of any illegal voting at the election on that day," he says nothing whatever about Rafferty and his repeaters, but gives a full statement of such cases of illegal voting as did occur at his precinct. It is proper to state here that of the four cases mentioned by Driscoll as illegal voting not one was really such a case, and this will appear upon an examination of his testimony. So that the United States supervisor at this poll fails to prove a single instance of illegal voting, intimidation, and bribery, and seems to know nothing whatever of Rafferty and his mythical repeaters. Nesbitt, the manager in the interest of Buttz at this poll, although summoned as a witness by the contestant, was never examined, and we must conclude that the failure of the contestant to examine him was owing entirely to the fact that Nesbitt knew of no frauds, intimidation, or bribery at this poll. Kossell also voted his six men at this precinct, but as in the case of Rafferty this fact was unknown to Driscoll. Rivers did not honor this poll with his presence.

WARD 7.

Another poll at which Rafferty swears to having voted his twenty-five sailors twice was ward 7. The manager of election at that precinct appointed to represent the contestant was A. T. Stevens, one of the witnesses produced by the contestant. Judging from his testimony he was evidently an ardent friend of Buttz and very tenacious of his rights, and it is reasonable to suppose that it was impossible for twenty sailors in black dress coats with green badges tied to the left lapel to have voted in a gang at this poll twice and escaped the attention of this vigilant manager. And yet when called as a witness not one question is asked him on the subject, and Rafferty is again left without the corroboration he so much needs. Not a single witness corroborates Rafferty as to his repeating at this poll. So, too, with Kossell who also visited this poll with his repeaters. His visit there was unknown to Stevens or any other witness. What becomes of the rule of the committee in the case of Bromberg vs. Harlson? Why did they not apply it in this instance?

W. E. BURKE.

Another election officer appointed in the interest of Mr. Buttz was W. E. Burke, a manager at ward 8. His testimony having been rejected by the committee as illegally taken, I only refer to it to say that even had it been received as good testimony it would only furnish additional proof to show how completely Rafferty, Kossell, and Rivers are uncorroborated by the election officers.

A. W. GURNEY.

Another witness whose evidence is contained in full in the report of the committee is A. W. Gurney, also an election officer—not one of those charged with a guilty knowledge of these alleged frauds, but one of those who was acting in the interest of the contestant to prevent fraud. Eager as he was during his examination to disclose all the frauds alleged at his poll, he omitted to make any mention whatever of Rafferty and his sailors. Was it possible for twenty-five repeaters coming up in a gang, with Rafferty at their head, to have escaped his vigilant eye? No; had Rafferty really been there with his sailors Gurney would have seen them. His failure to see them certainly ought to weaken Rafferty's evidence as far as this precinct is concerned. Nor did Gurney see either Kossell or Rivers, both of whom claim to have visited this poll with their repeaters. If Gurney did not see them, he did see some other things, but giving all credit to his testimony it amounts only to this: that there were some irregularities at the poll of which he was supervisor, and his statement of frauds is simply a vague declaration that there was bribery, without even an attempt on his part, except in one instance, to specify the offense or the offender. But if this is true, how can Mr. Gurney account for the fact that, as United States supervisor, appointed in the interest of Mr. Buttz, he signed the returns of this very precinct as correct, and at the time made no statement whatever to the officers to whom he was bound to report of any fraud or violence? The person whom he charges with influencing the election by bribery and intimidation was a well-known and highly respectable merchant of Charleston, a democrat, who would have been ready and prompt in meeting any such accusation if made where Mr. Gurney was bound by his oath of office to make it, before a jury in the district court of the United States. But Mr. Gurney's evidence, like much other evidence which seems to have deluded the committee, can be explained by the fact, outside of the record I admit, that it was well understood in the community of Charleston that upon the contestant's success he was to have been one of the earliest recipients of official patronage. Mr. Buttz's failure has driven this veracious witness from the community which he could neither benefit by his patriotism nor injure by his perjury.

W. H. AHRENS.

The only one of the five election officers produced as witnesses who corroborates Rafferty in any particular is W. H. Ahrens, a manager at first precinct, ward 4, appointed in the interest of the contestant. In his evidence he testifies to having seen Rafferty march up a gang of twenty-five men in the forenoon and vote them, and again in the afternoon. Strange to say, this open violation of the law was only seen by Ahrens, who called no one's attention to the fact at the time. Remember that at this same poll there were Gurney, the United States supervisor just referred to, and John Bonum, another witness in this case, who occupied the double position of deputy sheriff and deputy United States marshal. Yet neither of these witnesses saw what Ahrens saw. Perhaps the following fact will explain why Ahrens alone at this poll saw Rafferty and his sailors. As soon as the contestant ascertained that he was defeated, like most defeated condidates he entered his protest against my election, serving his first notice upon the county board of canvassers, afterward taking the case up to the State board of canvassers, and finally bringing it here before Congress. As soon as he began his contest he of course undertook to find the necessary witnesses. At that time there was pending in the court of general sessions for Charleston County two indictments against this William H. Ahrens, both for assault with intent to kill, the punishment for which is fine and imprisonment in the penitentiary. Ahrens saw his chance; he offered his services as a witness, a nolle prosequi was entered as to both indictments by the solicitor of the court, Mr. C. W. Buttz, the contestant in this case, and Ahrens, released from all fear of the penitentiary, became a witness for the contestant. The records of the court of general sessions of Charleston County will prove the truth of my assertion. Ahrens, however, had signed as correct the returns of the election before he had ascertained he would be needed as a witness, and consequently in his evidence he attempts to explain that fact by saying he did it under protest. Ahrens of course, like all the other witnesses in this case, makes vague and general statements as to bribery, intimidation, and repeating, but in view of the fact I have just stated little credence should be given to his testimony procured under such circumstances. Notwithstanding Ahrens's anxiety to accommodate Buttz in the matter of furnishing testimony, he makes no reference whatever to either Kossell or Rivers, who both swear to having repeated their gang at this poll.

With the exception of Ahrens, therefore, not one of these five managers and supervisors corroborate Rafferty. But on the contrary, when examined as witnesses for the contestant to prove the repeating, bribery, and intimidation alleged by him, they make no reference whatever to Rafferty and his sailors, who seem to have been a perfect myth to them, nor do any of them make any mention whatever of either Rivers or Kossell.

POLLS REJECTED UPON RAFFERTY'S TESTIMONY ALONE.

I have endeavored to show how utterly unreliable is the whole testimony of Rafferty; how, if his story was true, it could have been corroborated by certain witnesses, and how, when these witnesses were examined, they failed in any respect whatever to furnish the corroboration so much needed in order to give Rafferty's testimony any value as legal evidence. I have examined it thoroughly because if rejected, as it should be, the rest of the evidence produced by the contestant would, even if true, affect only one or two polls in the city which if thrown out would still leave me a majority. Notwithstanding the barefaced perjury of this witness the committee, in utter violation of the rule laid down by themselves in a previous case and already cited by me, have rejected whole polls upon his testimony alone, no evidence whatever, either good or bad, being offered to corroborate him. In the second precinct, ward 2, and the third precinct, ward 4, no evidence whatever, except Rafferty's statement that he voted twenty-five men at each of those precincts twice, is offered either as to repeating, bribery, or intimidation. But upon the evidence of this one man, unsustained by a single other witness, the entire vote of these two precincts, amounting in the aggregate to 942, is thrown out and these voters are disfranchised because one scoundrel can be found to swear that he repeated some votes there.

POLLS REJECTED IN THE ABSENCE OF ALL TESTIMONY.

But if the action of the committee is extraordinary in throwing out the votes of these two precincts upon this one man's testimony, how much more extraordinary must be considered their action in throwing out the votes of polls upon the evidence of no one at all. Against the third precinct, ward 3, and the third precinct, ward 6, nothing whatever is alleged either in the way of repeating, or of bribery, or of intimidation. Rafferty does not even swear against these two polls; the contestant does not even allege any irregularities at them; and yet the committee have cast them out for no other reason, I can imagine, than that they are situated in the city of Charleston. Do the Committee of Elections by their action in throwing out the votes of these two polls mean to say that whenever in any city irregularities, fraud, intimidation, or bribery are proved at one or more polls, or even at a majority of polls, then the entire vote of the city becomes so tainted that it must be excluded from the count? Is this a new principle in the law of elections established by the thirteen eminent lawyers composing the committee?

The unaccountable action of the committee in throwing out these four polls induces me to call attention to a few other polls rejected by the committee, and against the purity of which the evidence is really worthless.

WARD 2, FIRST PRECINCT.

Take the first precinct, ward 2, where the total vote was 484. Against this poll the only irregularity charged is the repeating of the twenty-five sailors by the never-failing Rafferty, uncorroborated, however, as far as this poll is concerned, by a single witness. But if Rafferty's testimony be true, will the committee assert that the poll cannot be purged by the deduction of these 50 votes, which, if proven at all, are proven specially enough to warrant their being deducted from the count? In addition to Rafferty's testimony against this poll is the evidence of Green, Whiting, and Baring as to 8 other illegal votes. From the wonderful similarity of the testimony of these three witnesses, bearing upon its face the evidence of manufactured testimony, I am certainly not unreasonable when I ask that such evidence should receive no consideration whatever, especially since it is uncorroborated. One other witness, Foster, whose certificate of conviction is produced by the contestant himself, swears to 5 more illegal votes. Now then, at this poll each instance of illegal voting is sworn to with sufficient clearness to have made it the duty of the committee to purge the poll. Admitting as true every word of the testimony relating to this poll, only 63 illegal votes were proven and the poll should have been purged by their deduction, since no witness whatever testifies to any bribery or intimidation, nor is any evidence whatever produced against the conduct of the officers of elections in charge of the poll.

WARD 3 SECOND PRECINCT.

Take second precinct, ward 3, the total vote of which was 566. At this poll there is no evidence whatever of either bribery or intimidation. The ubiquitous Rafferty does not even claim to have visited it with his sailors. He seems to have ignored it entirely. The only irregularity charged by the contestant is the polling of 17 illegal votes there, 8 of which are proven by the trio, Green, Whiting, and Baring. The other 9 are proven by Rivers, to whose testimony I have already referred. Admitting this exceedingly doubtful evidence, do the committee pretend to say that a poll of 566 is incapable of being purged of 17 illegal votes clearly and distinctly proved if the testimony be accepted as worth anything? And yet this poll the committee in their spirit of casting out have rejected entirely.

WARD 5.

Take again precinct 2, ward 5, the total vote of which was 261. Again at this poll no evidence whatever is offered as to any bribery or intimidation. The only charge against it is 15 illegal votes, 6 of which are proven by Rafferty, 8 by the trio, Green, Whiting, and Baring, and 1 by Buttz himself. Admitting them all, notwithstanding the utter worthlessness of the proof, I again ask are 15 illegal votes, when there are no other irregularities charged, sufficient to warrant the rejection of a poll of 261? If not, why then was the poll rejected by the committee instead of purged?

Take still another poll: first precinct, ward 5. The total vote there was 831. Again no charge as to bribery or intimidation at this poll. The only testimony impeaching its purity is that of the trio, Green, Whiting, and Baring, as to the 8 illegal votes of Grobson, and that of Kossel as to 6 illegal votes cast under his direction, making in all 14 illegal votes. Yet upon this testimony alone, and because of 14 illegal votes only, the committee have decided to reject this whole poll of 831 votes.

The two last polls comprise the whole vote of ward 5, there being only two precincts in the ward. I have stated that there was no evidence against either of these polls as to any bribery or intimidation, unless we consider as evidence the vague and general statement of the witness Thompson, that he "went to the different precincts in wards 5, 6, 7, and 8, and at each of them I saw money freely paid by the partisans of the Green-Mackey ticket."

It will hardly be contended that such a general statement of a defeated candidate, even when made under oath, is to be considered as sufficient evidence for the rejection of the entire vote of a whole ward, especially when such statement is unsustained by the oath of a single other witness as to a solitary instance of bribery or intimidation at either of these polls.

I have cited these eight polls to show upon what utterly worthless testimony the committee have decided to reject the entire vote of the city of Charleston. In two of these instances, as I have already shown, there is not a word of testimony of any kind, and at the other six polls the testimony in regard to repeating is exceedingly meager, less perhaps than usually occurs at any election, while there is no testimony whatever as to intimidation or bribery, and absolutely none in regard to the conduct of the managers. And yet, without a single witness impugning their conduct, these managers are branded as guilty of fraud or of permitting fraud at their polls.

BRIBERY, INTIMIDATION, AND VIOLENCE.

Before closing this examination of the testimony I desire to notice briefly the evidence upon which are based the charges of bribery, intimidation, and violence, with the view of proving that the committee are mistaken in concluding that "the evidence clearly shows" bribery, intimidation, and violence. The evidence relating to these charges is of so general and vague a character, consisting so entirely of opinions rather than facts, that they should be stricken out for uncertainty and irrelevancy.

BRIBERY.

First as to the charge of bribery. What is the testimony? It consists of such statements as the following:

Open bribery was practiced and constant complaint was made to me as a United States supervisor that votes were being bought by the Mackey party.—Testimony of A. W. Gurney.

I am satisfied that there was more illegal voting at that election on that day and more bribery and corruption used on that day than at any previous general election within my knowledge.—Testimony of S. J. Taylor.

I am fifty-five years in this city and have never seen such bribery, open purchasing of votes at any general or municipal election in my life.—Testimony of John Bonum.

I saw a large number of persons paid from one to three dollars each for voting the independent-republican ticket. Captain Sales was the principal purchaser, and paid the most of them.—Testimony of August Dunneman.

All this is not testimony to the purchase of a single vote which could or would be received by a judicial body. They are simply the violent expression of extravagant opinions which are heard everywhere the day after a hotly contested election from the partisans of the defeated candidate. But when you come to analyze the proof, which one would suppose in such a case of open, universal, unblushing bribery would be ample, I assert that in this record, in this mass of uncontradicted ex parte testimony, if you except the twenty-five sailors with green badges who are marched up and down through its pages just as the scant supernumeraries in a third-class theater are marched from wing to wing of the scenes to represent an army until the twenty-five are swelled to six hundred and six, you will not find fifty cases of bribery specifically sworn to.

As a fair specimen of the whole of the evidence upon this subject I ask attention to the testimony of J. J. Lesesne upon this subject. In his evidence he says:

I saw a large number of persons, more than one hundred, that E. Willis paid that day to vote the independent-republican ticket.

There is not the slightest scintilla of evidence in this statement as to who these persons are, whether they voted, where they voted, for whom they voted, or why they should not have voted.

When cross-examined and asked: "Did you see Willis give tickets to any one you speak of?" What is his answer? "No; but they went around the corner and returned together." When asked, "Was there repeating of any votes at that precinct that day?" his answer is: "Yes, there was; but I did not know who they were or their names."

It is simply a bald assertion of the witness that he knew more than one hundred persons who were paid on that day to vote. I cannot, with decent respect for the intelligence of this House do more than direct their attention to this so-called testimony, and yet it is about as good as the rest of the testimony upon this subject.

One of the witnesses examined by the contestant to prove the charge of bribery was John Simmons. His character is explained in the following certificate:

THE STATE } vs. JOHN SIMMONS. } Grand larceny.

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA, Charleston County:

Let the defendant, John Simmons, be imprisoned in the penitentiary at hard labor for the period of one year from date.

R. F. GRAHAM.

CHARLESTON, December 12, 1871.

A true copy.

[SEAL.]

JACOB WILLIMAN,
C. G. S. & C. P.

JULY 12, 1876.

Simmons during his examination admitted his conviction for grand larceny and his sentence to the penitentiary.

INTIMIDATION AND VIOLENCE.

Out of the thirty witnesses examined by the contestant eleven only testify as to the alleged intimidation and violence. The testimony of these eleven witnesses, with one exception, relates exclusively to four polls, namely: first precinct, ward 1; first and second precincts, ward 4; and first precinct, ward 8. One witness only, Thompson, testifies as to intimidation or violence at first precinct, ward 1. His testimony is given in these words:

At first precinct, ward 1, I saw that the crowd of Green-Mackey bullies governed that precinct and used every means of intimidation to prevent any one from voting the regular republican ticket.

That is the only testimony in the whole record as to intimidation at that poll.

The same is the case as to the intimidation and violence at second precinct, ward 4, where the charges are sustained by one witness only, Lesesne. His testimony is that—

The crowd had partaken so frequently of free whisky that they were ready for a riot upon any pretext whatever, and I was closely pressed and threatened on several occasions.

The evidence is not that a riot actually occurred, but that the crowd "were ready" for one. By neither witness is there any mention whatever of a single person who was prevented from voting by either intimidation or violence. Such is the testimony that has led the committee to believe that intimidation and violence prevailed at these two polls.

The testimony of six witnesses, including Thompson, relates exclusively to the first precinct, ward 4. These six witnesses are McHenry, Gurney, Bonum, Buttz, Ahrens, and Thompson. Their testimony we have already examined in detail, and as it relates only to this one poll, we can scarcely think it necessary to comment upon it, especially as we have already expressed the opinion that, admitting all that is charged against this poll to be true, it was the duty of the committee to reject that poll, and not assume that because violence and intimidation were proven against this poll that the same state of affairs existed at all the other polls.

The testimony of three other witnesses, Louis and August Dunneman and Pompey Virgin, relates to ward 8. A portion of the testimony of Thompson also refers to this ward. The latter says that at this poll "The Union republicans were so intimidated that some were driven from the polls without voting." The Dunnemans and Virgin testify to about the same thing though more in detail. But notwithstanding all this intimidation and violence, Mr. Buttz received at this poll a larger vote than at any other poll in the city. Out of 1,103 votes cast, Mr. Buttz received 413, giving me only a majority of 177. If Mr. Buttz's supporters were driven from this poll without voting, I would like to ascertain how it was possible for him to receive nearly half of the whole vote cast there. The very fact that the contestant received such a large vote at this poll is the best evidence needed to refute the charge of intimidation and violence as far as this poll is concerned. Certainly this fact should raise a doubt as to the charge unless sustained by the evidence of reliable witnesses. Both Louis Dunneman and Thompson were defeated candidates. Pompey Virgin's character is unfolded in the following certificate:

THE STATE } vs. POMPEY VIRGIN. } Burglary and larceny.

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA, Charleston County:

Let the defendant be imprisoned in the penitentiary at hard labor for ten years.

[SEAL]

R. F. GRAHAM.

JUNE 16, 1871.

A true copy.

JACOB WILLIMAN,
C. G. S. and C. P.

JULY 12, 1876.

Certainly 1,103 voters are not to be disfranchised upon the testimony of four witnesses only, two of whom are defeated candidates, another a brother of one of these candidates, and the other a penitentiary convict. Against this poll there is no other testimony except that of Rafferty and Kossell.

The last of the eleven witnesses testifying as to violence and intimidation is Taylor. His testimony relates to no particular poll. It is too vague and uncertain to prove anything. It can hardly be considered as evidence. It is in these words:

I know positively of many voters who did not go out of their houses or vote at all, and of some who returned to their homes without voting at all, for fear of bodily harm, and on account of the threats made against any one who would vote the Union republican ticket.

Admitting every word of the testimony of these eleven witnesses to be true, four polls only are affected, no attempt whatever being made to prove intimidation or violence at the other thirteen polls; yet the committee have concluded that intimidation and violence prevailed at all the voting-precincts in the city. How did they reach this conclusion? Certainly not by an examination of the evidence; for if anything is clearly shown it is the fact that the report of the committee proves beyond a doubt their failure to examine the testimony. But the testimony of these eleven witnesses does not even sustain the charge as to the four polls. If their evidence be true, that such general violence and intimidation prevailed at these four polls, certainly some one ought to have been found who would have sworn that he went to the polls, that he attempted to vote for Mr. Buttz, and that he was prevented from so doing by the threats of my friends. But throughout the whole city it appears the contestant could not find a single voter who would swear that he was prevented from voting by violence or intimidation.

REASONS FOR NOT TAKING TESTIMONY.

Having thus examined the character and value of the testimony upon which the committee have relied, I am naturally brought to the consideration of the question which seems so thoroughly to have perplexed them, and that is why I have not taken or produced any testimony in reply.

That such a question should have been raised forces me to the conclusion that the committee could scarcely have examined the evidence with any reference to the usual principles of legal and judicial examination. I can only understand their conclusion upon the supposition that they were bound to believe everything that a witness says unless another witness contradicts him, and that the more general and vague a charge so much the more credible is it. I am not afraid to say that before any judge in this land three-fourths of the testimony upon this record would have been absolutely excluded, and that with such a case no lawyer of reputation would have risked his professional character by putting up witnesses to meet a case which had not been made. I had a good right to presume that vague and general charges of repeating, bribery, intimidation, and violence would scarcely command the respectful attention of the committee, coming from a source the purity of which had once before been tested by Congress. Had I willfully neglected to reply to testimony bearing directly upon the issue made and possessing in itself that sort of character which entitled it to consideration, it might be different; but I submit to the candid judgment of this House whether a candidate elected by an overwhelming majority might not well hold himself above the necessity of meeting such evidence as this record contains. As in a court of law a defendant may rest his defense upon the character of the prosecutor and his witnesses as established by previous convictions, so in this case I relied upon such convictions as sufficient to cast a doubt on the good faith of the prosecutor and the evidence of his witnesses, unless fully "corroborated in material points by evidence coming from uncontaminated sources;" for it must be remembered that of the witnesses examined by the contestant, and upon whose testimony the conclusions of the committee rest, two were convicted by the United States courts, one convicted and sentenced to the penitentiary for burglary and larceny, another convicted and sentenced also to the penitentiary for grand larceny, another indicted for assault with intent to kill, and the contestant himself, a witness also, not only convicted by Congress of having sold his client's evidence in an election case, but also tried, convicted, and sentenced in this very capital for an offense so infamous that it will not bear repetition.

At the general election of 1874 I was elected member of Congress for the second congressional district of South Carolina (including the city of Charleston) by a majority of 2,542 votes over Mr. C. W. Buttz. Mr. Buttz served me with notice of protest, concluding his protest with this allegation:

That I (C. W. Buttz) received a majority of all the legal votes cast for member of the Forty-fourth Congress in the second congressional district of South Carolina and am therefore entitled to the position.

This it became Mr. Buttz's duty to prove. I was bound to prove nothing. It was obligatory upon Mr. Buttz to set aside that 2,542 majority. He undertook to do so. His examination of the greater portion of his witnesses was irregular and illegal. I protested formally against the continuation of such examinations, refused to attend them, and never saw a large portion of his testimony until it was printed by the committee. Feeling sure that he could not reduce my vote below a large majority, knowing the worthless and disreputable character of his witnesses, I took no counter-testimony. I was willing, as I am now, to let the case stand as he made it, due attention being given to the testimony and the witnesses as they appear upon his record.

The extent to which his proof went, without contradicting a single witness or challenging a single statement, was 897 votes, which, deducted from my majority of 2,542, still left me a majority of 1,645. But the committee in their report have decided to strike out all of his testimony taken after a certain time, which reduces the number of illegal votes proven by him to 789, leaving me a majority of 1,753. Upon this I submit to the House I had a right to stand. Mr. Buttz had undertaken to prove that this majority of 2,542 votes certified to by the proper official authority as given to me consisted of bad, illegal, fraudulent votes, which upon sufficient proof the committee were bound to strike from my count. No general statements, no vague allusions, no opinions however "conscientiously" held by Mr. Buttz or any other witness could be considered. Mr. Buttz had to prove that at least 2,542 votes were illegally cast and were cast for me. This he failed to do, and the committee recognize his failure when they refuse to seat him. The logical consequence of their refusal to seat Buttz ought to seat me. But just here the committee itself interposes to raise an issue not raised by Buttz, and which, therefore, I was not bound to meet. The committee say to me: "It is true that Mr. Buttz claims to be legally elected, that he has undertaken to prove your 2,542 majority illegal, that he has failed to do so, but in proving 789 bad votes he has led us to think that there must have been some great frauds at this election and that all the managers must have conspired to commit them. Why did not you prove that this was not so; why did not you examine witnesses?" My reply was: "I do not think you have the right to shift the burden of proof from Mr. Buttz's shoulders to mine. Mr. Buttz undertook to make his case and has failed. I had and I have the right to stand simply on the defensive. But if you insist upon changing the issue; if you ask for proof that this election was fair and right, give me ten days, and I will take the testimony of every manager and United States supervisor at the Charleston polls." This clear right was refused me a month ago; and now the committee, after making the issue themselves and refusing to allow evidence to be taken on the issue they make, pass a sweeping condemnation upon a whole community without giving them a chance to be heard. I submit that in common justice, when they made this issue, they were bound to afford a fair trial before they decided it. For I beg the House to bear in mind that the committee, as I have said, do not charge me personally with purchasing a single vote or corrupting a single voter. At that election the general ticket upon which I was a candidate for Congress contained no less than thirty-two candidates for other offices—governor, lieutenant-governor, State senator, county commissioners, members of the Legislature, &c. There is no charge against one or against all of these. The committee simply concludes that there was such general fraud as proved conspiracy or connivance on the part of the managers. The testimony made no attempt and the committee have made no attempt to bring this fraud and corruption home to me.

It is proved beyond question that I and the ticket on which I was a candidate were enthusiastically supported both by the independent republicans and the democrats. In endeavoring to explain my majority the witnesses of the contestant established this. One of them says, on page 27:

The wealth of the city and the city government, including the police force, were all supporting the independent republican ticket.

Again:

E. W. M. Mackey, the candidate for Congress on the independent republican ticket, is one of the city aldermen, and controls the committee on the police department; and then G. I. Cunningham, the mayor, and Captain Hendricks, the chief of the police, belong to Mackey's clique and do his bidding.

What does this mean? Who represent the wealth of the city if not its merchants, its bankers, its tax-payers? What do the city government and the police force represent if not the order and decency of the city; and when all these elements, comprising every democrat and every independent republican in the city, by the testimony of the contestant himself, combined to support me, I appeal to the common sense of every man who hears me if my majority is not naturally and honorably explained; if there could exist in such a contest any necessity on my part for resort to the dark, dirty, and dangerous ways of bribery and corruption? I leave it to any representative of any city of any size in this House if with such a combination in my favor it was possible for me to be defeated. The democratic majority who make this report will scarcely take issue with me when I say that by far the larger portion of the wealth and the influence of the city of Charleston is democratic, and when they make this report they must mean to declare that from their practical experience democratic wealth and influence never interfere in an election except to influence it corruptly.

In reference to this whole allegation of enormous illegal voting in the city of Charleston, there is one sufficient and single reply. It is clear that if votes had been repeated to such an extent as the committee allege, then the vote of Charleston as returned must have been much greater than its legal vote.

Now, the voting population of the city of Charleston, according to the United States census of 1870, was 11,550. The vote cast at this election was 10,404. Where is the increase that such universal illegal voting ought to show?

Moreover, compare the vote cast at this election with the vote cast at previous elections:

1868, municipal election	10,102
1870, general election	11,231
1871, municipal election	10,366
1872, general election	6,175
1873, municipal election	12,097

The smallness of the vote at the general election of 1872 is owing to the fact that the democrats took no part whatever in that election.

At this point, then, of my argument I claim:

1. That I had and have a perfect right not to take counter testimony but to stand upon the defensive, and that if Mr. Buttz fails to prove his case I am entitled to my seat.

2. That if the committee makes a new issue, that of the general fairness of the election, while I do not deny their right to investigate that issue, they cannot decide it without investigation, and not only I, but the people of Charleston have a right to submit testimony in proof of their innocence.

Mr. Speaker, I have said what in justice to my constituents I was bound to say. My interests or those of the contestant are not worth the consideration of this House. But surely it is a very grave exercise of the power of this body to record a public censure upon a whole constituency, to declare that one of the oldest and most honored cities of this Commonwealth is unworthy of its right of suffrage, and that fifty of its best-known citizens, selected for the responsible position of managers of election, placed under the sanction of their solemn oaths, corruptly conspired to defraud the people whom they represented and to perpetrate a shameful imposition upon the Legislature of the nation. Granting that I have been altogether wrong in my management of this case as far as I was personally concerned; granting that my confidence in my knowledge of the truth was rash and presumptuous; granting that as the case was made there was reasonable doubt excited in the minds of the committee as to the fairness of this election, surely the committee had it in their power to investigate this matter, to require me to produce, what the law did not require me to offer, proof of a negative. Time sufficient has elapsed since I formally prayed for permission to furnish this testimony for it all to have been taken and considered at an expense of a little time and a little labor, and surely the question of the disfranchisement of a whole community was grave enough to justify that expenditure of time and labor. The seat, as far as I was concerned, might be forfeited, but the censure and condemnation of the entire constituency, without opportunity of vindication, does seem not only an act of supererogation but of injustice. This condemnation, however, is unsustained even by this ex parte, uncontradicted testimony, to the details of which I have called attention, and I contend now that on its face it is unworthy of credence, that there is not a grand jury in the county where they live which would bring in a true bill upon any evidence they could give. And it does seem to me the strangest conception of duty that the committee was bound to accept this testimony unless it was expressly contradicted by other evidence. Is the character of the testimony itself not to be considered? Is there, can there be a more conclusive reply than the inconsistencies of the testimony itself? And do not the acknowledged associations of the witnesses stamp ineffaceably the character of the accusation which they are called to prove?

CONCLUSION.

Before concluding I desire to explain what position I occupied in the last general election in South Carolina, as such explanation is necessary for a thorough understanding of this case.

At the general election of 1872 F. J. Moses, jr., was elected governor. Notwithstanding he was elected on a reform platform, his administration of affairs during the two years of his term of office was so venal and corrupt that it brought the republican party of South Carolina into disrepute all over the country. With hardly an exception every republican paper in the country condemned the government of the republican party in South Carolina during that period as a disgrace to civilization, and they all without an exception declared that a continuation of such misgovernment would be a serious injury to the future prospects of the national republican party. In fact, I think it will be admitted that the mismanagement of the republican party in South Carolina aided the democrats considerably in obtaining their present majority in the national House of Representatives. Moses became known all over the country as the robber governor of South Carolina, and while still governor was actually indicted by a grand jury for the crime of grand larceny and breach of trust. He escaped trial and probably conviction only by refusing to submit to arrest.

Under these circumstances, when the republican State convention met in 1874, many republicans entered it with the determination to submit only to the nomination of a man without any stain whatever upon his character. After a bitter contest Hon. D. H. Chamberlain was nominated for governor. In the opinion of many republicans he was at that time considered as very little better than Moses. In justice, however, to Governor Chamberlain I am glad to say that subsequent events have proved that those who opposed him knew as little about him as those who supported him. Whatever errors he may have committed, he has during his administration displayed the qualities of an earnest reformer. Nevertheless, his nomination at the time was considered as an attempt to continue the misrule of the former two years. Hardly a republican paper North approved of it; in fact, I know of none that did except the National Republican of this city, (Washington.) Hence many of the best republicans in South Carolina refused to abide by the nomination, impressed with the belief that in so doing they were really acting for the best interests of the national republican party, which could no longer afford to be burdened by the misdoings of the party in our State. Another republican convention was called, to which some of the ablest and most popular republicans in the State were elected. They nominated a new ticket, with Judge Green, a staunch republican, as their candidate for governor. This ticket was designated the independent republican ticket, in contradistinction to the regular republican ticket. It received the support of many thousands of republicans all over the State, and the democrats, believing that the independent republicans were in earnest in their efforts to purify the State government, refrained from making any nominations for State officers, but voted for the independent republican nominees.

In the second congressional district the republicans who had nominated Judge Green also nominated me for Congress. Previous, however, to my nomination by the independent republicans, I had received the regular nomination of the republican party. The regularity of that nomination, it is true, was disputed, owing to a division among the delegates. Eighteen of the delegates elected to the regular convention nominated me, while the remaining nine who had attempted, in violation of the party rules, to decide who the other eighteen delegates should be, united with a contesting delegation from Charleston which a few days before the State convention had declared irregularly elected, and by which decision under the rules of the party in our State the congressional convention was bound. The latter convention, thus irregularly organized, nominated the contestant in this case, C. W. Buttz.

My nomination by the independent republican party was not sought, but was made at a time when I was confined to my room by a severe attack of illness. In the heated political campaign which followed these nominations I declared in favor of Judge Green. By so doing my opponent gradually became recognized as the candidate for Congress of the regular republican party, though in truth he had never obtained such regular nomination. In the election I received the vote of nearly every democrat in my district, which of course elected me, since the republican vote was divided between me and the contestant. In voting for me the democrats were fully aware that I was a republican, for I had never assumed to be anything else but a republican.

Mr. THOMPSON. I move the previous question on the resolution reported by the committee.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not propose, Mr. Speaker, to go into any lengthy discussion of this case, but merely to state to the House very briefly the reasons which have induced the committee to make the report that they have made. The contestee presents his views of the case, and presents them with considerable force, but there is this difficulty with regard to it: he has produced no particle of testimony by which to sustain the view he presents.

The testimony is all upon one side. If the testimony for the contestee had been as good as his argument it would have been of very material help to him.

The committee were compelled to make one of three reports: either to decide in favor of the sitting member or in favor of the contestant, or to declare the seat vacant. I am frank to say that if the contestant were here and should present his case with the ability that the sitting member has shown, he would make out a very much better case than the sitting member has. I will say that in my judgment the case of the sitting member is at least third best. [Laughter.]

When the sitting member admits that in the city of Charleston we show that about 1,100 illegal votes were cast, which is saying a great deal in favor of the position of the committee—a little leaven we are told will leaven the whole lump; I think it is equally true that a great deal of corruption will corrupt the whole lump—when you start with the admitted fact that 1,100 illegal votes were given in one city, it is certainly a matter which calls for very serious consideration.

Mr. MACKEY, of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield to me for a word to correct?

Mr. THOMPSON. Certainly, if you only desire to correct what I am saying——

Mr. MACKEY, of South Carolina. I wish to ask you a question.

Mr. THOMPSON. Very well.

Mr. MACKEY, of South Carolina. Where is the proof that there were 1,100 illegal votes?

Mr. THOMPSON. In the printed testimony. You will see it there. Where else can you expect to find it?

Mr. MACKEY, of South Carolina. I have looked, and I count up but 789.

Mr. THOMPSON. The gentleman says he counted up 789. He certainly did very well for a man who counts so reluctantly as he must have counted. [Laughter.] But if he had made a fair count he would have come somewhere between 1,100 and 1,200. I will not correct him in this matter, but I will simply say that I hope he will make a recount.

There is certainly no member of the Committee of Elections who has any but the kindest feelings toward the sitting member. We would have decided in his favor if we could have done so, and we certainly would have done so with the greatest pleasure. We have not found anything in the testimony which has reflected upon him personally. But in this case we have been compelled to adopt the very impartial course of deciding for the seat itself; it is for the protection of the seat rather than of the sitting member that we report.

But take the number the gentleman says, between 700 and 800 illegal votes; that is a pretty round number. The testimony is that there were between 1,100 and 1,200 illegal votes that are known to have been cast, and they saw a large number more illegal votes moving in the same direction. That procession of illegal votes certainly were never half counted. They made some mistake, or they would have counted far more than the sitting member has counted, more than the committee has counted. If that procession had been fairly counted, I have no doubt that instead of 1,100 or 1,200 illegal votes there would have been found to be 3,000 illegal votes.

The city of Charleston, with a population of from forty-eight to fifty thousand, cast about 10,500 votes, I think a little more. I do not know how they obtain voters down there, but they vote very differently there from what they do with us in Massachusetts.

Mr. MACKEY, of South Carolina. There were more than 11,000 legal voters in Charleston.

Mr. THOMPSON. The gentleman says that that vote is among the possibilities. The United States census shows that perhaps by some possibility, with the lame and the halt and the dying and those who were away, they might obtain 11,000 votes there.

But they never voted up so close as that to the number of legal voters. They must have voted there for the dead as well as the living. The number of persons who were to vote must before election day have been diminishing from various causes. I say again that there is no city in the United States with a population of the city of Charleston that casts any such vote. They did not cast any such legal vote in Charleston. I submit that they could not have come within two or three thousand legal votes of that number; 8,000 votes would have been a very large vote there. I believe the second congressional district of South Carolina would beat every other district in the United States in the number of votes cast. It is the banner district in this particular.

The testimony here shows, and I have no doubt such is the case, that that great number of votes was obtained by voting the same person two or three times. The testimony is not contradicted that twenty-five men alone cast more than 600 votes. Now, if twenty-five men can cast 600 votes——

Mr. MACKEY, of South Carolina. That statement is unsupported.

Mr. THOMPSON. The gentleman says that is unsupported. I do not know what he means by that. The witnesses swear to that statement; it is here in print, and it is uncontradicted. What kind of support does he expect us to have? Does he expect us to have a cast-iron support to prop it up? This statement is supported by the oaths of witnesses, and is not contradicted. It is very strongly supported, too, by the number of votes cast in that district, which I verily believe are two or three thousand more than the number of legal voters in the district.

It was shown here conclusively that a very large number of illegal votes were cast in that district, and were cast in such a manner as to clearly implicate those who presided at the election in the fraud. It cannot be that twenty-five men can be marched up in a body in the morning and again in the afternoon and voted all at once without the officers of the election knowing something about it. Your committee believe, as we here report, that it was done at least with the connivance of the officers of the election. I believe it is the safe rule that where you find the officers of election acting fraudulently, conniving with fraud, you should place very little reliance upon their action; that such a fact should go very far toward vitiating the election.

The contestee assumes the ground that the Committee of Elections ought to be held to the specific illegal votes; that is, if the testimony does not show 2,500 illegal votes specifically by name, then he ought to retain his seat. Now we took the opposite view, and said that if there was testimony sufficient to show that the election was fraudulent, to show that it was impossible to tell how many legal or how many illegal votes were thrown, if the election was conducted in such a manner as to show there was no security at all for the legal voters, then it ought to be set aside and a new election ordered.

Let us see how this would stand, if we consider for a moment the case of Mr. Buttz. Mr. Buttz would take the ground that if we throw out these voting-precincts—those that we have thrown out—then he would have a clear and decided majority. That certainly would be the case; but the throwing out of more than 10,000 votes will necessarily disfranchise so many persons that your committee thought the election ought not to stand. They believed it fairer to all parties to remit the case to the people and let them determine by a fair election who their Representative shall be. That is all that this report recommends to the House.

I do not think it necessary for me to go into a detailed examination of the matter. I think that what the House has learned from the sitting member, the evidence, and the report of the committee suffices to fully justify the position of the committee upon this question, which is that the election in the city of Charleston was conducted in such a manner and there were so many illegal votes cast that it is impossible to determine what the real vote was; that it would be unfair in a district like that to throw out one-third of the entire votes and then seat the contestant, because it is impossible to tell who the choice of the people of that district really is. Therefore we felt compelled to report that the case be remitted again to the people. The committee were unanimous in this decision; and the gentleman from New York, [Mr. TOWNSEND,] a member of the subcommittee of which I was the other member, came to this conclusion before we had any conference. The committee, looking over the whole matter, determined unanimously that neither the contestant nor the contestee was entitled to the seat. And in behalf of the committee I ask that the resolution reported by the committee may be adopted by the House.

The question was then taken on adopting the following resolution, reported by the Committee of Elections:

Resolved, That neither C. W. Buttz nor E. W. M. Mackey was lawfully elected to the Forty-fourth Congress from the second congressional district of South Carolina, nor is either of them entitled to a seat in said Congress.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. THOMPSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SITTING COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS DURING RECESS.

Mr. WALLING. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration at this time of a resolution agreed to by the Committee on Public Lands.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be, and the same is hereby, authorized to prosecute the investigation of all matters especially referred to it for investigation, as also all other matters demanding investigation within the scope of the duties of the committee, and especially the investigation into the Des Moines River land grant and the transactions of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company and the Lake Superior and Puget Sound Land Company in relation to the disposition of the public lands under the grant of said Pacific Railroad Company, during the recess of Congress by subcommittees to be appointed by said committee; such subcommittees to have power to subpœna witnesses, send for persons and papers, employ a stenographer, administer oaths, and do all things necessary for the proper performance of their duties; the expense of such investigation to be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury out of any funds appropriated for such purpose or funds not otherwise appropriated, upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HALE. I object. This resolution, if I heard it correctly, provides for the sitting of investigating committees during the recess. That I object to now and hereafter in all cases.

Mr. WALLING. I believe the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] voted the other day for the resolution of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. OLIVER] to investigate the Des Moines River land grant. It is utterly impossible to carry out that investigation during this session; it can only be done during the recess.

Mr. LUTTRELL. We agreed the other day to a resolution for a committee to investigate the Chinese question during the recess.

Mr. WALLING. We have on several occasions raised committees to sit during the recess. These are questions which cannot be investigated during the present session.

Mr. KASSON. Is this a joint resolution or merely a House resolution?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is a House resolution.

Mr. KASSON. We cannot appropriate money by a resolution of this House.

Mr. WALLING. That part may be struck out.

Mr. HALE. I object to the resolution.

MILITARY EXPEDITION AGAINST THE NORTHWEST INDIANS.

Mr. BANNING. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to ask that an order be made for the printing of the answer of the Secretary of War to the resolution of this House inquiring as to the object of the military expedition under Generals Crook and Terry against the Northwest Indians.

Mr. KASSON. Is this an executive communication which has been made to the House?

Mr. BANNING. It has been made to the House and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. KASSON. Usually such communications are ordered to be printed at the time they are referred. If that was not done in this case, of course there should be no objection to doing it now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that these executive communications are usually not ordered to be printed until the committee so reports, unless a special request be made. That request is made in this instance. Is there objection?

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

CONTRACTS TO FURNISH SOLDIERS' HEAD-STONES.

Mr. BANNING, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be permitted to print the testimony taken by that committee in reference to the contracts to furnish soldiers' head-stones.

Mr. BANNING moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ATKINS. I submit the following conference report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two House on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3717) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 15, 16, 18, 19, 27, 28, 33, and 35.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 1, 2, 6, 8, 9, 10, 12, 13, 14, 17, 20, 24, 29, 31, 36, and 37, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment striking out "five" and inserting "three;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment striking out "one hundred and five" and inserting "ninety;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

Strike out all of said amendment after the word "and," in line 6, and insert in lieu of the words stricken out the following: "As provided by law, with a force of enlisted men not exceeding four hundred, after present terms of enlistment have expired;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Strike out the words "sixty-eight" and insert in lieu thereof the word "eighteen;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment striking out "two hundred and fifteen thousand five hundred and seventy-three" and inserting "one hundred and sixty-one thousand six hundred and thirty-seven;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment striking out "$4,000,000" and inserting "$3,750,000."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment striking out "one million and seventy" and inserting "eight hundred and fifty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: At the end of said amendment add the following: "Provided, That such assignment of recruits shall not increase the total aggregate of the Army beyond the number of 25,000 enlisted men, as provided for in this act;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Strike out from said amendment the word "nine" and insert in lieu thereof the word "five;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Strike out from said amendment "five hundred" and insert in lieu thereof "one hundred and fifty," and strike out all of the proviso; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Strike out from said amendment the word "five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "four;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 32, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Retain the proviso proposed to be stricken out; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 34, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Strike out "two hundred" and insert "one hundred and seventy-five," and insert at the end of the bill the following:

SEC. 3. That every military post may have one trader, to be appointed by the Secretary of War on the recommendation of the council of administration approved by the commanding officer, who shall be subject in all respects to the rules and regulations for the government of the Army.

SEC. 4. That the whole subject-matter of reform and re-organization of the Army of the United States shall be referred to the commission hereinafter provided for, who shall carefully and thoroughly examine into the matter with reference to the demands of the public service, as to the number and pay of men and officers and the proportion of the several arms, and also as to the rank, pay, and duties of the several staff corps, and whether any and what reductions can be made either in the line or staff, in numbers or in pay, by consolidation or otherwise, consistently with the public service, having in view a just and reasonable economy in the expenditure of public money, the actual necessities of the military service, and the capacity for rapid and effective increase in time of actual war.

The commission hereby created shall consist of two members of the Senate and two members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the presiding officers of each House respectively, of the Secretary of War and two officers of the Army, one from the line and one from the staff corps, to be selected by the President with special reference to their knowledge of the organization and experience in service.

Such commission shall assemble as soon as practicable and proceed to the consideration of the matters with which they are charged, and make report to Congress by the first day of the next session through the President of the United States with all the evidence, record or otherwise, which they shall have received and considered.

And the sum of $1,000 is hereby appropriated from the contingent fund of the War Department to defray the expenses of such commission, to be expended under the direction of the president of said commission.

J. D. C. ATKINS,
H. B. BANNING,
S. A. HURLBUT,
Managers on the part of the House.

W. B. ALLISON,
JNO. A. LOGAN,
J. B. GORDON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. ATKINS. I demand the previous question on the adoption of that report.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. ATKINS. I desire to submit a remark or two in explanation of the report. It will be observed that the House bill, which provided for the re-organization of the Army, was not acceptable to the Senate. The Senate declined to agree to the re-organization. They declined also to agree to the decrease of the Army from 25,000 to 22,000 enlisted men. They also objected to the decrease of the salaries of officers. The committee upon the part of the House concurred finally with the Senate committee in recommending to the House and to the Senate that a commission should be appointed, composed of two members of the House and two of the Senate, appointed by their respective presiding officers, also of the Secretary of War, and an officer of the line and an officer of the staff, appointed by the President of the United States, who should sit during the recess, and submit a report to Congress at its next session, embracing the whole subject of the re-organization of the Army, the reduction of salaries, the reduction in the numbers, the reduction in the number of officers, &c. The conferees upon the part of the House thought it was wise to agree to that proposition. We believe, sir, that there can be and will be a permanent reform effected by the commission; and therefore, without giving the reasons for that opinion, we concur in the recommendation of the Senate conferees.

This bill does not diminish the actual force of the enlisted men in the Army. The force is kept at 25,000 men, as now provided by law. It does not touch the salaries of any of the officers; not in a single instance. It diminishes the force in the Signal Corps from four hundred and fifty to four hundred men. The House reduced it to three hundred and fifty, and the conference report puts the number at four hundred men. The Senate had fixed it at four hundred and fifty. The House bill had fixed the number of Indian scouts at one hundred and fifty; the Senate insisted upon three hundred. And as one hundred and twenty of those Indian scouts fell with the lamented Custer the other day, the conferees on the part of the House thought the demand was reasonable; and we agreed to the amendment of the Senate fixing the number of Indian scouts at three hundred men. The companies of cavalry, under this conference report, are increased to one hundred men. I believe that those are the distinctive features of the bill as agreed to in the committee of conference.

Mr. SPRINGER. I would like to ask the gentleman to make a statement of the difference in figures between the bill as now presented and the bill as it passed the House and as it passed the Senate.

Mr. EDEN. Before the gentleman from Tennessee passes to that I would like to know if I understood the gentleman correctly. Is there an actual increase in the number of the Army under this bill?

Mr. ATKINS. No, sir. I said there was not an actual increase.

Mr. EDEN. I misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. ATKINS. The Army remains at twenty-five thousand enlisted men as now provided by law.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is an increase in the number of scouts.

Mr. ATKINS. It is not an increase in the number of scouts as provided by law, but an increase over the number provided in the House bill.

In reply to the question of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] I will say that the original estimates as submitted by Ex-Secretary of War Belknap for the support of the Army for the present year ending June 30, 1877, were $33,348,708.50. Secretary Taft revised those estimates, and reduced them five millions; leaving them at $28,793,708.50. The bill for the support of the Army for the last fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, appropriated $27,933,830. The House Appropriations Committee reported to the House a bill appropriating $23,155,077.12 for the support of the Army for this year. As it passed the House it appropriated $24,183,259.06, including the unexpended balances. The bill as it passed the Senate appropriated $27,561,361.40. The net increase of the Senate bill over the House bill was $3,378,102.34. The bill as it passed the conference committee and which is now presented to the House appropriates $26,069,167.80. The reduction made in conference as conceded by the Senate was $1,492,193.60. The House concession was $1,885,908.74. The amount appropriated for this fiscal year below that appropriated for the last fiscal year for the support of the Army is $1,864,662.20.

In view of the fact, Mr. Speaker, that the House bill was upon the basis of 22,000 enlisted men, I consider that the reductions as made in this conference report are very reasonable.

Mr. BANNING. And we have given one hundred and fifty additional scouts.

Mr. ATKINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. STONE. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield to me for a question?

Mr. ATKINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. STONE. Has that report been printed.

Mr. ATKINS. I am not a very good parliamentarian, but I think the gentleman's question comes too late if he intends to make the point of order that the bill is not printed, the main question having been ordered.

Mr. STONE. I merely asked the question for information. I think the House should understand what it is voting on. I venture to say that there are not more than three men in the House who understand it.

Mr. ATKINS. The gentleman should speak for himself and not for the House.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. ATKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRINTING OF TESTIMONY.

Mr. SINGLETON, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the testimony and evidence taken before the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department be printed for the use of the House.

Mr. SINGLETON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. PLAISTED, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 1427) for the relief of H. P. Jones & Co.; and

An act (H. R. No. 3855) for the relief of George T. Olmsted, jr.

Mr. BAKER, from the same committee, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 1771) to declare forfeited to the United States certain lands granted to the State of Kansas in aid of the construction of railroads by act of Congress approved March 3, 1863.

RESIGNATION OF A MEMBER.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair lays before the House a communication which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, July 19, 1876.

To the honorable the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States:

I hereby respectfully resign my seat as a member in the House of Representatives of the United States of the Forty-fourth Congress.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WINTHROP W. KETCHAM.

PROTECTION OF TEXAS FRONTIER.

Mr. SCHLEICHER. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the joint resolution (H. R. No. 96) to provide for the protection of the Texas frontier on the Lower Rio Grande.

Pending that motion I move that all debate upon the pending section and amendments thereto be closed in fifteen minutes.

The motion to close debate was agreed to.

The question was taken on Mr. SCHLEICHER'S motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. MONROE in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. R. No. 96) to provide for the protection of the Texas frontier on the Lower Rio Grande.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House the five-minute debate upon the whole bill is limited to fifteen minutes.

Mr. SCHLEICHER. Mr. Chairman, there are two substitutes offered in place of the second section of the joint resolution, and before the House decides which of the two to vote for I will say a few words upon the necessity of having this second section or one of the substitutes adopted.

It has frequently before been mentioned that all the military men who appeared before the committee and who were familiar with the condition of affairs upon the Lower Rio Grande with one voice insisted that there was a necessity of having this power to cross the river in order to have efficient protection. The reason for it is this: Upon our side of the river there is a dense thicket extending in a width of fifteen or twenty miles along the banks of the river, and experience has shown that in nine cases out of ten the raiders, if seen or encountered at all, were met by the troops just as they emerged from that thicket and were on the point of crossing the river with their booty. No matter how many troops are stationed there for defensive purposes this thing will continue, for if experience has taught anything it has taught this: That the troops will find, in nine cases out of ten, the raiders emerging from the thicket and in the act of crossing the river, and in many cases they have a part of the herd of stolen cattle grazing on the other side of the river and parade them before the eyes of our soldiers; and in such cases our troops have nothing to do but to stand idle and look at these raiders, who from the opposite banks cast all sorts of epithets against our men. Sir, I have been assured that old soldiers have stood upon our banks of the river actually crying for mortification and shame that these men, who had been for years preying upon our people, right in view of them carried off their booty and laughed at them.

Does this House wish such a state of things as that to continue? It is a perfect farce to say that, if our troops are sent there for the purpose of preventing these raids and they are in sight of the robbers and the stolen cattle, they must not follow or the Mexican government will make it a cause of war. It is perfectly ridiculous according to my views. No sensible government could make a case of war out of such an occurrence.

But gentlemen are exceedingly tender not to interfere with the boundary of Mexico or the rights of the Mexican government. I wish, sir, that some of that tenderness could be transferred to our own people. Is not our boundary as sacred in our eyes as that of the Mexicans? And yet in the last ten years again and again have "armed bands invading our country from Mexico," as the President says in his message, crossed our borders and right under our eyes have drained our country of its wealth and resources and murdered our people. Sir, they have established communities of robbers upon our borders and all military men say that it is impossible by defensive acts upon this side of the border alone to break up this system.

The committee were at first not in favor of recommending a measure of this kind, but they were forced to the conclusion by the evidence adduced before them that the defense of the border would be very imperfect without this power and that it is a necessary incident of our self-defense.

I say that for ten years these Mexicans in armed bands have crossed over the border and disregarded our boundary. They have heaped insults upon us for ten years in succession, continually, and without cessation.

Now, as regards the feelings of the Mexicans; gentlemen have dwelt upon the fact that the Mexicans would be offended if we did this thing. I suppose that, in the first place, they really would be offended at having their cheap market for beef broken up. Then, again, it is said that the patriotic feelings of the Mexicans would be aroused by our crossing into their territory. I ask gentlemen if the feelings of our own people do not deserve some consideration also. The feelings of our people have been outraged for ten years past, not only by these armed bands of Mexicans passing over into our country, but by their robbing and murdering our people; a thing which it is not expected that our soldiers would ever do. I claim that a share at least of this sympathy which is so very freely bestowed upon the Mexican people should be bestowed upon our people also.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BANKS. I desire to modify the amendment which I submitted yesterday in regard to the notice to be given to the government of Mexico. Instead of saying "after due notice," I will modify it so as to require "the President of the United States to give to the government of Mexico full and sufficient notice of the intention of this Government," &c.

Now a word or two in regard to my purpose in offering this amendment. It was one that I suggested to the committee as embodying my views of the question at the time the subject was originally brought up for consideration. It is indispensable that there should be some power to follow those invaders of our country when we are in close pursuit of them in possession of their booty in order that we may recover from them the property they have stolen. As the chairman of the committee [Mr. SCHLEICHER] has said and as every witness has testified, these raiders simply cross back to the other side of the Rio Grande, and there they stop and defy our troops who are in pursuit of them.

The House very generally and I think very properly hesitates to authorize any act which may result in war and which may be considered by the government of Mexico as an act of war. Many persons think that for Congress to grant authority to our troops to cross the border between the two countries would be an act of war. There is a precedent which we can follow and which will relieve us of all difficulty in this matter.

In 1868, I think it was, there was a statute passed in relation to the arrest of naturalized citizens of this country while in foreign countries. They arrested our naturalized citizens and refused to release them or to consider their case at all as naturalized citizens of this country. For fifty years we had demanded a hearing and discussion of that question, and it had been refused. The House of Representatives by a very decided vote passed a bill authorizing the President of the United States on the arrest of a naturalized citizen in a foreign country and a refusal to release him on demand of this Government, to make a reprisal by arresting any subject of that government who should be found within the jurisdiction of the United States.

Upon a discussion of the question, the Senate thought that this reprisal would amount to an act of war. But that is not so. A reprisal is not an act of war of itself. It may be attended by circumstances which would make it an act of war; but in itself an act of reprisal is not an act of war. But to avoid this difficulty, the Senate adopted this phraseology:

If the release so demanded is unreasonably delayed or refused, it shall be the duty of the President to use such means, not amounting to acts of war, as he may think necessary and proper to obtain or effectuate such release.

The House accepted that phraseology. Upon the passage of that act followed the naturalization treaties which have secured in nearly all foreign countries the recognition of the rights of naturalized citizens upon exactly the same basis as those of native-born citizens.

I have adopted that phraseology in the amendment I have proposed. The advantage of that is that whatever is done cannot of itself be an act of war, because the President has no authority to do anything which shall amount to an act of war. If, for example, a person be killed or if an innocent person be injured in his property or his rights, it will admit of an explanation on the part of this country to the Mexican government and of compensation to the person injured. Therefore, there can be no possibility of this act being of itself an act of war, because the President has no authority to make any act of war, and it admits of a proper consideration for any injustice done to a Mexican subject or of explanation to the Mexican government and a proper apology being made for it.

In addition to this, it gives us the right to follow up on the instant these men who come over our borders and rob our people and return to the Mexican territory with our property. These men are not Mexican subjects; they are not citizens of the United States. They are outlaws; they are robbers; and the Mexican government does not pretend to hold itself responsible for them. Therefore if we follow the wake of such men when they are fleeing from our country with the property of our people in their possession, and arrest them and recapture that property, it cannot be regarded by the Mexican government as an act of war or as an act of injustice, especially when it is predicated upon the other fact that this proceeding is not to be undertaken until a full and sufficient notice shall have been given of our purpose to the Mexican government and the President shall have been satisfied that the Mexican government is unable to protect our rights in this regard.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I do not know how the question stands before the committee just now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the position of the question if it is desired. When the committee rose yesterday there were two substitutes pending. The gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS,] who has just resumed his seat, offered a substitute for section 2. The gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. TUCKER,] who has just claimed the floor, offered a substitute for the substitute of the gentleman from Massachusetts. As the matter now stands the vote will be first taken on the substitute of the gentleman from Virginia, and then on that of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Chairman, the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts has the same purpose as my own. The only difference between the two propositions is that mine is more specific. It fixes the terms of the notice that shall be given to the Mexican government before there shall be any action taken by the President of the United States; and it directs the President to present to the government of Mexico a formal statement of the injuries and damages suffered by citizens of the United States from these inroads and invasions, and formally to demand the prevention and restraint by that government of such inroads and invasions in the future. It then provides that, "if the Mexican government shall not within four months after such formal statement and demand take effective measures to prevent such inroads and invasions, the President of the United States" shall be "authorized to use the Army" "to drive out any bands of invaders and to pursue them into the territory of Mexico for the sole purpose of recovering the property taken from citizens or others under the protection of the United States," guarding against unnecessary injury to the persons or property of peaceable inhabitants of Mexico.

It further provides that the President shall notify this joint resolution to the Mexican government with a remonstrance against these wrongs and that, "while forbearing to take any measures but such as are recognized as just and proper between nations at peace, the Government of the United States will be constrained, saving the peaceful relations between the two countries, to take such action as is indicated by this joint resolution, unless the Mexican government shall effectually prevent the evils complained of in the future."

Now, the substitute of the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts provides only that—

Whenever it shall appear to the President that the government of Mexico is unable to prevent the existing lawless invasion—

Now, my amendment proposes that when this shall appear to the President, if four months elapse without the Mexican government making reparation or taking any steps in the matter, the President may use the Army to drive out bands of invaders.

The amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts continues—

he shall be, and hereby is, authorized, if in his judgment it becomes necessary, after full and sufficient notice to the government of Mexico—

This does not fix the term of the notice—to order the troops charged with the defense of the territory of the United States, when in close pursuit of invaders, to cross the Rio Grande, &c.

I think, therefore, with very great deference to the views of my distinguished friend, that perhaps the substitute which I offer is more specific and definite, particularly in the matter of notice; and I should prefer, on that account, to see it adopted, although of course if the gentlemen in charge of this bill prefer that of the gentleman from Massachusetts, I have no special objection.

Mr. SCHLEICHER. I believe I can say on behalf of the committee that they are entirely satisfied to accept the substitute of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to remind the committee that the time limited for debate by order of the House has closed.

Mr. BANKS. I desire to say that I modify my amendment in accordance with the suggestion of the gentleman from Virginia by striking out the words "full and sufficient notice" and inserting "notice of four months."

The CHAIRMAN. The first question is on agreeing to the substitute of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] for the substitute of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS.]

Mr. STEVENSON. I ask that both the substitutes may be read.

Mr. PAGE. I understand that the committee have accepted the substitute of the gentleman from Massachusetts in place of the section as it stands.

Mr. THORNBURGH. The committee has no power to do that; there must be a vote upon it.

Mr. PAGE. I ask that the second section as well as the proposed substitutes be read.

The Clerk read the second section, as follows:

SEC. 2. That, in view of the inability of the national government of Mexico to prevent the inroads of lawless parties from Mexican soil into Texas, the President is hereby authorized, whenever, in his judgment, it shall be necessary for the protection of the rights of American citizens on the Texas frontier above described, to order the troops, when in hot pursuit of the robbers with their booty, to cross the Rio Grande and use such means as they may find necessary for recovering the stolen property and checking the raids, guarding, however, in all cases, against any unnecessary injury to peaceable inhabitants of Mexico.

The Clerk also read the following proposed substitute of Mr. BANKS, as modified:

That, whenever it shall appear to the President that the government of Mexico is unable to prevent the existing lawless invasion of the territory of the United States from Mexico for purposes of plunder or robbery, he shall be, and hereby is, authorized, if in his judgment it becomes necessary, after notice of four months to the government of Mexico, to order the troops charged with the defense of the territory of the United States, when in close pursuit of such invaders, to cross the Rio Grande and to use such means, not amounting to acts of war, as may be requisite for the recovery of stolen property and to protect the citizens and territory of the United States against the acts of outlaws and robbers.

The Clerk also read the proposed substitute of Mr. TUCKER, as follows:

SEC. 2. That the President of the United States be authorized and is hereby requested to present to the government of Mexico a formal statement of the injuries and damages done to the citizens of the United States by the inroads and invasions of the United States by lawless bands from the Mexican states; and, furthermore, to demand that the government of Mexico shall prevent and restrain all such inroads and invasions in future.

If the Mexican government shall not within four months after such formal statement and demand take effective measures to prevent such inroads and invasions, the President of the United States is hereby authorized to use the Army of the United States, or so much thereof as he may deem necessary, to drive out any bands of invaders and to pursue them into the territory of Mexico for the sole purpose of recovering the property taken from citizens or others under the protection of the United States, guarding in all cases against any unnecessary injury to the persons or property of peaceable inhabitants of Mexico.

The President is further requested at once to notify this joint resolution to the Mexican government, with an earnest remonstrance against the wrongs done to the people of the United States, and that, while forbearing to take any measures but such as are recognized as just and proper between nations at peace, the Government of the United States will be constrained, saving the peaceful relations between the two countries, to take such action as is indicated by this joint resolution, unless the Mexican government shall effectually prevent the evils complained of in the future.

The question being taken on agreeing to the substitute of Mr. TUCKER, it was not agreed to.

The question was then taken on agreeing to the substitute of Mr. BANKS; and there were—ayes 88, noes 5; no quorum voting.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the substitute will be regarded as agreed to.

Mr. SCHLEICHER. I move that the committee rise and report the joint resolution to the House.

Mr. CONGER. There was no quorum, and I think on a declaration of war we should have a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The vote is still to be taken on the second section as amended by the substitute, which question the Chairman will put to the committee. The question is on agreeing to the second section of the joint resolution as amended by the substitute of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS.]

Mr. CONGER demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 85, noes 38; no quorum voting.

The CHAIRMAN. Is a further count insisted upon?

Mr. CONGER. I shall ask for the yeas and nays on that amendment in the House.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. When the substitute was adopted what necessity was there for putting the question again?

The CHAIRMAN. Perhaps the gentleman from Illinois is technically right.

Mr. CONGER. If gentlemen agree there shall be a vote by yeas and nays in the House, I will not object to the adoption of the second section as amended.

Mr. SCHLEICHER. I agree you shall have the yeas and nays on that question in the House.

Mr. CONGER. Very well; I do not ask for a further count.

The second section, as amended, was then adopted.

Mr. SCHLEICHER. I move the committee rise and report the bill to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having taken the chair, Mr. MONROE reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the joint resolution (H. R. No. 96) to provide for the protection of the Texas frontier on the Lower Rio Grande, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments.

Mr. SCHLEICHER. I call for the previous question on the joint resolution and amendments.

Mr. CONGER. I hope the gentleman will not attempt that. I wish to make a remark or two on the joint resolution.

Mr. SCHLEICHER. Let the House decide whether it will sustain the demand for the previous question or not.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announcing the adoption of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 3749) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

PROTECTION OF TEXAS FRONTIER.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union will now be read in their order.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 9 and 10, strike out "the northern boundary of the State of Tamaulipas, above Laredo," and in lieu thereof insert "Fort Duncan, and above if necessary."

The amendment was concurred in.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to line 15, after the word "service," the following: "And the measures herein directed shall be carried out without delay, any restrictions or limitations in the laws in regard to the Army notwithstanding."

Mr. CONGER. There was a proviso to that amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is advised that they were separate amendments.

Mr. CONGER. Let the proviso be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no part of the troops provided for by this resolution shall be taken from any State or service where troops may now or hereafter be stationed, if in the judgment of the President the public service requires a continuance of troops in such localities.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is this all one amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is now informed it is one amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. One provision changes the laws in regard to the Army——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not open to debate.

Mr. CONGER. Then the vote is to be taken upon it as one proposition?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 56, noes 101.

Mr. HALE. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the amendment be again read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. RANDALL. That increases the Army.

Mr. KASSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The first portion on the recommendation of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SCHLEICHER] was adopted, and after that, as a separate proposition, the proviso was adopted as an independent amendment. If that be so, we can call for a division of the vote on the separate amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed these amendments were offered by different members of the committee and separately voted on. That being the case, they must necessarily be voted on separately.

Mr. HOLMAN. They came to the House as one amendment, the proviso being offered as an amendment to the amendment, both constituting one amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. It is plainly divisible. It is the Hancock amendment on which we ask the yeas and nays.

Mr. BANKS. The latter is a separate proposition unquestionably.

Mr. KASSON. Put on in Committee of the Whole by a separate vote.

Mr. GARFIELD. We ask for the yeas and nays on the Hancock amendment, and not on the first branch of it. We do not propose to ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. RANDALL. One is to be put down; is that the idea?

Mr. GARFIELD. No; we ask for the yeas and nays on the Hancock amendment.

Mr. SCHLEICHER. The first has lost its importance since the conference report on the Army bill has been adopted which leaves the Army at twenty-five thousand.

Mr. HALE. If the Chair will pardon a suggestion——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is willing to accept suggestions, but he is more anxious to learn the facts from the Clerk.

Mr. HALE. I called the yeas and nays, intending to call them upon the Hancock amendment, bearing in mind, as I did, yesterday, in Committee of the Whole, the two propositions were not one amendment. I do not think any member here will concede one proposition is in any way dependent upon the other. They were separate and distinct propositions. Upon one there was quite a contest, tellers being called, and a close vote of the committee being had. That was the Hancock amendment, and it was upon that I intended to call the yeas and nays. I do not desire to have the yeas and nays on the other proposition.

Mr. HOLMAN. As the measure comes to the House, what is called a separate amendment is a proviso to a proposition adopted by the Committee of the Whole, and however separately acted on in committee, both come into the House as one proposition.

Mr. KASSON. I suggest the gentleman from Indiana is in error.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not necessary for this matter to be discussed further. The Chair is ready to decide the point.

Mr. WARREN. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry different from anything which has hitherto been suggested. The question I desire to ask of the Chair is whether a motion to commit this bill to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions to inquire and report if it interferes with the constitutional power of the President over the Army, would be in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Such a motion would not be in order, as the previous question is operating. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that the amendment, and what is apparently a proviso to it, were entertained in the Committee of the Whole as entirely different propositions; that one came in a considerable time after the other had been adopted. The proviso was adopted as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. SMALLS,] whereas the other was offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SCHLEICHER] on behalf of the committee, and was separately voted on. More than that, the Chair must say that the amendment and proviso involve distinct propositions, at least to such an extent that a division upon them could be had at any rate. The question is upon the amendment first reported by the Clerk. It will be again reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the first section these words:

And the measures herein directed shall be carried out without delay, any restrictions or limitations in the laws in regard to the Army notwithstanding.

Mr. RANDALL. That increases the Army.

Mr. SCHLEICHER. I desire to say that I consider that amendment entirely immaterial, since both Houses have agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the Army bill, under which the Army is not to be reduced.

Mr. HALE. I do not call for the yeas and nays on that amendment.

The question being taken on the amendment, it was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of the first section the following:

Provided, That no part of the troops provided for by this resolution shall be taken from any State or service where troops may now or hereafter be stationed, if, in the judgment of the President, the public service requires the continuation of troops in such localities.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this amendment the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order. The amendment to which this proviso was attached having been voted down, I submit that the proviso falls with it.

Mr. GARFIELD. The proviso attaches to the section, and not to the amendment which has been voted down.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 80, nays 98, not voting 106; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ainsworth, Anderson, John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Bell, Blair, Bradley, William R. Brown, Horatio C. Burchard, Burleigh, Cannon, Conger, Darrall, Davy, Dobbins, Dunnell, Durand, Eames, Evans, Foster, Garfield, Hale, Hancock, Hardenbergh, Hendee, Hoge, Holman, Hoskins, Hunter, Kasson, Kelley, Kimball, Lawrence, Leavenworth, Le Moyne, Magoon, MacDougall, McDill, Miller, Monroe, Morgan, Nash, Norton, Oliver, O'Neill, Packer, Page, Payne, William A. Phillips, Plaisted, Platt, Potter, Pratt, Rainey, John Reilly, James B. Reilly, Rusk, Sampson, Savage, Sinnickson, Smalls, A. Herr Smith, Stevenson, Tarbox, Thornburgh, Martin I. Townsend, Washington Townsend, Tufts, Van Vorhes, Wait, Charles C. B. Walker, Alexander S. Wallace, Willard, Aipheus S. Williams, Charles G. Williams, James D. Williams, William B. Williams, and Willis—80.

NAYS—Messrs. Ashe, Atkins, Bagby, John H. Bagley, jr., Banning, Blackburn, Bland, Boone, Bradford, Bright, John Young Brown, Buckner, Samuel D. Burchard, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Candler, Cate, Caulfield, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, Clymer, Cochrane, Collins, Cook, Cox, Culberson, Cutler, Davis, De Bolt, Dibrell, Douglas, Eden, Felton, Finley, Forney, Fort, Gibson, Glover, Goode, Gunter, Andrew H. Hamilton, John T. Harris, Hartridge, Hartzell, Hatcher, Henkle, Hereford, Abram S. Hewitt, Hill, House, Thomas L. Jones, Kehr, Lamar, Franklin Landers, Lane, Levy, Lewis, Luttrell, Mackey, Maish, McFarland, Metcalfe, Milliken, Mills, Mutchler, New, Phelps, Piper, Randall, Reagan, Rice, Riddle, William M. Robbins, Miles Ross, Scales, Schleicher, Singleton, William E. Smith, Southard, Spencer, Springer, Stone, Terry, Thompson, Thomas, Throckmorton, Tucker, Turney, John L. Vance, Robert B. Vance, Waddell, Warren, Erastus Wells, Whitehouse, Wigginton, James Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, and Young—98.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, George A. Bagley, Bass, Beebe, Bliss, Blount, Campbell, Cason, Caswell, Chapin, Chittenden, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Cowan, Crapo, Crounse, Danford, Denison, Durham, Egbert, Ellis, Ely, Faulkner, Franklin, Freeman, Frye, Fuller, Gause, Goodin, Robert Hamilton, Haralson, Benjamin W. Harris, Henry R. Harris, Harrison, Hathorn, Haymond, Hays, Henderson, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hoar, Hooker, Hopkins, Hubbell, Hunton, Hurd, Hurlbut, Hyman, Jenks, Frank Jones, Joyce, King, Knott, George M. Landers, Lapham, Lord, Lynch, Lynde, McCrary, McMahon, Meade, Money, Morrison, Neal, O'Brien, Odell, John F. Philips, Pierce, Poppleton, Powell, Purman, Rea, John Robbins, Roberts, Robinson, Sobieski Ross, Sayler, Schumaker, Seelye, Sheakley, Siemons, Sparks, Strait, Stenger, Stowell, Swann, Teese, Waldron, Gilbert C. Walker, John W. Wallace, Walling, Walsh, Ward, G. Wiley Wells, Wheeler, White, Whiting, Whitthorne, Wike, Andrew Williams, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, James Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodburn, Woodworth, and Yeates—106.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. My colleague, Mr. POPPLETON, is absent by leave of the House.

Mr. SAVAGE. My colleague from Ohio, Mr. MCMAHON, is engaged on the impeachment trial.

Mr. CABELL. My colleague from Virginia, Mr. HUNTON, is detained from the House by sickness.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. I desire to announce that Mr. WELLS, of Mississippi, is absent on account of illness.

Mr. CASON. I am paired with my colleague from Indiana, Mr. FULLER. I do not know how he would vote on this amendment; but I presume if he were here he would vote "no," and I would vote "ay."

Mr. COCHRANE. My colleague from Pennsylvania, Mr. STENGER, is sick and is absent by leave of the House.

Mr. DUNNELL. I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. STRAIT, was yesterday called away by important business.

Mr. BRADLEY. My colleague, Mr. WALDRON, is absent by leave of the House.

Mr. EGBERT. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. WALLACE. If he were here he would vote "ay" and I should vote "no."

Mr. MACDOUGALL. My colleague, Mr. ADAMS, is absent on account of illness. If present he would vote "ay."

The result of the vote was then announced.

The next amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union was the following, as a substitute for the second section of the joint resolution:

That, whenever it shall appear to the President that the government of Mexico is unable to prevent the existing lawless invasion of the territory of the United States from Mexico for purposes of plunder or robbery, he shall be, and hereby is, authorized, if in his judgment it becomes necessary, after notice of forty days to the government of Mexico, to order the troops charged with the defense of the territory of the United States, when in close pursuit of such invaders, to cross the Rio Grande and to use such means, not amounting to acts of war, as may be requisite for the recovery of stolen property and to protect the citizens and territory of the United States against the acts of outlaws and robbers.

Mr. CONGER. The last vote taken in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union was upon the adoption of the second section as amended, and that is the proper question to be put to the House.

Mr. SCHLEICHER. Is this the substitute offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS?]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair so understands.

Mr. SCHLEICHER. We have accepted that in the committee.

Mr. RANDALL. If I understand it, a negative vote upon this question votes out the second section.

Mr. HOLMAN. O, no; the question is upon the amendment. This was offered in committee as a substitute for the second section, and it now comes into the House, and I suppose must be voted on in the same form.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. It was understood in committee that a vote was to be taken in the House upon this question as if upon a motion to strike out the section.

Mr. HOLMAN. It comes into the House as a substitute for the second section.

Mr. RANDALL. It does not come as a substitute; it comes as an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the second section, as amended.

Mr. GARFIELD. Then a negative vote votes out the second section.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 98, noes 55.

Mr. CONGER. I call for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered, only fifteen members voting therefor.

Mr. CONGER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The question was put on ordering the yeas and nays; and on a division there were—ayes 31, noes 86.

So (one-fifth voting in favor thereof) the yeas and nays were ordered.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Leave of absence was granted to Mr. WALLING for ten days on important business.

Leave of absence heretofore granted to Mr. DURHAM was extended for five days.

Mr. O'NEILL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to—ayes 117, noes 44; and accordingly (at five o'clock and seven minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. BANKS: The petition of John S. Gallaher, jr., of Washington, District of Columbia, for the difference of pay between $3 per day for sixteen months and the pay of a third-class clerk for the same length of time, on account of services rendered in the Navy Department, to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. CAULFIELD: The petition of R. G. Dyrenforth, that he be re-imbursed the amount expended by him in defending himself against certain charges preferred against him, while examiner in the United States Patent-Office, by George Olney, of Brooklyn, New York, and from which he was exonerated, to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. DANFORD: The petition of Lieutenant William S. Spriggs, late of the One hundred and sixteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, to be relieved from the unjust sentence of a court-martial, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MACKEY, of South Carolina: The petition of Noneto Plandolet, a subject of Alfonso, King of Spain, living at Barcelona, in that kingdom, that his claim for the proceeds of cotton seized and sold by United States Treasury agents at Augusta, Georgia, be referred to the Court of Claims to render judgment for such damage as they shall deem him justly entitled to by reason of said seizure and sale, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. MAGOON: Memorial of the Wisconsin Legislature, requesting an investigation into the right of Hon. GEORGE W. CATE to hold a seat in the present Congress, to the Committee of Elections.

Also, the petition of Charles Cowles, Clayton Morgan, and other citizens of Leroy, Wisconsin, for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Also, the petition of Thomas Hunsacker, and 50 other citizens, of Grant County, Wisconsin, against reducing the present tariff on lead, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of W. J. McCoy, and 26 other citizens, of Grant County, Wisconsin, of similar import, to the same committee.

By Mr. MORRISON: Papers relating to the claim of Charles Valier, for three months' extra pay as second lieutenant Company M, Seventh Regiment Illinois Cavalry, to the Committee on War Claims.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, July 20, 1876.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 1972) to authorize the construction of an inclosure around the United States penitentiary at Boisé City, in the Territory of Idaho, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

REMOVAL OF THE DISTRICT JAIL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 842) authorizing the commissioners of the District of Columbia to remove the jail on Judiciary Square to grounds near to the Washington Asylum for the use of the District.

The amendment of the House of Representatives was in section 2, lines 5 and 6, to strike out the words "money in the Treasury" and insert in lieu thereof the words "revenues of the District of Columbia;" so as to read:

Which sum is hereby appropriated for that purpose out of any revenues of the District of Columbia not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask to have the Senate disagree to the amendment in order to move for a committee of conference, for this reason: We now own this building, and it would seem perhaps proper that we should meet the expense that may be required to put it up again on Government land. If we allow the bill to pass as amended by the House, it seems to me we shall lose all control over the property. As it is for the convenience of the United States court, as well as for other purposes, it is perhaps most proper that it should remain a Government building. I therefore ask to have the amendment of the House non-concurred in, so that a committee of conference may be appointed.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that a committee of conference be appointed on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. MORRILL, Mr. PADDOCK, and Mr. COOPER were appointed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. INGALLS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 750) granting a pension to T. B. Murdock, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. INGALLS. I am instructed by the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3184) granting a pension to Emerick W. Hansell, to ask to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims. Mr. Hansell was the messenger of the Department of State who was in attendance upon Secretary Seward at the time of his attempted assassination on the 14th of April, 1865. One of the other messengers, who received similar injuries, was awarded by Congress the sum of $5,000 by a special act for injuries received on that occasion. The committee believe that the claim of Mr. Hansell is meritorious and just, but being unwilling to establish a precedent of pensioning persons in civil life, they ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. WRIGHT. The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of John D. Thorne, praying compensation for certain cotton taken and appropriated by United States troops in Louisiana during the late war, instruct me to report it back and recommend that the claim be rejected. I wish to say in this connection that the Senator from West Virginia farthest from me [Mr. CAPERTON] does not agree with the other members of the committee. He is not in his place this morning, and he requested that the case should go upon the Calendar. There is no bill, however, in the case, and it cannot go on the Calendar, being a mere petition. The report may at present, as the Senator from West Virginia is not in the Chamber, lie on the table without any order on the subject of rejection.

Mr. DAVIS. What case does the Senator report?

Mr. WRIGHT. The petition of John D. Thorne, of Louisiana.

Mr. DAVIS. I suggest to the Senator that it lie upon the table.

Mr. WRIGHT. I have so suggested.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will lie upon the table for the present, if there be no objection.

Mr. KEY, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 421) referring to the Court of Claims for adjudication and determination the claims of the parties therein named for the past and future use of the Norton post-marking and postage-canceling hand-stamp and the Robertson improved hand-stamp, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 748) for the relief of James B. Guthrie, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. BOOTH, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1931) granting a pension to John J. Partillo, of Gratiot County, Michigan, reported it without amendment and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2468) granting a pension to David McComb, late employé in the naval service of the United States, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 859) for the relief of certain claimants under the donation-land law of Oregon, approved September 27, 1850, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRUCE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2079) granting a pension to Henry H. Kaiser, late private in Company H of Eighth Regiment of United States Veteran Volunteers, submitted a report thereon recommending that the case be referred to the Commissioner of Pensions for his action; and the committee was discharged from the further consideration of the bill.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3178) granting a pension to Thomas Galloway, late captain of Company C, First Maryland Cavalry Volunteers, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

HAMBURGH RIOTS.

Mr. PATTERSON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President be requested to communicate to the Senate, if in his opinion not incompatible with the public interest, any information he may have in regard to the recent slaughter of American citizens at Hamburgh, South Carolina.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONER OF EDUCATION FOR 1875.

Mr. DAVIS submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That 2,000 copies of the report of the Commissioner of Education for 1875 (out of the 10,000 copies ordered) be delivered to the superintendent of the folding-room of the Senate for use of the Senate.

OSAGE LANDS IN KANSAS.

Mr. INGALLS. If there is no further morning business I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 3625, to which I have previously called the attention of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 3625) providing for the sale of the Osage ceded lands in Kansas to actual settlers.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment in section 2, line 17, to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections in each township of said land shall be reserved for State school purposes, in accordance with the provisions of the act of admission of the State of Kansas.

And in line 21 after the word "provided" to strike out "further."

Mr. SAULSBURY. This, I suppose, is a very important bill. I know but little about questions connected with the public lands, but I have always regarded them as questions of importance. There is, I suppose, not more than one-fourth of the Senate present, and I hope the Senator from Kansas will let the bill go over until the Senate becomes fuller, or at least until some members of the Senate come in who are familiar with questions of this kind. I know personally but very little about it, but I see that this is a question of public lands in Kansas affecting the interests of railroad corporations. It is therefore a very important bill, and one that ought not to be considered very hastily. I hope the Senator will let the bill go over for further consideration.

Mr. INGALLS. If the Senator from Delaware desires any information on the subject, I shall be very happy to give it to him; but I should regret, on account of the absence of any Senators who ought to be here, that the bill should be postponed at this stage of the session. The passage of the bill is rendered necessary by the decision of the Supreme Court rendered at its October term in the case of The United States vs. The Leavenworth, Lawrence and Galveston Railroad Company. By the act of March 3, 1863, certain lands were granted to the State of Kansas in aid of the construction of certain railroads. In 1867 the Osage Indians, who then occupied a large reservation in the southern part of Kansas, made a treaty by which they ceded to the United States a tract fifty miles in length by thirty in width, being fifteen hundred square miles, which was to be sold for the benefit of those Indians to the amount of $300,000, the remainder of the fund derived from the sale to be placed to the credit of the Indians generally for civilization purposes. This reservation lay directly upon the route of those railroads to which I have previously alluded. The Secretary of the Interior decided that when the cession was made by the Osage Indians to the United States that portion of their reservation became public land of the United States and that the grant to the State for the benefit of those railroad corporations became immediately operative upon the Osage ceded lands within those limits upon the extinction or surrender of the Indian title. Patents were issued to the State of Kansas, which were transferred to the corporations as their roads were constructed. A very large number of people from all parts of the country immediately emigrated thither and settled supposing that the title to the alternate sections was in the railroads, and made their purchases of those corporations. Probably thirty thousand people are within the limits of that cession at the present time, and there are not less than half a dozen towns of from a thousand to five thousand inhabitants in the same area.

The question whether the grant to the State became operative within the limits of the Osage reservation was raised in the circuit court for the district of Kansas by a suit instituted for that purpose under the directions of the Attorney-General. The case was decided in favor of the United States before the circuit court; was taken on appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, and was there decided at the last October term—the opinion not being delivered until April of this present year—to the effect that the grant to the railroads did not become operative within the reservation, but that in fact it was not the territory of the United States nor public lands subject to disposal under the land laws of the Government, and that therefore no title passed to the railroads. It therefore becomes necessary that some method should be devised by which these purchasers can obtain title to their property by paying for it over again. That is all they ask, and this bill is to carry out the provisions of the treaty which provides for the disposition of these lands by the United States.

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire to ask the Senator from Kansas whether these settlers who went on to these lands after the Osage title had been extinguished went there prior to the time of location of the road or subsequent to that time?

Mr. INGALLS. These settlers went on the land partly in pursuance of a joint resolution of Congress under date of April 10, 1869, and many more of them after the Secretary of the Interior had decided that the alternate sections belonged to the railroad corporations. These settlers then entered upon them, made their purchases and their improvements, and have remained until the present day.

Mr. PADDOCK. Made their purchases of the railroad companies?

Mr. INGALLS. Made their purchases in many instances of the railroad corporations, in many cases paying for them in full, in others paying for them partially, but in all cases making very considerable improvements. In consequence of the decision of the Supreme Court, the title having been held never to have vested in the railroad corporations nor in the State of Kansas, but to have remained in the Government, these men find themselves nominally in the attitude of trespassers; and the question now is what title shall they obtain and in what manner shall it be obtained from the Government of the United States?

Mr. BOOTH. I desire to ask the Senator from Kansas if many of these persons who purchased of the railroads under the ruling of the Secretary of the Interior did not purchase more than one hundred and sixty acres?

Mr. INGALLS. It is undoubtedly true that many of them did. I suppose there may be a hundred instances in which purchasers from the railroads secured from two to five quarter-sections of land, making from three hundred and twenty to eight hundred acres in the aggregate.

Mr. BOOTH. One case has been brought to my knowledge by a letter of a party who purchased in good faith of the railroad companies eight hundred acres of this land; has continuously occupied it for several years; has put very valuable improvements on it, so that in fact his improvements are now estimated to be worth $40,000. There may be other parallel cases. Of that I know nothing; but under the provisions of this bill such persons could only buy from the Government tracts of one hundred and sixty acres of land, at a dollar and forty cents per acre. It seems to me that in that regard this bill is liable at least to work a very great injustice.

Mr. INGALLS. That is undoubtedly true, Mr. President; but it is one of the unfortunate sequences that follow the decision of the Su preme Court that the title was not in the railroad corporations, but remained in the Government. The question now is, the land policy of the United States being based upon the theory of single settlements of one hundred and sixty acres each, whether in consequence of this misfortune of these parties we shall depart from that and allow them to purchase from the Government the full amount of the land that they bought from the railroad corporations.

Mr. BOOTH. In connection with that, it is only fair to state that these parties who purchased of the railroads purchased under the decisions of the Department.

Mr. INGALLS. That is true.

Mr. BOOTH. Up to that time the United States had done every official act which was necessary to be done to give the citizens and settlers and those desiring lands notice that the title was in the railroad companies; and under that notice they made these purchases. So that it is not exactly an original question of land policy, but it is a question of how far we shall deviate from that well-established policy in order to do simple justice, if we can do it, to men who have purchased in good faith.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. DAVIS. I should like to ask the Senator who has charge of this bill whether or not the land in question all lies in the State of Kansas.

Mr. INGALLS. It lies wholly in the State of Kansas and within organized counties. It has been settled for seven or eight years. It is to-day occupied by one of the most prosperous, enterprising, and industrious communities in my State. It covers two entire counties, and portions of two or three others, I believe.

Mr. SHERMAN. What is the object of the amendment?

Mr. INGALLS. The proviso in the original bill that was read reserved, within these lands, the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections for the State of Kansas for school purposes. That being Indian territory the Committee on Indian Affairs thought the right of the State of Kansas to the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections did not attach under the act of admission. The amendment withdraws the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections from the operations of the school system. These sections have been taken and improved by claimants upon the belief that the rights of the State did not attach within the bounds of Indian reservations.

Mr. SHERMAN. The citizens of Kansas are more interested in this matter than any one else; but the sure effect of striking out this provision will be something like what we have seen in the California substitution of other lands in the State to make good the school sections. It seems to me the citizens of Kansas are more interested in preserving the school fund, the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections in this Osage Indian territory, than any other portion of the United States; but at all events the United States is interested to this extent, that if these sections are not given for school purposes the United States has got to make them good from other parts of the territory of the United States. I ask if there is any provision of law similar to the one found in regard to the California reserved school sections?

Mr. INGALLS. There is not; and I beg to say in this connection that if the Senate will agree to give us the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections out of this Indian land we shall receive them with very great gratitude and with entire satisfaction. The subject was before the Committee on Indian Affairs, and it was determined against my judgment and in opposition to my wish that the State of Kansas had no right under the act of admission to the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections in land that had been Indian territory and was simply ceded to the United States Government for purposes of sale. If the Senate think otherwise, it certainly will be exceedingly gratifying to me, and I have no doubt that the State of Kansas, through its Legislature, will pass resolutions of thanks to the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I will tell you what can be done and what ought to be done. This bill assumes that the United States has the power to sell this land at a dollar and forty cents an acre to a certain class of persons. The whole bill is based on the assumption that the United States has that power to sell.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator seems to be unfamiliar with the facts. That power was conferred by the treaty of 1867. It was originally Indian land.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am aware of that.

Mr. INGALLS. By the treaty of 1867 the Osage Indians ceded a portion of their reservation, fifty by thirty miles in extent, to be sold by the United States Government, and out of the proceeds $300,000 was to be placed to the credit of the Osage Indians, and the balance to constitute a civilization fund for the benefit of the Indians at large.

Mr. SHERMAN. It comes back again to the proposition that the United States has the power to sell these lands reserved by the treaty. It has power to fix the price at which the land shall be sold. Some of this land is worth at least three or four time $1.40 an acre; but it is all to be sold at $1.40 an acre to actual settlers, so that the Government of the United States assumes the right to fix the price and sell this land. Why, therefore, ought it not to give to the State of Kansas the right to buy the school sections at $1.40, instead of giving that right to actual settlers, because if we now, in violation, I think, of the law which admitted the State of Kansas into the Union of States, appropriate the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections for other purposes—that is, sell them to actual settlers—we shall undoubtedly be subject to a kind of reclamation on the part of the State of Kansas for a substitution for these lands we have thus disposed of? That right has been recognized in the case of California, and has been the subject of boundless complaints brought to our attention at this session very strikingly.

I think, therefore, that instead of striking out this proviso it ought to be kept in, and the State of Kansas allowed to take the land embraced in the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections at $1.40 an acre. They will then become a part of her school fund, and I have no doubt the lands can be sold by the State of Kansas at a price greatly exceeding that, and the spirit of the law which gives to the State these two sections of land in each township will be observed by the United States, so far as it can be done in accordance with our treaty with the Indians. Certainly, if we have a right to sell this land to actual settlers at $1.40 an acre, we have a right to sell it to the State of Kansas. I am, therefore, opposed to striking out the proviso. I think it is a wise one, even if the State of Kansas has to pay the price fixed for actual settlers. It will save largely for its school fund, and we shall be saved from future reclamation on the part of the State of Kansas.

Mr. HARVEY. If my recollection is correct concerning this matter, the question as to the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections is not essential to the bill at all, for the reason that the grant which was said to have been made to the railroad companies was of the odd-numbered sections. The sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections, usually called school lands, are both even-numbered sections in each township; and, unless my recollection is at fault, they are not affected at all by the operation of this bill, nor were they touched by the terms of the supposed grant to the railroads. I am not positive, but my recollection is that the grant was of the odd-numbered sections alternately. So I think that question is immaterial to the bill.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Kansas to the eighth section, which provides for paying certain fees.

Mr. INGALLS. Will not the Senator allow us to take the question on the pending amendment.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I call the attention of the Senator from Kansas to the provisions for the payment of costs to clerks, attorneys, and other persons employed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to strike out the eighth section, which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the eighth section.

The Chief Clerk read section 8 of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 8. That it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General of the United States, for the time being, to ascertain and determine the amount of costs and necessary expenses incurred in prosecuting the two suits commenced in the name of the United States against the Leavenworth, Lawrence and Galveston Railroad Company and the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad Company in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Kansas, for the purpose of testing the validity of the title to said lands claimed by said railroad companies, and the costs and expenses of prosecuting said cases in the Supreme Court of the United States; said expenses to include the fees justly due to the attorneys retained at the instance of the settlers on said land, with the approval of the Attorney-General of the United States; that, after determining the amount of costs and expenses as aforesaid, the Attorney-General shall certify the said amount, and to whom due, to the Secretary of the Interior; and the Secretary of the Interior shall pay to the parties entitled thereto the sum so allowed and certified to, as aforesaid, out of the proceeds arising from fifteen cents per acre on the sale of said lands.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think that this is a novel proposition in legislation. Here are certain lands which were ceded by the Osage Indians to the United States in trust, to be held by the Secretary of the Interior in a certain way provided by the treaty. Then the United States made a railroad land grant of alternate sections which ran across these lands. Then the settlers swept on and took up their locations, and so forth, and then got into a controversy with the railroad companies as to which owned these lands, the settlers claiming under pre-emption or homestead, one or both, and the railroads claiming under their grant. The Attorney-General, either under the authority of a statute or under his general authority, which I think he would possess——

Mr. INGALLS. Under his general authority.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Attorney-General instituted a bill in equity to set aside and vacate these railroad claims as being not authorized by the grant and in violation of the treaty. The settlers, as I have been informed, employed certain eminent counsel at a stipulated fee, depending upon success, and finally the case has been determined. Now the proposition is to take out of this money belonging to the Indians the money necessary not only to re-imburse the United States for doing its duty in vacating these grants that the Secretary of the Interior had certified to these railroad companies, but also to pay the counsel for the settlers in fighting for their claims, although it was all done by way of volunteering in the same suit. I never heard of a proposition of that kind before in any law that we have passed; and I think, besides being wrong in principle and a wrong to the Indians, it is also setting a precedent which, if followed, would make a very large inroad upon the Treasury. Therefore it appears to me that this case, like all others, ought to be left just where the law leaves it. If anybody has retained any counsel to assert his rights, either in a suit to which he was a party or in one to which he was ready to volunteer aid, he ought to pay for it; and neither the United States nor this Indian trust fund should be called upon to pay a single dollar.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I fully agree with the principles laid down by the Senator from Vermont. I regret to say that he has been led by his unfamiliarity with the case into a misunderstanding of the facts. The settlers in the original litigation before the circuit court of the United States for the district of Kansas employed counsel, among whom were Hon. Jeremiah S. Black, of Pennsylvania; Hon. William Lawrence, of Ohio, and Hon. Wilson Shannon, now of Kansas. When the case was taken on appeal from the circuit court to the Supreme Court the Attorney-General authorized and directed these persons to appear on behalf of the Government. They did so. Two of them appeared in person, and all three of them filed briefs, assisted, I believe, by the attorney of the United States for the district of Kansas. In consequence of this appearance and this retainer the Government was subjected to a liability for fees which the settlers themselves propose to pay by a voluntary imposition of fifteen cents per acre upon these lands in addition to the fund of $1.25 for which they would legally, perhaps, or at least naturally have been sold. This fifteen cents an acre is an imposition that is consented to voluntarily by the settlers for the purpose of relieving the Government from any additional liability by reason of the litigation of this very important cause.

Mr. KERNAN. Will the gentleman state how large a fund this fifteen cents an acre will raise?

Mr. INGALLS. I am not able to say precisely what the amount will be.

Mr. KERNAN. A pretty large fund?

Mr. INGALLS. Yes, sir.

Mr. KERNAN. Several hundred thousand dollars?

Mr. INGALLS. By no means. The Senator is entirely mistaken in the amount.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How many acres are there in these two reservations?

Mr. INGALLS. There is but one reservation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is under two articles in the treaty, I see.

Mr. INGALLS. No, sir; it is under the first article of the treaty. What we are now dealing with is what is known as the Osage ceded lands, a tract fifty by thirty miles in extent within the original limits of the Osage reservation.

Mr. KERNAN. One other question. The settlers held under the railroad company, I understand?

Mr. INGALLS. Some of them did.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Part of them did; they were not all resisting the railroad right. It was the squatters who resisted the railroad right.

Mr. KERNAN. Then I understand there was a portion of them who did not hold under the railroad, who were mere squatters.

Mr. INGALLS. Those who did not hold under the railroad went on the lands under the provisions of the joint resolution of April 10, 1869, which declared that they had that right. They were not squatters.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, declared they had it subject to the legal rights of the railroad company.

Mr. INGALLS. But it proves to have been a valid right, because it has been decided that there were no other valid rights.

Mr. KERNAN. There is no more unthrifty and expensive way than to create a fund, we do not know how large, to settle claims the amount of which we do not know.

Mr. INGALLS. It is left entirely to the sound discretion of the Secretary of the Interior and the Attorney-General.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I am persuaded that my friend from Kansas must be laboring under some mistake about this employment by the United States, because we have a statute which points out precisely how counsel may be employed by the Attorney-General, and another statute which requires him to report in his annual report every year to Congress the name of every one of the counsel so employed in all the business of the Government and the compensation that has been agreed to be paid or has been paid to them. Now, I have looked over the report of the Attorney-General, not with reference to this particular item, because I never heard of it before as connected with legislation and never saw this bill until this moment, but I have looked over the report of the Attorney-General as a matter of course two or three times with some care in respect of all items of that kind, as it is the duty of the Committee on the Judiciary to do, to see how the Law Department of the Government is being administered, and I feel very sure that there is no report from the Attorney-General that any of these gentlemen have been employed about any business of this character or any other. I may be mistaken; I have not the report before me; but I suspect it will turn out on inquiry and when we get the official papers that the Attorney-General has employed, as it is called, these gentlemen just as in a very important confiscation case where I myself was counsel once for the purchaser at the marshal's sale of a large amount of rebel property confiscated, and there was an attempt on the part of the owner to re-open it, and I was trying to defend the rights of the purchaser although the suit was in the name of the United States, and I of course had to have the authority of the Attorney-General to be allowed to go into court and argue the cause, but of course at the expense of my own client. I suspect it will turn out in this case, if we get at the papers, that the authority which the Attorney-General gave to those gentlemen to appear and argue this cause was an authority to argue it at the expense of their clients, whoever they might be.

Therefore, Mr. President, I submit that this kind of legislation is altogether unique and is altogether improper both in principle and in point of precedent. Then there is another thing about this which partly applies to the eighth section. My friend says that this is an additional sum of fifteen cents an acre above the dollar and a quarter which would be the legal or the natural price; and therefore it is really a tax upon the settlers. It is not only a tax upon the settlers who are already there, so far as they are concerned who have been parties to this litigation in fact, but is a tax upon all purchasers of the lands, whoever they may be.

Mr. INGALLS. Would I disturb the Senator if I were to say that there is a settler on every quarter section of the land already? It is all occupied.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did not know that. Then my last remark would not apply. Now, let us see whether this fifteen cents an acre is additional to what we are bound by treaty obligations to get for this land if we can. My friend says—and I have no doubt he is correct, because it is a matter that he knows about—that the bill only covers the land mentioned in the first article. Am I right about that?

Mr. INGALLS. It covers a tract of land within the original limits of the Osage reservation, known as the Osage ceded tract, which was fifty by thirty miles in extent, and out of the proceeds of which $300,000 were to be paid to the Osages and the remainder to be applied as a civilization fund for the benefit of the Indians at large.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does it cover or in any way affect that tract of land "twenty miles in width from north to south on the north side of the remainder of their then present reservation?"

Mr. INGALLS. I understand it does not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I see by the first few lines of the first section of this bill that it does in terms cover the lands mentioned in the first article, and so apparently plainly does not include those mentioned in the second. So the Senator is undoubtedly correct. But in the third line of the second section the word "land" is used without any limitation "as mentioned in the first section," which might, inasmuch as this railway crosses the whole of it, extend "the land" to all land named in the second article; but a single word would correct that. There is no need to spend any time about it.

Now I will come back to the fifteen-cent question. Let us see exactly what the treaty between the United States and these Indians provided should be done with the land mentioned in the first section. The treaty is in volume 14 of the Statutes at Large, page 687:

ARTICLE I.

The tribe of the Great and Little Osage Indians, having now more lands than are necessary for their occupation, and all payments from the Government to them under former treaties having ceased, leaving them greatly impoverished, and being desirous of improving their condition by disposing of their surplus lands, do hereby grant and sell to the United States the lands contained within the following boundaries, that is to say: Beginning at the southeast corner of their present reservation and running thence north with the eastern boundary thereof fifty miles to the northeast corner; thence west with the northern line thirty miles; thence south fifty miles to the southern boundary of said reservation; and thence east with said southern boundary to the place of beginning: Provided, That the western boundary of said land herein ceded shall not extend further westward than upon a line commencing at a point on the southern boundary of said Osage country one mile east of the place where the Verdigris River crosses the southern boundary of the State of Kansas.

That is merely description. Now comes what the United States is to do:

And in consideration of the grant and sale to them of the above-described lands the United States agree to pay the sum of $ 00,000, which sum shall be placed to the credit of said tribe of Indians in the Treasury of the United States, and interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum shall be paid to said tribes semi-annually in money, clothing, provisions, or such article of utility as the Secretary of the Interior may from time to time direct. Said lands shall be surveyed and sold, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, on the most advantageous terms, for cash, as public lands are surveyed and sold under existing laws, but no pre-emption claim or homestead settlement shall be recognized; and after re-imbursing the United States the cost of said survey and sale, and the said sum of $300,000 placed to the credit of said Indians, the remaining proceeds of sales shall be placed in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the "civilization fund," to be used, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, for the education and civilization of Indian tribes residing within the limits of the United States.

In the first place you will see, Mr. President, that the express provision of this treaty is that these lands shall be sold on the most advantageous terms obtainable. They are not to be sold for a dollar and a quarter an acre, or a dollar and a half an acre, or two dollars and a half an acre, or any other definite sum; they are to be sold in the nature of a trust for a particular purpose, on the best terms that can be got. In whose discretion? Not in the discretion of Congress, but in the discretion and under the administration of the Secretary of the Interior. Now this bill provides—the whole of it as well as the eighth section—that instead of the Secretary of the Interior exercising the discretion that the treaty reposed in him and performing the duties that devolved upon him to get the most money that he could for those lands, we now having got rid of this outstanding claim of the railroad companies, these lands shall be sold to the settlers at a fixed price of $1.40 an acre, $1.25 as my friend explains to be devoted to the trust mentioned in the first article, and the fifteen cents to be devoted to the trust of paying the counsel and the expenses mentioned in section 8. It does appear to me, Mr. President, that this provision of this act is in the face of this treaty. The trust, the agreement, the contract, call it whatever you will, is that the United States received these lands upon the terms that they shall be disposed of by the Secretary of the Interior on the best terms he can get in his discretion, for cash, and it says in addition (which is a part of my present point) that homestead and pre-emption claims shall not be allowed to be established within that boundary.

Then came the act of 1869 which, notwithstanding this treaty, did say that actual settlers might take up these lands subject to the legal rights of everybody. I do not remember the language, but that is the substance of it. They have gone on, as it is stated, and have occupied these lands, but there is still here the duty which this treaty imposes of having the lands sold for cash, not at a price to be fixed by law, but at a price that the Secretary of the Interior deems to be the just and best one that can be got.

Now, is there not something in the suggestion, even as to these settlers, that if they chose under the act of 1869 subject to their chances to go on and occupy these lands that have become very valuable by the circumstance that the railway had been laid across and near them, they would be bound in equity and in law, following the treaty, to pay, if they want to keep the lands, the price that the Secretary of the Interior exercising the discretion that the treaty reposes in him should deem to be the fair, and just, and best price?

It may be said that this money is money in which the Indians have no interest; but this is a mistake. Although the balance, after the $300,000, is appropriated to the general civilization fund, yet still that civilization fund by its constitution is a trust for the benefit of these very Indians as well as others. They are, therefore, not only the founders of the charity, if you can call it such, as the institutors of the trust, but they are with others of their people the beneficiaries who are entitled to have the last sum made out of the sale of these lands made as large as it justly and honestly can be.

So, then, Mr. President, it appears to me that this bill in its present shape ought to have an amendment at the end of it providing that it shall not take effect until these tribes of Indians shall agree to its provisions; and if it is just, of course they will be got to agree. If we fail to do that, the result will be, as experience has shown in other cases, it is inevitable morally that the Indians by and by will come back to Congress and say, "Here we have got a great claim against the United States; these lands, instead of having been worth $1.25 or $1.40 an acre, were really and honestly worth to the settlers themselves, over and above all improvements, $2.50 or $3 or $5, depending upon location; and as the United States has violated the trust, the United States must make up to the Indians and to the civilization fund the sum that is thus deficient." We do not want to engage in any operation of that kind, it appears to me; and at the proper time, to guard against what seems to me to be an inevitable trouble hereafter, I shall move that provision; but my present motion is to strike out the eighth section about the law expenses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of twelve o'clock has arrived.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Perhaps we can take a vote on this amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think we had better go on with the trial.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask unanimous consent to have it understood that this matter may be taken up to-morrow at the conclusion of the morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the suggestion of the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. DAVIS. I have several mornings tried to get up a bill to remove the political disabilities of a citizen of West Virginia, reported from the Judiciary Committee some time since, and have not had an opportunity. Therefore I shall have to object to anything excluding that.

Mr. INGALLS. With the understanding that I will permit the Senator to have that bill taken up after this is before the Senate; will that be satisfactory?

Mr. DAVIS. Yes; I have no objection if I have an opportunity of calling up the bill and disposing of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The understanding is that the request of the Senator from Kansas includes the bill of the Senator from West Virginia. The Chair hears no objection to the suggestion in that form.

THOMAS H. WILLIAMS.

Mr. DENNIS. I ask that the bill (S. No. 866) to remove the political disabilities of Thomas H. Williams, of Maryland, be considered now.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on the Judiciary reported an amendment to strike out the word "doctor" before "Thomas H. Williams."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed by a two-thirds vote.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. U. S. GRANT, jr., his Secretary, announced that the President had on the 19th instant approved and signed the act (S. No. 872) for the relief of the family of the late John T. King and of L. B. Cutler.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask the Senate to take up the bill (S. No. 992) for the relief of Admiral Charles Wilkes that I reported the other day. I presume there will be no objection to it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I objected to others; the counsel are present, the case is called, and I do not think other business should interpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio objects.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not object to the bill, but we ought to go on with the trial.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, some two weeks ago or more the Senate appointed a committee of conference on the Indian appropriation bill. Three or four days since the House of Representatives appointed a committee on the same bill. I have no report of agreement or disagreement to make, but feel it to be my duty to report progress or want of progress, and to state the reason why the committee has been unable to act and confer upon that subject, and the reason I give I receive from the chairman of the House committee of conference, to wit, that they do not deem that the Senate has expressed itself yet on the subject of the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department, and they await the action of the Senate upon the separate bill that has been sent from the House for that transfer. That is the ground upon which we have thus far been unable to obtain a meeting, and it is the information I have from the chairman of the House conferees as to their present position on that subject. I suggest it so that the Senate may govern its action accordingly by its own sense of propriety as to the order of business or by that suggested from the House.

Mr. HAMLIN. I want to ask my friend if the House has even appointed a committee on the bill?

Mr. WINDOM. A committee has been appointed.

Mr. HAMLIN. When was it appointed?

Mr. WINDOM. Within three or four days.

Mr. HAMLIN. Was not the delay in appointing that committee placed expressly on the ground that they would not act until the Senate acted on the bill to which the Senator has referred?

Mr. WINDOM. I understood it so from the present chairman of the committee.

Mr. HAMLIN. I understood it so from other members of the committee distinctly.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to have the Senator state distinctly whether the committee on the part of the House declined to meet the committee on the part of the Senate for the purpose of a conference on the bill on which they were appointed?

Mr. WINDOM. Not in terms; but after several requests we have been unable to obtain a meeting, and I am informed this morning that that is the cause of the delay.

Mr. DAWES. Do they neglect to meet on request?

Mr. WINDOM. They do not meet, and have been requested. The Senator can put whatever construction upon it he pleases. I ought in justice to state that I am informed that the same reason has been given by the republican member of that committee, but I do not wish to make a political matter of it.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask the Senate to put on its passage the bill (S. No. 493) for the removal of the political disabilities of John T. Walker, of Texas. The bill comes from the Judiciary Committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio has objected to any further legislative business.

Mr. MAXEY. This is only a bill to remove the political disabilities of a gentleman, regularly reported from the Judiciary Committee, and will take but a moment.

Mr. SHERMAN. It seems to me it is wrong for the Senate when the case is ready to be proceeded with, and the time has arrived, to go on with other business. I have no objection to the bill referred to, but I think we ought to go on with the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator objects.

Mr. SHERMAN. I give way to a conference report; to nothing else.

IMPEACHMENT OF W. W. BELKNAP.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Legislative and executive business will now be suspended and the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the articles of impeachment exhibited by the House of Representatives against William W. Belknap, late Secretary of War.

The Senate then proceeded to the trial of the impeachment of William W. Belknap, late Secretary of War.

After some time spent in the consideration of the articles of impeachment, the trial was temporarily suspended and the Senate resumed its

LEGISLATIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes its legislative session.

TEMPORARY PROVISION FOR EXPENDITURES.

Mr. WINDOM. I offer a bill for which I ask present consideration. I offer it on behalf of the Committee on Appropriations, although I have not the assent or approval of a majority of the committee, because I have not been able to find them. It is a copy of the last ten-days extension act which was passed, precisely like the former which received the assent of both Houses.

By unanimous consent, leave was given to introduce a bill (S. No. 999) to continue the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government."

By its terms the provisions of the act to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government, approved June 30, 1876, are extended and continued in full force and effect for a period of ten days from and after the 20th day of July, 1876, and no longer.

Mr. BAYARD. I ask the Senator from Minnesota if the bill provides for the expenditure in proportion to the time?

Mr. WINDOM. It is the old bill.

Mr. BAYARD. I ask if the Senator knows?

Mr. WINDOM. That is the effect.

Mr. BAYARD. I merely wanted to know.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will state to the Senator from Delaware that the first bill passed provides for the proportional expenditure, and these propositions are merely continuing the original proposition.

Mr. BAYARD. That was precisely what I wished to know.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

By unanimous consent, the bill was read twice, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ANTHONY. There was some doubt, I believe, on the first bill whether it included the expenditures for the public printing; but I understand it was modified in such a way as to undoubtedly cover that. I should like to have the Senator who is in charge of the bill and is familiar with it to state whether that is so or not.

Mr. CONKLING. There was a supplementary bill passed.

Mr. ANTHONY. I know; but it was said to be unnecessary.

Mr. WINDOM. There has been no modification of the original bill. It was supposed to be necessary to pass a supplementary bill. However, I supposed it is very probable the sundry civil bill will pass to day, and if so that will answer the purpose of the Senator.

Mr. MORRILL. I suggest to the Senator from Minnesota that he say "eleven days" instead of ten, so as to include the entire month.

Mr. WINDOM. This bill is an exact copy of the previous one.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask leave to make a report. The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 992) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue a register and change the name of the schooner Captain Charles Robbins to Minnie, have directed me to report it without amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I call for the regular order, whatever it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The trial session was suspended for a particular purpose.

Mr. ALLISON. I did not understand that.

IMPEACHMENT OF W. W. BELKNAP.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes the trial session.

The Senate again proceeded to the trial of the impeachment of William W. Belknap, late Secretary of War.

After some time spent in the trial session,

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask unanimous consent that the trial may be interrupted for the passage of a bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senate resumes its

LEGISLATIVE SESSION.

Mr. ANTHONY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1000) to continue the public printing; which was read twice, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill authorizes the Congressional Printer to continue for ten days the work required by law in advance of appropriations to be hereafter made.

Mr. BAYARD. I suggest to the Senator from Rhode Island whether, as an appropriation bill has already passed, as I understand, providing for what is deemed necessary by the two Houses for the expense of printing, this bill should be coupled with a provision, that is usual, not increasing the appropriations made for printing.

Mr. ANTHONY. Let that amendment be added; I have no objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be so amended, if there be no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Would it not be better to say that it shall not authorize any expenditure for public printing? We have only provided for continuing the existing law until we can find some other. Now, as the Senator from Delaware suggests that this shall not authorize an increase of appropriation when there is not any, we might as well make whole bones of it and say it shall not authorize any expenditures at all.

Mr. ALLISON. As I understand, the former extensions already include public printing; do they not? We have already passed two bills extending the time.

Mr. CONKLING. We have passed supplemental bills on the subject of public printing.

Mr. ANTHONY. On each of those occasions we passed a supplemental bill to provide for the public printing under the understanding or misunderstanding that the general bill did not cover this branch of the public service. This bill is just like the others. The amendment which the Senator from Delaware proposes, it seems to me, would destroy the appropriation altogether. He says it shall not increase the appropriation. There is no appropriation whatever now.

Mr. BAYARD. There is not in fact an appropriation, but there is an appropriation bill which contains money for this purpose which has passed both Houses, but has not yet been signed.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not understand that it has passed both Houses. We have received no official notice of its passing the other House.

Mr. BAYARD. Then I suggest to the Senator he had better delay the consideration of this bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. Senators may do as they choose about it. I understand if this bill does not pass the Congressional Printer will not be authorized to print our proceedings to-morrow, because it is impossible that the sundry civil bill can be sent us and signed to-day. The Senate now know as much as I do about it, and they can pass the bill or not, as they please.

Mr. BAYARD. It has become a question of how much I know or how much I do not know, or what may be the relative knowledge of the Senator from Rhode Island and myself. The real question is whether or not we are making in any way a double appropriation for the same purpose. A bill making appropriations for printing expenses has, I believe, been agreed on in conference, and I thought it had been adopted by each House. The only question I made was whether this appropriation for ten days would not be a cumulative appropriation for the same purpose; and therefore I asked the Senator from Rhode Island, in order that he might prevent that taking place, which I do not suppose he intended. It is very far from my wish to embarrass the operations of the Government in any way, and I shall take great pains to prevent that ever being done; but it is certainly right and proper, when we are reduced to this extraordinary condition of affairs of passing these bills from ten days to ten days, that we should be careful that we are not cumulative in our provisions for the public service.

Mr. ANTHONY. This bill authorizes expenditures in advance of appropriations. I understand that the money expended under it will be deducted from the appropriations when made; and if it does not effect that purpose and the Senator from Delaware will propose such an amendment as will effect that purpose, it will be exactly in the line of my wishes.

Mr. BAYARD. If the Senator having it in charge is satisfied that the result is not reached that I desire to avoid, I have no objection.

Mr. ANTHONY. That is my understanding.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I understand that this is continuing a bill that now exists and has passed twice, and that by that bill it is provided that the appropriation made shall be deducted from the current appropriation bill of the year. It does not really appropriate anything in addition to that bill.

Mr. HOWE. Let the bill be reported once more.

The bill was read.

Mr. HOWE. I think the Senator from Delaware will see that this bill appropriates nothing whatever. It simply authorizes the Public Printer to go on with his work and to be paid when we appropriate the money.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 3717) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 3927) making an appropriation to defray the expenses of the Joint Select Committee to Investigate Chinese Immigration;

A bill (H. R. No. 3928) to continue the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government;" and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 96) to provide for the protection of the Texas frontier on the Lower Rio Grande.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 1427) for the relief of H. P. Jones & Co.;

A bill (H. R. No. 3855) for the relief of George T. Olmsted, jr.; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1771) to declare forfeited to the United States certain lands granted to the State of Kansas in aid of the construction of railroads by act of Congress approved March 3, 1863.

TEMPORARY PROVISION FOR EXPENDITURES.

Mr. WEST. In the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations I venture to suggest to the Senate the propriety of taking up the act that continues the appropriations for ten days further.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Chair will lay before the Senate a bill from the House of Representatives.

The bill (H. R. No. 3928) to continue the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government" was read three times, and passed.

IMPEACHMENT OF W. W. BELKNAP.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate returns to trial session, and is ready to proceed with the argument.

The Senate again proceeded to the trial of the impeachment of William W. Belknap, late Secretary of War.

The Senate sitting for the trial of the impeachment of William W. Belknap having adjourned then resumed its

LEGISLATIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes its legislative session.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 1000) to continue the public printing.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 3717) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3928) to continue the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government."

Mr. CONKLING. What is the hour of the meeting of the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eleven o'clock for legislative session.

Mr. CONKLING. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at four o'clock and forty-seven minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, July 20, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate was ready to proceed upon the impeachment of William W. Belknap and to receive the managers on the part of the House, and that the Senate Chamber was prepared with accommodations for the reception of the House of Representatives.

PROTECTION OF THE TEXAS FRONTIER.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order of business this morning is the unfinished business of yesterday, being the joint resolution (H. R. No. 96) to provide for the protection of the Texas frontier on the Lower Rio Grande, and the pending question is upon the substitute for the second section, upon which the yeas and nays had been ordered when the House adjourned yesterday.

The substitute for the second section of the joint resolution was read, as follows:

That whenever it shall appear to the President that the government of Mexico is unable to prevent the existing lawless invasion of the territory of the United States from Mexico for purposes of plunder or robbery, he shall be, and hereby is, authorized, if in his judgment it becomes necessary, after notice of forty days to the government of Mexico, to order the troops charged with the defense of the territory of the United States, when in close pursuit of such invaders, to cross the Rio Grande and to use such means, not amounting to acts of war, as may be requisite for the recovery of stolen property and to protect the citizens and territory of the United States against the acts of outlaws and robbers.

Mr. DUNNELL. I ask unanimous consent to report back a Senate bill——

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. SCHLEICHER. There is hardly a quorum present, and I would myself prefer that the vote should be taken when more members are here. I would like, therefore, to have this question postponed for a time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That can be done only by unanimous consent.

Mr. LUTTRELL. Several gentlemen desire to introduce bills and resolutions for reference only. May not this question be postponed for a time and allow that to be done?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. By unanimous consent it can be done.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I have a resolution which I desire to have referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to be considered at its first meeting, which will probably be to-morrow morning.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the call of the yeas and nays on the amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SCHLEICHER. I move that there be a call of the House.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were ayes 16.

Before the noes were counted,

Mr. SCHLEICHER. I withdraw the motion for a call of the House.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I ask unanimous consent to refer this resolution to the committee of which I am a member.

Many MEMBERS. Regular order.

Mr. ROBBINS, of North Carolina. I ask that the second section of the joint resolution be read, for which the Committee of the Whole have reported a substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That in view of the inability of the national government of Mexico to prevent the inroads of lawless parties from Mexican soil into Texas, the President is hereby authorized, whenever, in his judgment, it shall be necessary for the protection of the rights of American citizens on the Texas frontier, above described, to order the troops to cross the Rio Grande, and use such means as they may find necessary for recovering the stolen property and checking the raids, guarding, however, in all cases, against any unnecessary injury to peaceable inhabitants of Mexico.

Mr. SCHLEICHER. I understood the Chair to rule on yesterday that the vote to be now taken was upon agreeing to the second section as amended.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is what the Chair understands.

Mr. RANDALL. The amendment now pending is a substitute which was adopted in Committee of the Whole for the second section of the joint resolution. If voted down the second section will be out entirely, and the joint resolution will consist only of the first section.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. HALE. Let us understand this. Does the Chair rule that if this substitute is voted down the original second section is out of the joint resolution?

Mr. RANDALL. And the joint resolution will consist simply of the first section.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is the ruling of the Chair.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 89, nays 96, not voting 98; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ainsworth, Anderson, Atkins, Bagby, Banks, Beebe, Bland, Bradford, Bright, John Young Brown, William R. Brown, Buckner, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Cannon, Cate, Caulfield, Cook, Cox, Darrall, Davis, Dibrell, Dobbins, Douglas, Felton, Forney, Foster, Gause, Goode, Gunter, Andrew H. Hamilton, Hancock, Hartridge, Hartzell, Hatcher, Haymond, Hereford, Abram S. Hewitt, Hill, Hoge, Hurd, Hurlbut, Frank Jones, Kasson, Franklin Landers, Lane, Levy, Lewis, Luttrell, McMahon, Meade, Metcalfe, Milliken, Mills, Morgan, Odell, Payne, Piper, Reagan, John Reilly, James B. Reilly, Rice, Riddle, John Robbins, William M. Robbins, Sampson, Schleicher, Schumaker, Sheakley, William E. Smith, Southard, Spencer, Springer, Tarbox, Terry, Throckmorton, Tucker, Van Vorhes, Robert B. Vance, Waddell, Alexander S. Wallace, White, Whitthorne, Wigginton, Wike, Alpheus S. Williams, Willis, and Woodburn—89.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Ashe, John H. Bagley jr., John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Ballou, Bell, Blackburn, Boone, Bradley, Horatio C. Burchard, Burleigh, Candler, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cochrane, Conger, Crapo, Cutler, Davy, De Bolt, Dunnell, Durand, Eames, Eden, Egbert, Ely, Evans, Fort, Gibson, Hale, Hardenbergh, John T. Harris, Harrison, Holman, Hopkins, Hoskins, House, Hubbell, Hunter, Thomas L. Jones, Kehr, Kelley, Kimball, Knott, Lawrence, Le Moyne, L. A. Mackey, Maish, MacDougall, McDill, McFarland, Miller, Monroe, Morrison, Mutchler, New, Norton, Oliver, O'Neill, Packer, Page, Platt, Potter, Pratt, Rainey, Randall, Robinson, Miles Ross, Rusk, Savage, Scales, Sinnickson, Smalls, A. Herr Smith, Strait, Stevenson, Swann, Teese, Thomas, Thompson, Washington Townsend, Tufts, Turney, John L. Vance, Walsh, Ward, Erastus Wells, Whitehouse, Whiting, Willard, Charles G. Williams, James Williams, James D. Williams, William B. Williams, and Young—96.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. George A. Bagley, Banning, Bass, Blair, Bliss, Blount, Samuel D. Burchard, Campbell, Cason, Caswell, Chapin, Chittenden, Collins, Cowan, Crounse, Culberson, Danford, Denison, Durham, Ellis, Faulkner, Finley, Franklin, Freeman, Frye, Fuller, Garfield, Glover, Goodin, Robert Hamilton, Harlson, Benjamin W. Harris, Henry R. Harris, Hathorn, Hays, Hendee, Henderson, Henkle, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hoar, Hooker, Hunton, Hyman, Jenks, Joyce, King, Lamar, George M. Landers, Lapham, Leavenworth, Lord, Lynch, Lynde, Magoon, McCrary, Money, Nash, Neal, O'Brien, Phelps, John F. Philips, William A. Phillips, Pierce, Plaisted, Poppleton, Powell, Purman, Rea, Roberts, Sobieski Ross, Sayler, Seelye, Singleton, Slemons, Sparks, Stenger, Stone, Stowell, Thornburgh, Martin I. Townsend, Wait, Waldron, Charles C. B. Walker, Gilbert C. Walker, John W. Wallace, Walling, Warren, G. Wiley Wells, Wheeler, Andrew Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, James Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodworth, and Yeates—98.

So the substitute for the second section was not agreed to.

During the call of the roll the following announcements were made:

Mr. CUTLER. My colleague, Mr. HAMILTON, of New Jersey, is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. SCALES. My colleague, Mr. YEATES, is absent by order of the House.

Mr. COCHRANE. My colleague, Mr. STENGER, is absent by leave of the House.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. My colleague, Mr. POPPLETON, is absent by leave of the House.

Mr. GUNTER. My colleague, Mr. SLEMONS, is absent by leave of the House.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. My colleague, Mr. CULBERSON, is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. BRADLEY. My colleague, Mr. WALDRON, is absent by leave of the House.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. My colleague, Mr. CAMPBELL, is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. Mr. WELLS, of Mississippi, is still absent on account of illness.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. KASSON. Before the next vote is taken I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry as to the present status of this joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. KASSON. As I construe the rule, the original text of the second section of the joint resolution is now before the House as the result of the vote just announced, and in the next vote must be voted on as a part of this joint resolution. I want to ascertain from the Chair distinctly the status of this question.

The House knows this joint resolution in two forms: One is the original text referred to the Committee of the Whole; the other is the original text with certain amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole. In the House the question is taken on concurring with the amendments made in the Committee of the Whole. So far as they are concurred in, the House changes the original text; so far as they are non-concurred in, the original text remains to be voted on. This will, I think, appear clearly from Rule 107.

> Upon bills committed to a Committee of the Whole House, the bill shall be first read throughout by the Clerk, and then again read and debated by clauses, leaving the preamble to be last considered; the body of the bill shall not be defaced or interlined; but all amendments, noting the page and line, shall be duly entered by the Clerk on a separate paper, as the same shall be agreed to by the committee, and so reported to the House.

It appears from this that the original text always comes back subject to the concurrence of the House in the amendments made in the Committee of the Whole; and as in this case the amendment to the second section is now non-concurred in, the original section comes back without modification, and is to be voted on in the next vote as part of the joint resolution.

Mr. HOLMAN. I sought yesterday to call attention to the fact now mentioned that if the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole were rejected, the original text would stand; that the amendments of the Committee of the Whole were a substitute for the text as referred to that committee. That seemed to me to be inevitable; but the opinion that this proposition came to the House as one amendment was so generally expressed upon the floor that further discussion of the subject was waived. If the Chair adopts the view now expressed, the only mode in which the House can declare its opinion upon the real question is by reconsidering the vote by which the main question was ordered.

Mr. KASSON. Yes, sir; we shall have to reconsider in order to make the joint resolution open to amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the Chair adopts that view I will enter a motion to reconsider.

Mr. TUCKER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered, so that I may propose the amendment which I offered in Committee of the Whole as a substitute for the second section.

Mr. CONGER. I would like to say a word to the Chair upon this point of order. The Speaker having three times, once yesterday and twice this morning, stated distinctly that the proposition before the House was that last voted on in Committee of the Whole, which was upon adopting the second section as amended, the attention of the Chair having been called to the question by myself and other members both yesterday and to-day and the Chair having each time announced that the question was upon accepting or rejecting the second section as amended, and the Chair having gone further and stated to the House that if the vote just taken should be in the negative the second section would be rejected as a whole and the joint resolution would remain with only the first section, I submit that it is entirely too late, after the Chair has given his decision on the subject unquestioned and after the vote has been taken, to raise that question. Whatever the rule may be, I assume that it is now to be taken as the unanimous consent of the House that such is the true order of business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sustains entirely the view of the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER.] The distinct announcement of the Chair which the gentleman has stated was made upon information furnished by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS,] and it seemed to accord fully with the understanding of the House. The motion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] may, however, be entertained. If it is the disposition of the House to reconsider the ordering of the main question for the purpose of allowing amendments, that may be done. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. HOLMAN. But it may be important to know the view of the Chair, as that might influence the vote now to be taken. If the view entertained yesterday is still entertained, that this comes before the House as one amendment, there would be no motive for reconsideration with a view to either amending the second section or striking it out.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Certainly not; but the gentleman from Virginia may have some other amendment which he proposes to offer.

Mr. CONGER. I understand the Chair to rule that so far as that amendment is concerned it is rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair rules that the second section is rejected.

Mr. HOSKINS. I did not understand the ruling of the Chair. Did the Chair rule that the vote last taken rejecting the amendment rejects also the entire second section?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair was informed by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] who offered the substitute that the vote in Committee of the Whole was upon adopting the second section as amended; and therefore in the House the vote was put in the same form. The question is a mere question of fact. Upon the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts the Chair made his decision, and upon that question the vote was taken.

Mr. HOSKINS. I should like to inquire of the mover of the last motion why he desires to reconsider?

Mr. RANDALL. He does not now, as I understand it.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the second section is rejected there is nothing to which the amendment can be added.

Mr. MILLS. But he proposes to reconsider for the purpose of moving that amendment to the first section.

Mr. RANDALL. That will open the whole bill to amendment and discussion.

Mr. MILLS. Of course; and that is what is desired.

Mr. HOSKINS. I make the point of order that the previous question having been partially executed, it is not now in order to move a reconsideration.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. Certainly not until after the vote has been taken on the engrossment and third reading of the resolution, and then it can be.

Mr. HOSKINS. I make a point of order, and ask the decision of the Chair upon it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Chair will state, after a vote is taken on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution, then the previous question having exhausted itself, it will be in order for the gentleman from Virginia to move to reconsider.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the resolution be again read.

The resolution was again read.

The joint resolution was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. TUCKER. I now move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed.

Mr. HALE. I do not think it is fully understood what is the gentleman's object, and I hope he will be permitted to state it.

Mr. TUCKER. The House has already rejected the second section as it was amended by the substitute offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS.] I propose, if there is a reconsideration of the vote ordering the joint resolution to be engrossed and read a third time, to offer the amendment which was rejected in committee to the first section of the joint resolution.

Mr. HALE. Will not a reconsideration open up the whole question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unquestionably, upon reconsideration, the previous question no longer operating, the joint resolution will be open to discussion and amendment.

Mr. HALE. This, then, is retracing the just-taken action of the House.

Mr. TUCKER. The reason, if the gentleman from Maine will give me his attention for a moment, is this: When the gentleman from Massachusetts offered his amendment in the Committee of the Whole, I offered my amendment as a substitute, saying at the same time if the substitute offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts was agreeable to the advocates of the joint resolution I was perfectly willing to accept it; but the House has voted that down, and I believe there are some members of the House who would accept my substitute more readily than that of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HALE. What is the gentleman's substitute? Is it the second section as originally reported in the joint resolution?

Mr. TUCKER. No, sir; it is an amendment which the gentleman will see in the RECORD of to-day on page 39. I explained it yesterday and on Saturday.

Mr. HALE. I had not the pleasure of listening to the gentleman yesterday, and am ignorant of what the amendment is. Let us have it read.

Mr. TUCKER. I ask that the amendment be read.

Mr. HOSKINS. I rise to another point of order. This bill having been ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, I make the point of order that it is not now in order to offer an amendment; that the first thing is to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution has been ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and until that is done no amendment is in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is the motion now pending, and the gentleman from Virginia and the gentleman from Maine merely ask for the reading of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts which was rejected yesterday.

Mr. TUCKER. I only ask for the reading of the amendment, giving notice that if the motion to reconsider is agreed to I shall move it as an amendment to the joint resolution.

The amendment was read, as follows:

> SEC. 2. That the President of the United States be authorized, and is hereby requested, to present to the government of Mexico a formal statement of the injuries and damages done to the citizens of the United States by the inroads and invasions of the United States by lawless bands from the Mexican states; and, furthermore, to demand that the government of Mexico shall prevent and restrain all such inroads and invasions in future.

If the Mexican government shall not within four months after such formal statement and demand take effective measures to prevent such inroads and invasions, the President of the United States is hereby authorized to use the Army of the United States, or so much thereof as he may deem necessary, to drive out any bands of invaders and to pursue them into the territory of Mexico for the sole purpose of recovering the property taken from citizens or others under the protection of the United States, guarding in all cases against any unnecessary injury to the persons or property of peaceable inhabitants of Mexico.

The President is further requested at once to notify this joint resolution to the Mexican government, with an earnest remonstrance against the wrongs done to the people of the United States, and that, while forbearing to take any measures but such as are recognized as just and proper between nations at peace, the Government of the United States will be constrained, saving the peaceful relations between the two countries, to take such action as is indicated by this joint resolution, unless the Mexican government shall effectually prevent the evils complained of in the future.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 54, noes 77.

Mr. REAGAN demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. TUCKER and Mr. HALE were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 70, noes 79.

So the motion to reconsider was disagreed to.

The question recurred on the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. THOMPSON demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The joint resolution was passed.

Mr. SCHLEICHER moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced the passage of a bill (S. No. 866) to remove the political disabilities of Thomas H. Williams, of Maryland; in which concurrence was requested.

It further announced that the Senate disagreed to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. No. 842) authorizing the commissioners of the District of Columbia to remove the jail on Judiciary Square to grounds near to the Washington Asylum for the use of the District of Columbia, asked for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed Mr. MORRILL, Mr. PADDOCK, and Mr. COOPER as managers of such conference on its part.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. U. S. GRANT, jr., his Private Secretary, who also announced that the President had approved and signed bills and a joint resolution of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 3884) to continue the act entitled "An act to continue the public printing;"

An act (H. R. No. 3200) to change the name of the steam-barge Dolphin of Clayton, New York;

An act (H. R. No. 2404) for the relief of John S. Dickson, late captain of paroled prisoners;

An act (H. R. No. 3411) authorizing the repavement of Pennsylvania avenue;

An act (H. R. No. 1970) relating to the approval of bills in the Territory of Arizona;

An act (H. R. No. 702) for changing the name of the steam-propeller Senator Mike Norton to America;

An act (H. R. No. 1668) to supply an omission in the enrollment of the deficiency bill approved March 3, 1875; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 146) to amend the act approved June 18, 1874, relating to the admission of articles intended for the international exhibition of 1876.

The message also announced that bills of the following titles, not having been returned by the President to the House within the ten days prescribed by the Constitution, have become laws without his signature:

An act (H. R. No. 2301) granting a pension to Mary B. Hook;

An act (H. R. No. 590) for the relief of Mrs. Susan E. Rhea, widow of Dr. J. Burrows Gardiner;

An act (H. R. No. 1939) granting a pension to Sarah Emmons;

An act (H. R. No. 1204) granting a pension to Henry H. Wharff, of Company C, Eighteenth Regiment of Ohio Volunteers;

An act (H. R. No. 1849) granting a pension to Abigail S. Dawney;

An act (H. R. No. 2289) granting a pension to Jane Bertholf;

An act (H. R. No. 2303) granting a pension to Mary S. Greenlee;

An act (H. R. No. 2804) granting a pension to Harriet C. Dunham, widow of Charles A. Dunham, late private Company A, One hundred and eighteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers;

An act (H. R. No. 2081) granting a pension to William McLay, late a private in Company G, Twelfth Illinois Infantry Volunteers;

An act (H. R. No. 1598) granting a pension to William R. Duncan;

An act (H. R. No. 1602) granting a pension to Margaret E. Cogburn;

An act (H. R. No. 2586) granting a pension to John L. Bartley;

An act (H. R. No. 3037) granting a pension to Samuel D. Falls, late unassigned recruit Ninth Regiment Minnesota Volunteers;

An act (H. R. No. 2701) granting a pension to Nancy H. Blacknall, widow of Thomas Y. Blacknall, late private of Company L, Seventh Tennessee Cavalry;

An act (H. R. No. 2310) granting a pension to Emanuel B. Herr;

An act (H. R. No. 1944) granting a pension to Niram W. Pratt;

An act (H. R. No. 2162) granting a pension to Clara Brosch, mother of Joseph Brosch, jr., late private in Company H, Twenty-fourth Regiment Illinois Infantry Volunteers;

An act (H. R. No. 2691) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department; and

An act (H. R. No. 597) for the relief of Anderson J. Smith.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. I rise to make a report from the committee of conference, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3749) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 13, 17, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 32, 39, 40, 44, 45, 50, 52, 55, 62, 63, 64, 67, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 76, 78, 79, 82, 85, 86, 87, 93, 97, 98, 100, 101, 102, 104, 106, 109, 110, 111, 121, 124, 125, 130, 132, 133, 134, 136, 140, 148, 152, 153, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167, 168, 169, 170, 171, 172, 173, 174, 175, 176, 177, 200, 208, 217, 240, 242, and 244.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 4, 5, 6, 12, 15, 18, 19, 29, 31, 33, 35, 38, 41, 42, 48, 51, 53, 57, 59, 60, 65, 92, 94, 95, 96, 112, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 123, 126, 127, 128, 131, 137, 138, 146, 147, 150, 154, 155, 157, 158, 159, 180, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186, 187, 188, 189, 190, 191, 193, 194, 195, 197, 198, 199, 201, 202, 203, 204, 205, 206, 207, 209, 210, 211, 212, 213, 214, 215, 216, 218, 219, 220, 222, 223, 224, 226, 227, 228, 229, 230, 231, 232, 233, 234, 235, 236, 237, 238, 239, 241, 243, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Add at the end of said amendment the words "or so much thereof as may be necessary;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: For "Green vs. Van Wyck" substitute "Van Wyck vs. Green;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 8, and agree to the clause proposed to be stricken out, with an amendment inserting after the word "department" in said clause the words "from March 6 to March 14, 1876;" and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 9, and agree to the clause proposed to be stricken out, with an amendment adding at the end thereof "for services performed during the present session;" and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 10 and 11, and agree to the clauses proposed to be stricken out, with an amendment as follows: After the word "service" in the first clause add the words "during the present session," and at the end of the second clause add the word "dollars;" and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 14, and agree to the clause proposed to be stricken out, with an amendment as follows: After the word "service" in said clause insert "during the present session; and the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 16, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words "$4,800, or so much thereof as may be necessary," and the word "for," being the first word in the second clause of said amendment, substituting therefor the words "and for," so as to join the two clauses; and strike out the words, "two thousand" at the close of the second clause and substitute therefor the words "three thousand four hundred;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 20, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Insert after the word "RECORD," in line 25, page 5 of the bill, the words "and for lithographing, mapping, and engraving for both Houses of Congress, the Supreme Court, and the Court of Claims, and for the necessary materials," and in lieu of the sum proposed to be inserted by said amendment substitute "$133,737.50;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment substituting for the word "five" the word "three;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 34, with an amendment as follows: In line 1, page 7 of the bill, strike out "for" and insert "and for," so as to connect the clauses; and after the word "dollars," in line 2, page 7 of the bill, insert the following: "And of the sums hereby appropriated for the several Departments, courts, and for the debates and proceedings in Congress, there shall only be used for the several purposes herein provided the sums specified, and the unexpended balances shall not be used for any other purposes;" and in line 13, page 7 of the bill, after the word "lowest" insert the word "responsible;" and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 36, with an amendment as follows: Strike out therefrom the words "on the 30th day of June, 1876," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "from and after the passage of this act," and also strike out the words "and he shall receive a salary at the rate of $3,500 a year," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "and the Joint Committee on Printing are hereby authorized and directed to inquire into the question of public printing and report at the next session of this Congress, with authority to sit during the recess, and to report such reforms as are necessary to secure faithful and economical work for Congress and the Departments;" and the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 37, and agree to the same with an amendment substituting in place of the words stricken out the following:

"That all executive proclamations and all treaties required by law to be published shall be published in only one newspaper, the same to be printed and published in the District of Columbia and to be designated by the Secretary of State, and in no case of advertisement for contracts for the public service shall the same be published in any newspaper published and printed in the District of Columbia unless the supplies or labor covered by such advertisement are to be furnished or performed in said District of Columbia."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 43, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Strike out of said amendment the word "its" and substitute therefor the word "the," and after the word "expenses" insert "of schools, the police, and the fire department;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 46, and agree to the clause proposed to be stricken out with an amendment, as follows: In lines 6 and 7, page 11 of the bill, substitute "$16,670" for the sum there named, and after the word "thousand," in line 17 of same page, insert "five hundred," and after the word

"dollars," in line 27 of the same page, insert "miscellaneous sanitary work," and after the word "expenses," in line 1, page 12, insert "one thousand," and strike out in line 2, page 12, the word "that" and insert in lieu thereof the word "and;" and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 47, and agree to the text proposed to be stricken out with an amendment, as follows: After the word "to," in line 15, page 15 of the bill, insert the following: "$127,243.91, being;" and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 49, and agree to the text of the bill by striking out all after the word "dollars," in line 19, page 18, to the end of the clause; and the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 54, and agree to the same with an amendment substituting "ten" for the word proposed to be inserted; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 56, and agree to the text proposed to be stricken out, with an amendment as follows: After the word "to," in line 13, page 20 of the bill, insert "$3,500, being;" and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from so much of its amendment numbered 58 as substitutes the "Secretary of the Interior" for the "Surgeon-General of the Army;" and the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 61, and agree to the same by substituting the word "ten" for the word "twenty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 66, and agree to the same by substituting the word "twenty" for the word "thirty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 68, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Add at the end of said amendment the words "to be disbursed by the Secretary of the Treasury for mint purposes;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 75, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the word proposed to be inserted insert "two," and before the word "thousand," in line 27, page 22 of the bill, insert "and fifty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 77, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: In lieu of all the amended clause insert the following: "Court-house and post-office at Lincoln, Nebraska; for completing the building, $30,000; and for grading approaches, furniture, and carpets, $10,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 80, and agree to the same with an amendment substituting for the word "reconstruction," in line 16, page 23 of the bill, the word "remodeling," and restoring the words stricken out, amended as follows: After the word "city" add "being $30,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 81, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof "in full for the same, thirty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 83, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the words proposed to be inserted insert the word "eighty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 84, substituting for the words proposed to be stricken out the words "three hundred and fifty;" and the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 88, and agree to the same by substituting for "$65,321.85" the following: "$40,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 89, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out "twenty-five" and insert "fifteen;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 90, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out "two" and insert "one;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 91, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out "twenty-five" and insert "ten;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 99, and agree to the text proposed to be stricken out, with an amendment as follows: After the word "to," in line 24, page 28 of the bill, insert the following: "$3,000, being;" and the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 103, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the words proposed to be inserted insert "seventy-five;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 105, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the words proposed to be inserted insert the word "thirty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 107, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed to be inserted insert "$100,000," and add at the end of said amendment the following: "And the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes,' approved June 30, 1876, is hereby amended as follows: After the word 'Washington,' in the clause appropriating 'for necessary repairs of naval laboratory,' &c., strike out the last ten words, as follows: 'and the same shall be closed during the coming year;'" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 108, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed to be inserted insert "$50,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 113, and agree to the text proposed to be stricken out, amended as follows: "To aid in the completion of the monument in Fairmount Park, Philadelphia, in commemoration of the emancipation of the colored race, $3,000, to be paid to the duly authorized officers of the association having the work in charge."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 120, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out "sixteen" and insert "six;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 122, and agree to the text proposed to be stricken out by inserting after the word "hundred" in line 3, page 34 of the bill, the words "and twenty-five;" and the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 129, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: In line 20, page 36 of the bill, strike out the words "and twenty-five;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 135, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: In lieu of "one hundred" insert "seventy-five;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 139, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the word "two" insert "three," and add, to follow as a new paragraph, the following:

"For salaries and traveling expenses of agents at seal-fisheries in Alaska, one agent and three assistants, $9,465: Provided, however, That the two assistant agents whose salaries are fixed by law at $2,190 each per annum shall be discontinued from and after the 1st day of October, 1876."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 141, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the amended text, being lines 25, 26, 27, on page 41, and lines 1 to 7, both inclusive, on page 42 of the bill, and the words proposed to be inserted; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 142, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out "forty" and insert "twenty;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 143, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out "twenty" and insert "ten;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 144, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the word "continuing" substitute the word "completing," and strike out the words "sixty-nine" and insert the word "nineteen," and add at the end of said amendment the following: "and the board of testing iron and steel provided for in said section shall be discontinued from and after the expenditure of the amount herewith appropriated;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 145, with an amendment as follows: Substitute for the sum proposed to be inserted, "being $56,235.04;" and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 149, and agree to the words proposed to be stricken out, with an amendment as follows: "amounting to $350,000;" and the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 151, with an amendment as follows: Add at the end of said amendment the following: "Provided, That the said sum shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution; and it shall hereafter be the duty of all watchmen or policemen employed in the grounds belonging to the United States to cooperate with the Metropolitan police in enforcing the rules and regulations of the board of Metropolitan police made in relation to the public works and approved by said board."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 156, and agree to the same, with the following amendment: After the word "region," in line 18, page 44 of the bill, insert as follows: "Including $10,000 for the preparation and publication of maps, charts, and other illustrations necessary for the reports of said survey;" and the Senate agree to the transposition so made and recede from the balance of its amendment.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 160, and agree to the text proposed to be stricken out, with an amendment as follows: Strike out "two" and insert "three;" and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 178, and agree to the text proposed to be stricken out, with an amendment as follows: Strike out "twelve" in line 23, page 45 of the bill, and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirteen;" and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 179, substituting therefor the following: "For survey of private land claims, $25,000;" and the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 181, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the words proposed to be inserted, insert the following: "Unless such company is exempted by law from the payment of such cost;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 192, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed to be inserted insert "$1,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 196, and agree to the same, with an amendment substituting for the sum proposed to be inserted "$1,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 221, and agree to the same by substituting for the sum proposed to be inserted "$1,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 225, and agree to the same by substituting for the sum proposed to be inserted "$1,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

SAM. J. RANDALL,
WM. S. HOLMAN,
EUGENE HALE,
Managers on the part of the House.
WM. WINDOM,
O. P. MORTON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, this result has been reached after a great deal of time and a great deal of attention given to the subject. The estimates upon which this bill is based as coming from the Department were $32,560,475.29. The amount reported by the Committee on Appropriations of this House was $14,626,981.74. The amount of the bill as it was passed by the House was $14,857,326.54, and unexpended balances $569,978.95. The Senate money amendments aggregated $5,068,390.27. The Senate yielded on money amendments $4,153,255.29. The House yielded $921,134.98. The total amount appropriated by the sundry civil bill of last year was $26,644,350.09. The amount appropriated under this report, as closely as can be reached, is $16,357,905.47. The reduction therefore of appropriations, including unexpended balances, this year under those of last year is $10,266,444.62. This reduction has been reached, as I have said, by close examination. The amounts provided for in this bill are in the main discretionary, and the committee think that in no particular has the Government been crippled.

I noticed a statement in the Senate yesterday that these large reductions would result in fact in deficiencies. Not only is that not the case, but there is no justification for any Department of the Government attempting to spend during the year more than the amount indicated in the bill. First it is in violation of law to do so, and second they would immediately make themselves amenable to that law if they did so. I am sorry that that statement was made, because it might give some semblance of justification for the executive officers of the Government to go beyond the amount appropriated. Feeling as I do that the committee have in no degree crippled the Government, I feel warranted also in saying that except upon a palpable and plain showing the House and Congress at its next session will discountenance the appropriation of any money for deficiencies. We have an example of that sort to warn us against the repetition of it in the building of the New York post-office. The executive officers of the Government in charge of that work absolutely increased the expenditures beyond the law to the extent of $227,000, and they really have made themselves amenable to and punishable under the law. We sent a special committee to New York to make an examination of the subject, and they have reprimanded and censured in the strongest terms the acts of these officers who involved the Government in contracts and expenditures beyond the appropriations made by Congress; but they recommend the payment of those excessive expenditures, and I take it that this House will have to pass a bill to provide for the payment of these sums, because the parties who furnished these material did so in good faith, and the prices paid seem not to have been exorbitant. But I want to warn distinctly the officers of the Government that they ought not to any extent involve the Government for any expenditures beyond the amount appropriated. Now if any gentleman desires to make inquiries about the details of the bill, I shall be ready to answer them and to give the reasons which governed the committee of conference in this action. I now yield to the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. HALE,] who is a member of the committee of conference.

Mr. HALE. Mr. Speaker, the committee of conference upon this very important bill in the results reached was fraught with some important lessons. To begin with, it illustrates very clearly what is the actual position of the two bodies upon what is called the dead lock. A committee of conference upon a bill of this kind is after all the place where if the two bodies come into collision at all you will find the conflict, because either body in its action upon appropriation bills acts largely upon the belief that finally the differences of appropriations must be settled by the conferees, and so upon important bills the conferees are selected with that view. Now, to say nothing of the conferees on the part of the House, they met on the part of the Senate a very able board of conferees consisting, first, of the gentleman from California, Mr. SARGENT, afterward excused on account of sickness and his place filled by the present chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. WINDOM, the distinguished gentleman from Indiana, Mr. MORTON, and the eminent Senator from Ohio, Mr. THURMAN.

They represented the Senate views and the committee came together. Now, I will say this freely: that if there was any disposition on the part of the Senate to antagonize fair reductions upon appropriation bills, here was a conference that would be able to maintain the senatorial bill; but, as the result shows, the Senate has in this case, without making any improper opposition to the reduction of discretionary appropriations, largely yielded to the House; yielded in some cases, I believe, although I am a good deal of an economist myself, more largely than future events will show that the Government can be run for. But in many cases also it has yielded to the House in cases where we all believe that the Department and the service could be maintained. This item of $4,000,000 and over, which the Senate has yielded in this case, is almost entirely made up of items upon discretionary appropriations, involving no change of law, and therefore the Senate did not place itself upon its prerogatives as being co-ordinate with the House and entitled to like consideration. They did not yield in cases where a law was sought to be repealed and that repeal forced upon them by the House, but they waived largely their first opinion in deference to the House on discretionary appropriations. Take, for instance, the item for the surveys of public lands. The Senate yielded there, and yielded largely, because it believed that for the coming year it might be possible for the work to continue with this limited supply of money, although it did not believe it to be enough.

It yielded also largely on the appropriations for public buildings, which involved no change of law. The Senate also consented to yield on the appropriations for navy-yards; and, although we have millions of dollars of property there, and the appropriation provided for in this report amounts to only one mill on the dollar, and the Senate asked five mills on the dollar, yet the Senate yielded and cut down the amount to $100,000. The Secretary of the Navy, who has charge of this fund, I feel bound to say and I am free to say, will take the appropriation and do the best he can with it, because it is our property that is to be cared for there, not his.

So in regard to the printing; the Senate yielded largely there, because the House is quite as much interested in the printing as the Senate; and, although the Senate believed that the amount was not large enough, still, as no change of law was involved in this matter, the Senate yielded.

This item of four million odd hundred thousand dollars is made up of items on which the representatives of the Senate yielded because no change of law was involved and the House had not sought to drive the Senate by a change of law.

There are other items of this bill from which the House receded, where it had attempted to force upon the Senate vital changes in the recognized law of the land. That is a good result to come out of this conference, because this House through its conferees met the Senate fairly and freely in a spirit of conciliation. There was in this bill a clause which was put in by the House repealing the law which provides for the protection of the purity of elections in certain cases. That was a clear case of legislation, and of legislation upon an appropriation bill. In regard to that the Senate took square ground that it could not concede, that it could not give way, as it was giving way upon questions of appropriation. The House committee, with a majority of gentlemen of course from the other side, gave way upon that point and yielded to the Senate. Therefore, the spirit of concession on the part of the Senate with reference to discretionary appropriations was met by a spirit of concession upon the part of the House, where a change of law had been attempted, and the proposed change was given up. That I hold to be a desirable result coming out of this conference. It is to me a good omen, a harbinger, an indication that the dead lock that we have been laboring under in weather which is threatening us all with injurious consequences, may soon be broken. I hope that will be so.

There is another feature that has been agreed upon by the conferees in this report which is a good one. That is the feature that the items of re-appropriation which were in the bill as it went to the Senate in an indefinite form, not showing really how much they contribute to the expenses of the coming year as permissible under this bill, are put into a definitive form. The amount is stated in each case so that we may know what it is, and the various items that go to make up the aggregate appropriation of this bill.

My friend, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, [Mr. RANDALL,] and my colleague on that committee, the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] will both want to know next winter how much Congress appropriated at this session, and how much will have been spent under the appropriation bills, because they will then be in the same condition as to management and leadership that they are now in. They do not want any blind about the matter. Therefore by the action of the committee of conference between $500,000 and $600,000 of the items of which were not counted in the aggregate appropriations of the bill as it went to the Senate are now put in distinctly as re-appropriations, and are so stated and will be added to the aggregate appropriations by the bill, so that we will know how much we have given to the Departments.

Mr. RANDALL. My figures are all that way.

Mr. HALE. Certainly; I only referred to this specifically as a good result coming from the action of this committee of conference. There is one item which my friend the chairman has mentioned, and to which I wish to say a few words: the question of deficiency. It is true that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate when he presented this report to that body, in the running comments which he made upon it, argued that the Senate had made a concession in regard to many items with the view that deficiencies would have to be provided for at the next session of Congress. My friend, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House, objects to that statement. One of his objections is that it may imply that the heads of Departments are to be given power to spend more money than is appropriated in this bill, which is against the law. But the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate evidently did not go to that extent. It is but justice to him to say that all that he claimed was that after four or five months of the present fiscal year have expired Congress will again be in session during the first half of the present fiscal year. If increased appropriations are needed before the present appropriations are expended, if that becomes clearly and advisedly necessary, then they will be made. The next Congress will be called upon to interpose a remedy at a time when the heads of Departments and Bureaus will not have expended all the money appropriated and will not have trenched upon the law. That, I take it, is all that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate intended to say.

Now in regard to this matter of deficiencies, I am not quite as sanguine as my friend, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House; neither do I go to the extent that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate seemed to go. I would say that a fair medium in this matter of deficiencies and reduction of expenditures for the actual free running of the Departments would perhaps lie about half way between the views of the average Senator and the views of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. The Senator from Minnesota, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, represents perhaps the average Senator in his views of deficiency, and my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] represents rather the extreme view upon the other side.

Mr. RANDALL. There can be no view outside of what is the law, which is that the heads of Departments shall not expend beyond the amounts appropriated.

Mr. HALE. Yes; but the gentleman will not claim, if he sees next winter that a particular appropriation is not enough to run the Department until July 1, 1877, that he would refrain from appropriating a deficiency; I believe he has already said that he would. The necessity will arise at a time when the law has not been infringed, before the amount appropriated has been all expended. I do not believe that my friend, with all his economy, with all his opposition to deficiencies and increased appropriations, will be able to keep them down entirely next winter. That has never been done under republican administrations; it was never done in the good old days of the democratic administration, the days that were illuminated by the conduct and performances of men in high places at that time.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to say that the deficiencies were very low this year, and I attribute it to some extent to the fact that in the last House we gave notice that there would not be any deficiencies allowed. It is also a merit which should attach to your party to some extent.

Mr. HALE. I am glad that the gentleman has frankly made that admission; and I agree with him that the deficiencies will be kept down. But there will be more difficulty in keeping them down next winter upon the extreme basis of reduction which has been carried out by this Congress than ever before.

My friend will find as surely as time rolls on (and I predict it now for his benefit) that this body itself, which is now foremost in the reduction of expenditures, will, in its incidental expenses and matters of that kind, furnish large items of deficiency next winter. It is impossible that it should be otherwise. That is a thing that cannot be wholly foreseen now. It is a thing that cannot be prevented by my friend now. The immense expenses that have been incurred in connection with the different subjects that have been taken up by this House and pursued in one direction and another, and which are inadequately appropriated for now, must involve demands for deficiency appropriations. They will ring at our doors next winter in that imperious manner which will demand appropriations from the Treasury. And not only will this demand come from branches of the service connected with this House; other Departments to some degree will join in the demand for deficiencies. Only then will it be actually known and actually told how much money this Congress has given for expenditures during the fiscal year between July 1, 1876, and July 1, 1877. We cannot keep down the deficiencies altogether. I hope they will be comparatively small. I have no doubt that the Departments, under the restrictions laid upon them, will endeavor to adhere to the rule we have given, and in many cases they can do so; but in some cases my friend will find that they cannot.

But on the whole the outcome of this conference is, as I have said, a matter of great encouragement to me. It illustrates the position of the Senate and the House on this question of appropriations. The late chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate—now the Secretary of the Treasury—in a speech which he made on this subject just before leaving that body which he had so long honored, stated this matter of the position of the Senate forcibly and eloquently. In summing up what was the actual condition of the dead lock, he showed that while it was claimed that the House and the Senate were $39,000,000 apart, that the House was seeking to reduce by that amount the taxation of the people and the Senate was resisting, yet the truth clearly was that the Senate had already yielded nearly $22,000,000; that $9,000,000 of the remaining $17,000,000 was made up of re-appropriations which are to be counted, and of deficiencies which are not to be reckoned here; thus leaving the two bodies only about seven or eight million dollars apart. The country should understand that upon this question of expenditures involving the reduction of taxation the Senate, instead of being at issue with the House to the extent of $39,000,000 and resisting the demands of the House for reductions, has willingly yielded $22,000,000 and more; so that the real difference between the two bodies at the time when that speech was made was only seven or eight million dollars.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the people judge whether the Senate would have yielded this reduction if the House had not been here to enforce it.

Mr. HALE. That is a question, and upon that the gentleman is entitled to just as much credit as a fair view of the subject may give. My experience in this conference has been, as I said, that when a fair Senate conference is confronted with a question of fair reduction on a discretionary appropriation, it will yield for the sake of reducing expenditures and will not block the wheels of the House rolling on in that direction. But when you seek to drive through that body by main force a change of law—of law that has stood for years, it may be—when you claim the right to do this, then we shall find a conference that will not be yielding, as we found this conference; we shall find a conference that will maintain what the Senate believes to be its rights.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to say respectfully but pointedly that this outcry about "a change of law" is a mere subterfuge for keeping up excessive appropriations. It is quite certain that almost all these extravagant appropriations made in the past have sprung out of legislation incorporated in appropriation bills.

Mr. DUNNELL. Can the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations readily inform the House how much is appropriated in the bill as now reported for the explorations and surveys under Professor Hayden, Professor Powell, and Lieutenant Wheeler?

Mr. HOLMAN. I will answer the gentleman as nearly as I can remember. The appropriation made by the House for the survey under Professor Hayden was $65,000; and that has not been changed. The appropriations made for Lieutenant Wheeler, $30,000, and for Professor Powell remain as they stood in the House bill.

Mr. DUNNELL. What was the amount for Professor Powell?

Mr. HALE. Thirty thousand dollars.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Senate added $10,000 for maps and charts; but the conference committee agreed that this $10,000 should be deducted from the $30,000.

Mr. GARFIELD. According to this report, what is the condition of the bill in regard to the Signal Service?

Mr. HOLMAN. The only reduction made of the increase made in the Senate is $100,000.

Mr. GARFIELD. How does this appropriation for that service compare with former appropriations?

Mr. HOLMAN. I am not able to state the exact difference.

Mr. HALE. This is about $60,000 less.

Mr. HOLMAN. The only reduction that excites apprehension (if there is any apprehension about it) on the part of the gentleman having charge of this service is the reduction of force made by the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask the gentleman whether the state of the appropriation is such that it will require a reduction of the number of stations?

Mr. RANDALL. It is thought not; neither reduction of the number of men by the Army appropriation bill nor will the reduction of the money appropriation exceed $50,000.

Mr. FOSTER. It reduces twenty-two stations. It does reduce the number of stations.

Mr. RANDALL. We have not reduced the number of stations at all.

Mr. GARFIELD. Congress has nothing to say about stations.

Mr. FOSTER. The understood effect of it is that it will reduce the number of stations.

Mr. HOLMAN. On the contrary, we do not take away a single station.

Mr. RANDALL. As originally proposed, and as consented to by the chief, there would have been a reduction, but in the Army bill instead of one hundred and fifty reduction it only remains fifty, and in this appropriation $100,000. Last year this department cost nearly a million of dollars and it will cost nine hundred thousand this year.

Mr. WHITE. Allow me to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. WHITE. Whether this final agreement in conference was reached before or after the caucus the other night?

Mr. RANDALL. That is a very small matter. It does not matter at all.

Mr. WHITE. Is it not the first case in the history of the country in which a caucus was held in regard to such matters?

Mr. HOLMAN. I beg to say to the gentleman from Kentucky that there has been no caucus held on any appropriation contained in this bill.

Mr. WHITE. Do I understand the gentleman to say there has been no caucus in regard to any appropriation bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. There has been no sum increased or diminished either by the republican or democratic party, so far as I am informed, in caucus. If there has been, I am not informed of it. The gentleman will excuse me. This appropriation was——

Mr. WHITE. Do I understand the gentleman to say there has been no caucus in reference to any appropriation bill? Does he say there has been none in reference to the legislative appropriation bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. I am talking about appropriations, and not about small political matters.

Mr. WHITE. Does he say there has not been one also in reference to the sundry civil bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. I cannot consent to let the gentleman from Kentucky branch off into a political discussion.

Mr. WHITE. Does he say there has been none in regard to the sundry civil appropriation bill? I hope the gentleman will answer.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not yield to the gentleman for any political harangue.

Mr. WHITE. I ask for a simple answer.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the gentleman asks anything about the appropriation bill I will answer him. If he wishes to ask about any appropriation made in this bill I will be glad to hear him—as to any increased charge upon the industries of the country, or any reduction of the present charges of the industries of the country. If he has any such question to propose, I will answer him with pleasure.

Mr. WHITE. I wish to know simply whether this was the agreement on the part of the democrats of the House in caucus or on the part of members here?

Mr. RANDALL. It is nobody's business if it is.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky, after he has been in the House much longer than he has, and I trust his constituents will weigh his public services fairly and well, will find out that the most valueless of all time employed here—the most against the interests of his constituents and mine, and all other constituencies in the country—is that time employed in small political controversies. With a country oppressed by taxation and laboring under financial embarrassment, with the people actually suffering, we cannot afford, in considering an appropriation bill like the one now up, to descend to small partisan debate, and mere petty, party discussion.

Now, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. WHITE. Now, Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman goes further, I hope he will allow me a moment.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend will excuse me——

Mr. WHITE. He will certainly allow me a moment, after making that harangue?

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend will have to excuse me.

Mr. WHITE. I ask a moment; I wish to make a statement.

Mr. HOLMAN. I cannot yield.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana has repeatedly stated to the gentleman from Kentucky that he declined to yield.

Mr. WHITE. The gentleman from Indiana does not desire to do me injustice.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman can get another time for political discussion. I am now seeking to discuss a question of appropriation of public money.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana is entitled to the floor without interruption, and will proceed.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Maine, [Mr. HALE,] who has made a very fair and temperate statement with regard to the spirit with which this conference has been conducted, overlooks the fact that this bill, like all others appropriating money, almost all, contains important legislative provisions, changes in the fundamental law of the departments.

My friend should not have overlooked that fact. It was known to the House and to the Senate that many millions of acres of absolutely worthless lands had been surveyed; desert lands that by no possible irrigation could be made valuable for agricultural purposes; that many millions of acres of such lands had been surveyed, giving enormous profits to those who made the surveys. Perhaps of the 161,000,000 acres of surveyed lands undisposed of it will be found that at least 50,000,000 acres have been surveyed at enormous prices, three times the prices that were paid immediately after the war, that are absolutely worthless. Now, sir, we have cut off this evil at the root by a legislative provision of this bill. We provide that no lands shall be surveyed except lands that are naturally adapted for agriculture or capable of being adapted to agriculture by the facilities that may be furnished or can be furnished by irrigation, and coal lands and mineral lands, rendering it impossible under the law that vast sums of money should be expended in the survey of desert lands, sand banks that could not possibly be converted into any use for the husbandman.

We have in the same connection abolished many offices by direct legislative provision. Where land offices have become absolutely valueless, kept up from year to year as mere sinecures, the offices by this bill are abolished. The reforms in this respect I believe can be claimed to be actually valuable. And the Senate in common with the House has participated in bringing forward these reforms, legislative reforms, by placing them on this appropriation bill.

I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] to another fact. He and the gentleman from Pennsylvania have talked about deficiencies. Why, sir, there can be no deficiency under this bill; it is impossible there should be deficiencies except in connection with two or three branches of the service.

Mr. HALE. Take printing for instance.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Department of Justice, the public printing, the revenue-cutter service, the Light-House Board, and the Signal Service are all the branches of the service involved in this bill where by any reasonable possibility a deficiency can possibly occur.

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not think the gentleman should enumerate the Signal Service as one of those where a deficiency may occur. I do not think there ought to be or can be a deficiency in the Signal Service. Last year we said to the chief of the Signal Service that he had no warrant whatever for making stations except as we gave the money; that if he did not stay within the appropriation he violated the law. I agree with the gentleman in his statement as to the other branches where there may be deficiencies, but I think that in this branch there cannot be a deficiency.

Mr. HOLMAN. I mentioned those five branches of the service where such a thing might possibly occur as a deficiency. But for that branch of the service referred to by the gentleman from Ohio, the Signal Service, we have made full and ample appropriations. In the light-house service and the revenue-cutter service the appropriations made by this bill are almost up to the appropriations made the last fiscal year; and they are substantially up to the estimates. In other words, in every branch of the public service that is absolutely necessary for the administration of the Government the appropriations are made ample.

Mr. GARFIELD. Did the gentleman refer to the Judiciary Department as a branch of the service where a deficiency might occur?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir. I mentioned the Department of Justice.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish to say in this connection that that is one branch of the service where it is absolutely impossible for the officers in charge of it to so guide themselves that there may not be a deficiency; but of course that deficiency will not probably disclose itself until we come together again. The number of people that will be summoned as witnesses, the number of murders to be tried under our criminal jurisdiction, and the number of revenue frauds to be tried in our courts are things which no man in advance can more than approximately estimate. And therefore the gentleman may find warrant for a deficiency appropriation for that Department next winter.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have taken all that into account. I have mentioned the Department of Justice and the Printing Bureau, the appropriations for the Department of Justice being $2,500,000 and the appropriations for the Printing Bureau $1,100,000. I do not hesitate to say that so far as the question of deficiencies arising under this bill is concerned it is impossible that there should be deficiencies, except those growing out of one or the other of those branches of the service. The opinion of the Senate seems to concur with that of the House that the appropriation of $2,500,000 to the Department of Justice was ample. The Senate did not increase that sum, although the appropriation made by the House reduced the amount half a million below the appropriation of the last fiscal year. I therefore feel perfectly confident that there cannot come before this House at the next session from the Departments deficiencies of any considerable moment. I question very much whether a condition of things can possibly occur where a deficiency to the extent of a single dollar can be presented by the Departments of the Government. And I am very glad that the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations, and the gentleman from Maine have both given, in effect, the one rather more positively than the other, notice to all the Departments of the Government that it is the belief of this House after making a very careful investigation and a very impartial investigation, an investigation conducted not by one side of the House but by both sides of the House, that the appropriations made by this bill are ample.

Mr. GARFIELD. Will the gentleman state how much reduction in this bill grows out of reductions in the appropriations for public buildings?

Mr. HALE. The gentleman means the difference between this year's appropriations for that purpose and the last.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Ohio knows what the appropriations were last year.

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not know.

Mr. HOLMAN. Something over $4,000 for new buildings.

Mr. RANDALL. This bill appropriates $2,000,000 less for that purpose.

Mr. HALE. A little more than that.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is a little more than $2,000,000, and the reduction in the bill from the appropriations for the last fiscal year will be about $8,000,000 without taking public works into account.

Mr. GARFIELD. In the same connection I desire to ask the gentleman if he remembers what is the amount appropriated in the bill as reported from the committee on conference for the new building for the State, War, and Navy Departments?

Mr. HOLMAN. Three hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. GARFIELD. And the estimate was $1,300,000. Of course we can stop the work on that building, but as the work is going forward, and as it has been repeatedly suggested to us that the archives of the War and Navy Departments are kept in buildings which are liable to be burned and which are not fire-proof, is it policy to delay the completion of this building? We pushed the construction of that wing of the building designed for the State Department for the sake of getting the precious archives belonging to that Department out of danger of fire, and I ask the gentleman from Indiana if he thinks it wise to cut off a million dollars of the estimate of this work and appropriate an amount merely sufficient to carry the building up a short way, and not sufficient to make it habitable; whether we are not, in doing this, running a risk which we ought not to do and postponing a necessary appropriation, not saving it?

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman's policy of completing these great buildings at once in fact largely increases the amount of cost, in the judgment of those who have investigated the subject, instead of diminishing the cost.

The great buildings which have been constructed in this city, including the Treasury Department, were in progress for some twenty years. There was no attempt made in those days to finish these large structures at once, as we are now trying to do. It was not thought necessary to burden the country by such heavy exactions. All these large buildings in this city, the Post-Office Department, the Patent Office, and the Treasury building, were built up slowly through a very considerable period of years.

Now, the gentleman from Ohio was very well aware that the War Department and the Navy Department, which contained these precious archives to which he refers, are at least as secure now as they have been for the last half century.

Mr. GARFIELD. O, no, they are not; because a balloon story has been added to each of those buildings of very light material, and in consequence we have twice had the Navy Department on fire and some of the records have been destroyed. That should be a warning to us against delaying the building of the present edifice.

Mr. HOLMAN. The buildings are now more secure than they were before the war.

Mr. GARFIELD. O, no; far less.

Mr. HOLMAN. There are a greater number of persons employed as watchmen and in other ways; these archives are much more secure now than they were twenty-five years ago. We only entered upon the erection of this new building very recently, and so far as the War and Navy Departments are concerned new buildings would not have been erected for them at all had it not been in connection with the State Department. It becomes necessary to erect a building for the State Department because there was no building at all for that Department. Gentlemen will remember that the State Department was at the north end of the Treasury building, but the new Treasury building was built slowly and was the work of years, and when, in the progress of its reconstruction the corner where the old State Department was reached, it was torn down and the Treasury building was extended. We had then no building for the State Department, and the necessity for a new building for that Department lead to the idea that a building should be put up which would include the War and Navy Departments. But for this, even in the prosperous times which we had a few years ago, when the country was feeling no burden at all, I think the construction of a new Navy and War Department would not have been thought of. But it was perhaps well enough that the work was entered on in connection with the new State Department. There is, however, no such necessity of haste about this matter as to require us to throw the labor of years into a single year and place on the industries of the country burdens of taxation in a single year which ought to be borne for a period of several years. Let us learn something from our fathers in reference to this matter of burdening the people for public works.

There is one item to which neither the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] nor the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has referred, and that is the insertion in this bill of a provision which was not referred in any form to the committee of conference. I believe there have been few instances of this kind, but I feel confident that with a full knowledge of the fact every gentleman will concur in the provision. It was found that the agents for the Alaska fur-seal fisheries had not been provided for in any of the appropriation bills and had been overlooked in the estimates.

We have four of these agents, or rather one principal agent and three assistants at the islands of Saint George and Saint Paul. Their compensation is fixed by law, and the amount to be received by them as traveling expenses to Alaska and back for the purpose of counting the number of skins taken from the fur seals is also provided by law. Under these circumstances and at the urgent request of the Treasury Department, the committee of conference consented to incorporate an appropriation of the necessary amount of money, providing at the same time for abolishing two of these assistants after the 1st day of next October. A gentleman of very great intelligence, and more familiar with those fur-seal islands than any other gentleman in this country that I know of, a gentleman who was sent as an agent to that region at two different times, I think, by special provision of law——

Mr. GARFIELD. I suppose the gentleman refers to Professor Elliott, of the Smithsonian Institution.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes. After consulting with him as to the duties of these agents, it was thought entirely safe to diminish the number of assistants by two. We have appropriated in this bill the necessary money to pay the salaries of one principal agent and one assistant for the present fiscal year, and to pay the salaries of the other two assistants up to the 1st day of October next, by which time they will have returned to San Francisco. The offices of those two assistants are abolished after that time, leaving but the principal and one assistant.

I believe I have referred to the only instance in this entire bill where a subject was acted upon which was not properly referred to the committee of conference by one or the other House. I believe the uniform practice has been, where such a thing as this has occurred, to call the attention of the House to the fact, for the House has the right to assume that the committee of conference took jurisdiction of no subject-matter except those regularly referred to it for action.

I had intended to yield long before this to the gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. DUNNELL,] and will do so now with great pleasure.

Mr. DUNNELL. I came to my seat just as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] was referring to the very safe condition of the War and Navy Department buildings. I desired to ask him if he was not aware that last winter the Secretary of War issued an order that in almost every room in the War Department building no fire should be built, in order to avoid a conflagration, and that in those buildings they are unable to have the ordinary fires in winter because those buildings are regarded by the officers who have them in charge as utterly unsafe?

Mr. HOLMAN. The buildings are not fire-proof, as my friend knows. I simply meant to say, and presume I did say, that the War and Navy Department buildings are as safe now as they have been at any time for the last fifty years. There is no new emergency in regard to them. They are now a great deal better buildings than they were before the war; they are as good as they were during the war and as they have been since the close of the war, when these archives were as precious and perhaps a little more valuable than now, that the most valuable of them have gone into history. It is very true that there is now a great deal of very valuable material there which must be preserved; but there is no reason for extraordinary expenditures now to complete a fire-proof building for either the War or the Navy Department.

And I wish to say further to the gentleman that we appropriate $350,000 for that building. We deal here in such enormous sums of money that amounts which a few years ago would have been regarded as very large scarcely arrest our attention. Look over the appropriations from year to year for the construction and completion of the new Treasury building. I think there was but one instance during the whole progress of that great edifice that the annual appropriation for that purpose was larger than $300,000.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. MILLER. Is it true that the Government is now paying large sums for rent of buildings in this city, which it would not be obliged to pay if this building was completed?

Mr. HOLMAN. The Government would save a very considerable sum of money in that way. But still it is certain we are permitting the Departments to pay at least twice as much for rent as ought to be paid.

I will mention to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLER] one objection there is to a large appropriation at this time for the new State Department building. By the contract under which that building is being constructed, and which we must certainly get rid of sooner or later, a very great wrong is being done the country. Under that contract we pay parties having the contract for finishing the rough stone so as to adapt it for use in the building a profit of 15 per cent. upon the entire cost. Therefore the larger the amount of money they can expend for labor upon this rough stone, in hewing the stone into shape, the more their emoluments will be increased. As soon as that contract is got rid of, and this unwarrantable drain upon the Treasury can be stopped, I for one will be willing to increase the annual appropriation for that building. Still I regard $350,000 for that building ample under the circumstances, and very ample indeed in view of the fact that at this time the Treasury is suffering so monstrously by this most unjustifiable contract.

Mr. MILLER. If the gentleman will allow me, I will say that I do not belittle the sum of $350,000. But it seems to me that in a business point of view, as business men, it is poor economy for us to pay out large sums of money for rent and to lose the interest of all the money we have already expended upon this new State Department building, while the property itself is probably being depreciated by not being completed. If it was a new building, like the post-office building in Philadelphia, for which the Committee on Appropriations have given $450,000, I might think there was some force in the argument that we had better not make a large appropriation for commencing a new work. But when the work is already commenced and far advanced, it seems to me to be economy to push it forward to completion.

Mr. RANDALL. The statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLER] needs correction. In the first place, the building at Philadelphia is not a new one, but a building in progress. Three million dollars has been appropriated for it already. In the second place, the amount we appropriate this year is $350,000, not $450,000.

Mr. MILLER. The money heretofore appropriated seems to have been expended in buying the ground and in providing the material; for the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LE MOYNE] told us the other day that he could see nothing of the building above ground, and he had seen it very recently.

Mr. RANDALL. That is owing to the neglect of the architect, who went off to buy nine hundred thousand dollars' worth of stone for the first, second, and third stories, and forgot that he required stone for the foundation.

Mr. MILLER. I do not understand that stone is such material as would depreciate by delay or perhaps improve very much by seasoning.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to say (and with these remarks I will conclude what I have to say on this bill) that this whole system of renting buildings for the Government in this city is in the main a system of favoritism. Large numbers of buildings rented in this city at high rents are manifestly not actually required for the public service.

Mr. MILLER. Then we had better stop that evil at once.

Mr. HOLMAN. I doubt very much whether even the completion of the new War Department and Navy Department building will put a stop to this system of favoritism. The only way in which we can arrest this evil is by cutting off the appropriations, which we have largely done this year.

Mr. HALE. Did not the last Congress strike at the root of that evil by providing that thenceforward no building in the city of Washington should be hired for any purpose by the Government until an estimate had been submitted and an appropriation therefor made by Congress?

Mr. HOLMAN. That is true.

Mr. HALE. I remember that circumstance with some pride, because of my own participation in the matter.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir, the gentleman offered that provision; and it was adopted. It was a very wise provision; but gentlemen should bear in mind that since that time buildings have been rented in utter disregard of that limitation.

Mr. DUNNELL. I want to occupy just a single moment. I think the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is always anxious to be well understood. He stated a few moments ago that the records in the War Department had largely passed into history, and that the present records there are comparatively valueless.

Mr. HOLMAN. As compared with what were there during or at the close of the war.

Mr. DUNNELL. The records that were in the War Department at the breaking out of the rebellion had very largely passed into history; but the records there now are of greater value than at any previous time in the history of the Government. The War Department records could have been better lost at any other time than the present. Their value is beyond estimate.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why more valuable than before the war?

Mr. DUNNELL. They have been largely increased in quantity. There have been added to the archives of the War Department valuable rebel records—records for which we paid large sums.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does not my friend know that the most valuable of the records of the War Department—those pertaining to the Second Auditor's Office—are not in the War Department building at all, but in Winder's building, a structure understood to be entirely fireproof. That building contains the most valuable archives of the War Department.

Mr. DUNNELL. The Adjutant-General's Office is in the War Department building; and it is in the Adjutant-General's Office that the test is made of the verity and correctness of all the other records.

Mr. HOLMAN. But the soldiers are interested particularly in the records of the Second Auditor's Office; and those are in Winder's building, a fire-proof edifice.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, this question in regard to the archives brings me to consider some statements made yesterday in the Senate, in which the impression was given or attempted to be given that we had in some way interfered with the appropriations for the preservation of the rebel archives, and thereby interfered with the defense of the Government against improper claims.

Now, sir, those rebel archives are appropriated for in three different ways: first, in the legislative appropriation bill, where the amount given is $6,000; again in this sundry civil bill, the appropriation here being $6,000; and besides there is another item which last year was $50,000, but which the Committee on Appropriations have reduced to $40,000.

Now, I rather regret that allusion has been made to this subject in the Senate, because it brings me to notice a great abuse which has taken place in connection with the expenditure of the money heretofore appropriated; and this is one of the reasons why we have reduced the appropriation: In connection with the appropriation of $50,000 made last year, a provision was incautiously inserted, under which clerks already receiving salaries from the Government were allowed to do additional work at additional pay in copying these archives. Under this provision regularly authorized clerks receiving already salaries from the Government have obtained a large portion of this money in addition to their regular pay. And the result was that toward the end of the fiscal year quite a number of clerks who had been paid out of that fund were discharged, when, if this appropriation had not been allowed to be eaten up by additional salaries to regular clerks, they would have been continued up to the end of the fiscal year. For instance, the chief clerk of the War Department, in addition to his regular salary, drew some sixteen hundred dollars from this fund. I think it was an improper act, and if I had been Secretary of War it would have been short work for that officer. Another officer, a Mr. Barnard, has received in one way or another additional pay out of this fund.

And this is the abuse the committee have cut off. Incautiously this was allowed under a sort of provision embraced in the last year's appropriation bill. This gross abuse was allowed seemingly under the law. No such thing was ever intended. It was not understood at the time, for if it had been it would have been at once corrected. In addition to the two officers I have named there are others in the War Department who have been paid out of this fund double salaries. This is what we have cut off in the amount we have appropriated for the rebel archives to which I have alluded.

The CHAIRMAN. The hour of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. EDEN. I wish to ask the gentleman what is the amount which remains in the various appropriations relative to these rebel archives?

Mr. RANDALL. This fund was exhausted. It was exhausted before the end of the last fiscal year and exhausted in the manner I have stated by salaried officers in the War Department receiving additional or double salaries paid out of that fund for which there was no justification in my mind, although the law was so cunningly framed as seemingly to allow it. It is what is known in the Treasury Department as a "slush" fund. We came across items of the same sort in other bills. There is one in the legislative bill which I hope will be stricken out.

I promised to yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HARTZELL] and then to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. HARRIS,] but as my hour has expired I will allow the gentleman from Illinois to take the floor and he can occupy it in his own right and after him the gentleman from Virginia can take the floor and then I will demand the previous question.

Mr. HUBBELL. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. HALE. I hope there will be no objection to the extension of the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RANDALL. I am obliged to the gentleman, but I do not want it.

RETRENCHMENT AND REFORM.

Mr. HARTZELL. Mr. Speaker, while it is not my purpose to elaborately argue the many points of difference between the party I have the honor in part to represent on this floor and the republican party, I hope to be able briefly to recur to those most prominent. It can doubtless be said with truth, as a general proposition, that the long-continued retention of power by any party in any country begets corruption. It can certainly be truthfully stated that this general condition is exemplified by republican rule.

In as brief a manner as possible, I propose to show by figures and undisputed facts that since the conclusion of the late war the expenses of all the different departments of the Government have been on the increase; that while all the valuable industries are languishing, while all the products of labor are decreasing in value, while the agricultural, manufacturing, mercantile, and labor interests are under the influence of stagnation that almost equals death, offices and office-holders are increasing in number, and public expenditures consequently alarmingly increasing in amount; that money-wealth, instead of being diffused among the many and throughout the producing districts, is rapidly accumulating in the few and in the cities; that we have fallen upon those times that, either from unwise administration or some other unfortunate and uncomprehended condition, the rich few are daily becoming richer and the poor many, who are the bone and sinew of the state, are daily becoming poorer. Assuming that this state of affairs exists, the highest duty of a Representative of the people is to carefully study the situation and attempt to apply a remedy. One remedy from which immediate relief must result to the people is by reducing expenditures, and thereby decreasing the burdens of taxation.

It has been the effort of the majority of this House from the first day of this session until now to decrease the financial budget for the present year. Although enthralled as we have been by constant opposition from the minority, there has been a reduction of over $30,000,000, without interfering with the efficiency of any of the Departments of the Government. To this reduction a factious and unauthorized opposition has been developed in the Senate, the republican branch of Congress, and while their leading representatives are constantly promulgating theories of rigid economy for the laboring millions they oppose with desperate energy every effort to deprive the official household of any of their gaudy trappings, useless display, and riotous extravagance. The democrats demand as the representatives of the people that the strictest economy shall be practiced in the administration of public affairs; that useless offices shall be abolished and that useless office-holders shall be driven to producing pursuits; that, instead of absorbing the hard-earned wages of the poor, they shall by labor be compelled to add their quota to the wealth of the state.

Before I conclude it will be my attempt to show that offices and office-holders in the midst of the general depression that has surrounded us for the last few years have been almost constantly increasing; that the apparent attempt has been to make places to reward partisans rather than to consider the welfare of the people or the economy of public administration. It cannot be doubted that without damage to public interest from four to five hundred millions of dollars could have been saved to the people in the last ten years, the saving of which would have prevented the present depressed condition of affairs and the untold and little-understood misery and unhappiness that it entails. What, then, is our duty and what do the people demand?

Retrenchment, economy, and reform are demanded by the people. The eloquent appeals of unscrupulous politicians to secure partisan triumph and the rhetorical fulminations of partisan laudation, partisan honesty, and partisan integrity in this often-referred-to centennial year will not suffice to meet their demands. They demand of their servants, to whom they have confided the control of this great and free nation, that they shall be frugal, honest, and economical in all their expenditures and expel from the public service at once and forever all venal, incompetent, and corrupt men. They demand, sir, that fraud and corruption shall at once cease in every Department of the Government, and that there be an immediate return on the part of all officials to that economy, patriotism, and virtue which characterized the conduct and action of our fathers. They demand a reduction of expenditures in every branch of the Government, and that not one dollar nor one dime more than is absolutely required for carrying on our Federal affairs shall be appropriated from their depleted Treasury. They demand that the extravagance and reckless expenditures which have crept into the various departments within the past fifteen years shall absolutely and forever cease. They have witnessed with sorrow and indignation the frauds, the peculations, and the arbitrary acts of the party in power. They have seen their Treasury despoiled, their Constitution wantonly violated, their States subverted, and their Legislatures dispersed to maintain the power, patronage, and supremacy of a party.

Fraud and corruption in office are almost as frequent as the offices themselves are numerous, and the greatest violators of law have their apologists among the highest officials in the land. The history of civil service, as administered by the party in power, is a recital of extravagance, fraud, and corruption. Men occupying high and responsible positions as Government officials, whose characters are blackened by crime and who are in some instances arraigned before the tribunals of their country to answer indictment, are still recognized as suitable persons to perform the functions of their high offices. Rings have been formed with and without congressional aid for the purpose of plundering from the people's Treasury the results of their hard-earned gains. Money is deified and wealth is so centralized that free institutions are endangered and the rightful power of the people destroyed. A disregard for the sacred teachings of the Constitution and a contempt for the forms of law mark the advent and the reign of the party in power and will result in their overthrow. Party despotism is unrelenting in its demands, and he who profits by its influences is compelled to wear, like Gurth, the collar around his neck marked "this is the born thrall of Cedric the Saxon."

But, sir, the time has come, and very fortunately, too, for the welfare of the country, that empty promises and loud professions of economy by political parties will not satisfy the demands of the over-taxed people. They have declared for true economy in every department of the Government, and that all reckless expenditure shall absolutely cease. They have defied the authority of party, which for so many years has chained the country to the car of corruption. With united voice they demand that their servants in all official positions must be honest, economical, and competent. We are admonished daily by the condition of all our material interests that retrenchment, economy, and reform in all the departments of the Government are absolutely required for the perpetuity and preservation of the life of the nation. American commerce has almost abandoned the high seas; the agriculturists of the country are bowed to the earth with low prices and oppressive taxation and are struggling on their broad acres for a bare existence; the factories and machine-shops are nearly all idle, mechanics are thrown out of employment, and in many instances are without the actual necessaries of life; destitution and misery are stalking from city to city, from hamlet to village, and from ocean to ocean.

While the business of the country is paralyzed and universal bankruptcy threatens the whole people, the burdens of taxation are more oppressive, ruinous, and exacting than ever before.

National taxes, State taxes, county taxes, town taxes, municipal taxes. The collector is as inevitable as the grim messenger of death. Incomes, profits, wages, all these fail, but taxes rise.

Mr. Speaker, during the year 1875 there were 7,740 business failures in this country, whose aggregate losses were $201,060,353, and during the first three months of the year 1876 the failures amounted to 2,806 and the losses amounted to $64,644,156. If the failures continue throughout the remainder of this year in the same proportion, they will present the startling number of 11,224, while the aggregate losses will reach the enormous sum of $258,500,000. With these numerous evidences of financial ruin, which are constantly presented to the minds of the people, is it surprising that they should forget party ties and leaders and look only to the protection of themselves and the preservation of their Government from universal bankruptcy and decay? The great political revolution that swept over this country in 1874 and gave to the democratic party a majority in this branch of the legislative department was inaugurated by the people of all political parties in the interest of economy, retrenchment, and reform. And, sir, if we prove faithful to our trusts and obey the demands of the people in appropriating such sums of money only as are requisite and necessary for an economical administration, the ides of November next will witness a revolution at the ballot-box unequaled in the annals of our political history. Sir, understanding, as I think I do, the wants and desires of the people whom I have the honor to represent, knowing, too, the hardships and privations to which they are subjected by cruel and reckless legislation and oppressive taxation, I am ready and willing to vote for all necessary appropriations for an economical administration of the Government, but not one dollar more. I am one of those, Mr. Speaker, who hold that governments like individuals must be economical to be successful. The question presented by the republican policy in their determination to perpetuate present extravagance is whether we shall make further loans and spend the principal and go only for a few years to come to the people for the interest, or so increase the burdens of taxation that the principal sum can be extorted from them annually, while the majority of this House demand such reduction of expenditures that the inauguration of this republican policy is unnecessary.

The gentlemen on the republican side of this House insist that they are for retrenchment and reform wherever it is possible. But when you propose the reduction of the salaries of any of the employés in the Departments they say it is not practicable. When you propose a reduction of the clerical force in any o f the Departments of the Government, they say you cannot do it without seriously affecting the public service.

The truth, is Mr. Speaker, the loud professions of economy coming from the gentlemen on the other side are a deception. They are intended to be extensively circulated over the country with the hope of deluding the people into the belief that they are in favor of reducing the expenditures, while in reality they are here laboring and voting for excessive appropriations and high salaries, which in the aggregate amount to many millions of dollars more than are required for an honest and economical administration.

In 1855, while discussing the appropriation bills of that year in the Senate of the United States, Mr. Benton said: "That a practical man, acquainted with the objects for which the Federal Government was created and familiar with its financial workings from the time its fathers put it into operation, could take his pen and cross out nearly the one-half of the appropriations for that year, and leave the Government in full vigor for all its proper objects, and more pure, by reducing the number of those who live upon the substance of the people." Sir, while the Committee on Appropriations have not gone to the extent suggested by Colonel Benton in 1855, they have had the wisdom and courage to reduce the appropriation for this year $39,000,000 below last year, and the democratic side of this House have had the courage and patriotism to stand by them in their labors. I am aware, sir, that the annual saving of $39,000,000 is of small consequence to some of the gentlemen on the other side of this House, but it is of vast importance to the tax-paying people of the country, who must meet it. Why, Mr. Speaker, the entire net ordinary expenses of this Government for the year 1846 were only $26,418,459.59, being over $12,500,000 less than the reductions made by this House. I desire in this connection to submit some carefully prepared tables showing the annual net ordinary expenses of the Government, exclusive of pensions and interest upon the national debt, from 1852 to 1860, both inclusive, and from 1867 to 1875, both inclusive:

1852	$37,988,095 78
1853	42,321,850 15
1854	50,734,863 42
1855	54,838,565 39
1856	65,476,297 99
1857	64,730,763 12
1858	71,710,668 87
1859	65,133,727 36
1860	58,955,952 39
Total amount net ordinary expenses for nine years from 1852 to 1860	511,290,804 47

The following table shows the annual net ordinary expenses of the Government, exclusive of pensions and interest upon the national debt, from 1867 to 1875, both inclusive:

1867	$182,011,182 16
1868	206,132,701 33
1869	161,989,733 17
1870	136,081,304 98
1871	123,139,932 70
1872	124,668,453 43
1873	151,129,210 04
1874	149,580,570 34
1875	142,673,632 05
Total amount net ordinary expenses for nine years from 1867 to 1875	1,376,806,720 20

Here, Mr. Speaker, we see that the net ordinary expenses of the Government for the nine years from 1867 to 1875, exclusive of pensions and the interest upon the national debt, exceed those for the nine years from 1852 to 1860 in the enormous sum of $865,515,915.73, nearly half enough to pay the whole national debt. Sir, is it not time that the American people were ordering a halt in all extravagant legislation and reckless expenditures and demanding in the most emphatic manner a return to that economy and simplicity which are the safe guards of a republican form of government? The people refuse longer to close their eyes to the imperial displays which are going on all around them, and which not only threaten a subversion of free institutions, but are impoverishing and bankrupting the country. In this connection, Mr. Speaker, I wish to present the following carefully prepared statement, showing the amount of the different appropriation bills passed by this House as compared with the appropriations made for the same purposes by the last Congress:

Military Academy bill:
Amount recommended by this House for year ending June 30, 1877.	$231,241 00
Amount appropriated by last Congress	364,740 00
Reduction over last Congress	133,499 00
Pension bill:
Amount recommended by this House for year ending June 30, 1877.	$29,533,500 00
Amount appropriated by last Congress	30,000,000 00
Reduction over last Congress	466,500,00
Consular and diplomatic bill:
Amount recommended by this House for year ending June 30, 1877.	$922,847 50
Amount appropriated by last Congress	1,351,285 00
Reduction over last Congress	428,437 50
Fortification bill:
Amount recommended by this House for year ending June 30, 1877.	$315,000 00
Amount appropriated by last Congress	850,000 00
Reduction over last Congress	535,000 00
Legislative, executive, and judicial bill:
Amount recommended by this House for year ending June 30, 1877.	$13,009,807 61
Amount appropriated by last Congress	18,734,225 00
Reduction over last Congress	5,724,417 39
River and harbor bill:
Amount recommended by this House for year ending June 30, 1877.	$5,872,850 00
Amount appropriated by last Congress	6,643,517 50
Reduction over last Congress	770,667 50
Deficiency bill:
Amount recommended by this House for year ending June 30, 1877.	$662,315 07
Amount appropriated by last Congress	4,703,699 18
Reduction over last Congress	4,041,384 11
Post-office bill:
Amount recommended by this House for year ending June 30, 1877.	$32,189,109 00
Amount appropriated by last Congress	37,524,361 00
Reduction over last Congress	5,335,252 00
Navy bill:
Amount recommended by this House for year ending June 30, 1877.	$12,808,655 40
Amount appropriated by last Congress	17,011,306 90
Reduction over last Congress	4,202,651 50
Indian bill:
Amount recommended by this House for year ending June 30, 1877.	$3,905,771 27
Amount appropriated by last Congress	5,360,554 55
Reduction over last Congress	1,454,783 28

Army bill:
Amount recommended by this House for year ending June 30, 1877	$23, 254, 477 12
Amount appropriated by last Congress	27, 933, 380 00
Reduction over last Congress	4, 678, 902 88
Sundry civil bill:
Amount recommended by this House for year ending June 30, 1877, about	$14, 926, 981 74
Amount appropriated by last Congress	26, 644, 350 09
Reduction over last Congress about	11, 717, 368 35

The following statement shows the actual reductions made in the twelve appropriation bills passed by this House for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, over those passed for a similar purpose by the last session of the republican Congress for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876:

Military Academy bill	$133, 499 00
Pension bill	466, 500 00
Consular and diplomatic bill	428, 437 50
Fortification bill	535, 000 00
Legislative, executive, and judicial bill	5, 724, 417 39
River and harbor bill	770, 667 50
Deficiency bill	4, 041, 384 11
Post-Office bill	5, 335, 252 00
Navy bill	4, 202, 651 50
Indian bill	1, 454, 783 28
Army bill	4, 678, 902 88
Sundry civil bill	11, 717, 368 35
Total amount of reductions	39, 487, 865 51

In this connection permit me to present two additional tables, one showing the increase per capita of taxation, and the other showing the increase of civil offices; both of which demonstrate the fact that extravagance in expenditures and expansion of offices have gone hand in hand under republican rule:

Taxes in the United States.

	1850.	1860.	1870.
	Gold.	Gold.	Currency.
Federal taxes	$40, 000, 000	$60, 010, 112	$450, 000, 000
State, county, city, and town taxes	43, 000, 000	94, 186, 746	280, 591, 521
Total	83, 000, 000	154, 196, 858	730, 591, 521
Population	23, 191, 876	31, 443, 321	38, 558, 371
Taxes, per head:
Federal	1. 72	1. 91	11. 67
Local	1. 85	2. 99	7. 24
Total	3. 57	4. 90	18. 91

The following statement of the number of employés borne upon the civil list of the United States from 1859 to 1875, inclusive, is compiled from the Biennial Registers:

1859	44, 527
1861	46, 049
1863	47, 375
1865	54, 167
1867	56, 113
1869	54, 207
1871	57, 605
1873	86, 660
1875	94, 119

Thus, Mr. Speaker, with the united opposition of our republican friends this House has reduced the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, below the actual appropriations made by the last Congress for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, over $39,000,000; and much larger reductions could have been made without injury to the public service had we but men at the head of our governmental affairs who are in sympathy with the people and impressed with the necessity of economy and reform. And yet, sir, after all that this Congress has done in the reduction of expenditures and in lifting burdens from the shoulders of the people which have so grievously oppressed them for many years, we are still told by our republican friends in this House that economy, retrenchment, and reform is the mere party cry of political demagogues. Sir, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CROUNSE] struck the key-note of his party on that side of the House when but a few days ago on this floor he used the following words:

> Now, I am not one of those gentlemen who advertise themselves in advance as being in favor of retrenchment and reform. If there are any words of which I am sick, and if there are words which have been used to cover up hypocrisy, those are the words.

Sir, let me say to the gentleman and his political associates upon this floor that they will grow much sicker when they go back to their constituents and attempt to explain these words and their actions here in fighting to the death every effort at retrenchment and reform by this side of the House. Our action is potent and endowed with an energy adequate to a wholesome result, and so gentlemen will find it at the polls.

I wish now, Mr. Speaker, to call attention to another authentic statement showing the annual appropriations made by Congress for defraying the expenses of the folding-room for folding documents and speeches of members of Congress from 1861 to the present time. I give this as another example of republican financial policy. Though comparatively small in its results, it is one of the patent indications of their extravagance and reckless disregard of the public Treasury:

Appropriations for House folding-room.

1861	$30, 000 00
1862	30, 000 00
1863	30, 000 00
1864	30, 000 00
1865	30, 000 00
1866	30, 000 00
1867	30, 000 00
1868	42, 000 00
1869	122, 000 00
1870	37, 000 00
1871	80, 000 00
1872	100, 000 00
1873	100, 000 00
1874	100, 000 00
1875	41, 200 00
1876	25, 000 00
1877	15, 000 00

Here, sir, we have presented the remarkable fact that from 1861 to 1867, during the whole period of the civil war, when labor was high and our currency was depreciated to about forty cents on the dollar, the actual expenses of the folding-room were only $30,000 per annum, while the appropriations for the same purpose from 1868 to 1875, when labor was cheap and when, too, our currency had appreciated in value to within a few cents of par, averaged the enormous sum of $77,750; and for the year 1869 the appropriation amounted to $122,000, and for the years 1872, 1873 and 1874 the appropriations reached the sum of $100,000 per annum. During the last session of the Forty-third Congress, when the republican majority saw that the control of this House was about to pass into the hands of the democratic party, they were seized with a violent spasm of economy, and in their appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, they allowed but $25,000 for the folding-room. They thus admitted that the democratic party could run this department of the Government much more cheaply than they could. But, sir, this reduction of expenditures in this branch of the service by our republican friends during the last session of the Forty-third Congress for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, was not sufficient to satisfy the wishes of the majority of this House, and they have reduced the appropriations for this purpose to $15,000 per annum.

The object of these excessive appropriations for the folding-room while the House was under republican control was to enable them to use the public treasure to defray the expenses of their political campaigns by the distribution of documents and otherwise. The object of reduction to $25,000 by the republican House last session was to prevent the democratic party from using this weapon for the advancement of their cause. The democratic party, however, represented as they are in this House by a majority, and confident of its continuance by the people, have further reduced the expenses of the folding-room $10,000, thus showing by acts that they commend themselves to the people by true economy.

While, sir, it has been universally admitted that this House has the constitutional right to determine the rules of its own proceedings, and to designate the number of its employés and the appropriations necessary to defray its annual expenses, it has been left for the present Senate to reverse this long-established custom, and have constituted themselves the guardians of this House. In the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, which originated in and passed this House April 28, 1876, the number of employés and their salaries were fixed by this House, and the necessary sums of money appropriated to meet the current expenses of this branch of the public service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877. But, sir, what is the condition of this bill when it has passed the Senate? We see, sir, that the number and compensation of the employés of the House of Representatives have been increased by the Senate amendments, and the appropriations made by this House to defray its own expenses for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, have also been increased by the Senate amendments over $224,000. This is $224,000 more than this House deems requisite or necessary to defray its expenses for the present fiscal year; and yet the Senate insist that we must appropriate and expend this large sum uselessly and extravagantly. In this we have another specimen of republican economy and reform—a policy which looks only to an extravagant expenditure of the people's money, and a needless increase of the burdens of taxation. A policy that cowered before the purifying influences of a Bristow, the greatest reformer of his party, and finally forced him from the Treasury Department, and caused the dismissal of almost every employé who had aided his efforts or who dared to speak of him in terms of praise or admiration.

Mr. Speaker, this is not the kind of reform demanded by the people of this country. They oppose, in the most emphatic manner, the removal from office by the Administration of such men as Bristow and Dyer—men who have proven themselves the best and truest reformers of their party, and who were ready and willing to strike down every violator of law wherever found, regardless of partisan influences or political considerations. No greater truth was ever uttered than that which fell from the lips of a prominent and influential republican of Massachusetts a few days ago, "that reform within the republican party is out of the question at present, and that the only hope of the country is in the democrats. * * * The imperative, the solemn need of the country is a change of the national administration."

Why, Mr. Speaker, we are told in the most solemn and impressive manner by grave Senators in the other end of this Capitol that our efforts to reduce the expenditures in and to reform the abuses of the Government mean "repudiation and revolution." Sir, this is a very serious charge, and deserves to be inquired into to ascertain its truthfulness. Is it true, sir, that in our efforts to revive the business of the country which is now paralyzed, and to remove as far as possible the burdens of taxation from the people, that we are guilty of "repudiation and revolution?" Is it "repudiation and revolution" for us to reduce the appropriations over $39,000,000 below last year without impairing the efficiency of any one of the Departments of the Government? Is it "repudiation and revolution" to insist upon cutting off all useless extravagances and demanding a reform in the civil service of the Government? Is it "repudiation and revolution" to stand here in this Hall and plead for the oppressed and overburdened people of this country whose business is paralyzed, whose workshops are idle, whose farms are rendered almost worthless, whose homes are being snatched from them by the remorseless money-changers, and whose families are suffering for the necessaries and comforts of life?

Sir, the people of this country cannot be driven from the consideration of the actions of the republican Senate in refusing to cooperate with the majority in this House in cutting down the expenditures of the Government by such absurd and puerile charges as these. The people are with us in our repudiation of the extravagances which the Senate are attempting to perpetnate by resisting and refusing to adopt the appropriation bills which have passed this House. Wise and patriotic legislation, in the estimation of the party in power, consists in excessive appropriations and expenditure of the people's money, while all efforts to reduce appropriations, to retrench expenditures, and to reform abuses in the public service are "repudiation and revolution." The retrenchment and reform inaugurated by the majority in this House are in response to the urgent demands of the people, and he who attempts to resist their demands by crying "repudiation and revolution" will receive their hearty condemnation.

Mr. Speaker, there are other great and growing evils under this administration, a partial remedy for which has been presented by a bill from the Committee of Ways and Means of this House. While it may be true, sir, with the existing debt, that it is impossible to raise the revenue necessary to pay the interest and defray current expenses, without a limited protection policy, still it is the highest duty of the Representative to so direct that policy that the greatest amount will be derived as revenue. The history of the financial policy of the Administration has been to inaugurate a universal policy of protection in the application of which to the majority of the articles protected substantial prohibition of imports was accomplished; thus defeating the result professed to be desired by its authors and securing enormous and exorbitant profit to a class engaged in home production without producing one dollar for the Federal Treasury.

The nearest approximation to free trade possible is the first duty of the American people. Its tendency is to equalize the burdens and distribute labor and development in conformity to the laws of trade. The policy of the republican party has built up classes representing a few, to the detriment of the millions who represent the wealth, the safety, and the greatness of the state. The democratic party are for free trade as a principle, with no departure from it except when public exigencies imperatively demand it. The republican party are by their history the supporters of protection and the consequent establishment of class elevation and the social distinctions and money emolument that follow it.

We are told, sir, by gentlemen on this floor that the great prostration in business, the wreck and ruin which are visible in all financial quarters in this country, are attributable to the existence of a low tariff. Sir, the financial distress and business prostration which is now destroying the hopes and crushing the spirits of our people is caused by a different agency. I allude, sir, to the miserable farce known as the specie resumption act of 1875, an act declaring for a resumption of specie payments in 1879, without providing the means by which such an end could be attained. It has from the date of its passage proved a great evil to the business interests of this country. It has contracted the currency, unsettled values, prostrated business, paralyzed industries, impoverished the laboring-men, crushed the hopes and aspirations of the farmer and mechanic, and is filling the country with poverty and misery.

Sir, the tribute-receivers and the bonded aristocracy of the East speak of this resumption act as a sacred and binding law; an act that must be faithfully carried out regardless of consequences to save the honor and credit of the Government, when they know full well that it was a caucus measure designed for party purposes. It was an effort to resist a dissolution of the republican party, which at that time was without a principle of cohesion, and to fasten if possible for a few years longer a set of corrupt and greedy politicians upon the people. Why, sir, the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE,] who while a member of this House was the recognized leader of his party, admitted in a speech made in this Hall during the early part of this session that the present resumption act was a failure, and that its provisions were not sufficiently comprehensive and broad to attain the objects and aims desired. With such admissions coming from one of the chosen disciples of immediate resumption, and the Speaker, too, of this House at the time of the passage of this act, is it not strange that this law still finds friends and apologists upon this floor?

The great democratic party of this nation in convention assembled on the 27th day of last month denounced in their platform the resumption act of 1875 as a direct and positive hinderance of a return to specie payments and demanded its repeal. And, sir, I am one of those who are ready and willing to obey the commands of that august body and will cheerfully vote and work for its repeal. While, sir, I am in favor of a return to specie payments as soon as the same can be done without material injury to the business interests and prosperity of the whole country, I am opposed to hastening the time by ruthlessly marching over the ruined fortunes, crushed hopes, wrecked homes, and impoverished labor of a prostrated and overtaxed people.

Mr. Speaker, the resumption of specie payments in this country requires more than a congressional enactment declaratory of that end. It will require the practice of the most rigid economy and reform in all the departments of the Government; a revival of the industries of the people, and a restoration of their business prosperity; the adoption of such legislation as will permit the importer to pay a part, if not all, of his import duties in Government currency, and thus appreciate the paper money in the hands of the people to a specie standard. Let these things be done, and specie resumption, in my judgment, will follow in a few years as naturally as cause follows effect, and it will find the people prosperous and happy, and rejoicing in the glorious event.

Laudation of money and money-holders presents itself in every conceivable form and upon almost every subject that comes directly or indirectly before this House. The gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS,] in the course of a speech made a few days since on the floor of this House, delivered himself of the following extraordinary statements:

> Look at the railroads which are carrying travelers, the products of industry, and the elements of trade to and from every part of the country, from the ocean coasts east and west to the valley of the Mississippi. How much have the people of the West paid for those railroads? As a matter of general fact, not one dollar. What the Government has not done capitalists have done, and by that aid they have got now in their hands those means of communication which will give them now or hereafter, if wise and just, the absolute control of the Government without the cost of a dollar to the people of the particular localities where the roads are established.

Although I have not made western railroad development a study, I state without fear of successful contradiction that there is no foundation either for his assumptions or his conclusions. The first great railroad enterprise in the State of Illinois was the Illinois Central, for the construction of which the people of that State donated to these benefactors, these money-holders to whom he refers with so much pride, six sections per mile of the finest land in the world, the receipts for the sale of which have, I doubt not, more than re-imbursed those who constructed it for its whole original cost. It may be said by gentlemen that Illinois received the donation from the Government. That, however, does not affect the recompense of those whom he represents as the bone and sinew and benefactors of the American family. He states that not one dollar was ever appropriated by the western people. The first condition imposed by these lords of the money-bags in the East was that the people, by their counties, cities, and towns, and their private purse, should donate enough to build the substructure of nearly every road in Illinois upon which the rail was laid. Frequently stock was issued in lieu of it, but these gentle ministers to the people's welfare always made such conditions before they would lay the rail or run the road that the power would rest with them to administer its affairs, and never failed, by their manipulations through bonds, stock, and otherwise, to "gobble" all the local subscriptions by counties, cities, and towns, and leave the real authors of the enterprise without one dollar to re-imburse them either for their genius or their labor.

In leaving this subject I assert that the railroad construction in the West by eastern money and eastern manipulation has been an exhibition of the boldest robbery known to modern civilization.

Mr. Speaker, I would not deem it necessary to refer to this matter, but the arrogance of the money-holders and their representatives would lead one uninitiated to believe that every blessing emanated from and had its vitality in the ring of a dollar. In past times and under past theories it has been believed that the laborer and producer were the real benefactors; that governments were instituted among men to promote the welfare and advancement of the honest and industrious of their race; that the blood, bone, muscle, and brain that go to make up the human family were the proper subjects for the thought, labor, and action of the statesman and philanthropist. But in these times the glitter of the golden calf seems to absorb all the faculties and all the affections of a certain class of leaders.

As a democrat, following as nearly as I can its inspirations and the teaching of its great defenders, I hold it to be my highest duty to subordinate capital and elevate labor. Let us see what one of the States of the Northwest, my own State of Illinois, has to boast of. About a half century since she was admitted into the family of States with but irregular settlements and almost a wilderness. She commenced her race with her older and more boastful sisters of the Northeast; her inherent resources encouraged emigration of the enterprising, energetic, and more daring population from the older States, who have built her by almost miraculous mental force and general energy from a pigmy to a giant. While the Northeast were accumulating bonds exempted from taxation, were active in reaping a harvest of gold, the State of Illinois has gathered to herself the power to maintain and protect near three millions of human beings, all of whom are engaged in the useful pursuits, engaged in adding to the general wealth of the country, and are with the other producing portions of the country the corner-stone upon which our wealth, prosperity, and greatness depend. Illinois now stands the fourth State in the Union in population and wealth, and pays over four times as much to defray the expenses of the General Government as all the New England States together; pays over four times as much revenue to maintain public credit—the special devotion to which seems to be in the ownership of certain localities—as all the New England States; owns but few bonds exempted from taxation, but pays over four times the amount of interest on them that all the New England States pay. In short, I suppose bears the relation to them that the young and vigorous bear to the old and decrepit, takes care of them in their old age. These New England States have twelve United States Senators and but twenty-eight Representatives. Illinois has two Senators and nineteen Representatives. Thus showing that one Illinoisan pays over seven times as much to support the Government on the proportions of population as one New Englander, and makes him equal in usefulness in this branch of Government to seven and a small fraction of New Englanders. This is not said in the spirit of unkindness nor to create any unkindness between the sections, but to remind my friend that the old sometimes grow garrulous and exacting.

For the information of the gentleman from Massachusetts I hereto attach a copy of the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for the year 1875, which demonstrates the truths of all the foregoing statements:

Statement showing net amounts of receipts from all sources of internal revenue during the year 1875 in the several States and Territories.

Alabama	$111,816 41
Arizona	10,263 06
Arkansas	71,823 39
California	2,983,595 19
Colorado	70,531 82
Connecticut	622,225 53
Dakota	10,040 18
Delaware	360,331 03
District of Columbia	111,027 97
Florida	184,547 31
Georgia	367,154 12
Idaho	13,136 00
Illinois	17,027,668 55
Indiana	4,650,883 13
Iowa	1,040,064 15
Kansas	133,535 94
Kentucky	9,022,636 66
Louisiana	583,151 85
Maine	107,261 [illegible]
Maryland	2,755,845 40
Massachusetts	2,670,491 15
Michigan	1,930,506 05
Minnesota	228,362 45
Mississippi	96,085 38
Missouri	4,591,856 77
Montana	23,066 10
Nebraska	292,472 30
Nevada	53,147 30
New Hampshire	298,812 60
New Jersey	2,362,478 29
New Mexico	21,965 52
New York	15,209,888 34
North Carolina	1,622,994 37
Ohio	14,658,235 30
Oregon	47,939 64
Pennsylvania	6,149,954 40
Rhode Island	231,767 50
South Carolina	120,818 00
Tennessee	858,910 50
Texas	257,448 37
Utah	31,545 51
Vermont	58,251 85
Virginia	7,659,639 97
Washington	21,146 60
West Virginia	508,684 38
Wisconsin	2,720,868 14
Wyoming	11,942 11

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, allow me to say that one of the most dangerous features of the times is this constant laudation of money and constant forgetfulness of the people. Our legislation is colored by it and public interests suffer. The man who has the boldness to talk of the people and devote himself to their interests is met by the scoff of the bondholder and the sneer of his followers. While it is right that public credit should be protected, that all our money obligations should be paid, let me submit that it is not wrong to defend the interests of the people and protect them from the grasp of the corruptionists and the avarice of the Shylocks who infest society. Let us not forget that labor is the creator of wealth, and that capital should be its servant, not its master.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, when the Cincinnati convention threw aside those great sectional agitators, Senator MORTON and the late Speaker of this House, it was hoped and believed that the pending political contest was to be fought upon a higher plane than sectional hate and bitterness; that reason was to supersede passion, that the judgment of the American people was to be addressed, that a grand old-fashioned political contest was to be fought with well-defined ideas and principles as the watchwords to the conflict; that peace and good-will between the sections at least would prevail throughout the country, and that, let the contest end as it might, the sting of sectional hate would be extracted and this great family live together in peace, fraternity, and national harmony. But, alas! the debate on this floor within the last few days and the course of others at the other end of the Capitol show that this hope is a delusion; that we are to have, if agitators can accomplish it, all the passions, all the sectional jealousies, hates, and bitterness of the last eleven years reopened and kept alive until after the presidential election. If strangers unacquainted with our country had been spectators of the scenes on this floor for the last few days they would have thought society in the South was disorganized, that life and liberty were disregarded, that one class had no rights which the other respected, and that we were in a condition that would rival pandemonium.

Mr. Speaker, those who know me know how distasteful to me these sectional controversies are, how I deplore them and how I condemn them; yet I cannot let this session expire without giving my views briefly on this subject with a view of correcting the errors of our assailants and with the hope that what I say may perchance reach the eye of some constituent of those gentlemen who indulge in this sectional vituperation.

Though circumstances give us birth and homes far, far apart, yet the East, the West, the North, and the South constitute but one grand family—our country. My idea of the duty of a member of Congress is that we should come together as friends, as brothers, and talk over the interest of this great family; to commune and compare opinions, not as partisans, but as men who love country far above party. I am of those who believe the great body of the people of both sections and both political parties are honest and want to serve their country. They may differ as to the best mode of doing it, like Christians seeking a common destiny by different modes of thought and action, yet all have the same grand object. And it is wicked, Mr. Speaker, wicked beyond measure, in those sent here as the guardians of the public interest, to seek by misrepresentation to misinform their people and excite their bad passions against over one-third of this country. God grant the time will come when the people of the North will see the motives of you gentlemen who seek thus to injure them as well as our people by this wholesale misrepresentation of the true condition of things in our country.

It is to your interest to build up the South and all parts of the country so as to lessen the taxes which you must pay. While those States are kept poor by slanders and misrepresentations, they are of course less able to pay taxes and bear their just proportions of the burdens of Government. Can any man be well and able to perform all the duties of a citizen with an arm or leg off, and that not healed, but a constant running sore? What would you think of the surgeon when he found the wound about healing to tear it open afresh and thus keep the patient in a state of constant suffering? Neither can a government be well and prosperous when any one of the states composing it is disturbed and suffering. Yet you find these political doctors constantly tearing open the wounds afresh in order to give themselves some political capital and a new lease of power. The democratic party and the mass of the republican party want to see peace, happiness, and prosperity restored to all parts of the country, while some of the leaders of the republican party are in favor of constant turmoil and strife in order that the public mind may be diverted from their political records and they kept in the places they have so much abused. I quote from the speech of Senator MORTON, delivered some time since, which is but a fair sample of those delivered within the last few days on this floor. In speaking of the condition of things in the South he says:

> Just now there are no inducements to cut throats, burn, whip, and drive out. There are no important elections on hand in those States. They are standing on their good behavior and are anxious to impress the people of the North with their peaceable and virtuous intentions. But the same men are there yet, animated with the same spirit and purpose, and ready to resort to the same means whenever it becomes necessary to achieve success.

What does this mean? It undertakes to say that a portion of the people of the South are cut-throats and ready and intend to do murder, burn houses, and drive their opponents out of the country whenever an election comes off. Is there a gentleman within the sound of my voice who believes this? The people have only to consult reason a moment to see the utter fallacy of this stale charge. Men who commit murder and arson, either for the love of it or for profit, are no respectors of persons. If they have enemies they may first devour them, but when that task is completed they will turn upon any one they can find. Therefore no community or State can tolerate such men. Suppose a portion of the republican party of any northern State should organize to cut the throats and burn the property of democrats, and then drive them out of the State, is there a single republican within their reach who would feel safe? No; they would rise up and at once arrest and punish all such lawless offenders, for independent of the revolting crime they would argue the murderers must be put down, for who knows when they may turn on us. Then are not the people of the South influenced by the same common feelings of humanity and self-protection that govern you? If they are, can they afford to harbor and tolerate murderers and house-burners in their midst? Whose life, whose property, whose wife and children would be safe? Who could rest on his pillow at night in the midst of such people? The people of the South, no more than you, could live under such a state of things. Moreover, the Senator seeks to keep alive the passions engendered by the war by his reference to "loyalty and treason," freedom and slavery, civilization and barbarism.

True, Mr. Speaker, we had a great war. I am not here to discuss its merits, to criminate or to defend. It has passed into history. Let it pronounce the judgment, and by that we are willing to abide. Suffice it to say that the war was the result of the weakness of poor humanity; and until it shall be the pleasure of God to make man better, it will ever be thus. Look around us, and what government has ever been established upon a firm basis without internecine wars? Greece had her Messinian wars, her Peloponnesian wars, her sacred and social wars; Rome her Marius and Sylla, Pompey and Cæsar, Augustus and Antony. France, within the recollection of men now living, has had as many revolutions as there are fingers on your hand; Spain worse still. Our neighbors, the poor Mexicans, have been at war among themselves from their earliest history, and have no stable government yet; while England had her war of the Roses, Charles, and Cromwell, and others; and so with all Europe. Then are we, the descendants of these very people, to claim an exemption from the infirmities and frailties of our ancestors? This is the centennial year of our Declaration that we would fight our own people and our own government and be free from our mother country, whose language we spoke and under whose laws we lived, and all the world are called on to join us in that celebration. Wars do come and will come, as I said before, while man continues in his present wicked state, and they are more the result of the inexorable logic of events than of reason, law, or justice. Then it is not strange that we should have had a war among ourselves, with or without cause. All history shows they do occur, and in our case history was but repeating itself. Therefore we have but to think in order to forgive and forget. "To err is human; to forgive, divine."

I am not here on behalf of my State or my section on bended knee with uplifted hands to cry "Peccavi, peccavi." A brave and magnanimous victor will not demand it; a proud and chivalrous people would not do it if demanded. But I am here to brand as false and without the shadow of foundation the charge against our people of disloyalty to the Government of the United States, and the further charges of murder, arson, and banishment for opinion's sake. Sir, I say it, because the facts justify it, that for good order, quiet, and dignified acquiescence in the results of the war the world's history presents no parallel to the conduct of the South. When her great commander ordered the sword to the scabbard, each of his brave men who had followed him through the four years of the trials and vicissitudes of war with heavy heart but manly tread wended his way to his home and at once resumed the ordinary avocations of a good citizen. No gun was fired, no straggling Union soldier was molested, but the sick who had been left behind were nursed by our people and we gave freely to them of the scanty substance left. For months after that memorable event we had no government, not even a conservator of the peace, yet quiet and good order prevailed and the rights of persons and of property were as much respected as they are here to-day. Then came the army of occupation and in its wake that disturber of the public peace, the carpet-bagger.

Senator MORTON in his speech seeks to create the impression—in fact he says so—that northern men are not treated with respect in the South and that all are called carpet-baggers. This assertion is on a par with the others and is equally unjust. Here again you have but to think a moment to see the fallacy of this. You must give the people of the South credit at least for knowing their own interest. Property is always jealous and watchful. Therefore you will see that our people would from necessity invite immigration. In fact, most of our States have established boards of immigration and invite people from all parts of the country. We have more lands than we can cultivate. Our hills and mountains are inexhaustible beds of iron, copper, lead, coal, &c., which sleep undisturbed for the want of labor and capital. Those who are willing to aid us in developing these resources we invite to our States, and when they come they are received with warm hearts and open arms and take the social position to which their intelligence and character entitle them, irrespective of party politics, without regard to their position during the war. All who have labor or capital to invest we have invited, and to all such here to-day, in the name of our State, I extend a cordial and hearty invitation with the positive assurance that they will be received with that warm-hearted old Virginia hospitality for which I flatter myself she is so distinguished.

Gentlemen of this character who come among us are elected or appointed to office by the conservatives according to their merit, just as if they had been born and reared in our midst. To illustrate, in my own county a gentleman fresh from Pennsylvania was selected as superintendent of public schools. The system was new to our people. This gentleman had come among us to live as a good citizen and was appointed because of his supposed familiarity with the system. So in the adjoining county the city of Staunton selected for the same position a gentleman from Massachusetts—yes, Massachusetts! Thus it is all over the State and the South.

I shall be pardoned for further reference to this subject. In 1869 the conservatives in the district in which I live elected to Congress a gentleman who had just come among them from Pennsylvania, who came as a good citizen, bought property, and went to work. During the war he was an ardent war republican. Notwithstanding, he was kindly received and honored by our people. The same party withdrew their own candidates for the offices of governor, &c., in 1869 and selected a gentleman who had been a war man on your side and elected him and the whole ticket to those high offices. The retired governor has again been honored by election from the metropolitan district of Virginia to the seat which he now occupies on this floor. This is the manner in which Virginians treat northern people who come among us as good citizens.

But the carpet-bagger—who is he and what shall I say of him? He is a man not respected at home—could not have been elected to the humblest township office in his State—without character and without friends. When your Army went down South after the war he stealthily followed on and fell in with our colored people, just then made free. He imposed on them; appealed to their passions; made them believe he was their friend and had been sent as their protector. He organized them against the white people; made them believe their old masters wanted to re-enslave them, and thus he soon drew a line broad and deep between the white and colored races. The result was he was elected to office where he could oppress the whites and fill his pockets with the money of the people he was thus outraging. A distinguished Virginian once said his political party knew each other by the instincts of gentlemen. These carpet-baggers knew each other by the reverse. They formed rings and combined together to steal, rob, and cheat the people. By the means I have stated, they procured themselves to be elected to the Legislatures of the several States and to the offices of governor, and in fact filled every office of some of the States, from constable to governor. Thus in power, what was next to be done? They issued the bonds of the States in due form of law and put them on the market. They were sold without regard to price and the money put into the pockets of the ring. With their pockets thus filled many of them have left the country or fled, fearing that a prosecution sooner or later might follow.

Another great cause of grievance was practiced by this set on our people. Your internal-revenue laws were passed during the war and our people by possibility could have no definite knowledge about them. These creatures could be seen sneaking and mousing about every house where ardent spirits or tobacco was kept. The citizens were arrested by hundreds, dragged from their weeping families at night and carried off many miles from home and thrust in prison. Others, their confederates, were then called in. The fears of the unfortunate prisoners were wrought on, and at the proper time he was informed he could be released by paying such or such a sum and the costs. This sum was generally all the money he had or could procure through the intervention of friends. Thus robbed, he felt himself fortunate in getting off so well.

Mr. Speaker, these men were sent there without apology, for there were intelligent native republicans enough in every State of the South who could have discharged the duties of these offices, who would have respected the rights and have appreciated the feelings of our people, and thus have preserved good order and good feeling between the races.

But, Mr. Speaker there have been some disturbances in the South, and I am free to confess it. Let us see where they were and who were the prime movers and cause of those troubles. They were in Louisiana, Mississippi, and Arkansas. What produced the disturbance in Louisiana? It was a quarrel between two carpet-bag factions, Warmoth and Kellogg, both from the State of Illinois. They quarreled about the offices and the spoils of office until they got the whole State in turmoil. It culminated when McEnery, democrat, was elected governor by about twelve thousand majority over Kellogg, with a democratic Legislature. This Illinoisan could not afford to see the scepter depart from his hands, and by the aid of an illegal board and sustained by the military he was installed governor over the heads of an unwilling people. The Legislature met; it was democratic. A file of United States soldiers marched into the hall and ousted five democrats and gave the majority to the other side. The whole country became alarmed, and a committee was raised by Congress to look into and report on Louisiana affairs. That committee appointed a subcommittee of three, of which Hon. CHARLES FOSTER, of Ohio, a republican, was chairman. It was composed of two republicans and one democrat. They went to New Orleans, visited the hall, took testimony, and unanimously reported that the democrats were legally elected and that they were turned out by force. And to-day Kellogg illegally holds the office of governor of Louisiana; and the people, in the interest of peace and society, quietly submit to this iniquitous outrage. Would the people of the North submit so quietly under like circumstances? Yet the people of Louisiana submit in silent grief, and in addition are called cut-throats, murderers, &c., by the men who deprive them of their most sacred rights.

From the days of Cromwell to the present, history presents no case so clear in which the civil was usurped by the military arm of government. Great as are the wrongs heaped upon these people, greater still is the blow at our institutions. This is a Government republican in form, one in which the will of the people through constitutional channels is supreme. In the case of Louisiana the will of the people was disregarded, the rightful officers of State driven out of office at the point of the bayonet, and men with no more right to their seats than you had, Mr. Speaker, placed at the head of affairs. This is not democratic dictum, but is the substance of the report by Hon. CHARLES FOSTER, to which I have referred and to which I beg to refer every doubting friend. Those who know Mr. FOSTER's integrity, as I know it from service with him on an important committee, will not hesitate to believe every word he says. Too firm to be flattered, too honest to be bought, the report of CHARLES FOSTER will go down to history as a truthful statement of the terrible events to which it refers.

Here permit me to digress to express the regret with which I listened to the inflammatory words of that gentleman on the Hamburgh riot. Without knowing the facts, without waiting for the verdict of the sworn jury then investigating that deplorable affair, he burst into an inflamed and excited tirade against the white people of the South, as if he feared that some others, much less lights than he, would get ahead of him in this new field for excitement. Let me commend to him the fate of a distinguished leader of his party, a former member of this House, who last year, by leaning to the cause of civil liberty, thought he had fallen into disrepute with his own party, and early in the winter on the floor of the House made one of the most exciting and sectional speeches this country has ever witnessed, as was thought, for the purpose of re-instating himself with his party. My friend can make the application.

I have not the time or the House the patience to go through with the detailed account of affairs in Arkansas. Again let me refer you to the report of a republican committee of which Hon. Luke P. Poland, republican, was chairman. It is almost a duplicate in facts of the state of affairs in Louisiana. It proves that the carpet-bagger held undisputed control of that State and that the disturbances there, like those in Louisiana, had their origin among these gentry over the loaves and fishes of the State, while the honest people whose money was squandered before their eyes sat in silence and looked upon their ruin.

In Mississippi every office-holder, from the lowest to the highest, until last year was republican and has been since the war. The colored people have a large majority. They, with the carpet-baggers and a few white natives, have ruled that State with a rod of iron. One party pays the taxes, the other squanders them. That they did not preserve order is prima facie evidence they did not desire order. They had all the machinery of government, and could easily have done it if they had wished. But I doubt not they desire and instigate a row occasionally to give their blood-and-thunder friends in the North a little more electioneering capital, as was shown by the late Governor Ames when he said the killing of some twenty-five negroes would have a good effect on the northern elections. Pardon me if I dwell too long on this subject. You do not know, you never can know, the sufferings of our people at the hands of this class of men. Not content with robbing us of our hard earnings, they have sought to take from us our good name by slanders as black and foul as ever came from mortal man. I have heard them stand on the floor of Congress and say that a northern man was not safe in the South. This said in the face of the fact that he himself had traversed unmolested every nook and corner of his district and would again go right back among those same people and again go all over the State which he had thus slandered and no one disturbed him. Still he will say a northern man is not safe in the South—himself a living contradiction of his charge.

The republican leaders seem to have devoted most of their time since the war to the passage of bills to oppress, harass, and excite the people of the South to revolt and resistance. The last was the civil-rights bill. The people submitted quietly and in a dignfied manner to each and every law as it was passed, even the last named. Not a ripple was created on the surface, not a cross-road or town meeting to protest against their injustice and execution. In fact, we are so peaceable and quiet down South that Senator MORTON was forcedto say that we were on our good behavior. I wish I could say the same of the Senator.

At the expense of being tedious, I beg for a moment to call your attention to and ask you to ponder well upon the wrong, perfidy, and robbery to which the people of the South have been subjected since the war by this same class of men and their allies. The combined debts of the States of Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Texas in 1865, as shown by the report of a republican committee of the House of Representatives, was in round numbers $55,000,000. The debts of the same States in 1872, $294,000,000, making the sum of $239,000,000 heaped on those people in seven years, with nothing to show for it as an equivalent.

Take Florida as an illustration. In 1865 her debt was only $221,000. In 1872, under radical rule, $15,763,447. The assessed value of the whole property of the State in the year 1870 was in round numbers $32,000,000. Now institute a comparison between the debt and the assessed value of the property of the whole State, and you will find the debt is about one-half the value of the State, or fifty cents on every dollar. So every man's property in Florida is mortgaged for half its value. These figures are taken from the report of the republican committee just spoken of and the census of 1870 taken by republicans under oath. This statement seems so unaccountable it may be doubted; if so, I beg to refer to the above republican records for proof.

I speak to reason with the people from the North, and I want them to examine these questions and weigh them well. Bring it home to yourselves. For instance, there are four counties in Ohio, from which State you hail, Mr. Speaker, whose assessed value is each greater than the whole State of Florida, to wit: Cuyahoga, $53,000,000; Franklin, $35,000,000; Hamilton, $165,000,000; Montgomery, $36,000,000.

Suppose one of these counties, owed a debt of $15,700,000, and that your Legislature would, if it had the power, increase your debt until it reached half the value of all property in your State, and thus mortgage it to that extent, would your people quietly submit? Would they not raise their voice, if not their arm, against the men who had thus wronged, outraged, and robbed them, their wives, their widows, and little children? I will answer for you; with the scorpion's lash you would drive the offenders from your State. Yet we submit, and the authors of our wrongs remain in our midst to enjoy the fruits of their ill-gotten gain. Still Senator MORTON and the gentlemen on this floor would have you believe we are not reconstructed, do not accept the situation!

Georgia, at the close of the war, owed not a dollar of public debt. The radicals soon got it up to $50,000,000. They fell out among themselves, and their governor, Bullock, knowing when thieves fall out there is danger ahead, fled the State, carrying with him everything except the chair he had disgraced.

Just here let me remind you that you may have overlooked the fact that when this class of men got into Congress they voted on your interests as well as ours. They stood in the front rank of the Credit Mobilier. They voted to cheat the people out of the $50,000,000 in the Pacific Railroad scheme. They voted every subsidy. They voted for every monopoly. They voted on any and all occasions in the interest of rings and monopolies, and against the best interest of the people, and the honest yeomanry of the whole country are to-day suffering the consequences of their votes.

In my own State there has not been a ripple to disturb the good order of society. Malice, slander, sectional bitterness, party interest, can find no pretext for exciting the people of the North against us. The Federal judiciary and most of the important Federal offices have been in the hands of native republicans, while the State offices have generally been held by conservatives. There is no conflict between these elements. The former do nothing to excite the feeling of race against race, while the latter accord to all their rights under the Federal and State constitutions and laws. Hence peace, good will, and fraternal feeling prevail throughout our State.

Mr. Speaker, a word in regard to the riot at Hamburgh, South Carolina. I await the investigation now going on by a jury of inquest. It is to be hoped the truth will be arrived at. When it is, let the guilty be punished, whether white or colored, whether democrat or republican. If malicious murder has been committed, then hang, hang the guilty. If offenses less than murder, then punish according to the grade of the offense, without stint and without regard to party or race. The people of Virginia, the people of the whole South, who show now, as ever, a firm disposition to support the Constitution and the enforcement of the laws, will say amen and amen. Thus all the requirements of justice and all the demands for equal rights having been acceded to and the animus of the good people of the South exhibited in a way to satisfy the most exacting, may we not trust that we shall be met in the same spirit of justice and equal rights, and that this shall be the commencement of a new era of fraternal love which shall cement this Union into a union of hearts and a union of hands; a union, now and forever, one and indivisible? [Applause.]

Mr. RANDALL. I yield now to the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. W. B. WILLIAMS;] and after he gets through I give notice I shall demand the previous question.

Mr. W. B. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania for his courtesy in yielding to me the floor. I wish to say, as an humble member of the republican party, I most sincerely join in the prayer of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARRIS] who has just taken his seat, that there should be throughout this entire land, North and South, East and West, quiet and peace. It has been peace that the republican party for years has been endeavoring to bring about, and if the democratic party as represented by the gentleman will give us peace in the South, that peace which will permit every man throughout this broad land to have the same rights and same protection in the South as in the North, so that the carpet-baggers from the North may go to the South—for the South needs them—and live there in peace and quiet and harmony, in full accord with the white men of the South, and have the privilege of going to the ballot-box and voting freely their own will, without dictation from any person or any power, then we will indeed have peace. We extend that privilege to you, gentlemen of the South. We permit your carpt-ebaggers to come up North. We permit them to come here and represent us upon this floor. Kentucky is represented upon this floor in Representatives from northern constituencies. They are recognized as honorable citizens with us. Many Southern States are represented in the same way.

There should be no such idea as carpet-baggers in the sense used by the gentleman among American citizens in regard to those who emigrate from one State to another. All should be in the enjoyment of the same rights of American citizens. Representing the views of my constituents, I say that on this question we only ask for ourselves the same rights in the South which we give to those coming from the South in the North, and ask and demand that all American citizens, white or black, should be granted equal rights before the law and under the Constitution in every State in this Union. Grant that and you have peace; refuse it, and you will have, as you have had, internal strife and commotion. It is for you gentlemen of the South to heal these dissensions, for you to make peace, and the way is simple. Keep the peace; give every citizen among you, without regard to color or place of nativity, the same political rights that you ask for yourselves, and protect him in those rights, and peace will settle within your borders.

But I did not rise to dwell on any question of that kind, but rather to reply to an argument made the other day on the floor of the House by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] on the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill. The fallacies ennunciated by that gentleman upon this floor, or which appear in the RECORD, should not be permitted to go unanswered. I believe they are not, and cannot be, sustained by any argument or by any authority.

The gentleman is reported as follows, in reply to the following inquiry from his colleague:

Mr. HURLBUT. Does the gentleman recognize the fact that an appropriation bill is not a revenue bill?

Mr. SPRINGER. I recognize the fact that an appropriation bill is that very kind of measure which was intended to be embraced by the terms of the Constitution, and especially in the clause which provides that all bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives. At least such is the interpretation given to the clause by the framers of the Constitution, by the most authoritative writers on that instrument, and by the most enlightened statesmen of our country.

Here is the broad proposition distinctly stated, "that an appropriation is that very kind of measure which was intended to be embraced by the terms of the Constitution" "in the clause which provides that all bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives, and that"—

Such is the interpretation given to the clause by the framers of the Constitution, by the most authoritative writers on that instrument, and by the most enlightened statesmen of our country.

The only true mode of determining what interpretation was given to the clause finally adopted by the Constitution by its framers is—

First. The language used to express it;

Second. If the language is of doubtful import or liable to more than one construction, to endeavor to ascertain the construction intended, by the manner in which it was introduced and the reasoning, if we can arrive at it, that caused it to be adopted; and

Third. If the language is of doubtful import, or liable to more than one construction, and we can find no guide in the proceedings to aid us in arriving at the true intent and meaning of the language used, then we should be compelled to fall back upon the construction which has been given to it in legislation, and thus build up a legislative construction of the Constitution.

This mode, however, is never adopted when either of the others will furnish a true criterion, and if the gentleman could unblushingly charge on this floor, and believe what he said—

That during the past ten or fifteen years, since the party of which my colleague—

Referring to Mr. BURCHARD—

is a member has been in power, it has been the practice to violate the Constitution on nearly every occasion when it was in their power to do so, and that we are not responsible for the repeated violation of that instrument by the gentleman's party—he could place but little confidence in that kind of construction. And still, strange as it must appear even to him, in order to obtain any foundation for his main argument he has been obliged to rest it upon quotations from some of the leaders of that party he so bitterly denounces as a Constitution violator.

If there is such a thing as a legislative construction, that if permitted to stand will take the place of the Constitution and thus usurp it, and in the end overthrow it, it becomes extremely important that we should not let in this case the gentleman's construction grow to such monstrous proportions as to overthrow the plain words of the Constitution and thus create another legislative usurpation.

As one of the active leaders of the democratic party in this House his position is entitled to great weight and may be assumed hereafter to have settled conclusively the constitutional construction of the power of this House to originate appropriation bills.

I concede, as claimed by the gentleman, that the restriction of the power to originate revenue bills was one of the compromises of the Constitution, a concession on the part of the smaller States to the larger, in consideration of the equality of representation in the Senate. As a compromise it should be held sacred. It is as much a violation of it to extend it by construction as it is to diminish it. The language is plain, distinct, and intelligible. There is no difficulty in determining what a bill "for raising revenue" means. The language is not "money bills;" it does not say raising and expending revenue; it is raising simply. But the gentleman's argument assumes it to mean both. In other words, that the words "raising revenue" means raising revenue into the Treasury and "raising it out of the Treasury—an Irish hoist.

But the framers of the Constitution did not use words in that way. They had words that they used to designate the kind of bills that would take the revenue out of the Treasury, and they called such bills then, as we do to-day, bills for "appropriating" money, or appropriation bills. Had the convention adopted instead of rejecting certain propositions in lieu of the one under consideration, the gentleman would have no difficulty in settling the first proposition in his favor, namely, the true intent and meaning of the words used; but as they did not, it becomes necessary for him to show that the words used are of a doubtful import or susceptible of more than one construction.

And this brings me to the consideration of the action of the convention that resulted in the adoption of the clause under consideration.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I should like to have the gentleman from Michigan state precisely what was the action of the constitutional convention in reference to the powers of the two Houses.

Mr. W. B WILLIAMS. The constitutional convention had presented to it the broad proposition that the House of Representatives should alone originate all revenue and appropriation bills, and that was voted down. In my remarks I propose to give a full history of the entire transaction. I will now state that every time the proposition was submitted to the constitutional convention granting power to the House of Representatives to originate appropriation bills as well as revenue bills it was uniformly voted down, except in one instance it received five votes and there being but four against it, it was deemed adopted. The only proposition which was voted in favor of, with that exception, is as it now stands in the Constitution, and that is granting the House of Representatives sole power to originate bills for raising revenue. I will also cite the authority of Chief Justice Story, to whom the gentleman has referred, upon the construction of the clause, in which he takes ground directly contrary to that held by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BURCHARD. I fully concur with the gentleman from Michigan in reference to the action of the convention.

Mr. W. B. WILLIAMS. I propose, in order that there may be no misunderstanding of the action of the convention upon this clause, to take it up in its chronological order and follow it through the proceedings of the convention until it was finally adopted in the form now under consideration, using the Madison Papers as my guide, an authority which I presume will not be questioned.

The first proposition for a form of federal government was submitted on the 29th day of May, 1787, by Mr. Randolph. It consisted of fifteen resolutions, declaratory of the principles upon which the government should be established. The sixth resolution provided "that each branch ought to possess the right of originating acts." Thus providing that both branches of the National Legislature should stand on a full equality.

Mr. Charles Pinckney laid before the House a draught of a federal government, but there seems to be some doubt expressed by Mr. Madison in his appendix, No. 2, as to when this plan was submitted, the original draught having been lost, although in the text it is placed on the same day with Mr. Randolph's. Mr. Pinckney's plan was appropriately divided into articles, and article 3 contained the following clause:

All money bills of every kind shall originate in the House, and shall not be altered in the Senate.

No action seems to have been taken upon this plan further than to refer it to the committee of the whole with Mr. Randolph's.

On the 31st day of May the sixth resolution in Mr. Randolph's plan was acted upon by the committee of the whole. "On the question whether each branch should originate laws, there was a unanimous affirmative without debate."—Madison Papers, volume 2, page 759.

On the 13th of June "Mr. Gerry moved to restrain the senatorial branch from originating money bills." In the discussion upon this question, Mr. Gerry claimed "that the other branch was more immediately the representatives of the people, and it was a maxim that the people ought to hold the purse-strings."

Mr. Butler "saw no reason for such discrimination. We were always following the British constitution when the reason for it did not apply. There was no analogy between the House of Lords and the body proposed to be established." That it would be degrading to the Senate; that it would lead the other branch "into the practice of tacking other clauses to money bills."

Mr. Madison claimed that there was no reason for such a restriction.

Mr. Pinckney thought it premature, and said that "this distinction prevails in South Carolina and has been a source of pernicious dispute between the two branches."

The vote by States was 3 yeas and 7 nayes. (Page 858.)

So the proposition was rejected.

The committee then arose and reported Mr. Randolph's plan, as amended, to the convention. The fifth resolution then read as follows:

Resolved, That each branch ought to possess the right of originating acts.

On the 15th of June Mr. Patterson submitted a plan of government which was in substance an enlargement of the powers vested in Congress by the Confederation. It was committed to the committee of the whole, and Mr. Randolph's plan was recommitted, and after a full discussion, on the 19th of June Mr. Randolph's plan was again adopted, voting by States—ayes 7, noes 3. Maryland divided. (Page 904.)

On the 26th of June the fifth resolution was agreed to nem. con.

The difficulty in regard to an equitable adjustment of the representation of the larger and smaller States in the Senate as well as to the ratio of representation in the lower House and the question of property representation having become formidable and threatening to overthrow the plans of government proposed, General Pinckney, on the 2d of July, moved that the whole matter mentioned in the controversy should be committed to a committee consisting of a member from each State to devise and report some compromise. This proposition was adopted, and a committee of eleven, one from each State, was elected by ballot. The committee was comprised of the following persons: Mr. Gerry, Mr. Ellsworth, Mr. Yates, Mr Patterson, Dr. Franklin, Mr. Bedford, Mr. Martin, Mr. Mason, Mr. Davy, Mr. Rutledge, and Mr. Baldwin.

On the 5th of July Mr. Gerry reported from the committee two propositions, and in the first was the following:

That all bills for raising or appropriating money and for fixing the salaries of the officers of Government of the United States shall originate in the first branch of the Legislature, and shall not be altered or amended by the second branch, and that no money shall be drawn from the public Treasury but in pursuance of appropriations to be originated in the first branch. (Page 1024.)

Had this proposition been adopted, all that is claimed by the gentleman and by the majority of this House in regard to its power would be true. It covers the entire claim of the House. But, although it received 5 votes as against 4 votes and was temporarily adopted by the convention, it was, as will be seen, on deliberation rejected. Mr. Madison opposed it, claiming it would be of little consequence to the larger States, and said:

If the Senate should yield to the obstinancy of the first branch, the use of that body as a check would be lost. If the first branch should yield to that of the Senate, the privilege would be nugatory. Experience had also shown, both in Great Britain and the States having a similar regulation, that it was a source of frequent and obstinate altercations.

Mr. Butler thought it unjust.

Gouverneur Morris said:

It will be a dangerous source of disputes between the two Houses. We should either take the British constitution altogether or make one for ourselves. The Executive, there, has dissolved two Houses as the only cure for such disputes. Will our Executive be able to apply such a remedy? Every law, directly or indirectly, takes money out of the pockets of the people.

Mr. Pinckney thought the privilege of originating money bills of no account to the larger States. The report, amended in other particulars, but with the resolution as to money bills, as reported by Mr. Gerry, substantially unchanged, was adopted on the 16th of July by a vote by States of 5 ayes and 4 noes. Massachusetts divided.

July 26 the plan of Mr. Randolph, as amended and enlarged by the convention, and consisting of twenty-three resolutions, was referred to the committee of detail.

The fifth resolution was:

Resolved, That each branch ought to possess the right of originating acts.

The tenth, the same as reported by the committee of eleven through Mr. Gerry on the 5th of July, quoted in full above, gave the House of Representatives full power to originate all "money bills" and restricted the Senate from altering or amending.

August 6 the committee reported a plan in detail, and section 5 of article 4 contained the tenth resolution.

August 8 "Mr. Pinckney moved to strike our section 5 of article 4, as giving no peculiar advantage to the House of Representatives and as clogging the Government." (Page 1266.)

Mr. Mason opposed the motion and said:

To strike out the section was to unhinge the compromise of which it made a part.

This language, it will be borne in mind, was not used in regard to the clause as it now stands in the Constitution, as would be inferred from the reference to it by the gentleman, but to the clause as reported in the tenth resolution, and covered all money bills, whether for raising money or appropriating it, and also fixing salaries. But it was stricken out by a vote of States of—ayes 7, noes 4, (page 1267,) and thus the second time rejected by the convention. August 9, Mr. Randolph expressed his dissatisfaction, and gave notice that he should move to reconsider; and on the 12th, on his motion, a reconsideration was carried—ayes 9, no 1. On the 13th he offered an amendment, so that the clause should read as follows:

Bills for raising money for the purpose of revenue or for appropriating the same shall originate in the House of Representatives; and shall not be so amended or altered by the Senate as to increase or diminish the sum to be raised or change the mode of levying it or the object of its appropriation.

Colonel Mason thought "the amendment removed all objections urged against the section as it stood at first."

By specifying purposes of revenue, it obviated the objection that the section extended to all bills under which money might incidentally arise. By authorizing amendments in the Senate, it got rid of the objections that the Senate could not correct errors of any sort, and that it would introduce into the House of Representatives the practice of tacking foreign matter to money bills. * * * He admitted that, notwithstanding the superiority of a republican form over every other, it had its evils; the chief ones were the danger of the majority oppressing the minority and the mischievous influence of demagogues.

The General Government of itself will cure them. As the States will not concur at the same time in these unjust and oppressive plans, the General Government will be able to check and defeat them, whether they result from the wickedness of the majority or the misguidance of demagogues.

The gentleman has shown us how much mistaken Colonel Mason was when he thought the Senate could correct errors. Here are his conclusions and recapitulations:

In conclusion, and by way of recapitulation, permit me to say further that the Constitution of the United States, if not by its strict letter, at least by its evident intent and spirit, having lodged in the House the sole right to originate all money bills, and the Senate having only the right to propose amendments, it becomes important to consider the relative positions of the two bodies on the pending appropriation bills. The House has originated and passed these bills as provided by the Constitution and in pursuance of the unbroken practice of this House from the adoption of the Federal Constitution to the present time. The Senate has proposed numerous amendments to these bills. What is the meaning of the word "propose?" Webster defines it thus:

"To offer for consideration, discussion, acceptance, or adoption; as, to propose a bill or resolve to a legislative body; to propose terms of peace; to propose a question for discussion; * * * to propose alterations or amendments in a law."

The power of the Senate, then, so far as appropriation bills are concerned, is limited to that of proposing amendments for the consideration, acceptance, or adoption by the House. If the House concur, very well; if not, the Senate must recede. It has no right to adhere to amendments; only the right to propose.

I know of no parliamentary meaning which the word has different from that which is here given from Webster.

The gentleman insists that the Senate cannot correct anything; it can only "propose," as a bashful lover to a coy maiden; and if the House, like a blushing damsel, asks to be excused, the Senate must needs excuse it. If it should go further, and insist on its proposals, it is revolutionary, says the gentleman. But Colonel Mason, under a proposition that would give the House far more power than the one under consideration, thought that the Senate could correct "errors of any sort."

This proposition submitted by Mr. Randolph, had it been adopted, would have without question confined the power to originate appropriation bills to the House as well as revenue bills; but it was not adopted, and I submit most respectfully that the fact that the convention, when it had the question before it, did reject bills "for appropriating the same," is prima facie evidence at least that it intended to do it.

The question was fully considered and discussed. The convention acted understandingly upon it, and not in hot haste and without deliberation. Mr. Wilson, in opposing it, said:

He did not mean to enlarge on a subject that had been so much canvassed, but would remark, as an insuperable objection against the proposed restriction of money bills to the House of Representatives, that it would be a source of perpetual contentions where there was no mediator to decide them. The President could not, like the executive magistrate in England, interpose by prorogation or dissolution.

This restriction had been found pregnant with altercations in every State where the Constitution had established it. The House of Representatives will insert other things in money bills, and by making them conditions of each other destroy the deliberate liberty of the Senate.

How prophetic of this House and of the dead-lock of 1876.

On the 13th of August the vote was taken; first on the question of the exclusive originating of money bills in the House of Representatives, and it was decided in the negative, four States in favor of it and seven States against it.

On the question of originating by the House of Representatives and amending by the Senate the vote was the same. On the question of the last clause of article 4, section 5, namely, "No money shall be drawn from the public Treasury but in pursuance of appropriations that shall originate in the House of Representatives," one State voted for it and ten against it.

This disposed of the question for the third time in the negative, and finally, so far as a direct vote upon the question of appropriation bills is concerned, on the 15th of August section 12 of article 6 being under consideration, and being the clause in the plan first proposed by Mr. Randolph, namely, "each House shall possess the right of originating bills," with the words added, "except in the cases before mentioned," being the cases referred to in section 5 of article 4, as reported and stricken out, Mr. Strong moved to amend the article so as to read:

Each House shall possess the right of originating all bills except bills for raising money for the purposes of revenue or for appropriating the same, and for fixing the salaries of the officers of the Government, which shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments as in other cases—which was postponed until after the powers of the Senate had been considered. And on the 31st of August all parts of the Constitution that had been postponed and such parts of reports as had not been acted upon were referred to a committee of eleven, consisting of one member from each State, appointed by ballot, being Mr. Gilman, Mr. King, Mr. Sherman, Mr. Brearley, Mr. Gouverneur Morris, Mr. Dickinson, Mr. Carroll, Mr. Madison, Mr. Williamson, Mr. Butler, and Mr. Baldwin.

It will be observed that this committee to whom the proposition of Mr. Strong to amend section 12, article 6, was committed was composed of some of the strong opponents in the convention of that clause as it had been considered in section 5 of article 4, namely, Mr. King, Mr. Sherman, Mr. Morris, Mr. Madison, and Mr. Carroll.

This committee on the 5th of September, through Mr. Brearley, reported, and instead of section 12, article 6, submitted the following:

All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives, and shall be subject to alterations and amendments by the Senate. No money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law.

Gouverneur Morris moved to postpone this clause, saying:

It had been agreed to in the committee on the ground of compromise, and he should feel himself at liberty to dissent from it if on the whole he should not be satisfied with certain other parts to be settled.

It was postponed, and on the 8th of September the words "and shall be subject to alterations and amendments by the Senate" were stricken out without division, and the words used in the constitution of Massachusetts on the same subject, namely, "but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments as in other bills," inserted, and in that form it passed, nine States voting for it and two against it.

A committee was then appointed "to revise the style of and arrange the articles which had been agreed to by the House." The committee, through Justice Johnson, reported on the 12th a digest of the plan, and we find in that report, in section 7, article 1, the clause as adopted on the 8th, and as it now stands in the Constitution.

I have thus in detail given the history of the clause under consideration in the convention in order that we may fully understand what the convention intended in adopting it, and we find that it repeatedly refused to adopt a clause requiring appropriation bills to originate in the House of Representatives, and until that feature was eliminated from the proposition it failed in the convention. We find further that in the submission of Mr. Strong's proposition to the committee that finally adjusted and compromised the questions in dispute, that the restriction in regard to originating appropriation bills was by the committee stricken out; and in order that the compromise in the committee may be distinctly seen, I place them here again in juxtaposition:

Mr. Strong's proposition.	Committee's proposition as reported.
Each House shall possess the right of originating all bills except bills for raising money for the purposes of revenue or for appropriating the same and fixing the salaries of the officers of the Government, which shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments as in other cases.	All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives, and shall be subject to alterations and amendments by the Senate. No money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by Congress. Amended in convention by striking out and inserting as before stated.

Here, then, we have the action of the convention and the action of the committee plainly showing that the convention intentionally omitted from the clause under consideration the restriction in reference to appropriation bills and in reference to salaries, and that it was one of the compromises of the committee that adjusted the matters in controversy and of the convention that these clauses should be omitted and the restriction clause be confined to bills for "raising revenue" only.

It would seem that no argument can be needed to aid in arriving at that conclusion, that nothing can be said to add force to this history of the action of the convention.

We then have the language of the Constitution, plain and simple, to guide us, and we have the action of the convention and its committees to inform us of the true intent and meaning of the clause under consideration; and it does appear to me that it does not leave room for a doubt as to intention, and that we cannot be forced to any question of subsequent legislative construction to determine it.

It was one of the compromises of the Constitution, and it can be neither extended nor diminished by legislative construction. It is as much a violation of the compact to add to it as to take from it; and this House has no constitutional right to arrogate to itself the sole power to originate appropriation bills.

Chief Justice Story has been referred to as sanctioning the construction claimed. He speaks, in his Commentaries on the Constitution, of the power of the House of Commons to originate money bills, and to that I desire to refer hereafter; but in section 880 of Story on the Constitution, in referring to bills for raising revenue, he says:

> What bills are properly "bills for raising revenue" in the sense of the Constitution has been a matter of some discussion. A learned commentator supposes that every bill which indirectly or consequentially may raise revenue is, within the sense of the Constitution, a revenue bill. He therefore thinks that the bills for establishing the Post-Office and the Mint and regulating the value of foreign coin belong to this class and ought not to have originated (as in fact they did) in the Senate. But the practical construction of the Constitution has been against his opinion; and indeed the history of the origin of the power already suggested abundantly proves that it has been confined to bills to levy taxes in the strict sense of the words, and has not been understood to extend to bills for other purposes which may incidentally create revenue.

A bill appropriating the revenue is certainly not in any "strict sense of the word" a "bill to levy taxes."

I think in practice it is well that that branch of the Government that is designated by the Constitution as the one having the sole power to originate bills for revenue should originate bills appropriating it, as it would be the only body presumed to know what the revenues of the Government would be for the fiscal year, and therefore the better qualified to make the proper distribution of it; and accordingly the practice has become settled that the House should originate the general appropriation bills, not as a matter of constitutional right in that regard, but as a matter of convenience. If it had been recognized as a constitutional right it would necessarily cover all appropriations out of the public Treasury, and all bills appropriating money outside of the general appropriation bills would also have to originate in the House of Representative. But such has not been the practice, so that in fact there has been no legislative construction extending the restriction in the Constitution beyond its obvious purport and meaning and beyond the intention of its framers.

My objection is not to the practice I think it a good-one, but it is to the assumption that the powers thus exercised has arisen from a constitutional grant. It is to a usurpation that demands as a right that which has been permitted as matter of comity and convenience, and for the purpose of presenting the subject in its true light I have thus traced the conventional history of the power claimed.

LEGISLATION ON MONEY BILLS.

But, Mr. Speaker, granting the clause in the Constitution, as a matter of argument, to reach to the extent claimed by the gentleman, have we not seen during this session of Congress, and are we not now laboring under precisely those difficulties that were so graphically pointed out by the framers of the Constitution as the result of the granting of the exclusive power to originate money bills to the House of Representatives; that is, the evil effects of tacking other bills to money bills, or legislation upon appropriation bills. And to the warnings of Mr. Madison, Mr. Wilson, Gouverneur Morris, and others before quoted, uttered in the convention, I desire to add here the language of Chief Justice Story, who, in speaking of the power of the House of Commons to originate money bills, says:

> It is obvious that this power might be capable of great abuse if other bills were tacked to such money bills; and accordingly it was found that money bills were sometimes tacked to favorite measures of the Commons, with a view to insure their passage by the Lords. This extraordinary use, or rather perversion, of the power would, if suffered to grow into a common practice, have completely destroyed the equilibrium of the British constitution and subjected both Lords and the King to the power of the Commons. Resistance was made from time to time to this unconstitutional encroachment, and at length the Lords, with a view to give permanent effect to their own rights, have made it a standing order to reject upon sight all bills that are tacked to money bills. Thus the privilege is maintained on the one side and guarded against undue abuse on the other.

Has not this House deliberately brought the history of this country to precisely that position?

Deliberately, I say, because it became necessary for them at an early part of the session, in order to consummate it, to amend the standing rules of this House and thereby get the power to load appropriation bills with general legislation.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

In this connection I wish to call the attention of the House to the action of this and the last Congress in regard to amendments to the rules and the result of such amendments.

During the last session of the Forty-third Congress, after a protracted struggle of nearly forty-eight hours—a struggle between a large majority of over two-thirds of this House and a factious minority actuated by bitter partisan purposes of less than one-third, it was found necessary, in order to make a step in advance in legislation, to amend the rules. Under a suspension of the rules, obtained by a two-thirds vote, an amendment was offered and adopted which provided in substance that when a question was pending before the House the Speaker should not entertain any motion of a dilatory character, except one motion to adjourn and one motion to fix the day to which the House should adjourn. Any bill appropriating the money, the credit or other property of the United States, was excepted from its provisions; and the previous question on the engrossing of any bill or joint resolution could not be ordered during the first day of its consideration unless three-fourths of the members present seconded the demand.

This proposition met with a formidable opposition and loud outcries, it being claimed that it was a revolutionary measure adopted by the majority of the House to override the minority, a minority that had shown by the contest to which I have just referred that they had absolute ability to stop all legislation under the rule as it existed before; and that without regard to the opposition that might exist against them or the numbers of the minority, provided there was enough to call the yeas and nays upon a question; that no step could be taken forward in legislation; but that we would be compelled to revolve in an endless circle at their will; a contest that had shown that the idea of congressional legislation by a majority in the Congress of the United States under the rules, or rather under a construction that had been given to the rules, was a fiction; and that a few resolute men could prevent it at any time they saw fit. This side of the House was told that the poisoned chalice would be returned to our own lips. The old rule was claimed to be a part of the checks and balances of our system, dating away back and not only having the sanction of the slave power, but the sanction of the anti-slave power for twelve or fifteen years.

But the amendment to the rule deprived the minority of no legislative right, except the right to filibuster interminably, if that can be said to be a right; except the right to stop legislation effectually and completely by a factious opposition without regard to numbers, if that was a right.

The majority of this House, in the early part of the present session, repealed the amendment and restored the rule as it originally existed, claiming to do it in the interest and for the protection of the minority. But they did not stop there. They then proposed to change the rule themselves. Rule No. 120 of the House, as it had existed since 1837, read as follows:

> No appropriation shall be reported in such general appropriation bills or be in order as an amendment thereto for any expenditure not previously authorized by law.

To which was added in 1838 the following:

> Unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress, and for contingencies for carrying on the several departments of the Government.

On the 18th day of January last they proposed an amendment to the rules. Mr. COX, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following amendment:

> That Rule No. 120 be so amended that all after the word "progress" be stricken out and there be added the following: "Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditure."

This amendment was adopted on the day it was introduced by a vote of 156 ayes to 102 nays; nearly a party vote. It was introduced under the plea of being an amendment to the rule in favor of "retrenchment and reform;" but it was claimed then that its effect would be to scoop all legislation into the Committee on Appropriations and to override the duties of other committees of the House; and the actual working of the amendment has proved the truth of the assertion. Under it the Committee on Appropriations have succeeded in bringing in with their bills very important amendments to our general laws.

In the post-office appropriation bill they have changed nearly all the laws regulating compensation for mail service and salaries of postmasters and route-agents.

In the Army appropriation bill they have changed the laws regulating the pay and allowances of the officers of the Army, changed the tenure of office of chaplain, reduced the Army from ten regiments of cavalry to eight, from five regiments of artillery and twenty-five of infantry to twenty of both, and repealed the law providing for two colored regiments of cavalry and two of infantry, and prohibited new enlistments until the Army shall be reduced to twenty-two thousand men. The first eight sections of the bill assuming to be a bill providing for appropriations for the Army is entirely new legislation, and provides for an entire re-organization of the Army.

The naval bill changes the laws so as to reduce the number of the force from eighty-five hundred to seventy-five hundred men.

The Indian bill changes the law that has existed for many years in reference to the Indian Department, and transfers it from the Department of the Interior to the War Department.

The bill providing appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial departments changes all laws fixing salaries and all laws regulating the number of clerks employed in the different Departments of the Government at Washington.

The sundry civil bill repealed the law providing for a Government Printer and the mode prescribed for printing debates and proceedings of Congress; repealed all the provisions of title 26 of the Revised Statutes in relation to the registration of voters and appointment of supervisors of elections and special deputy marshals, and touching the supervision of elections.

The diplomatic bill changes the laws in reference to our diplomatic and consular service and reduces the salaries.

These are some of the many amendments proposed to be made to general laws of the Government on appropriation bills under the amendment of the rule to which I have referred.

The effect of this amendment to the rule has been to place in the hands of the majority far greater power over the minority of the House than the amendment made during the last session of Congress; it has, in fact, given the majority of the House the absolute control of the House itself, and placed in the hands of the Committee on Appropriations the practical, general power of legislation, if the system inaugurated could be carried out, by compelling the Senate to adopt their legislation.

Let us compare the two rules and see their practical working. The amendment to the rule of the House of last Congress was intended to prevent and could only prevent that unlimited filibustering which would defeat legislation. It did not, however, prevent filibustering to any reasonable extent. It reached that which was more a construction of the rule than the rule itself, which allowed a motion to adjourn to be followed by a motion to fix the day to which the House should adjourn in endless succession; whereas, strictly, the motion to adjourn, having been the last question voted upon, was not again in order, but a construction had made it in order. And it was to overcome that; and that was the full force, purport, and object of the rule as amended. But the amendment of this session gives the House the power by an amendment to a general law attached to an appropriation bill by the vote of the majority only to cut off all debate at any time and force its immediate passage; so that it practically overrides the power of the minority in the House completely and absolutely. It not only does that, but it goes to the Senate and demands that the Senate shall concede to the House the view of the majority of the House in reference to any subject-matter of legislation which may be included in their appropriation bills, and tends as directly to destroy the equilibrium of the Constitution as similar action in the British House of Commons tended "to destroy the equilibrium of the British constitution."

But it is claimed that these amendments are only in cases where they reduced expenditures. But nearly every law that is made to protect a right will cost money to enforce it. In the language of Gouverneur Morris before cited, "Every law directly or indirectly takes money out of the pockets of the people," and therefore it could be claimed to reduce expenditures to repeal it. We can see the effect of it by the different amendments that they have made to the general laws. For instance, the transfer of the Indian Bureau from the Interior Department, where it has been since 1832, to the War Department; a transfer that is repugnant to the minds of a very large minority in the House and to a majority of the Senate, as expressed by its vote upon that subject. But they say to the Senate and say to the House that unless you pass this bill with the transfer of the Indians to the War Department your supplies will be cut off for the Indians, and your Government treaties cannot be performed or its obligations maintained.

Again, the amendment in reference to the election laws, the repeal of title 26 of the Revised Statutes, in relation to the registration of voters and appointment of supervisors of elections, &c., which happily has been waived by the committee in their report, was purely a partisan measure, intended to open the door to the old systems of frauds that prevailed in elections throughout the nation, and particularly in the State of New York, where in 1868 the grossest frauds prevailed in the elections and believed to be sanctioned and indorsed by the prominent democrats of that State, one of whom is now the candidate for President of the United States of the democratic party, and who was at that time chairman of the democratic State committee, and as such issued the following circular addressed to his partisan friends throughout the State:

[Private and strictly confidential.]

ROOMS OF DEMOCRATIC STATE COMMITTEE,
October 27, 1868.

MY DEAR SIR: Please at once to communicate with some reliable person, in three or four principal towns and in each city of your county, and request him (expenses duly arranged for at this end) to telegraph to William M. Tweed, Tammany Hall, at the minute of closing the polls, not waiting for the count, such person's estimate of the vote. Let the telegraph be as follows:

"This town will show a democratic gain (or loss) over last year of (number); or this one, if sufficiently certain: This town will give a republican (or democratic) majority of ——."

There is, of course, an important object to be attained by a simultaneous transmission at the hour of closing the polls, but not longer waiting. Opportunity can be taken of the usual half-hour lull in the telegraphic communication over lines before actual results begin to be declared, and before the Associated Press absorb the telegraph with returns and interfere with individual messages, and give orders to watch carefully the count.

Very truly, yours,

SAMUEL J. TILDEN, Chairman.

Horace Greeley, candidate of the same party for President of the United States at the last presidential election, in 1869, when the full extent of the scoundrelism of the election of 1868 became known, addressed an open letter to the present candidate for President of the same party, in which he accused him of wholesale ballot-box stuffing, and went on to say:

On the principle that the receiver is as bad as the thief you are as deeply implicated in this matter to-day as though your name were Tweed, O'Brien, or Oakey Hall.

Speaking of the votes of some of the lower wards of the city of New York, he says:

And though our city has largely increased its population, the lower wards were quite as populous then (1840) as they are to-day, several of them more so. * * * Now, look at the vote of four of these wards in 1840 and 1868, respectively:

Wards.	President, 1840.		Governor, 1868.
	Harrison.	Van Buren.	Republican.	Democrat.
Four wards.....	4,793	5,521	2,840	20,283

Van Buren's majority, 796; Hoffman's majority, 17,443.

Mr. Tilden, you know what this contrast attests. Right well do you comprehend the means whereby the vote of 1868 was thus swelled out of all proportions. There are not 12,000 legal voters living in those wards to-day, though they gave Hoffman 17,443 majority.

And this same democratic chairman of 1868 for the State of New York is to-day the reform candidate of the democratic party for the Presidency of the United States. Is this the honest man for whose election the gentleman from New York so earnestly appealed the other day, when he said:

Our hope is in their ballots to be given in November next for the election of an honest man, now governor of the State of New York—Samuel J. Tilden?

And was it thought necessary to repeal this law that the ballots may be counted for this honest man?

This "honest Samuel J. Tilden!" This reformer Tilden! The head and front of that "noble army of martyrs" or reformers—and reformers are always supposed to be martyrs—that during the present session of Congress have so bitterly denounced the use of money at elections, could in 1868 have "expenses duly arranged at this end." Where was the money to come from? Were there officials of every kind to be made to come down with the stamps? Did the worthy chairman thrust his hands into his own treasury and cut off a coupon here and there from his railroad and other bonds to meet the expenses "at this end?" It appears from his own testimony taken in the case of The People vs. Tweed that he had been slightly acquainted with one William M. Tweed since 1864, and that Tweed had grown wondrous strong in the democratic party by 1868. Commencing his public career in 1864 as deputy street commissioner, he had slightly made the acquaintance of the "reformer" Tilden, and in 1868 or 1869 he had become a great political power, with a large number of adherents and a very large circle of supporters, having the control of Tammany Hall for a number of years prior to 1871. He was the right-hand man of this democratic chairman in 1868; yes, as early as 1866 the slight acquaintance had ripened; and whether Tweed was an adherent and supporter of Tilden, or Tilden an adherent and supporter of Tweed, the evidence does not inform us.

But it is claimed, as a relief to Tilden for his intimacy with Tweed, that Washington had been intimate with Benedict Arnold. That is true, and Arnold had been a true, brave, and faithful soldier; but he fell. Washington did not associate with him after his fall. Unfortunately for the parallel in Tilden's case, Tweed was a poor unknown man, a deputy street commissioner, when Tilden first made his acquaintance, and from that acquaintance, made in 1864, Tweed began to grow, and such rapid growth never was known since Jonah's gourd. He grew rich, immensely rich, as no honest man could grow. He grew powerful, wonderfully powerful. Politically, he became the great mogul of Tammany. In two years he had become a man of great influence. In four years he became the Boss of the democratic party in the city and State of New York. Tilden knew him all this while. He saw this growth. Did he not wonder at it? Did he not inquire of himself, if not of others, "On what meat doth this our Cæsar feed?"

Was it intended to force the repeal of the supervisory election law through the Senate in order that unlimited frauds may prevail at the coming election and this democratic reform candidate for President be counted in, as Hoffman, the democratic candidate for governor of New York in 1868, was counted in?

It is not my purpose, however, to discuss the proposed legislation in these various appropriation bills, but the rather to look at the principles involved in the rule itself.

The worst feature of this proposition exists in the fact that it seeks to enforce upon the Senate the peculiar theories of the House in reference to general legislation. The language of Mr. Wilson in the constitutional convention on this subject I will again repeat:

> The House of Representatives will insert other things in money bills, and by making them conditions of each other destroy the deliberate liberty of the Senate.

It would seem to be prophetic of the situation to-day. What is in fact the proposition that we have had before us except that if the Senate does not conform to the wishes of the House, not in reference to the amount to be appropriated for any given purpose, but in reference to the laws which regulate such appropriations and in reference to the laws in regard to which such appropriations are to be made—laws that had required the several action of each House of Congress and the Executive—that the money will not be supplied to carry on the Government?

The necessity for the independent action of the two Houses of Congress is essential to the preservation of our system. If the Senate can be forced to act with the House both Houses then become but one deliberative body, and we practically have but one legislative body, instead of two, to protect the rights of the people.

Over one hundred years ago, in 1775, John Adams, in expressing his thoughts on the kind of government that this country should have, laid down this proposition:

> That, if the legislative power is wholly in one assembly and the executive in another or in a single person, these two powers will oppose and encroach upon each other until the contest shall end in war and the whole power, legislative and executive, be usurped by the strongest. The judicial power in such case could not mediate or hold the balance between the two contending powers, because the legislative would undermine it.

In 1778, in his conclusions in regard to government, after having shown by analogy and comparison with all the republican forms of government, both ancient and modern, that had up to that time existed, of which history gave any knowledge, the absolute necessity for checks and balances, or in fact a tripartite form of government where the power should rest in two legislative bodies and the executive, says:

> In the present state of society and manners in America, with a people living chiefly by agriculture, in small numbers, sprinkled over large tracts of land, they are not subject to those panics and transports, those contagions of madness and folly which are seen in countries where large numbers live in small places in daily fear of perishing for want. We know, therefore, that the people can live and increase under almost any kind of government or without any government at all; but it is of great importance to begin well. Misarrangements now made will have great, extensive, and distant consequences, and we are now employed, how little soever we may think of it, in making establishments which will affect the happiness of a hundred millions of inhabitants at a time in a period not very distant. All nations under all governments must have parties. The great secret is to control them. There are but two ways, either by a monarchy and standing army or by a balance in the constitution. Where the people have a voice and there is no balance there will be everlasting fluctuations, revolutions, and horrors, until a standing army, with a general at its head, commands the peace, or the necessity of an equilibrium is made appear to all and is adopted by all. (Works of John Adams, pages 587–8.)

The necessity for checks in our Government and for the full preservation of the right and power of each department of it, I apprehend no one at all conversant with our form of Government will deny. Every act that tends in any degree to overthrow them should be rejected. The fact that legislation is attached to an appropriation bill is in and of itself a practical threat to not only the other branch of the Legislature, but to the Executive. If the Senate should be in full accord with the House upon the question under consideration and with reference to the legislation which the House proposes, to place such legislation upon an appropriation bill is practically saying to the Executive that if you exercise your power, your negative here, we will take away from you the supplies which are essential to carry on the Government. So that is not only a threat upon the Senate, but also a compulsory power upon the President himself, and as a mode of legislating it is revolutionary in its nature and antagonistic to the principles of our Government. But it is not only true that as a mode of legislating it is subject to these objections, but in its practical workings it has proved itself always to be the most objectionable mode of enactment of law.

We cannot forget that with an appropriation bill was carried through the odious legislation of the Forty-second Congress. The back-salary bill was, in fact, the appropriation bill. And in the last Congress, in the last hours of the session, an amendment was made upon an appropriation bill without objection which affected the general laws, and was damaging to the interests of the country.

The Committee on Appropriations themselves, in self-protection, should repel all efforts at legislation upon their bills, for it leads at once into difficulty. The appropriation bills are usually settled, particularly during the short session of Congress, in committees of conference. It is the legislation of half a dozen men of both Houses. Their action is never fully understood by either House, and law virtually becomes the will of the half dozen men, the conferees of the two Houses, instead of the deliberate action of both Houses. No general law should be subject to such control.

In conclusion, I repeat that the House of Representatives has no greater right under the Constitution to originate appropriation bills than the Senate; that to acknowledge the exclusive right would endanger the equilibrium of our Constitution by destroying the deliberative power of the Senate, and in the end subvert the Government.

The dead lock of to-day should be an admonition for the future to avoid seeking to enforce legislation by supplies.

Mr. RANDALL. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the conference report was adopted.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. RANDALL, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3927) making appropriations to defray the expenses of the Joint Select Committee to Investigate Chinese Immigration; which was read a first and second time.

The bill appropriates the sum of $7,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to defray the expenses of the investigation into Chinese immigration by the joint select committee appointed for that purpose, one-half of said sum to be paid into the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half into the contingent fund of the House of Representatives.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TEMPORARY PROVISION FOR EXPENDITURES OF THE GOVERNMENT.

Mr. RANDALL, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3928) to continue the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government;" which was read a first and second time.

The bill extends and continues in full force and effect until and including the 31st day of July, 1876, the provisions of an act entitled "An act to continue the provisions of an act entitled 'An act to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government, approved June 30, 1876,' approved July 10, 1876."

Mr. RANDALL. In connection with this bill I desire to express the belief individually that this will be all that will be necessary in the way of extending this temporary act pending the action of Congress on the appropriation bills. I believe that perhaps a conclusion on the appropriation bills could be reached prior to the day here named but for the fact that the Senate is now engaged in the impeachment trial, and will require some days after that trial is concluded to take up and consider the reports on the appropriation bills now in committees of conference; and there is also the river and harbor bill, which is still under discussion in the Senate.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 999) to continue the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government, &c.;" in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

RESERVATION OF THE OTOE AND MISSOURIA INDIANS.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. I present the report of a committee of conference.

The Clerk read as follows:

> The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill (S. No. 779) to provide for the sale of the reservation of the confederated Otoe and Missouria Indians in the States of Kansas and Nebraska, after a full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:
>
> That the House recede from its first amendment.
>
> That the Senate concur in the second amendment of the House.

That the House recede from its amendment striking out all after the words per annum," in line 3, section 4; and that the Senate agree to the amendment of the House adding the words after said section, "which income shall be expended for the benefit of said tribes, under direction of the Secretary of the Interior," with the following amendment: Add after the word "Interior" the following words: "Provided, That said Indians shall not be located in the Indian Territory east of the ninety-sixth degree of longitude."

That the Senate concur in the amendment of the House adding section 7 to the bill.

That the Senate concur in the amendment to the title suggested by the House, with an amendment, as follows: Strike out the words "a portion of," before "the" in line 1, and insert the same words before the words "the confederated," in the second line of the title.

W. A. PHILLIPS,
W. W. WILSHIRE,
Managers on the part of the House.
JOHN J. INGALLS,
A. S. PADDOCK,
M. W. RANSOM,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. MORGAN.]

Mr. MORGAN. As one of the conferees on the part of the House I desire to state briefly my reasons for declining to sign the report. The bill provides for the sale of an Indian reservation lying in Kansas and Nebraska and for the removal of the Indians to the Indian Territory. The amendment made by the House struck from the bill the provision for the removal of the Indians to the Indian Territory and provided for the sale of a part only of the reservation. Upon this we had our conference.

Now, I am utterly opposed to the further removal of Indians to the Indian Territory, especially where, as in this case, they are settled upon a reservation and living there peaceably and quietly. I think it a great injustice to the Indians; and I believe that the provision requiring the consent of the Indians to the removal has but little significance. We all understand how easily the consent of these Indians is obtained and by what means. I also consider it a great injustice to the people of the adjoining States, who are opposed to the settling up of that country with an idle, worthless population. For these reasons I declined to sign the report.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. I wish to ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MORGAN] if he has any objection to the report of the committee of conference except on the single ground that he is opposed to the removal of the Indians.

Mr. MORGAN. I will say in reply to the gentleman's question that the bill is carefully drawn and that the provisions in regard to the sale of lands and the protection of the rights of the Indians meet with my approval. I have no objection to the bill except as regards the removal of the Indians to the Indian Territory; and I have stated my reasons for that objection.

Mr. BLAND rose.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. Have I the floor?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PHILLIPS] has the floor.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. I will simply yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] for a question.

Mr. BLAND. I desire to say a few words.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. I will yield to the gentleman three minutes.

Mr. BLAND. I would like to have five.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. Then I will yield to the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. BLAND. If I understand this bill, it proposes to transfer these bands of Indians from the reservation in Kansas to the Indian Territory.

When a bill involving a similar question was before the House I had occasion to enter my protest against the policy of transferring these Indians to the Indian Territory. That is a country susceptible of settlement and cultivation unsurpassed by any Territory within the Union. It is a blow that is aimed at the metropolis of the State of Missouri, and it seems to be the intention to remove the Indians from the northern Territories and locate them southwest of Saint Louis in the interest of Chicago and other northwestern cities in opposition to the prosperity of the city of Saint Louis. I say that the whole thing is fraught with injustice and it is only carrying out a systematic policy of the legislation of this Congress and of the country affecting the interests of the people South and West. I want it distinctly understood here and now that the State of Missouri is not only opposed to this bill but to this entire policy, and is opposed to every man and to every party which proposes to perpetuate this injustice, and we propose to fight it out on that line if it takes all this hot summer and a hundred succeeding summers.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. I will not consume the time of the House. I merely desire to state that in the law there is now a provision to remove these Indians. The Pawnees, a portion of the same tribe, have already been removed to the Territory, and the Otoes, a few hundred in number, desire to go there. The bill provides that they shall not be taken there but by their own consent. There can be no objection to the bill, and I have no objection to the gentlemen from Missouri making their record on this question; but I do not think the bill is open to criticism and cannot be criticised. I move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The question was put on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference; and on a division there were—ayes 63, noes 42; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas, and Mr. BLAND were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 66, noes 84.

So the report of the committee of conference was not agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 1000) to continue the public printing, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

VETO MESSAGE—NELSON TIFFANY.

Mr. BANNING. I rise to a question of privilege. I desire to submit from the Committee on Military Affairs a report upon the veto message of the President on the bill (H. R. No. 1337) for the relief of Nelson Tiffany.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will first read the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion from Nelson Tiffany, late a private in Company H, Twenty-fifth Massachusetts Volunteers, and grant said Tiffany an honorable discharge.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The veto message of the President will now be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

For the reasons set forth in the accompanying report of the Secretary of War, I have the honor to return herewith without my approval House bill No. 1337, entitled "An act for the relief of Nelson Tiffany."

U. S. GRANT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, July 11, 1876.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, June 7, 1876.

SIR: I have the honor to return House bill 1337, for the relief of Nelson Tiffany.

The Adjutant-General, to whom the bill was referred, reports as follows:

"Nelson Tiffany, private Company A, Twenty-fifth Massachusetts Volunteers, deserted October 10, 1864, and remained absent until April 25, 1865, when he surrendered under the President's proclamation, thereby acknowledging his desertion.

"If this bill becomes a law, it will not only falsify the records of this Department but will be an injustice to every man who served honorably during the war of the rebellion."

I inclose the report (No. 402) of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs in the case.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. D. CAMERON,
Secretary of War.

The PRESIDENT.

In the Senate of the United States May 1, 1876.—Read twice and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

An act for the relief of Nelson Tiffany.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion from Nelson Tiffany, late a private in Company H, Twenty-fifth Massachusetts Volunteers, and grant said Tiffany an honorable discharge.

Passed the House of Representatives April 29, 1876.

Attest:

GEORGE M. ADAMS, Clerk.

[Senate report No. 402. Forty-fourth Congress, first session.]

JUNE 29, 1876.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLAYTON submitted the following report, to accompany bill H. R. No. 1337.

The Committee on Military Affairs, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 1337) for the relief of Nelson Tiffany, submit the following report:

We find that Nelson Tiffany was enlisted in Company A, Twenty-fifth Massachusetts Volunteers, on the 16th September, 1861, and was honorably discharged on May 15, 1865. He was severely wounded on May 9, 1864, and was sent to hospital at Bermuda Hundreds, thence to Fortress Monroe, and finally to hospital at New Haven, Connecticut, from which place he received a furlough from June 17 for thirty days, which was extended to August 7, 1864, and at its expiration he reported to medical director at Boston, and by him sent to Readville, Massachusetts, on 10th October, being directed to report back to New Haven, Connecticut. He, being in a worn-out and broken-down condition from wounds and sickness, believed he would never recover. He returned to his home at Auburn, Massachusetts, and then reported to the provost-marshal at Worcester, Massachusetts, and was by him sent to Fort Independence, and there remained till his discharge, on May 15, 1865. The records show that Tiffany was a faithful soldier, and he is believed now to be upon his death-bed from wounds received in the war. The committee believe, from all the evidence in the case, that Nelson Tiffany never intended to desert, and they recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Will the House, on reconsideration, pass the bill?

Mr. BANNING. I move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. BANNING. I beg leave to say one word in reference to this case. Nelson Tiffany was a soldier who was very badly wounded, and when in hospital was allowed by the surgeons to return home, his case being considered hopeless. He was reported as a deserter. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] introduced the bill into the House and it went to the Senate and was passed. Upon the report of the Adjutant-General the President vetoed the bill, but Judge HOAR, who is now absent, told me and I think told also the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HURLBUT] that he called upon the Adjutant-

General and that on explaining the case the Adjutant-General told him that if he had understood the circumstances he would himself have relieved this soldier from the charge of desertion. I think the bill ought to be passed over the veto. The circumstances are as I have stated, and I think no one can have any objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. HURLBUT. The statement I am about to make is made at the request of Judge HOAR. This soldier came from his congressional district; he was a good soldier, but was severely wounded by being shot through the body. He was in hospital, and was believed to be so ill that by the permission, although not in writing, of the surgeon, he went to his home and remained there. He afterward found that he had been reported as a deserter, and then he surrendered himself. Judge HOAR went to the Adjutant-General and stated the circumstances, which were within his own knowledge, and the Adjutant-General then said that if he had known the facts of the case he would have himself relieved the man from the charge of desertion. The only remedy now is to pass this bill over the veto, without any sort of disrespect to the military authorities, who have acted upon their record only.

Mr. FORT. I desire to ask one question only. The gentleman states that the Adjutant-General if he had known the circumstances of the case, would have relieved this man from the charge of desertion. Why cannot the Adjutant-General do it now?

Mr. BANNING. As the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HURLBUT] has stated, the bill in this shape means no disrespect to the President or to the military authorities; it merely relieves this soldier from a charge of desertion wrongfully made against him and which is on the record against him.

Mr. FORT. That is not the question. The question is, cannot the Adjutant-General relieve him?

Mr. HURLBUT. No, he cannot do it now since the war has closed.

Mr. GARFIELD. Is it understood that the Adjutant-General has said this since the bill was vetoed?

Mr. HURLBUT. Since the bill has been vetoed Judge HOAR has seen the Adjutant-General and the Adjutant-General made that statement to him.

Mr. GARFIELD. Has he said it over his own signature?

Mr. BANNING. He said it to Judge HOAR and Judge HOAR repeated it to me, and also to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. HURLBUT.]

Mr. GARFIELD. I think, with due respect to everybody concerned, that where we have on the one hand the record of the War Department and the record of the President's veto we ought to have the written statement of the Adjutant-General upon the other before we pass this bill over the veto of the President. I do not think that on a second-hand statement which comes to us from the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HURLBUT] and to him from a gentleman who is not now here, and alleged to have come originally from the Adjutant-General, we should proceed to act upon this bill. It is very easy for us to get an official statement by another day, and I would suggest that this bill be permitted to lie over until to-morrow.

Mr. BANNING. I have no objection to the bill lying over.

Mr. BANKS. That ought to be done.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will be necessary to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered, if any other business is to be transacted at this time.

Mr. BANNING. I think if the report in this case was read every gentleman would be satisfied. I ask that the report be read.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

We find that Nelson Tiffany was enlisted in Company A, Twenty-fifth Massachusetts Volunteers, on the 16th September, 1861, and was honorably discharged on May 15, 1865. He was severely wounded on May 9, 1864, and was sent to hospital at Bermuda Hundreds, from thence to Fortress Monroe, and finally to hospital at New Haven, Connecticut, from which place he received a furlough from June 17 for thirty days, which was extended to August 7, 1864, and at its expiration he reported to medical director at Boston, and by him sent to Readville, Massachusetts, on 10th October, being directed to report back to New Haven, Connecticut. He being in a worn-out and broken-down condition from wounds and sickness, believed he would never recover. He returned to his home at Auburn, Massachusetts, and then reported to the provost marshal at Worcester, Massachusetts, and was by him sent to Fort Independence, and there remained till his discharge, on May 15, 1865. The records show that Tiffany was a faithful soldier, and he is believed now to be upon his death-bed from wounds received in the war. The committee believe, from all the evidence in the case, that Nelson Tiffany never intended to desert, and they recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

Mr. BANNING. I think I can satisfy the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD]——

Mr. FORT. Let the bill go over.

Mr. GARFIELD. Let it go over until to-morrow.

Mr. BANNING. Wait a moment. The soldier has an honorable discharge——

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Pass the bill now.

Mr. BANNING. Yes, pass it now. The soldier has an honorable discharge, and the report shows that he is now dying from wounds received in the service. I think the bill should be passed.

Mr. CONGER. There are many cases of like character where this Congress has refused to remove the charge of desertion. There are many bills of the same kind lying upon our tables.

Mr. FORT. Hundreds of them.

Mr. CONGER. Let the gentleman introduce a general bill removing the charge of desertion, and then these individual bills will not be vetoed.

Mr. BANNING. This is a case where the soldier has an honorable discharge.

Mr. CONGER. But the charge of desertion for some period during the war remains against him, as it does against others.

Mr. BANNING. But it was made in 1865, and is a mistake. I call for a vote.

Mr. BANKS. I would like to understand this question better than I do now, and in order to get an opportunity to do so I move that the House now adjourn.

COMMERCIAL INTERCOURSE WITH MEXICO AND CENTRAL AMERICA.

Pending the motion to adjourn,

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I transmit a report from the Secretary of State in answer to the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 1st of April last on the subject of commercial intercourse with Mexico and Central America.

U. S. GRANT.

WASHINGTON, July 19, 1876.

Mr. REAGAN, I move that the President's message and accompanying document be referred to the Committee on Commerce, and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

VETO MESSAGE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I have the honor to return herewith without my approval House bill No. 2684, entitled "An act to amend sections 3496, 3951, and 3954 of the Revised Statutes." It is the judgment of the Postmaster-General, whose report accompanies this message, that if this bill should become a law in its present form it would fail to give effect to its provisions. The remedial suggestions in his report are respectfully recommended to your attention.

U. S. GRANT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, July 20, 1876.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I move that the President's message and accompanying document be referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

PETER F. KENDALL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting reports and papers in the claim of Peter F. Kendall; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. RIDDLE asked and obtained unanimous consent for the withdrawal of the application and papers of A. M. Tinsley, of Trousdale County, Tennessee, for a pension.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Leave of absence was granted, by unanimous consent, as follows:

To Mr. ROBBINS, of Pennsylvania, for two days on account of business;

To Mr. WHITEHOUSE for one week; and

To Mr. ODELL until Tuesday next on account of ill health.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. PLAISTED, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 3717) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] that the House now adjourn.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask the gentleman to withdraw that motion. The ten-day bill passed by the House to-day has not yet been returned from the Senate. It is necessary that the enrolled bill shall be signed by the Speaker pro tempore in the presence of the House in order that it may be sent to the President to-day for his signature.

Mr. BANKS. I will withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. RANDALL. If the House does not desire to go on with other business at this time, I would suggest a recess of half an hour.

Mr. DUNNELL. I ask unanimous consent to submit a report at this time.

Mr. SAMPSON. I rise to make a privileged report. On the 10th of this month, on the motion of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] Senate bill No. 846 was referred to the Committee on Patents with leave to report at any time. I am instructed by the committee to report the bill back with amendments, and to recommend its passage.

Mr. GARFIELD. Is that the trade-mark bill?

Mr. SAMPSON. It is.

Mr. HANCOCK. I desire to call up at this time the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. No. 3925) relating to the production of fruit brandy and to punish frauds connected with the same was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The two questions are of equal privilege, in the opinion of the Chair.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the following title:

A bill (H. R. No. 3928) to continue the provisions of an act to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government.

ADJOURNMENT FROM FRIDAY TILL MONDAY.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a question of the highest privilege. I move that when the House shall adjourn to-morrow it stand adjourned until Monday next.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is right.

Several MEMBERS. O, no.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust this motion will not be agreed to.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. Is the motion in order?

The question being taken, the motion was not agreed to; there being—ayes 50, noes 82.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SAMPSON] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HANCOCK] have each risen for the purpose of calling up a motion to reconsider.

Mr. SAMPSON. Mine is not a motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This necessarily raises the question of consideration as between the two matters of business. As that of the gentleman from Iowa is prior in time, the Chair will first put the question upon that. Will the House now reconsider the vote by which the bill was recommitted?

Mr. COX. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman from Iowa has not risen to call up a motion to reconsider. As a member of the Committee on Patents, he rose to make a report which the committee had been authorized to make at any time.

Mr. SAMPSON. A report on the bill relative to counterfeiting trade-marks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the gentleman from Iowa misstated his case to the Chair.

Mr. SAMPSON. I stated it correctly; but there was a misunderstanding.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the committee has been authorized to report upon this subject at any time, the gentleman from Iowa is clearly entitled to the floor.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLAND. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Saturday next.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. COX. If the House should now adjourn, Mr. Speaker, will not the bill of the gentleman from Iowa come up first in the morning as unfinished business?

Mr. RANDALL. If the House adjourns now, the bill temporarily extending appropriations for the support of the Government will not become a law to-day. A few minutes will obviate that difficulty.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. Then I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

COUNTERFEITING TRADE-MARKS.

Mr. SAMPSON, from the Committee on Patents, reported back, with amendments, the bill (S. No. 846) to punish the counterfeiting of trade-mark goods and the sale or dealing in of counterfeit trade-mark goods.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 3, section 1, strike out the words "have in his possession or," and insert after the word "shall," in the same line, the words "with intent to defraud."

Strike out all after the word "be," in line 11, section 1, and insert "punished by fine not exceeding $1,000, or imprisonment not more than two years, or both such fine and imprisonment."

Strike out all of section 6.

In line 2, section 7, strike out "or to aid in defrauding or injuring."

Strike out all of section 8.

Strike out all after the word "be," in line 4, section 10, and insert the words "punished by fine not exceeding $500, or imprisonment not more than one year, or both such fine and imprisonment."

Strike out all of section 11.

Mr. SAMPSON. Mr. Speaker, it will only be necessary to detain the House for a moment or two in explanation of this bill.

It is generally conceded that there is not at present sufficient protection to trade-marks. The public generally, the honest manufacturers and honest dealers throughout the country are being constantly swindled by counterfeit trade-marks. The law of 1870, providing a general system for the registration of trade-marks and designed to afford better protection by giving right of action in United States courts to recover damages for counterfeiting and providing the remedy by enjoining counterfeiters, has not proved sufficient. Worthless parties engaged in such dishonest practices are not prevented by civil actions. A judgment for damages has no terrors for them. If enjoined, some relative soon owns the goods and the business goes on. The plaintiff in such action (the measure of damages being the profit) has to depend mainly on the testimony and books of the defendant; and it is found generally that he who will counterfeit will testify falsely to avoid the consequences. Thus the action for damage amounts to but little.

Nearly four hundred of the leading manufacturers, merchants, and dealers of New York, Boston, and Philadelphia have petitioned Congress very earnestly at this session to enact such a law as that contained in this Senate bill; and they state their reasons in this forcible language:

The use of trade-marks on every species of merchandise and manufactures, both foreign and domestic, has greatly increased with the expansion of modern trade and commerce, and has become a powerful interest throughout the United States of America.

The nefarious but lucrative business of pirating or counterfeiting genuine trade-mark goods has too long flourished unchecked to the incalculable injury of every consumer, of every honest merchant, manufacturer, and trader, and has extensively multiplied costly and tedious litigation.

No United States statute yet exists providing penal remedies to punish the counterfeiting of trade-mark goods or the sale or dealing in of the same. The evils and injuries to long-suffering commercial and manufacturing interests consequent upon this omission imperatively demand prompt relief and a speedy application of searching remedies.

We therefore respectfully petition for relief, and request that Senate bill No. 846, introduced into the Senate on the 18th of May, 1876, entitled "A bill to punish the counterfeiting of trade-mark goods and the sale or dealing in of counterfeit trade-mark goods," may be made law at this session of Congress.

A word in relation to the amendments proposed by the committee. They are seven in number, but are solely for the purpose of accomplishing the following objects:

First. To render it certain that no one shall be convicted of crime or punished under this proposed statute for having any connection with fraudulent trade-marks, unless such connection was willful and with intent to defraud, and to throw the burden of proof of this fact on the state.

Second. To so shape the law that all money paid by defendants by way of penalty should go into the Treasury as fines in other cases, and not go to the informer or the owner of the trade-mark. The owner is provided for now by the civil action for damages.

Third. To limit the punishment to fine and imprisonment, and not allow it to extend to forfeitures of goods also.

These are the only amendments made by the committee. I will yield to the gentleman from Michigan to offer one or two additional amendments in the same line to perfect the bill, and will then demand the previous question.

Mr. CONGER. I offer three amendments to different places in the bill, which I will ask the Clerk to read. They are in the same line as those reported from the Committee on Patents.

The Clerk read as follows:

1. Insert in line 7, section 9, after the word "person," the words "with intent to use the same for the purpose of deception and fraud."

2. In line 15, same section, after the word "person," insert the words "with intent to use the same for the purpose of deception and fraud."

3. In line 34, in the same section, after the word "use," insert the words "by the holder or owner."

Mr. SAMPSON. I am willing to agree to those amendments. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. CONGER'S amendments to the amendment were agreed to; and then the amendments of the committee, as amended, were concurred in.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SAMPSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill, as amended, was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONTINUANCE OF PUBLIC PRINTING.

Mr. RANDALL. I now call up Senate bill (S. No. 1000) to continue the public printing, and move that it be put upon its passage.

The bill was read a first and second time.

It authorizes the Congressional Printer to continue the work required by law in advance of appropriations to be hereafter made, and provides that this act shall continue in force ten days.

Mr. RANDALL. This is necessary, although the money is appropriated in the sundry civil appropriation bill, as there is a probability of that bill not reaching the President to-night. As a necessary precaution, I ask that the bill be put upon its passage.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL.

Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled an act (H. R. No. 3928) to continue the provision of an act entitled "An act to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government;" when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same.

OTOE AND MISSOURIA INDIANS.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. I enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the report of the conference committee on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 779) to provide for the sale of the reservation of the confederated Otoe and Missouria Indians in the States of Kansas and Nebraska was rejected.

Mr. BLAND. And I move to lay that motion upon the table.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. I only desired to enter the motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has a right to make a motion to lay upon the table.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. I submit that it is a privilege to enter a motion to reconsider, but not to make a motion to lay upon the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is in order, no other business being before the House at this time.

Mr. BLAND. The Chair entertained the motion, and the House is now dividing upon it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There was no business before the House at the time of the motion to reconsider. If there had been, the Chair would have only allowed the motion to reconsider to be entered.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. I only desired to enter the motion to reconsider, intending to call it up at some other time.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 78, noes 32.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. No quorum.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman from Kansas only entered the motion to reconsider, and the Chair has treated it as though the motion to reconsider was really made. I think that motion is not before the House so that it can be laid upon the table. It is merely a notice under the rule. If that be so, the motion to lay upon the table is irregular.

Mr. HOSKINS. I am clear, with all due deference to the Chair, that the motion to reconsider cannot be laid upon the table as it is only entered, and not now before the House. The motion to reconsider is not before the House, and it can only be laid upon the table when it is before the House. The gentleman from Kansas only desired to enter the motion to reconsider, reserving the right to call it up at another time.

Mr. RANDALL. There was nothing before the House when the gentleman from Kansas made his motion to reconsider, and it was perfectly in order for the gentleman from Missouri to move to lay upon the table, there being no other business before the House. The motion is entered when there is other business before the House.

Mr. BLAND. I moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table, the Chair entertained it, the House divided upon it, and it is now too late to make the point of order.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the gentleman had made the motion to reconsider it would have been in order to have moved to lay upon the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. And that is precisely what he did.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. No; I said I rose to enter the motion to reconsider.

Mr. GARFIELD. He merely entered it. It was a notice that he would make the motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair at once recognizes that the mere notice to enter a motion to reconsider is not making the motion, but the Chair distinctly understood the gentleman to move to reconsider the vote. The Chair, however, will take the word of the gentleman from Kansas, that he merely entered the motion to reconsider.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. I stated distinctly that I rose to enter the motion to reconsider.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask for the reading of the Journal, whether he stated that he merely entered the motion to reconsider.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. This question of laying this motion on the table is open for consideration, because a quorum did not vote. I distinctly raised the question that a quorum did not vote, so the question is open and unembarrassed.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. I desire to state, if gentlemen will allow me, that I entered the motion to reconsider because the report had not been debated. I merely entered it at the request of several members of the House. I did not desire to take up the time of the House with it at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman from Kansas, as he states, merely entered the motion to reconsider, the Chair ruled wrongly in entertaining the motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table. The gentleman from Kansas so states to the House, and the motion to reconsider will be now entered.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Indiana, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

An act (S. No. 1000) to continue the public printing.

ADJOURNMENT OVER SATURDAY.

Mr. HALE. I rise to make a privileged motion. I move that when the House adjourns to-morrow it adjourn to meet on Monday next. This will give the House an opportunity to-morrow to consider private bills, and will give us what we all need, a rest on Saturday.

The question being taken on Mr. HALE's motion, there were—ayes 72, noes 61; no quorum voting.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I call for tellers.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. I call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will order tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Maine, Mr. HALE, and the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. RICE.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 76, noes 47; no quorum voting.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the yeas and nays on this proposition.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 82, nays 65, not voting 137; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. John H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Blair, Horatio C. Burchard, Burleigh, Candler, Caulfield, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Cook, Crapo, Davy, Dunnell, Eames, Eden, Egbert, Ely, Foster, Garfield, Goode, Gunter, Hale, Andrew H. Hamilton, Hardenbergh, Harrison, Hatcher, Henderson, Hereford, Abram S. Hewitt, Hill, Hoskins, Hurd, Thomas L. Jones, Kasson, Kehr, Kimball, Knott, Leavenworth, Levy, Mackey, Magoon, McDill, Milliken, Morrison, Mutchler, Norton, O'Neill, Packer, Pierce, Piper, Platt, Potter, Pratt, Purman, Rainey, Randall, John Robbins, Robinson, Miles Ross, Sampson, Scales, Sinnickson, Smalls, A. Herr Smith, Spencer, Springer, Tarbox, Teese, Terry, Thompson, Thornburgh, Martin I. Townsend, Washington Townsend, Van Vorhes, Waddell, Alexander S. Wallace, Warren, Wike, Willard, Alpheus S. Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, and William B. Williams—82.

NAYS—Messrs. Ainsworth, Anderson, Atkins, Bagby, John H. Bagley, jr., Bell, Blackburn, Bland, Boone, Bradley, Bright, Cabell, William P. Caldwell, Campbell, Cannon, Cason, Cate, Cochrane, Collins, Conger, Cutler, De Bolt, Dibrell, Dobbins, Durand, Evans, Felton, Finley, Hancock, John T. Harris, Hartzell, Heukle, Holman, House, Hunter, Kelley, Franklin Landers, Lane, Le Moyne, Luttrell, Maish, McFarland, Mills, Morgan, New, Payne, William A. Phillips, Reagan, John Reilly, James B. Reilly, Riddle, William M. Robbins, Savage, Southard, Sparks, Stevenson, Thomas, Tucker, Turney, John L. Vance, Robert B. Vance, White, Whitthorne, Wigginton, and James D. Williams—65.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Ashe, George A. Bagley, William H. Baker, Banning, Bass, Beebe, Bliss, Blount, Bradford, John Young Brown, William R. Brown, Buckner, Samuel D. Burchard, John H. Caldwell, Caswell, Chapin, Chittenden, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, Clymer, Cowan, Cox, Crounse, Culberson, Danford, Darrall, Davis, Denison, Douglas, Durham, Ellis, Faulkner, Forney, Fort, Franklin, Freeman, Frye, Fuller, Gause, Gibson, Glover, Goodin, Robert Hamilton, Haralson, Benjamin W. Harris, Henry R. Harris, Hartridge, Hathorn, Haymond, Hays, Hendee, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hoar, Hoge, Hooker, Hopkins, Hubbell, Hunton, Hurlbut, Hyman, Jenks, Frank Jones, Joyce, King, Lamar, George M. Landers, Lapham, Lawrence, Lewis, Lord, Lynch, Lynde, MacDougall, McCrary, McMahon, Meade, Metcalfe, Miller, Money, Monroe, Nash, Neal, O'Brien, Odell, Oliver, Page, Phelps, John F. Philips, Plaisted, Poppleton, Powell, Rea, Rice, Roberts, Sobieski Ross, Rusk, Sayler, Schleicher, Schumaker, Seelye, Sheakley, Singleton, Slemons, William E. Smith, Strait, Stenger, Stone, Stowell, Swann, Throckmorton, Tufts, Wait, Waldron, Charles C. B. Walker, Gilbert C. Walker, John W. Wallace, Walling, Walsh, Ward, Erastus Wells, G. Wiley Wells, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Whiting, Andrew Williams, Charles G. Williams, James Williams, Willis, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, James Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodburn, Woodworth, Yeates, and Young—137.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. HALE moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COCHRANE. I ask unanimous consent that to-morrow shall be considered as objection day, if the Private Calendar shall be taken up.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. COCHRANE. I hope the gentleman will yield, that the arrangement may be made which I have indicated.

Mr. HOLMAN. I insist on my motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion of the gentleman from Indiana is equivalent to an objection to the request made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HOLMAN's motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, memorials, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois: The petition of Captain D. C. Stone, to be relieved from the sentence of a court-martial cutting off his pay as captain of the First Kentucky Battery, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HOUSE: The petition of James Moffitt, of Nashville, Tennessee, for a rehearing of his claim, rejected by the southern claims commission, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LUTTRELL: The petition of Elisha C. Bray, for indemnification for spoliations by Rogue River and Cow Creek tribes of Indians, to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Also, the petition of citizens of Monticello, California, for the establishment of a post-route between Winters, in Yolo County, to Monticello, in Napa County, California, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, the petition of citizens of Lake County, California, for the re-establishment of the post-route between Uncle Sam and Lower Lake post-offices, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of residents upon the public lands in Mendocino County, California, against the passage of House bill No. 321, to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. MAGOON: The petition of Thomas Simons and 78 other citizens of La Fayette County, Wisconsin, that the present tariff on linseed-oil be maintained, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. PIERCE: The petition of the mayor of Boston, Massachusetts, for the gift to said city of twenty-five bronze cannon for the purpose of casting therefrom statues of Thomas Jefferson and John Adams, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, July 21, 1876.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 3927) making an appropriation to defray the expenses of the Joint Select Committee to investigate Chinese Immigration was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 96) to provide for the protection of the Texas frontier on the Lower Rio Grande was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MERRIMON. I present the petition of Robert S. Gorlet, of Washington County, North Carolina, in which he represents that he was the postmaster at Plymouth in that State in the year 1873; that the post-office safe was forced and robbed, whereby a considerable sum of money was lost which belonged to the Government, and for which the petitioner accounted to the Government. He prays that the sum of money which he made good to the Government may be refunded to him. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SPENCER presented the memorial of John Hogan and others, citizens of Washington, District of Columbia, remonstrating against the passage of a law authorizing the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company to locate its depot on Delaware avenue, in the nineteenth district of the city; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. DENNIS presented the petition of Joseph H. Maddox, a citizen of Maryland, praying compensation for property taken and appropriated by United States troops during the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. INGALLS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 980) granting a pension to Irena Garrett, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1588) granting an additional pension to Jefferson Bowers, of Mason County, Illinois, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2231) granting a pension to Emily E. Weiss, reported it without amendment.

Mr. HAMILTON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3041) granting a pension to James Ruffin Wood, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2707) granting a pension to Mary F. Hall, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 905) in relation to vacancies in the office of appraisers of customs at any port of the United States, reported it with amendments.

Mr. BOOTH, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2837) granting a pension to Edward F. Eddy, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1183) for the relief of David W. Stockstill, of Sidney, Ohio, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred a petition of citizens of Oregon asking that the lands and buildings known as the Fort Dalles military reservation be donated to that State for the purpose of an insane asylum, have directed me to report adversely as to the donation of the military reservation to the State, but to report a bill authorizing the transfer of the reservation from the War Department to the Secretary of the Interior, and the sale of it, and to submit a report thereon.

The bill (S. No. 1001) to provide for the disposition of Fort Dalles military reservation was read and passed to the second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 559) for the relief of Almeron E. Calkins, late a second lieutenant in the Eighth Michigan Cavalry, reported it without amendment, the committee adopting the report of the House committee.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3114) for the relief of William Gemmill, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 262) for the relief of the legal representatives of John W. Gall, deceased, late of Company A, One hundred and thirtieth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3484) for the relief of John Rentz, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3371) to place Lawrence A. Williams, late major Sixth Cavalry, United States Army, upon the retired list of the Army, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1237) for the relief of Benjamin F. Reynolds, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2813) relieving the State of Kansas from charges on account of ordnance stores furnished to Kansas Territory, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1075) directing the Second Auditor to settle the pay and bounty account of John Ammahaie or Ammahe, reported it without amendment, the committee adopting the report of the House committee.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 976) for the relief of George W. Graffan, late first lieutenant United States Army, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2257) for the relief of J. T. McGinniss, captain of Thirteenth Infantry, United States Army, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred certain papers relating to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 85) to authorize the Secretary of War to issue certain arms to the Washington Light Infantry of Charleston, South Carolina, and the Clinch Rifles of Augusta, Georgia, asked to be discharged from their further consideration, the joint resolution having passed both Houses; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 683) to authorize the sale of cadet-rifles, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was indefinitely postponed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 996) for the relief of George W. Smith, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 828) for the relief of Peter Phillips, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3331) authorizing the Secretary of War to permit the Protestant Episcopal church of Gratiot, Michigan, to erect and maintain a wooden church building on the Fort Gratiot military reservation, Michigan, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. LOGAN. I am also directed to report back certain papers with reference to the bill (S. No. 938) for the relief of George T. Olmsted, jr., to ask to be discharged from their further consideration. The bill has passed both Houses, as I understand, and become a law. I did not know that the papers were in the committee at the time the bill was acted upon, and now report the papers back in order that they may be placed on file.

The committee was discharged from the further consideration of the case.

Mr. ALLISON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2848) granting a pension to F. M. Bruner, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2844) granting a pension to Levi D. Hayward, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. CRAGIN. I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 433) directing the transfer of certain amounts from the naval pension fund, to report it back adversely with a written report. This is a bill that seeks to take considerable money out of the Treasury, and I ask that the report be printed.

The report was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KERNAN. I wish to take up a bill, if morning business is through.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] has the floor by understanding.

Mr. INGALLS. I asked yesterday and obtained unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the morning business to-day the Senate would resume the consideration of House bill No. 3625.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Upon the single condition of taking care of the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. DAVIS.] If there is no further morning business the bill (H. R. No. 3625) providing for the sale of the Osage ceded lands in Kansas to actual settlers is before the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. It was the understanding that the Senator from West Virginia should have the opportunity to call up a bill for the removal of political disabilities, and I yield to him for that purpose.

GEORGE JACKSON.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 329) to remove the political disabilities of George Jackson, a citizen of West Virginia. It is a House bill which has been reported by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate favorably.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask a division on taking it up, not because I have the least objection to the bill—I am in favor of it—but I am suspicious we have not a quorum, and if we have not I do not think we ought to do any business.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 25, noes 1; no quorum voting.

Mr. INGALLS. I move that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent members.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll will be called first. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll and thirty-eight Senators answered to their names.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A quorum is present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from West Virginia to take up the bill which he has named.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed; two-thirds of the Senate voting in favor thereof.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. No. 1000) to continue the public printing; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

OSAGE LANDS IN KANSAS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3625) providing for the sale of the Osage ceded lands in Kansas to actual settlers, the pending question being on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] to strike out section 8 of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 8. That it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General of the United States, for the time being, to ascertain and determine the amount of costs and necessary expenses incurred in prosecuting the two suits commenced in the name of the United States against the Leavenworth, Lawrence and Galveston Railroad Company and the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad Company in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Kansas, for the purpose of testing the validity of the title to said lands claimed by said railroad companies, and the costs and expenses of prosecuting said cases in the Supreme Court of the United States; said expenses to include the fees justly due to the attorneys retained at the instance of the settlers on said lands, with the approval of the Attorney-General of the United States; that, after determining the amount of costs and expenses as aforesaid, the Attorney-General shall certify the said amount, and to whom due, to the Secretary of the Interior; and the Secretary of the Interior shall pay to the parties entitled thereto the sum so allowed and certified to, as aforesaid, out of the proceeds arising from fifteen cents per acre on the sale of said lands.

Mr. ANTHONY. May I appeal to my friend from Kansas? There was a bill reported the other day for the relief of a very old, infirm, and distinguished officer of the Navy, but objection was made to its consideration at that time. I am sure there will be no objection to it if it be taken up now; and if there is any objection made or any debate, I will withdraw it at once.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator may appeal to me, but I shall be compelled to resist the appeal on account of the very great necessity of action on this bill. I do so with reluctance as the Senator from Rhode Island well knows. I shall be very glad to assist him in passing his bill after this is disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore put the question upon the amendment of Mr. EDMUNDS, and declared that the ayes appeared to prevail.

Mr. INGALLS. I hope not. Let us divide.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senate will perceive by reference to the twelfth, thirteenth, and fourteenth lines of this section that the expenses to be paid "include the fees justly due to the attorneys retained at the expense of the settlers on said land with the approval of the Attorney-General of the United States." The section further provides:

That after determining the amount of costs and expenses as aforesaid, the Attorney-General shall certify the said amount, and to whom due, to the Secretary of the Interior.

If the United States then did not retain any attorneys, if there was no service rendered by these attorneys to the Government and no regular employment by the Government, then nothing can be certified by the Attorney-General, and therefore no portion of this fund can be employed for that purpose.

In this connection I may say that by the result of the suits that were tried before the circuit court and taken on appeal to the Supreme Court, the United States Government was saved the repayment of a very large amount of money. Had the cases been determined otherwise than as they were, the Government would have been compelled to refund all the money that was received under the joint resolution of April 10, 1869. As the provision is guarded by the requirement that the Attorney-General must approve the amounts and that it is to be paid under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, I can see no reason why the section should be stricken out.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I shall have to restate the objection that I made to this section, for I suppose everybody has forgotten it. I say, in the first place, that I have the best reason in the world for believing that the Attorney-General, or the United States, never retained any one of the gentlemen who are named.

Mr. INGALLS. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him just a moment in order to say that if that is the case, under the twelfth, thirteenth, and fourteenth lines of the section, no money can be paid.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Even if that were so, I am opposed to vicious legislation even if no money can be paid out under it; but the Senator, I think, is a little mistaken. The Senator will observe and the Senate will observe that this section is very skillfully drawn. It does not say to pay counsel retained by the United States. It says this: "Said expenses" of this suit "to include the fees justly due to the attorneys retained at the instance of the settlers on said lands, with the approval of the Attorney-General of the United States."

What the fact is, as I am informed from the very best authority, is that these settlers having, under the treaty of the United States with the Indians and the act of 1869 and the land grant to the railroads, got into a controversy with the railroad companies through the legislation of Congress, they employed, as people generally do, or a part of them employed, those who were fighting the affair, employed counsel, and they persuaded the Attorney-General to bring a suit in equity to set aside the patents that had been issued to the railroad companies, which was a perfectly proper proceeding. It ought to have been done undoubtedly. It was his duty to do it if there was any question under these various rights, and it ought to have been tested. They employed their counsel to defend their interests. They did defend their interests; and when it came to the Supreme Court of the United States, the Government being the party on the record and the sole party on the record, it was necessary, in order that these counsel might have permission to appear, that the Attorney-General should assent to it or that the United States should, which is the same thing. The Attorney-General did assent to it, just as in other cases, as I stated yesterday, he always assents when respectable parties with respectable counsel have interests growing out of or standing under a suit to which the United States is a party. The Attorney-General in such cases always, as a matter of course and of right, allows the counsel for private parties to come in and assist to argue the case, if they wish. That was this case, and as I say I have the best reason for believing it, because one of the gentlemen referred to by the Senator from Kansas yesterday as being concerned as counsel in this affair so stated in my hearing yesterday, when the subject was under consideration, that the Attorney-General never retained them at all in the sense of producing the relation of attorney and client. They were the counsel of private parties who had a particular interest to have this suit of the United States go in a particular way.

Now, it is proposed that these trust funds belonging to the Indians shall be saddled with this expense, and that these counsel shall get their pay by a tax of fifteen cents an acre on this land, to be collected by the United States for their benefit. I insist, Mr. President—I may be entirely wrong—that legislation of this character is absolutely vicious, wrong in principle, and wrong in practice; and it is the first time I will say in my recollection that I ever heard of an enterprise of this kind being undertaken by act of legislation.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will inquire what reason is there that the Indians should pay the amounts even if it were proper to pay it at all?

Mr. EDMUNDS. So say I. Why should it be taken out of these Indians?

Mr. SHERMAN. I know nothing about this matter except what I have heard from interested parties within a day or so; but if the statements made by them are correct, it seems to me this provision is not only right, but it is eminently fair and equitable. The statement as I understand it is this: When it became apparent that there was to be a legal controversy between the railroads and the settlers upon these lands, at a public meeting held by the settlers, certain gentlemen were employed as attorneys and engagements were made on their behalf in the name of the United States, with the assent of the Attorney-General, to commence certain legal proceedings to test the legal title to this land, whether it belonged to the railroad companies or whether these settlers had under our pre-emption and homestead laws any rights whatever, and whether they could maintain their possessory rights as against the railroad companies.

These attorneys were employed then by the settlers by an arrangement among themselves, and this litigation was the result of that arrangement. The decision of the court I have never read, but I understand it was adverse to the railroad companies and in favor of the Government. Under these circumstances this eighth section, as I understand, is an expedient adopted for the purpose of paying out of a general fund the expenses of this litigation, including the attorneys' fees. To enable them to do so without impairing the legal or equitable right of the Indians to this fund it was agreed among themselves without dissent that the price these settlers were to pay for their land, instead of $1.25 an acre, was to be $1.40 an acre, with a view to raise enough by this voluntary assessment over and above the price fixed by the general policy of our laws, $1.25 an acre, to cover these expenses.

Mr. HOWE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him where the settlers obtained the right to buy these lands at $1.25 an acre?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not really know; I cannot say.

Mr. INGALLS. If the Senator will allow me, that is what this bill proposes to give them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The treaty says they shall be sold for cash on the best terms.

Mr. HOWE. I want to know if the Senator from Ohio assumes that the reason for paying $1.40 instead of $1.25 is to make a fund out of which to satisfy these fees? I suppose myself that the reason for paying $1.25 or $1.40, or any other sum, is that the lands are worth that sum.

Mr. SHERMAN. I give the Senator just the understanding that I have from parties in interest in this matter. I do not know anything about it myself. As to the reason for fixing the amount at $1.40, that was the reason given, that, in pursuit of a common interest on behalf of these settlers in a litigation instituted by them for their benefit, this proceeding was had, by which it was held that the United States was the owner of this land, and not the railroad companies.

Mr. HOWE. Was the Senator informed what interest the settlers had to be protected in that suit between the Government and the railroad companies?

Mr. SHERMAN. They claimed, under the homestead or pre-emption laws, possessory rights.

Mr. HOWE. I heard it said yesterday that these settlers claimed under purchase from the railroad companies. This bill seems to carry such an intimation.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know about that. As I understand, their interests were adverse to the railroad companies. They did not buy of the railroad companies.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Some of them did and some of them did not, as was stated yesterday.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know nothing about that except what is given to me. This mode is a mode of paying the expenses of this litigation by a voluntary assessment among themselves by the settlers upon these lands by increasing the price from a dollar and a quarter, the price at which lands have always been sold to actual settlers except under railroad grants in certain cases, and this is an expedient for the purpose of paying these costs and charges. If that is so, I can only say it seems to me to be equitable, not only on the part of the United States but on the part of the settlers. This was a litigation for the real benefit of the United States. The United States was the party-plaintiff, I suppose, and these settlers claimed their possessory rights under the laws of the United States. If the United States now deny them any possessory rights, perhaps the United States could do it and take advantage of any defect in their title; but, as I understand, the United States do not propose to do that, but to allow these settlers to have the same possessory rights they would have on the public lands, pre-emption rights, and take the lands at one dollar and a quarter an acre. As I understand, the pre-emption laws would give these settlers, if this were public land, a right to enter upon it at a dollar and a quarter an acre, and the United States in this bill proposes to recognize that right, to recognize these as public lands, and to allow these people to pay a dollar and a quarter an acre for these lands, and they have by their voluntary arrangement agreed to pay $1.40 instead of $1.25.

Mr. HOWE. But will the Senator allow me to remind him that, as I understand, the United States has stipulated, has contracted that these shall not be public lands and that they shall be exempt from pre-emption rights and from homestead settlement, and that they shall be sold at a fair price in fair market, and the proceeds shall go to the Indians who formerly owned the lands.

Mr. INGALLS. That is not the fact.

Mr. HOWE. What is it?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is the fact, except that the proceeds go to the civilization fund.

Mr. INGALLS. That is not the fact either. The proceeds of this land are to be divided by the appropriation of $300,000 for the benefit of the Osage Indians, who formerly owned the lands, and the remainder, after that sum has been taken out, to be appropriated for the benefit of the civilization fund of the Indians at large.

Mr. HOWE. Well, now, Mr. President, I am surprised that the Senator should volunteer that——

Mr. INGALLS. That is not volunteering.

Mr. HOWE. Should volunteer that as a correction of what I said.

Mr. INGALLS. You said it was for the benefit of the Indians who formerly owned the land.

Mr. HOWE. Yes, sir.

Mr. INGALLS. The land was formerly owned by the Osage Indians.

Mr. HOWE. Yes, sir; and the $300,000 is to be taken out of it by the United States simply because the United States advanced $300,000 to the Osage Indians under the treaty. Is not that the fact?

Mr. INGALLS. Suppose it is the fact.

Mr. HOWE. Then I take it my statement was literally correct that this sale is to be made under the treaty for the benefit of the Indians, that in point of fact we never purchased and paid for the lands at all. We acquired a right to sell the land and we advanced $300,000 for that, and we stipulated to sell the land for the benefit of the Indians and to sell it at a fair price; and the treaty does declare—does it not?—that the lands shall not be subject to pre-emption nor subject to homestead entry. So, if I am right in this, there is no pretense that the settlers have a right to take the land at $1.25 an acre. They have not a right to take it at all. They have a right to purchase it in open market with all the rest of the world. Then if it should happen that by paying $1.40 an acre they are merely contributing fifteen cents above the market price, if it should turn out that they were getting the land for five or six dollars an acre less than its real value, it would seem to me this appropriation of fifteen cents an acre would be quite improper, not as a violation of the treaty merely, but as a violation of right. And then what is the sum to be realized by this payment of fifteen cents an acre for counsel fees? What does it amount to?

Mr. INGALLS. I do not know the exact amount.

Mr. HOWE. It is over $100,000, is it not?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. About $70,000.

Mr. HOWE. The tract is thirty by fifty miles square?

Mr. INGALLS. The tract is thirty by fifty miles.

Mr. HOWE. It is over $100,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Nine hundred and sixty thousand acres there are. At fifteen cents an acre the amount is $144,000.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator's arithmetic is strangely at fault. The railroads have claim to but one-half that land, which is 480,000 acres.

Mr. HOWE. But this bill has reference to the whole tract.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is what it says.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am in favor of the main features of the bill, but I do not see how I can sustain this particular section. I call the attention of the Senator from Ohio to the provisions of the treaty, by the terms of which this particular tract of land thirty miles from east to west and fifty miles from north to south was granted to the United States:

> And in consideration of the grant and sale to them [the United States] of the above-described lands the United States agree to pay the sum of $300,000, which sum shall be placed to the credit of said tribe of Indians in the Treasury of the United States, and interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum shall be paid to said tribes semi-annually in money, clothing, provisions, or such article of utility as the Secretary of the Interior may from time to time direct. Said lands shall be surveyed and sold, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, on the most advantageous terms, for cash, as public lands are surveyed and sold under existing laws, but no pre-emption claim or homestead settlement shall be recognized; and after re-imbursing the United States the cost of said survey and sale and the said sum of $300,000 placed to the credit of said Indians, the remaining proceeds of sales shall be placed in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the "civilization fund," to be used, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, for the education and civilization of Indian tribes residing within the limits of the United States.

This bill provides for selling these lands to the actual settlers there at $1.40 an acre, and that out of the fifteen cents per acre above $1.25 a certain amount of fees and expenses shall be paid. The settlers pay this fifteen cents per acre more than the dollar and a quarter for what? To pay the expenses, in part at least, of these lawsuits. If they have already paid these expenses, then this money goes back to their own pockets. Would it not be infinitely better for the United States to let them have the whole at a dollar and a quarter an acre? Because if they let them have them at $1.40 an acre the whole is a trust fund, and the very moment the United States lends them credit for this fifteen cents an acre that moment the United States becomes liable and will be compelled to place that amount to the credit of this trust fund; in other words, the United States will be paying this fifteen cents an acre, so far as these expenses are concerned, out of the Treasury. You cannot avoid that conclusion.

Mr. SHERMAN. I look upon the reasonable expenses of that lawsuit on behalf of the United States, by whomever conducted, as just as much a reasonable and proper allowance as the expenses of surveying this land.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is not so specified in the treaty.

Mr. SHERMAN. That makes no difference. The United States only got possession of this large property by these lawsuits; and for the United States to avail itself of the benefit of these services without re-imbursement, it seems to me, would be inequitable and unjust. It would be mean, I should think, for a party to avail himself of the services of others in prosecuting a suit for his benefit without paying that expense. I do not think the United States ought to be put in that position. I have no interest in it and do not care anything about it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not care anything in the world about it. I would rather the United States would make a direct appropriation than to do it in this way.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the amount stated here, $140,000, is entirely unreasonable. While I would vote for any reasonable expense in conducting the lawsuits, I would not for any such amount.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Ohio will observe that only such expenses are to be paid out of this fund as are found to be actually due and approved by the Attorney-General.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Suppose it should turn out, Mr. President, as it often does in cases of this character, that the persons who engaged in these lawsuits for these private parties made a contract in advance that if they won they should have fifteen cents an acre and if they did not win they should not have anything, then it would fall exactly within the words of this section:

> Said expenses to include the fees justly due to the attorneys retained at the instance of the settlers.

As a private bargain between the settlers and the attorneys, it is perfectly lawful to agree, or at least it is a very common practice—I will not say it is absolutely lawful—to have what is called a contingent fee, to agree upon the terms and amount of it; and therefore if there should happen to have been a contract by which the settlers, not settling under the railroad title, but settling on their own hook as preemptors or homestead-men, agreed to pay these gentlemen fifteen cents an acre, it is within the meaning of the act, if such contracts are lawful at all, and the money will be justly due, and they will have the $144,000, and ought to, if they agreed for it. They went to sea in an adventure and brought home a good cargo, and they are entitled to whatever they agreed to have, reasonable or unreasonable, as far as the United States is concerned; and the question is whether the sum, be it great or small, is to be taken out of the trust funds which we have agreed with the Indians shall be applied to their civilization. That is one question.

Where do we get the right to do that? The Senator says this was a suit for the benefit of the United States and we ought to pay the expense of it. Ah! Mr. President, the United States is supplied with district attorneys in abundance, with attorneys-general, and with solicitors-general, and with law clerks, and all the machinery of defending the interests of the United States; and had it been necessary for the interests of the United States to have other than the official counsel, then the law points out specifically the way and the means by which that assistant counsel shall be obtained. It was not this way and it was not by this means, as is confessed.

So then you come right back to the point that these gentlemen were employed by a certain part of the settlers, those who were resisting the right of the railway companies under the land grant and under the patents issued by the Interior Department.

Mr. HOWE. What is the evidence that the Attorney-General agreed to the employment of these counsel by the settlers?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have no evidence at all, except that I should suppose that that part of the settlers who bought under the patents that the United States had issued to the railroad company would not be very anxious to retain counsel to defeat their own title.

Mr. INGALLS. The United States issued no patent to the railroads.

Mr. EDMUNDS. To whom did they issue them?

Mr. INGALLS. To the State of Kansas.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is literally the case, but it comes to the same thing. We are sticking in the bark.

Mr. HOWE. The Senator concludes, as I should conclude, that those settlers who had purchased from the railroad companies would have no interest in fighting the United States; but what interest had those who did not purchase from the railroad companies, but who settled in violation of all the laws of the United States, in fighting for the United States?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I can tell the Senator.

Mr. HOWE. I should like to know.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the grants to the railway turned out to be valid then the railway took within the proper limits every alternate section, and the purchaser under the railway at $2.50 or $4 or $5 or $10 an acre, according to value, would get his title, and the squatters would not, who, in spite of the grant to the railway, if there was one, as was claimed, in spite of the issue of the patents to the State of Kansas, in spite of the State of Kansas passing over these patents to the railway company, in spite of the title thus derived from it, seek to oust these people under the railway? If they can do that or enter into the vacant lands not yet sold by the railway, then what? If you overturn the title granted to the State of Kansas, then all the squatters need, after that, is exactly the measure proposed by the Senator from Kansas. At this present moment, so far as I understand it, they have not any rights; but in spite of the treaty, which expressly declares that these lands shall not be open to pre-emption and homestead, but shall be sold in trust in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior for the best price and that money turned over to a certain fund——

Mr. HARVEY. Will the Senator from Vermont allow me to call his attention to the fact that, while he lays a great deal of stress upon the treaty requiring the lands to be disposed of by the Secretary of the Interior to the best advantage, the Secretary of the Interior, so far as he could, did dispose of them by certifying them to the State for the benefit of a railroad company, a disposition of them which would yield nothing for the benefit of the Indians, nothing for the benefit of the settlers, nothing in the way of carrying out the general land policy of the United States, but simply transferring it for the benefit of a railroad company?

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is perfectly true, Mr. President; but the action of the Secretary of the Interior, as has been decided by the Supreme Court, was absolutely illegal and void. Now we have got another Secretary of the Interior; we have got a guide by the decision of the highest tribunal in the land that the State of Kansas acquired no interest in these lands; that the treaty, and nothing else, protected them. It being found that the treaty protected them for the benefit of their original owners, it is proposed by this bill to say that, instead of their being sold as the treaty provides, they shall be sold at a sum named in an act of Congress, arbitrary and fixed, to the occupants of these lands, bona fide claimants claiming possession, &c., and of what money is produced fifteen cents an acre shall be applied to the payment of counsel of the settlers, and the residue shall go to the fund. If that is not in the face and eyes of the treaty, then I do not understand it.

It is true here is the act of 1869, which itself would have been in the face and eyes of the treaty if it had not had the little saving clause at the end, a joint resolution of four or five lines, which went through Congress, as such resolutions sometimes do, without any particular attention being attracted. That resolution very simply and pleasantly said the pre-emption and homestead people shall be entitled to settle, and so on.

Mr. HARVEY. The phrase was "actual settlers shall be entitled to purchase."

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the same thing, I suppose; actual settlers shall be entitled to purchase subject to outstanding rights. That is not the language of the act, but the idea. The act is now before me, and I will read it:

That any bona fide settler residing upon any portion of the lands sold to the United States, by virtue of the first and second articles of the treaty concluded between the United States and the Great and Little Osage tribe of Indians, September 29, 1865, and proclaimed January 21, 1867, who is a citizen of the United States or shall have declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States, shall be, and hereby is, entitled to purchase the same in quantity not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres, at the price of $1.25 per acre, within two years from the passage of this act, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, however, That both the odd and even numbered sections of said lands shall be subject to settlement and sale as above provided: And provided further, That the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections in each township of said lands shall be reserved for State school purposes in accordance with the provisions of the act of admission of the State of Kansas—

That is the matter referred to by the Senator from Ohio yesterday Then—

Provided, however, That nothing in this act shall be construed in any manner affecting any legal rights heretofore vested in any other party or parties.

What was the object of that saving clause? It was claimed by the railway companies under the State of Kansas that they were entitled to the alternate sections. It was claimed by the Indians' friends, if they had any, that these lands were bound to be sold in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, on a sacred trust, for the largest price that could honestly be got. Congress in passing this act put in a saving clause, which created no legal right in anybody, but actually defeated all legal rights, as it has turned out, unless the Senate are now prepared to say that this treaty means nothing at all or means something entirely different from what it says. That is the state of the case, Mr. President.

Mr. HARVEY. If the Senator from Vermont will permit me, I will call his attention to the fact that that proviso of which he speaks was alluded to in the opinion; I do not remember whether of the court or the dissenting opinion on this Osage-ceded-land case. The fact was stated that that proviso to that joint resolution was offered by one who was then a Senator from Kansas, and it was held by the counsel for the railroad company that it was a recognition of a right existing before, a recognition of what they claimed to be the grant to the railroad company. It was never claimed to have been anything else. So that asserted right being set aside by the decision of the highest court of the land, it cannot affect anything further as regards the rights of Indians, settlers, or any one else.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is most extraordinary logic. Undoubtedly the railroad companies claimed that no rights existed on the part of the settlers, for whom a very earnest appeal was made in the cause, because whoever had gone on there had gone on with his eyes wide open, with a caveat in the resolution; and that therefore it was a recognition that whatever legal rights the railways had should be protected, if they had any; but it does not follow from that, because it turns out they had not any, that language of that kind preserving all legal rights would not preserve the legal rights of an Indian as well as a white man.

Mr. HARVEY. It was claimed a recognition of the right claimed by attorneys of the railroads.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Exactly; but the court say it is not a recognition of anybody's right, only a saving of everybody's rights wherever everybody turned out to have rights. The railroad has turned out not to have any, but it remains to be seen whether the Government has not some.

I do not wonder, in the way these things go, that we have Indian wars and troubles. When it comes to be an axiom, founded upon incontrovertible facts of history, with the Indians, as it was stated I believe in the story of The Last of the Mohicans, that the pale-face carries a forked tongue, I do not wonder that the Indians sometimes kick out of the traces and behave, according to the little light they have, in a very rough way. Here if there is anybody in the world that we ought to keep faith with—it appears to me we ought to do it with everybody—it is with people who are not able to protect themselves, but who are not intelligent enough to understand that there may be sometimes violations of rights without intending it. We have promised these Indians that homestead and pre-emption rights should not be allowed in these lands; we have said to them "we will take them and sell them for your benefit, for cash, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, on the most advantageous terms." That is the solemn contract we made with them. Have they not a right to rely upon our good faith to carry it out?

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this bill may be continued until we can reach some conclusion about it. It is exceedingly important that some action should be taken by the Senate in order that, if we do not agree to the bill as it came from the House, the amendments or disagreements may be submitted to a committee of conference for the purpose of further consultation. I ask unanimous consent that this debate may go on until we reach some conclusion on the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that this debate go on until the bill is concluded. Is there objection?

Mr. DAVIS. Subject to a call for the regular order at twelve o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is to pass beyond that.

Mr. DAVIS. I certainly do object to anything throwing over the trial.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is only one minute left of the morning hour.

Mr. INGALLS. It cannot throw over the trial.

Mr. DAVIS. If it will interfere with it in any manner I shall object. I think promptly at twelve o'clock we should go on with the trial.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that this debate be continued beyond twelve o'clock.

Mr. KERNAN. How long?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is not advised.

Mr. INGALLS. Until we can reach some conclusion.

Mr. KERNAN. I object. We ought to finish the trial if we are ever going to do it. It may take all afternoon to reach a conclusion on this bill.

Mr. HARVEY. I hope Senators will not object to the proposition of my colleague to continue the debate on this bill. It is a matter of the utmost importance to the people of our State, and there seems to be a strange misapprehension of the facts and the law which we have no time within the morning hour to correct. I think if the debate be continued a little while the bill will be so understood that there will be no difficulty in passing it.

Mr. ALLISON. The river and harbor bill is not yet disposed of. I should be glad to take that up.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I believe the court is not disposed of either. Where is the court now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The court is not yet in session. The Senator from Kansas moves that the Indian land bill be continued until a call for the regular order. Is there objection?

Mr. KERNAN. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is raised.

Mr. DAVIS. I feel it my duty to call for the regular order, that the trial shall proceed, and I now give notice that I shall object to any business, unless it is the river and harbor bill, which certainly ought to have precedence as an appropriation bill over any other.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is a bigger appropriation, too. [Laughter.]

Mr. DAVIS. I call for the regular order.

Mr. PADDOCK. I have a little bill which for six weeks or more has been giving way to every measure, a bill in which everybody is interested. It is a bill in reference to a partial restoration of the franking privilege. I should like the indulgence of the Senate at an early hour for its consideration. It is a bill that will commend itself to the Senate. It needs no advocacy, and I think will give rise to but very little discussion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator ask for its present consideration?

Mr. PADDOCK. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia has called for the regular order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then why do we not have the court proceedings?

IMPEACHMENT OF W. W. BELKNAP.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The gavel is dropping now on the objection. Legislative and executive business will be suspended, and the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the articles of impeachment exhibited against William W. Belknap, late Secretary of War, by the House of Representatives.

The Senate then proceeded to the trial of the impeachment of William W. Belknap. late Secretary of War.

The Senate sitting for the trial of the impeachment of William W. Belknap having adjourned then resumed its

LEGISLATIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes its legislative session.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business is the bill (H. R. No. 3022) making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. INGALLS. I rise to a question of order, that more than one day having expired since the consideration of the river and harbor bill it is not now the unfinished business before the Senate, but must be taken up by a vote to that effect.

Mr. CONKLING. More than one day when there was time for it after the morning hour?

Mr. EDMUNDS. We have had up other bills and have passed them.

Mr. INGALLS. Legislative business has been transacted upon at least three separate days since the river and harbor bill was last under consideration.

Mr. ALLISON. By unanimous consent, however, and merely for a moment laying aside the impeachment trial. The order of the river and harbor bill has not been disturbed, as I understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order raised by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. INGALLS. I then move that the Senate continue the consideration of House bill No. 3625, providing for the sale of the Osage ceded lands in Kansas to actual settlers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not before the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to lay aside all prior orders and take up the river and harbor bill for consideration.

Mr. INGALLS. What was the ruling of the Chair on my motion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That the Senator from Kansas moved the continuance of a bill not before the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. To continue the consideration of House bill No. 3625, providing for the sale of the Osage ceded lands in Kansas to actual settlers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proper motion would be to take it up.

Mr. INGALLS. I suppose it is if the Chair proposes to be technical on the point and rule on a mere question of verbal criticism. I was not aware that the Chair was indulging in that species of criticism.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator says he intended to move to take up the bill, the Chair will put the question on that motion. The Chair will not be technical, but the Chair followed the language of the Senator, as he is usually very accurate.

Mr. ALLISON. Is it in order for me to substitute——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As soon as this motion is acted on the other motion will be in order. The Senator from Kansas moves to take up House bill No. 3625, which was before the Senate this morning.

The motion was not agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 3749) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 846) to punish the counterfeiting of trade-mark goods and the sale or dealing in of counterfeit trade-mark goods, with amendments; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 333) for the relief of Major Foster A. Hixon, late a paymaster in the Army;

A bill (S. No. 952) to remove the political disabilities of G. T. Beauregard, of New Orleans, Louisiana;

A bill (S. No. 983) to extend the duration of the court of commissioners of Alabama claims; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3749) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

BILLS BECOME LAWS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. U. S. GRANT, jr., his Secretary, announced that the President had on the 21st instant approved and signed the act (S. No. 894) to provide for the sale of the Fort Kearney military reservation, in the State of Nebraska.

The message also announced that the bill (S. No. 728) for the relief of Martha J. Coston, having been presented to the President of the United States on the 8th instant, and not having been returned by him to the Senate wherein it originated within the ten days (Sundays excepted) as prescribed by the Constitution, had become a law without his approval.

TRADE-MARK GOODS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 846) to punish the counterfeiting of trade-mark goods and the sale or dealing in of counterfeit trade-mark goods; which, on motion of Mr. CONKLING, were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. Now I renew my motion to take up the river and harbor bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3022) making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the motion of Mr. THURMAN to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to reduce the aggregate amount of the appropriations contained in the bill to a sum not exceeding $4,000,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. EATON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. EATON. Mr. President, I rejoice that I did not proceed with my remarks when I obtained the floor the other day. After a little time for reflection I became satisfied for one that this floor is not quite the place to make a political speech upon the river and harbor bill; and therefore I say that I rejoice that an adjournment took place. I shall make no speech upon this occasion, but I have a word or two to say to the honorable Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] and I should have to the honorable Senator from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] were he in his seat.

Sir, the honorable Senator from Ohio ventured to say in his place here, and I presume on his senatorial honor, that for forty years, since the organization of the whig party, there had been no public act of the democratic party which was defensible before the country. The honorable Senator from Indiana, coming to his assistance, said that that party had never performed a defensible or proper act. And all this was said in the face of the fact that for sixty years the history of the United States is the history of the democratic party. From four millions of people, under democratic rule, this country increased to forty millions of people, holding dominion on the land and on the sea. Our commerce was brought to equal that of the mistress of the seas, Old England herself; Louisiana and Florida and the Golden Ophir were acquired, all by democratic men and democratic measures. No act performed by the democratic party in forty years worthy of the regard of the people! Sir, I say, Out upon all such trash as this! It is childish and absurd, and ought not to be heard upon the floor of the Senate of the United States. I propose hereafter, in more than one part of this broad land, if I live, to talk about this matter, and I should be glad even in Ohio itself to discuss this question, based upon this very utterance of her Senator.

Another word, sir, and I shall be done. The Senator from Ohio, in great good temper and in great good taste, read us a lecture here with regard to the use of language which was improper touching the republican party and republican men. I find no fault with that, sir; but he ventured to couple the honorable name of Samuel J. Tilden with that of William M. Tweed, even after using the language to which I have alluded. Sir, there is no defense, there can be no defense here or elsewhere for such a connection. Benedict Arnold was once the trusted officer and associate of George Washington, the Father of his Country; and if my reading serves me one Judas Iscariot was called an apostle at one time; and it will not do, or, as the Senator's colleague is in the habit of saying, "it won't do" for any man on this floor or anywhere else to couple the name of Samuel J. Tilden with that of William M. Tweed or any other malefactor, as my friend from Georgia [Mr. GORDON] suggests, except as his prosecutor.

Now, sir, I am going into no defense of the democratic party; I am going into no defense of our trusted and honored leader; I make no charge against the republican party or any republican. Hereafter, if I feel it to be my duty, and elsewhere I will perform that duty to the best of my ability; but I did think it proper right here, where the facts of history have been falsified, to say that for sixty years the history of the democratic party was the history of the United States, and that no law was placed on our statute-book by any party that stood the test of five years' experience except by the democratic party, and Senators ought not to rise upon this floor and say that no act has been performed for forty years by that party that is worthy of the consideration of honest and honorable men.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut, by straining a little the language that I uttered in the heat of debate, has made an entirely new issue. I did not say that the democratic party had not done anything in the last forty years that was defensible. What I did say I will read; and, although it was said on the spur of debate, I have looked over it as printed, and I think every word of it can be sustained by sober and serious argument; and whenever my honorable friend, on the stump or here, engages in an argument as to the merits of the republican and the democratic parties I am prepared, however feebly, to meet him. When I read now what I said the other day, he will see how different the language he quotes is from the language I actually uttered. I will say that these affirmations made by me I believe are strictly true, and I here have to say that the precise words I uttered are the words reported, because I did not take the liberty, nor do I usually take the liberty in debates of this kind, to correct the notes of the reporter. I certainly did not on this occasion. I will read what I did say, and I will stand by that as a just version of the political history of this country. The Senator from North Carolina was speaking and I interrupted him:

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to ask my honorable friend what principle the democratic party now stands upon?

That was a troublesome question to my friend to answer.

Mr. MERRIMON. The great leading principle they are now standing upon and fighting for—embodying as they do a class of men that belonged to all parties in the past—is to reform maladministration and retrench the expenses of the Government.

Mr. SHERMAN. What single act of reform has the democratic party accomplished since 1840? In the history of our country I can show fifty for the republican party. Let us come down to the facts now. This is the commencement of a political campaign. Name me a single reform in doctrine, law, or practice that the democratic party has inaugurated and carried out.

I should like to hear my honorable friend from Connecticut go over the list.

Mr. MERRIMON. Why, sir, everybody in this country and throughout the whole civilized world knows that up to 1860 no country on the face of the globe prospered as did this country and that this Government had been administered by the democratic party substantially for forty years before that time.

That is the first time the "forty years" appear; forty years before 1860. I had not said anything about forty years before 1860, because the democratic party in the olden time was a party of progress, and then it called itself the republican party of Jefferson, Madison, and Monroe. Then I repeated:

Mr. SHERMAN. I say since 1840, since the organization of the new whig and democratic parties, name me a single reform or great measure which is enduring and now on the statute-book started, organized, and carried out by the democratic party.

Mr. MERRIMON. Why, sir, after 1840——

Then the Senator from Indiana put in a question which I will not read. Mr. President, upon those questions I should be very willing to discuss with my friend, or anybody else, the record of the democratic party. The next remark to which reference is made was later in the debate, where I said:

It is a remarkable fact, Mr. President, and I may as well put it in here as this is a political discussion, that there is not a single position taken by the democratic party for the last thirty years on which they now dare to make a stand and defend it.

That goes back to 1846. From 1846 to this time, since the time the slavery question commenced entering into American politics, the democratic party cannot stand upon any position it has taken. That is what I said then, and I believe it honestly now, and upon that point I am willing to debate with the Senator at any time.

The only other remark that the Senator from Connecticut objects to that I made—and I think he did me injustice, because I certainly did not want to say that Mr. Tilden is a man of the character of Mr. Tweed, and I did not say so——

Mr. EATON. I did not say you did. I say you coupled his name with that of Tweed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I did, and I had a right to do so.

Mr. EATON. What inference was to be drawn from it?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will repeat the language I uttered to show you that I did not go one single hair's-breadth beyond what was due to the facts:

Sir, the people will know who are these prophets of reform before they trust them. You must show something else than the history of the last few years in the Southern States; you must show something else in the nature of reform before they will trust the old associates of Tweed in New York.

That Mr. Tilden, although a different kind of man from Mr. Tweed, was the political associate and to a certain extent the personal associate of Mr. Tweed is shown by the history of the country, and I could read telegrams and letters to prove that fact. I have here quite a number of letters and telegrams handed me by my friend from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY] to show their intimate relations; but I do not wish to charge Mr. Tilden at all with the crimes committed by Tweed. I feel bound to say in justice to a political opponent that Mr. Tilden when he did participate, after long delay however, in the prosecution of Tweed, was a most effective and able instrument in bringing that man to punishment. But, sir, it is equally true that he came into the contest long after public opinion had gathered great force. If I am correctly informed he refused to become a member of the committee of seventy that was instituted to attempt to combine public opinion against Mr. Tweed; but when he did come in he came in with great power, and I will not deny that to the assistance of Mr. Tilden, to his participation in the legal trial, his array of the testimony, his power of analysis and arranging the facts, much is due. No doubt the aid he gave was effective, but still he was before that time the political associate of Mr. Tweed.

And, sir, here is another political fact that I want to discuss with my friend when he brings about this debate: in all the political reforms that distinguished Mr. Tilden and for which he has gained great credit in this country he was aided throughout by the republican party organization in the State of New York and was opposed by strong elements of the democratic organization. It was only because he aided the republican organization in bringing about certain reforms in the State of New York that he got the title which is now foisted upon him, partly deserved, of being the great reformer. Sir, he must bring something better into the contest that we are about to wage than the honors that he won in aiding the republican party in bringing about the recent reforms in the State of New York. I do not wish to engage in a political debate now, because I think we ought to go on with business.

Mr. KERNAN. Mr. President——

Mr. EATON. I hope my friend will give way to me a moment. It seems that I was entirely right that the Senator from Ohio did use precisely the language that I attributed to him.

Mr. SHERMAN. Not exactly.

Mr. EATON. He said that since the organization of the whig party——

Mr. SHERMAN. In 1840.

Mr. EATON. Not in 1840; 1840 was used in another connection; I beg pardon. The whig party did not organize in 1840 but many years before.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will read again what I said:

I say since 1840, since the organization of the new whig and democratic parties.

The issues that grew up in 1840 was the real commencement of the troubles between the democratic party and the whig party. I said since 1840, and it was to since that time that I wish to confine myself. I was careful to do so because I did not wish to go back and arraign the old proceeding of the republican or democratic party of the olden time, which I confess to be a party of great purposes and great principles and great achievements; but the party of modern times since 1840 is a very different thing, and I said 1840.

Mr. EATON. There are three things that the honorable Senator from Ohio said which he has read. Once he used the term "1840." The RECORD shows what it is.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. EATON. Once he spoke of the organization of the whig party. I do not think the RECORD gives exactly what my honorable friend said.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will read it; I have it here:

> I say since 1840, since the organization of the new whig and democratic parties, name me a single reform.

That is the only place in which I mentioned that subject.

Mr. EATON. The democratic party was not organized in 1840, whether my friend says so or not; the whig party was not organized in 1840, whether my friend says so or not. I hold him responsible for exactly what he has said and what the RECORD shows that he has said, and I am not to be drawn here to-day into any remarks against the republican party or republican men. But when the honorable Senator from Ohio tells this Senate again that Mr. Tilden was the associate of Tweed, I might as well say the President of the United States was the associate of McDonald. Sir, because a man has been associated heretofore with an individual who in after days has turned out not to be a man of high respectability, is he to be associated with his crime? Not so. I make no charge; I make no assault; I make no attack upon the republican party or republicans. Enough for me is it to say to my honorable friend that that matter shall be discussed hereafter. He stood here triumphantly with the Senator from Indiana and defied my honorable friend from Delaware and my honorable friend from North Carolina to name a single fraudulent republican, any one man who had been guilty of fraud. He was told "many." Then, said he, "do not let us be general, but give the names." I do not propose to name anybody out of a thousand. I will let that matter rest until hereafter, and let the honorable Senator from Ohio, if he chooses, go upon the stump in his own State or any other State and talk about the purity of his party and of many of its members.

Mr. KERNAN. Mr. President, I am not going to enter into this debate about party matters, for I am quite clear that at this stage of the session, with appropriation bills unmatured, we had better devote ourselves to the legitimate work before us. Nevertheless, as Mr. Tilden is a citizen of New York and has been referred to, I wish to say a word in reply to the Senator from Ohio. I think I speak what I know, and I appeal to intelligent republicans and to the republican press of New York as well as to my own recollection, when I say that so soon as the frauds in the city of New York were discovered—and I remember very well when I first knew of them in the early part of August, 1871—Mr. Tilden then consulted with gentlemen in the State in reference to them. I can say this of my own knowledge. He and Governor Seymour and other gentlemen at that time were decided that as those guilty of these frauds were of the party with which they and I acted, we should immediately take the stand that they must be turned out of that party. I remember very well at the democratic State convention that fall, Mr. Seymour and Mr. Tilden were there as delegates, and they insisted, and the result was to exclude from that convention the regular representation of what was known as the Tweed organization in New York City.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. KERNAN. Let me get through.

Mr. DAWES. I want to get a little information; I am in search of light.

Mr. KERNAN. Very well.

Mr. DAWES. I understand the Senator to say that Mr. Tilden, Governor Seymour, and other leaders of the party consulted, and determined that Mr. Tweed must be turned out. Can the Senator give me the precise date of the last time Mr. Tweed was elected to the Senate of New York by the democracy of New York?

Mr. KERNAN. He was elected to the Senate of New York in his district in the fall of 1871.

Mr. DAWES. The November after this convention?

Mr. KERNAN. The November after, and after at the State convention the delegates representing his organization were excluded, and expressly on the ground of the fraudulent and corrupt conduct of Tweed and his associates.

Mr. Tilden acted from that time onward against Tweed. For reasons that I will not stop to state, Mr. Tweed was able, as many another man has been who plunders the public and uses money and uses temporary influence to get elected, to secure his election, but he never took his seat. During that canvass, however, if you will look at the New York press, you will find that Mr. Tilden openly denounced him and all his corrupt associates. Mr. Tilden himself ran for the assembly with a view of bringing these corrupt men and the corrupt judges to justice, and he was elected and did what he could to that end.

I say this not because Mr. Tilden is a nominee for the Presidency, but because he is a citizen of the State whence I come. I think I could appeal to the New York Times and other papers in that city in confirmation of what I state. They contained articles stating in substance—I speak from memory—that Tilden and Seymour and men of their character had come to the front and were opposing Tweed's domination. I was not in Tweed's district, but the influence of Tilden and his friends was against him; and the papers to which I refer appealed to republicans to elect Tilden to the assembly for the sake of the reforms he was seeking to carry out.

I am not going to debate these matters here; let that debate go to the proper place; but I thought this much was due to Mr. Tilden, because so soon as these frauds were discovered, and from that time on—I appeal to the recollection of all fair men in the city of New York—he acted against and was hated by Tweed and his corrupt associates. His influence and efforts were against the election of Tweed in 1871, and in favor of bringing him to justice.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, this question is one of immense interest as a mere historical question, and it is one somewhat difficult to settle as to the precise point of time at which the democratic party ceased to be a party of progress and ceased to exert itself on behalf of the public good. Very strong arguments might be made in favor of several different dates. The Senator from Ohio may be somewhat mistaken; it is possible the Senator from Connecticut is not entirely right; but I think upon one point both the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from New York as well as the Senator from Ohio ought to agree, and that is that the river and harbor bill ought not to be recommitted to the committee; and I hope it will not be done.

Mr. WITHERS. If it be in order, I should like to say a word upon the proposition properly before the Senate, the motion to recommit the river and harbor bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is in order, specially in order.

Mr. WITHERS. Fortified by that ruling of the Chair I shall proceed to address a few remarks to the Senate upon the subjects which properly come before it for consideration upon the motion to recommit the river and harbor bill with instructions. Why this particular bill, which has sins enough of its own to answer for, evidently, should have been selected as the hook upon which to hang campaign speeches I am at a loss to discover, for certainly few bills have been discussed in the Senate which in themselves are more entirely free from a political complexion. If you will look back to the votes which have been given on this bill in its various stages, you will find the most singular conjunction of political sentiments represented on the one side and on the other; and certainly if the adage be true that misery makes us acquainted with strange bed-fellows, the river and harbor bill has precisely the same effect so far as regards the political affiliations which it produces.

I am opposed to the motion for a recommittal. I believe that it would be productive of delay and that it would protract still more indefinitely the time at which we shall arrive at a solution of this question. What would be the effect of a recommittal? The committee would have to go to work and re-adjust the whole bill from beginning to end; and when they had labored as assiduously as may be in their power and presented their bill, it would be subjected to precisely the same criticism and be obnoxious to the same amendments which have been ingrafted upon the bill which they did present, and we should be no nearer an end than we are at this very moment; not so near in fact. We have already ingrafted upon the bill, I hope, all the amendments which are likely to be proposed to it; and if any others are to be suggested, now is the time and here is the place to present them. The Senate have the bill now entirely before them, and they can shape it to suit their ideas of propriety and expediency and justice.

I have a single word or two to say in reply to some of the Senators in this Chamber who have undertaken to lecture and reprove Senators here for sustaining appropriations for their own particular sections. I always hold myself amenable to reproof, and submit to it patiently and quietly where the party who assumes the power to reprove is himself stainless in respect to the offenses for which he undertakes to enact the part of Mentor. I have, and would have, much more faith and a stronger belief in the sincerity of Senators when they announce the existence of conscientious scruples as to the constitutional power of the Senate to pass these appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors, if I could find in one single instance that the Senators who play the part of Mentor and of reprover have voted against a proposition or an amendment appropriating moneys for rivers and harbors in their own States. If they will get up and show me one single instance where they have voted against propositions for the improvement of their own rivers and their own harbors, I will sit and quietly receive their reproof; but, until that is done, I respectfully refuse to be lectured by them. We have it narrated in Holy Writ that when the woman was brought forward in order that she might receive the condemnation of our Saviour, He, knowing whereof He spoke, said, "Let him that is without sin amongst you cast the first stone." I occupy that position here now. I say to my colleagues in the Senate of either political party, "Let him that is without sin in this respect cast the first stone;" but let no man who is conscious of having voted for appropriations for his own section presume to lecture me for having done the same thing for my section. The most notable example was by the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. WHYTE,] who I regret to see is not now in his seat. He made one particular amendment, in which my own State was interested and in which I felt myself a deep interest, the subject rather of ridicule and satire when he brought forward the improvement of the New River as an illustration of the extreme and very objectionable length to which amendments on this bill had been agreed to; yet at that time the voice of my honorable friend from Maryland had scarcely ceased to ring around the walls of this Chamber advocating an amendment which he himself offered of $150,000 for the improvement of the Upper Potomac above the forks of the stream. I undertake to say in the face of the Senate that if the whole waters of the Upper Potomac were turned into New River they would not raise that stream two inches.

This river and harbor bill, I presume, contains in it many features which are objectionable; many amendments have probably been ingrafted upon it which ought not to have been passed; but from the best information I can procure it is no worse in that respect than the river and harbor bills which have been enacted here year after year. On the score of economy, although the bill has been increased by nearly $900,000 beyond the figures at which it came to us from the House or as it was presented to the Senate by our committee, yet still, with this increase upon the bill, my word for it, no appropriation bill has passed or will pass the Senate which is less objectionable on the score of economy than this bill. I believe no amount of money can possibly be expended which is appropriated in any bill which will result in more lasting benefit to the community than this river and harbor bill. It is, in fact, the only bill the appropriations under which are of lasting and permanent benefit to the country. Its general benefits are not evanescent. They do not pass away with the year in which they are appropriated. When a harbor is improved, when a river is improved and opened up to navigation so as to afford an outlet to the country which it enters, for the first time that becomes a permanent source of blessing to the whole country adjacent thereto, developing production, increasing trade, and adding to the resources and wealth of the country.

Senators object to local improvements as contradistinguished from national. Many of them urge that works of national importance ought to be improved, but that the particular amendment pending at the time is of mere local importance. I ask any Senator on this floor to define to me exactly the point at which an improvement ceases to be national and becomes local. Senators have undertaken to define it. My friend from Maryland especially undertook to restrict it to such localities as were covered by the judiciary act which defined the limits of the navigable waters that were properly to be designated as of national importance; but when a river which flows entirely through one State and into part of two others is excluded from recognition as a work of national importance by this principle, it seems to me that his definition is entirely at variance with fact.

I shall not undertake to push this part of the argument further, because I know the Senate is anxious to get a vote on the bill, and I know that I am; but I will say, using a homely illustration, that the point at which an improvement ceases to be national and becomes local is as difficult of definition and as utterly indefinable as that at which a pig ceases to be a pig and becomes a hog.

Mr. President, I think that the best disposition which can be now made of the bill is for its friends to stand by it in its present form. I hope that it will not be loaded down by any additional amendments. I hope that it will not be recommitted with instructions to frame a new bill appropriating only $4,000,000. I hope that $4,000,000 will not be placed in the hands of the Secretary of War to be expended at his sole discretion and judgment. I am also compelled to oppose the substitute offered by my friend from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON,] because I believe the bill in its present form is preferable to it. I am willing, for one, to take the bill as it is, assuming all the responsibilities which it devolves should it pass this body; and if the House dissent from it, let a committee of conference arrange the points of difference as they do on other bills in which is developed a contrariant sentiment between the two bodies.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, the origin and progress of this bill thus far in the two branches really, I think, suggests to the mind of a legislator a serious question as to what is the best form of making appropriations for such objects as are contemplated in the bill. I think no one can have watched the progress of appropriation bills of different kinds through the two Houses for the last ten years without the question seriously coming up whether after all the system adopted, and perhaps necessary under our institutions, is safe and wise. We have illustrated here two methods, one adopted in the other branch and the other adopted here. In the other branch, a bill is prepared by two or three gentlemen in a committee-room, closed from the deliberations of the body, opened only to such as the few in the committee-room may choose. In that method, with these two or three men called a subcommittee with no previous preparation or special knowledge of the subject itself, some $6,000,000 of the public money is distributed for public works, not according to the estimates of the Engineer Department or of any other body of men responsible for the work when the appropriation is made, or of any body of men having any responsibility for the system or for the effect upon the country at large, but so distributed and placed as men are placed in order of battle where the greatest strength, according to the judgment of these men in the committee-room, may be brought to the measure which they themselves may judge to be beneficial for the purposes which are uppermost in their minds. That bill so framed and so arranged is put through under rules that permit its enactment, so far as one body is concerned, without deliberation, without discussion, without the possibility of amendment, but taken as it is prepared by these two or three men in this way.

The bill comes to this branch and another method is adopted here. The bill thus framed is referred to a committee, and the committee examine it, consider it, and undertake to adapt it to what they understand to be the views of that department of the Government which is responsible for its distribution. They bring it before this body, where there is nothing to hinder deliberation and amendment, and it goes through the opposite process here. It comes out, everybody confesses, worse than when it went in. So the method of one branch and the method of the other branch seem equally to have failed. We are told here that, instead of following the recommendation of those who not only make this subject their study but are educated for the purpose and are organized into a permanent bureau for the administration of this branch of the public service and the expenditure of this money, who look upon the whole as a system, and its application not only to localities, but to localities in reference to the whole, we vote for appropriations that may be asked by any member in reference to his own particular locality, and expect in return a like support.

There are certain kinds of appropriation bills that, in the increase of numbers and the multiplication of diverse and conflicting interests in this country, cannot run this gauntlet. The question is whether they can stand either the method under which this bill came to this branch or the method which reviewed the action of our committee and brought this bill out in its present shape. I have before me a circular issued by an association of leading statesmen in England whose attention has been called to the subject and who have made the method of appropriations for the service of this Government a study. They prepared certain inquiries for information, and it is really a curiosity to read these inquiries. Among them they inquire whether there is any Department of the Government of the United States that makes estimates beforehand for the necessary appropriations for the carrying on of the Government of the United States. Then they inquire what weight those estimates have in the consideration of an appropriation bill, and whether the conclusions of the committee who have in charge the appropriation bills have any more weight in the body than those of any other person. I think nothing would be more instructive to the Cobden club than to furnish them with the record of the debates of this body upon the river and harbor bill.

The Senator from Vermont proposes to place $4,000,000, instead of the amount appropriated by this bill, in charge of those who are responsible to the country for its expenditure. Against that measure it is cried out that that is putting too much power in the hands of a single man or a single Department. This cry comes from those who ask us to support the House bill as it now is. Who made the House bill? Who distribute under the House bill $6,000,000 precisely according to their own views? A subcommittee of a committee, a subcommittee whose very names are not known to the country, who in their absence are perfectly irresponsible and shed off upon the whole body and upon the Senate the entire responsibility of the defects and faults acknowledged in the bill. Against that proposition, too, is urged the objection which I have suggested by those who stand up here in the Senate and say that they believe the Representative from each district knows more about the propriety of an expenditure for a river and harbor improvement in that district than possibly can be known by the Engineer Department, although that Department has from the beginning of the Government studied this whole work as a system and has expended for forty years the appropriations made year after year in the improvement of rivers and harbors, and are responsible for the efficient and economic expenditure of every dollar appropriated by the Government. It is said that the Representative of the district knows better whether it will take $10,000 or $20,000 to complete a public work of improvement than those who are appointed for that purpose, and under whose supervision the money must be expended, and knows better whether the effect of the expenditure will be beneficial in its results upon the commerce of the country, for which purposes all this money is to be expended. I would not desire myself to put $4,000,000 under the Secretary of War or the Chief of the Bureau of Engineers for expenditure if there were other more practical and useful ways for the expenditure of it; but the experience which I have had with these appropriation bills, in the making of them and in the expending of the money, satisfies me that when occasionally we have resorted to that method, as we did in 1869 and as we have done on one or two other occasions, every dollar thus put at the disposal of those who were to be held to the strictest responsibility has been expended in a way to bring the most permanent improvement to the rivers and harbors of the country. As compared with the actual and real disposition which is to be made of between $6,000,000 and $7,000,000, if the call upon "the friends of this bill" is heeded to take the House bill as it came to us, it is only the difference between that Department and the subcommittee appointed at the other end of this building. As between the two, I have no hesitancy in saying that I believe the money itself will be better expended by the Department, more usefully to the country, and more enlarge the general and beneficial effects of the commerce in the improvement of the rivers and harbors of this country capable of improvement within the constitutional power of the Government, than perhaps by any other method.

I believe that the time will come when all this expenditure of money must go through some such agency as that, or else in repeating year after year such an experience as this river and harbor bill presents since it was first reported in the other branch, we shall wreck the Treasury itself. Therefore I shall support any measure that will bring home the responsibility of the expenditure of whatever money is appropriated to some man or some Bureau or some organization that shall answer when it is done for the manner in which it is done, and a measure which shall reduce the amount thus appropriated to the smallest possible sum consistent with that care and improvement of the rivers and harbors of this country which the growing commerce of the country demands.

Without drawing this debate away from the subject-matter of the bill, in one moment before I sit down I wish to correct a few figures submitted to the Senate several days ago by the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. MERRIMON.] I do not do this with a desire of renewing political debate, but solely for the purpose of setting the Senator from North Carolina, who I know does not mean to mislead, right upon matters on which I think some one has led him astray. I have called his attention to some of those figures, and now with the leave of the Senate I will do so again, so that the correction may go upon the record again as it has heretofore. Of course it had escaped the notice of the Senator from North Carolina. Those figures, taken by him with an indorsement which justified it, went over the wires the afternoon that he delivered his speech as an authentic statement of the matters which he had submitted to the Senate. I know no one more readily than the Senator from North Carolina would, if he were in an error, desire to be corrected. The Senator read to the Senate two tables. One of them I recognize as an old acquaintance. I think it is for the fourth time in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. As long ago as March, 1874, a distinguished member of the Forty-third Congress in the other branch read to the then House of Representatives what he said was a "statement of the number of employés borne upon the civil list of the United States from 1859 to 1874, inclusive, compiled from the Biennial Registers," to show what an enormous increase had arisen in the civil service of the country under the present administration. In a few days after that the chairman of the Civil Service Committee of the House of Representatives, Mr. Kellogg, of Connecticut, reproduced this table and analyzed it, and whatever I may be able to communicate by way of correction is no labor of my own, but his. This was put upon the record with the identical table itself within four or five days of the time it was produced in the House. Notwithstanding all that absolute demonstration of its infidelity and incorrectness and absurdity upon its face, it was produced last week, I think by the same member, precisely as he originally produced it. The Senator from North Carolina has been led astray by adopting it, and it was produced here the other day. A single glance at it will show how utterly absurd is the statement. Take the Navy Department, for instance, and see what this table shows the increase in the civil list of the Navy Department to be, year after year from 1859 to 1873, when this table was made out. It begins with a total of 92 in 1859, 98 in 1861, 138 in 1863, 141 in 1865, 163 in 1867, 173 in 1869, 201 in 1871, a gradual increase as everything had increased. Then in 1873, 8,241, leaping from 1871 to 1873 from 301 to 8,241.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the statement of the table?

Mr. DAWES. That is the statement in this table which the Senator from North Carolina had read to us the other day.

Mr. RANDOLPH. May I interrupt the Senator to inquire from whom does that statement originate?

Mr. EDMUNDS. From everybody's clerk.

Mr. DAWES. I will go through it, and come to that in a moment. Everybody knows that if 201 was the full statement of the table of the civil list of the Navy in 1871, 8,241 could not have been the civil list in 1873, because no such great increase as that was possible without having been spread by a law upon the record here. You cannot create by fiat at the other end of the Avenue these officers. They are the creation of law. The whole Navy, if I remember aright, all told, is 8,500, and 8,241 is put down as the civil list of the Navy. I will not detain the Senate by going through all the Departments. The War Department was 336 in 1859, 823 in 1861, 1,419 in 1863, jumping up from 823. Take the Post-Office Department, which has a very large civil list. Here, as I read these figures, it gradually increased as the country increased from year to year, until it came to this fatal spot, and then leaped up. The Post-Office Department had a total in 1859 of thirty-eight odd thousand; in 1861, thirty-nine odd thousand; in 1863, thirty-eight thousand and a fraction; in 1865, nearly forty-one thousand; in 1867, 42,000; in 1869, 41,000; in 1871, 43,000; in 1873, 60,225.

Mr. CRAGIN. If the Senator will allow me, if his table is like the one I have before me, he will find that the Post-Office Department leaped up to 86,000 in 1873.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from New Hampshire is reading a different column from me. I think I am right. How came the gentleman who first invented this table to fall into this error? The Senator says it is taken from the Biennial Registers, and so it is, but how is a Biennial Register made up? Up to the time indicated when this great change was made, this alarming increase in the civil list, the Biennial Register contained only the names of those whom everybody would fix upon as belonging to the list, officers holding commissions and in the service of the United States, about which there was no question. After that some ambitious and enterprising editor of the Biennial Register thought, for purposes wise and convenient to those who used the register it may be, that it was better to have in the register every man's name who was employed at all by the Government, and so he put into that register five hundred new pages of names. They were employés of the Government it is true. Some of them had been employed by the Government to the amount of $2, some $4, some $6. When the same man was employed in this Department or this Bureau to-day and a week or two hence in another, his name went into both.

Mr. CRAGIN. If the Senator will allow me, I will tell him that under special mail service eighty-three cents was paid to persons whose names were put into the Register.

Mr. DAWES. Yes, fifty cents, eighty-three cents. Anybody who ran upon an errand, who took a letter and had to pay the expense of sending it off on a coach was in one sense an employé of the Government, and was immortalized in the Blue Book. All the newspapers that advertised for the Government were put down in it as employés of the Government. This great National Republican down here, that sheds its light upon us all every morning, appears a dozen times in the Blue Book on the civil list, because it advertises for a dozen different Bureaus. To still further account for this great increase I will state that they counted ninety-three of the centennial commissioners, who are paid not by the Government but by the centennial people, who have nothing to do with the Government in the proper sense of the word, but are simply, under the statute creating the centennial corporation, appointed by the President of the United States. Then all the employés in the District of Columbia are included, as if that was any part of the United States Government, the employés of the Insane Asylum here, for instance. Not only the head of that asylum is included, who is properly perhaps a person in the civil service of the United States, but every employé down to the chambermaid and the cook and the door-tender. They are all recorded here and go to swell up this list. Every post-boy, every post-carrier, and every mail contractor is put down. A mail contractor who has a dozen contracts is repeated a dozen times. That, in short, is the way this Blue Book was made up for the year 1873. From that book at that time and from that time back was drawn off this table. I do not complain of the Senator from North Carolina, for the Senator from North Carolina had perhaps a reason to suppose that a table thus produced from this official record might be relied upon by him; but I have some cause to express surprise that the member who repeated the use of it after all this had been demonstrated before his eyes upon the floor of the House and who had nothing to say in reply should have reproduced it as an authentic document, fairly and properly stating to the country the civil service of the United States now as contrasted with that service in 1859.

One other table was used by the Senator from North Carolina, and to that I desire to call his attention. The heading of the table is:

Summary and comparative statement of expenditures or appropriations in the several branches of the public service named in the fiscal years from 1868 to 1875, respectively.

I call the attention of the Senator from North Carolina and of the Senate to this statement of "expenditures or appropriations." Which does he mean? There is a good deal of difference between them. I desire first to call his attention to the wide difference between this statement and the appropriations for those years. I have an official statement of all the appropriations for each of those years which I will, with the permission of the Senate, have printed in the RECORD, the footing of which I will ask the attention of the Senate to as compared with the footing in the table offered by the Senator from North Carolina.

NOTE.—The statement referred to is:

1868.—Second session Thirty-ninth Congress.

RECAPITULATION.

Deficiencies for the year ending June 30, 1867	$1,135,953 62
Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1868	19,133,000 00
Pensions for the year ending June 30, 1868	33,280,000 00
Consular and diplomatic for the year ending June 30, 1868	1,425,454 00
Military Academy for the year ending June 30, 1868	368,913 00
Repair, completion of certain public works	4,702,781 70
Legislative, executive, and judicial, for the year ending June 30, 1868	23,400,191 89
Sundry civil expenses for the year ending June 30, 1868	5,307,191 38
Deficiencies for the year ending June 30, 1867	10,493,439 05
Army for the year ending June 30, 1868	23,874,454 00
Repair of public works year ending June 30, 1868	1,290,000 00
Naval service for year ending June 30, 1868	16,288,244 01
Indian Department for year ending June 30, 1868	3,042,003 86
Miscellaneous	1,421,163 46
	145,162,789 97

1868.—First session Fortieth Congress.

Object of appropriations.	Amount.	Total.
Amount brought forward	$150,000 00	$475,751 92
To enable the Secretary of the Interior to subsist such friendly Indians as may have separated or may hereafter separate themselves from the hostile bands or tribes and seek the protection of the United States	300,000 00	450,000 00
By the act to carry into effect the convention with the republic of Venezuela for the adjustment of claims of citizens of the United States on the government of that republic.
For carrying out the provisions of this act		Indefinite.

1868.—First Session, Fortieth Congress—Continued.

Object of appropriation.	Amount.	Total.
By the joint resolution to carry into effect the several acts providing for the more efficient government of the rebel States.
For the purpose of carrying into effect the above-named acts		$1,000,000 00
Total		1,925,751 92

1868.—Second session Fortieth Congress.

RECAPITULATION.

Deficiencies for the execution of the reconstruction laws and for Quartermaster's Department for year ending June 30, 1868	$12,839,196 21
Military Academy for year ending June 30, 1869	276,512 00
Post-Office Department for year ending June 30, 1869	21,069,000 00
Consular and diplomatic expenses for year ending June 30, 1869	1,212,434 00
Army for year ending June 30, 1869	33,082,093 00
Naval service for year ending June 30, 1869	17,356,350 00
Legislative, executive, and judicial for year ending June 30, 1869	17,906,317 09
Sundry civil expenses for year ending June 30, 1869	8,174,979 66
Pensions for year ending June 30, 1869	30,350,000 00
Deficiencies for the year ending June 30, 1868	4,163,026 64
Indian Department for the year ending June 30, 1869	3,847,528 45
Miscellaneous	10,274,448 80
Total	160,551,885 85

1870.—Third session Fortieth Congress.

RECAPITULATION.

Military Academy for the year ending June 30, 1870	$274,488 88
Pensions for the year ending June 30, 1870	19,250,000 00
Naval service for the year ending June 30, 1870	15,832,246 00
Legislative, executive, and judicial for the year ending June 30, 1870	20,354,774 76
Sundry civil expenses for the year ending June 30, 1870	9,976,228 81
Deficiencies for the year ending June 30, 1869	20,763,270 98
Army for the year ending June 30, 1870	33,350,893 20
Consular and diplomatic for the year ending June 30, 1870	1,110,734 00
Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1870	30,279,153 00
Miscellaneous	527,988 31
Total	151,719,777 94

1870.—First session Forty-first Congress.

RECAPITULATION.

Deficiencies for the year ending June 30, 1869, and additional appropriations for the year ending June 30, 1870	$2,913,738 62
Indian Department for the year ending June 30, 1870	6,121,004 81
Rivers and harbors for the year ending June 30, 1869, and June 30, 1870	2,000,000 00
Miscellaneous	31,200 00
		$11,065,943 43
		162,865,721 37

1871.—Second session Forty-first Congress.

RECAPITULATION.

Appropriation for Military Academy for fiscal year ending June 30, 1871	$314,869 20
For deficiencies for the year ending June 30, 1870	4,334,552 03
For consular and diplomatic expenses for year ending June 30, 1871	1,041,347 00
For pensions for year ending June 30, 1871	30,000,000 00
For repairs of fortifications for year ending June 30, 1871	1,311,500 00
For repair, preservation, and completion of public works on rivers and harbors for year ending June 30, 1871	3,945,900 00
For Post-Office Department for year ending June 30, 1871	26,298,993 00
For legislative, executive, and judicial expenses for year ending June 30, 1871	18,949,258 40
For sundry civil expenses for year ending June 30, 1871	13,447,721 70
For deficiencies for years ending June 30, 1870 and 1871	2,087,214 43
For the Army for year ending June 30, 1871	29,321,367 22
For the Navy for year ending June 30, 1871	19,250,290 29
For the Indian Department for year ending June 30, 1871	6,324,164 16
Miscellaneous	4,916,645 72
Total	161,533,823 15

1872.—Third session Forty-first Congress.

RECAPITULATION.

For the payment of invalid and other pensions for the year ending June 30, 1872	$29,050,000 00
For the Military Academy for the year ending June 30, 1872	316,269 50
For consular and diplomatic expenses for the year ending June 30, 1872	1,406,134 00
For the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses for the year ending June 30, 1872	19,518,229 24
For sundry civil expenses for the year ending June 30, 1872	$23,421,773 86
Unexpended balances re-appropriated	500,000 00
Transfer on books of the Treasury	200,000 00
Heretofore appropriated	20,000 00
		24,161,773 86
For deficiencies for the years ending June 30, 1870 and 1871, and for former years, and for other purposes	$11,263,131 04
Half-yearly appropriations for expenses of collecting the revenue from customs	2,750,000 00
		14,023,131 04
For the Army for year ending June 30, 1872		27,719,580 00
For the Navy for year ending June 30, 1872		19,832,317 25
For public works for year ending June 30, 1872		4,407,500 00
For Indian Department for year ending June 30, 1872		5,448,540 96
For Post-Office Department for year ending June 30, 1872		26,032,898 00
For fortifications for year ending June 30, 1872		1,627,500 00
Miscellaneous		1,261,2 8 80
Total		174,865,082 65

1873.—First session Forty-second Congress.

RECAPITULATION.

By the act making appropriations for deficiencies, &c		$1,239,293 11
In which are included appropriations of the following character, namely: Unexpended balance of appropriation for Senate Select Committee on Alleged Outrages in Southern States	Indefinite.
Unexpended balance of March 3, 1869, for the purchase of building known as the Club House at Charleston; covered into the Treasury and re-appropriated	$9,735 22
Appropriation in coin	12,000 00
For custom-house at Saint Paul, being the balance of an appropriation for that building standing to its credit on the books of the Treasury	35,163 65
Appropriation by act of March 3, 1869, for public buildings in Omaha, re-appropriated	25,000 00
Miscellaneous appropriations		14,807 64
Total		1,254,100 75

1873.—Second session Forty-second Congress.

RECAPITULATION.

For the payment of invalid and other pensions for the year ending June 30, 1873	$30,480,000 00
For the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses for the year ending June 30, 1873	18,671,785 74
For deficiencies for the year ending June 30, 1872, and for former years, and for other purposes	6,045,259 96
For the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1873	18,296,733 95
For consular and diplomatic expenses for the year ending June 30, 1873	1,219,659 00
For the Military Academy for the year ending June 30, 1873	326,101 32
For the Indian Department for the year ending June 30, 1873	6,349,462 04
For fortifications	2,037,000 00
For the Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1873	28,519,341 84
For the Army for the year ending June 30, 1873	28,683,615 32
For rivers and harbors	5,588,000 00
For sundry civil expenses for the year ending June 30, 1873, and for other purposes	20,148,413 90
Miscellaneous	7,129,642 48
Total	173,495,015 55

1874.—Third session Forty-second Congress.

RECAPITULATION.

By the act making appropriations for the payments of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the year ending June 30, 1874	$30,480,000 00
By the act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1873, and other purposes	1,699,833 82
By the act making appropriations for the expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1874, and for other purposes	5,541,418 90
By the act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1874, and for other purposes	17,120,496 60
By the act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1874	32,186,129 09
By the act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1874, and for other purposes	11,278,584 78
By the act making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1874, and for other purposes	22,276,257 65
By the act making appropriations for the completion of certain public works in rivers and harbors, and for other purposes	6,102,900 00
By the act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1874	31,796,008 81
By the act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1874	32,529,167 00
By the act making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1874, and for other purposes	1,311,359 00
By the act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the year ending June 30, 1874	344,317 56
By the act making appropriations for certain fortifications and other works of defense for the year ending June 30, 1874	1,899,000 00
By the act making appropriations for the payment of claims reported allowed by the commissioners of claims under act of Congress of March 3, 1871	789,083 86
Miscellaneous	2,565,740 31
Total	197,920,297 38

1875.—First session Forty-third Congress.

RECAPITULATION.

By the act making appropriations for the payment of pensions for the year ending June 30, 1875	$29,980,000 00
By the act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes	20,783,900 80
By the act making appropriations for the expenses of the Indian Department for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes	5,680,651 96
By the act making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1875	3,494,804 00
By the act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the year ending June 30, 1875	$339,835 00
By the act making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes	5,218,000 00
By the act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1875	35,756,091 00
By the act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1875	27,788,500 00
By the act making appropriations for the construction, preservation, and repair of certain fortifications and other works of defense for the year ending June 30, 1875	904,000 00
By the act making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1875	16,813,946 20
By the act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1873 and 1874, and for other purposes	4,083,914 26
By the act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1875	27,009,744 81

By the act making appropriations for the payment of claims reported allowed by the commissioners of claims under the act of Congress of March 3, 1871	$663,768 82
By the act making appropriations for the extraordinary expenses of the naval service	4,000,000 00
Miscellaneous	1,257,845 31
Total	183,685,002 16

1876.—Second session Forty-third Congress.

RECAPITULATION.

For pensions	$30,000,000 00
For legislative, executive, and judicial expenses	18,902,236 99
For Indian service	5,360,554 55
For sundry civil expenses	96,644,350 09
For deficiencies	4,703,699 18
For rivers and harbors	6,643,517 50
For Army	27,933,830 00
For Navy	17,001,006 40
For consular and diplomatic service	1,374,985 00
For Post-Office	37,524,361 00
For Military Academy	364,740 00
For fortifications	850,000 00
For awards of commissioners of claims	729,653 62
Miscellaneous	1,133,275 57
Total for the year ending June 30, 1876	179,166,209 90

It will be observed that the Senator's table is not footed up. I have taken the liberty to foot it up, and his table of "expenditures or appropriations" for each year I will compare with this official statement.

For 1868 the Senator has it $221,171,256.30. The official statement of the appropriations for that year, including the deficiency for the year before, is $145,102,788.97; $145,000,000 against $221,000,000. I have also the objects for which the appropriations were made. For 1869 the Senator's table gives a total of $186,593,085.91. The official statement is $160,551,885.85. For 1870 the Senator has $160,931,340.64; and the official statement is $162,885,721.37. For the year 1871 the Senator's table is $152,414,678.09; the official statement is $161,533,823.15 For 1872 he has $156,058,947; the official statement is $174,865,082.65. For 1873 he has $181,699,444.75; the official statement is $173,495,015.55. For 1874 the Senator has $195,334,207.26, while the official statement is $197,920,297.38. For 1875 the Senator has $191,936,526.08; the official statement is $183,685,002.16. Eighteen hundred and seventy-six the Senator has not in his table, and I give him the appropriations for that year at $179,166,209.90.

I speak of this to show the utter want of reliability in the table which some gentleman has furnished the Senator from North Carolina, for I know the Senator's desire for accuracy would have led him, if he had done the work himself, to be more accurate. He has done just precisely what I do myself. I employ others to gather up these figures. I have here the expenditures for those years, and I desire to put them upon the record. The net ordinary expenditures, not including those for the interest on the public debt and those which are permanent expenditures, are as follows:

Report of the Secretary of the Treasury, 1875, Forty-fourth Congress, first session, Executive Document No. 2. (Table II, page 17.)

NET ORDINARY EXPENDITURES.

1868	$229,915,088 11
1869	190,496,354 95
1870	164,421,507 15
1871	157,583,827 58
1872	153,201,856 19
1873	189,488,636 90
1874	194,118,985 60
1875	171,529,848 27

I have done all that I desired to do in rising in correcting the figures of the Senator from North Carolina, but I may be permitted before I sit down to call attention to one single fact in this connection, that all along from the year 1869 to the year 1876, every year except one exceptional year, there has been a constant decrease in the appropriations and also in the actual expenditures of this Government, the appropriations starting out in a reduction of something like ten or twelve millions the first year, and averaging from five to ten millions each year all along with the exception of one year, where there was a failure to make any reduction in the expenditures; and I have to say in connection with that, as well as with this table of actual expenditures, that the measures of reform, as they are called, to which we are invited at this time come upon the heel of eight years consecutive faithful application of the principle of reform and cutting down of expenditures in every department and in every branch of the public service consistent with its efficiency and its faithfulness. Any attempt now at any radical and serious reduction in the appropriations for the necessary civil service of this Government will find this difficulty in its way: it will be applied to a service which has been under the supervision of committees for eight years whose sincere desire and whose earnest effort has been from the beginning, wherever there was a dollar of public money that could be saved, to cut off that dollar from the appropriations, and the effort has been successful. And, sir, I have little confidence in that proclamation of a reduction of expenditures by $50,000,000 which heralded in the work of this session of Congress from the mouths of those who had had no experience in this work, and who, although themselves members of the House and of the Senate, during all this effort had failed in the years that were past to point out one single spot in which a dollar could be saved without being accompanied with crippling or curtailing the public service beyond that which wise and broad and prudent statesmanship would justify. I had in view, therefore, a double purpose in putting these tables upon the record at this time, to show not only the unreliability of the figures which the Senator from North Carolina had used, but also that other purpose of showing whether the Congresses for the last eight years had been faithful in this effort of theirs to answer the call of the people for economy in the public service. Now, when after the work of this Congress shall have been completed, that is, when deficiencies shall have been supplied after the end of the fiscal year, I have confidence that is not shaken at all by professions that the work of the years and Congresses that have passed will not suffer in comparison with that of the present Congress.

Mr. MERRIMON. I ask leave to trouble my honorable friend with a question. I wish to ask him whether about the time the table was produced to which he has referred and which I incorporated in my remarks the other day he did not himself in a certain place deliver a very able speech in which he exposed the irregularities and the extravagances practiced by the existing Administration, and whether his speech did not at that time create a very considerable sensation in republican quarters as well as throughout the country, and his speech was strongly animadverted upon by persons who were not exactly pleased with it?

Mr. DAWES. I do not know to what the Senator alludes. If I may be allowed to allude to what I have tried to do myself since I have been in Congress, I would state that I set out a great many years ago with a rule from which I have never departed, that I would hunt out any waste of money or any fraudulent transaction of any official, whether friend or foe, without distinction, and wherever I saw the head of a rogue I would hit it and wherever I saw that it was possible to save a dollar of the public money I would do it; and I remember on different occasions—I do not know to what particular occasion the Senator from North Carolina alludes—but I remember on several occasions, after a very great deal of study and examination, I did think that there were points upon which an improvement in the public service could be made, and I held up those points for the consideration of the body of which I was a member, and I had the gratification to know that that body in the main co-operated with any feeble effort on my part in the line to which the Senator has directed my attention.

Mr. CRAGIN. Mr. President, my attention was attracted to one of the tables referred to by my honorable friend from Massachusetts, the one in relation to "the number of employés borne upon the civil list of the United States from 1859 to 1875, inclusive, compiled from the Biennial Registers," and a moment's examination of the Biennial Register itself, without any reference to what was said in any other part of this Capitol, convinces me of the total unreliability of this statement. The Senator from Massachusetts has referred to it only down to 1873. In this table presented by the Senator from North Carolina he has a column under the year 1875, and in that column he places the number of civil employés in the Navy of the United States at 10,105, as derived from the Biennial Register. I took up the Biennial Register—I hold it in my hand now—and in this Biennial Register for 1875 there are only 145 civil officers of the Navy instead of 10,105, so that this statement is in error only about ten thousand!

Then I looked at the War Department. Under this head of 1875 we are told that there are 4,720 civil officers in the War Department as compiled from the Biennial Register. I have taken the trouble to count up the number of civil officers under the War Department as embraced in this same Register of 1875, and I make 2,869 as against 4,720, as in the table presented by the Senator from North Carolina.

I am wholly and totally at a loss to know how the Senator from North Carolina obtained his information that there are 10,105 civil employés in the Navy of the United States, and especially as the table gives us to understand that this information is taken from the Biennial Register. I went directly to that source and found readily that he was greatly in error. I have no doubt the Senator from North Carolina intended to state accurately the facts as presented in this table, but he certainly is very much mistaken so far as the War Department is concerned and so far as the Navy Department is concerned.

It will be observed in this table that in 1869—and I do not propose to travel over the ground occupied by the Senator from Massachusetts to any considerable extent, as he has made my speech almost exclusively on this particular table—in 1869 the total of the civil employés of the Post-Office Department was 41,346. In 1875, six years later, the table of the Senator from North Carolina makes the total 65,726, or an increase of more than 24,000 civil officers in the Post-Office Department alone in six years. We all know on a moment's reflection that that is an utter impossibility; and to account for that in part I have examined the Biennial Register of 1869 and that of 1875, and I find in the Biennial Register of 1875 that the names of a very large class of employés are enumerated that are not referred to at all in the Register of 1869. For instance, I find in the Register of 1875 over seven thousand mail contractors given by States, and they are not in the Register of 1869 at all. Their names do not appear there at all; but they do appear in 1875, and of course swell the list to that extent.

I find also in the Register of 1875 "special mail service," which embraces over two thousand persons. That is the same class of persons referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts who received all the way from fifty cents and up during the year to $10. Then in this Register of 1875 is a head called "special mail agents." That is a class of men who carry the mail from depots to the post-offices where the distance is over a certain number of rods; and there are about four thousand of those, whose names are spread out in this Register, and they do not appear at all in the Register of 1869. That goes to show how this increase is accounted for in the Post-Office Department. I make up 15,000 of these three classes—mail contractors, special mail service, and special mail agents.

It is so in the Treasury Department. The number has increased from 1869, 8,082, according to the Senator's table, to 11,316 in 1875, while we all know there has been a gradual reduction in the officers under the Treasury Department. We all know that the assessors of internal revenue and the assistant assessors have been abolished; that the collectors have been reduced very largely, and that in the Department here and in the custom-houses throughout the country there has been a very large reduction since 1869. But in this Register of 1875 there are put in the employés of all the institutions under the Treasury Department, the laborers, the mechanics, &c., which are not included in the Register of 1869. That accounts for it. Though the number of officers has been actually largely decreased since 1869, yet in making up this Register and bringing in the names of laborers and mechanics and so on in all the marine hospitals and other places throughout the country under the charge of the Treasury Department the absolute number may have increased.

But I rose specially to call the attention of the Senator from North Carolina to the statement referring to the Navy and Army and to tell him that instead of there being 10,000 civil employés in the Navy, as taken from the Biennial Register of 1875, there are only 145 persons—145 instead of 10,000. I count them from the Register itself, and I tender it to the Senator that he may do the same thing.

Mr. MERRIMON. Mr. President, I regret exceedingly that I feel called upon to detain the Senate even for a minute from the further consideration of the bill before us; but it is due to myself and to the Senate and the country that I should make a brief reply to what has just fallen from the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] and the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. CRAGIN.]

It is very true that I was not very familiar with the history of the table to which the Senator from Massachusetts first took exception. I found it in a very elaborate and carefully prepared speech, delivered in the House by a gentleman of great ability, large experience and information, and who I think has a high reputation for accuracy in whatever he says. I did not verify the figures contained in the table by examining the official source from which he compiled it. I took it for granted that he well knew the importance of the statement he made, and in view of the circumstances under which it was made, and the fact that it was not correct the error could be very easily detected and corrected. I did not suppose for one moment that there was any error, much less intentionally false statement. I believed it to be substantially correct in all respects, and I did not hesitate therefore to use the table as I did. And after all that has fallen from that honorable Senator, without stating that I have made any very accurate search to verify the figures used—for I have not had the opportunity to do so—I must say that I am not satisfied that the gentleman who prepared this table, and apparently with great care, was very materially in error. I have the Blue Book for 1875, from which the table purports to be compiled, before me. It contains twelve hundred and eleven pages. The gentleman from whose speech the honorable Senator quoted a while ago estimated, and I take it he made his estimate as strongly in his own favor as he could, that there were seventy names on each page of this book. If you take that basis for the estimate, there are named in this book of officers, official employés, and agents in the service of the Government 84,000; take it that the pages average seventy officers, high and low, the number in the employ of the Government last year was 84,000. That so nearly approximates the figures put into the table by the gentleman from whose speech I took it that it seems to me he cannot be very far in error, certainly in the aggregate number. I cannot verify or vouch for the various detailed statements contained in the table; it must go, like the statements made by Senators here to-day, for what it is worth. I will not say that it is absolutely correct. I say that the circumstance which I have just mentioned in connection with the Register would seem to indicate that it is in the neighborhood of what is fair and true. He was as little likely to err as the Senators are here to, and, besides, we cannot tell all the data he had before him.

Then, there is another fact that I may mention here. This book does not contain the name of every person in the employ of the Government; it does not contain the names of the employés in the various navy-yards in the country and many other places, and I venture to say that the Senator from New Hampshire would not undertake to say, if all the employés in every navy-yard in the country and all the employés of the Government elsewhere were put into this book, the number would greatly exceed the numbers in the table which I produced and incorporated in the remarks which I delivered the other day.

Mr. DAWES. Did the Senator hear the statement that he had got in his table three or four times as many for the War Department as there are in this Blue Book for the War Department?

Mr. MERRIMON. I did not.

Mr. DAWES. I suggest to the Senator to see if that is not so. Not only is the book swollen in the manner stated, but I also stated, and the Senator from New Hampshire more fully than I did, that the book itself is falsified by the table; that the table represents the Army and the Navy and the Post-Office very largely more than the very book from which it purports to be taken; and that in the Army alone it is three or four times as much as the book itself will permit——

Mr. MERRIMON. I repeat what I said a moment ago, that I have not examined the Blue Book, as it is called, in detail.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Would it not be a good thing to do it before you make the statement?

Mr. MERRIMON. I made the statement in the way I mentioned a moment ago, and I have cited facts not denied tending to show that it was substantially correct. I am not able to state all the sources from which the gentleman made up his table; but I cited this general fact, which the Senator from Massachusetts does not deny, nor do I believe that the Senator from New Hampshire will deny, that, if you take into the calculation everybody in the employment of the Government, the number would be much greater than that stated in the table which I produced and used. I mean by that to embrace everybody employed in the navy-yards and by the Government in all its Departments. I produced that table for two purposes: one was to show the rapid and unnatural increase of the number of persons employed in the service of the Government, and from this I inferred that it was illegitimate; and thus I sought to show what immense power, what a vast army of retainers and dependents the party in power could employ with a view to carry an election in a sinister way. My purpose was to show that by this means the offices and places of the country were prostituted or might be to disappoint and defeat the popular will.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. MERRIMON. In a moment. Wait until I state the other view. The other purpose I had was to show how rapidly this multiplication of employés and officers tended to increase the enormous expenses of the Government. Now I will hear the Senator.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator said he wanted to point out how rapidly and illegitimately, if I understood the words, the number of persons in the public service had increased. Now, I want to ask if during the years from 1865 down to 1874 there has not been a considerable increase of postmasters and mail contractors and other people of that character in the States that did not have any United States postmasters before, and would not that be, in the opinion of the Senator, a fair and legitimate increase?

Mr. MERRIMON. O, yes; I do not deny that. I know that there has been such an increase, and all due allowance should be made for that; but when the increase is abnormal, manifestly so, when it is greater than the proportion of the improvement and the expansion of the country in every respect, then it is certainly a matter of legitimate inquiry as to why such increase took place.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Another question. When the Senator says the increase is abnormal and excessive and manifestly so, will he not be good enough to tell us where the "manifestly" comes in? When he is referred to his arithmetic on which he based himself the other day he finds that his items are all wrong, and he guesses that the total is about right.

Mr. MERRIMON. No, sir; I do not concede that at all; I have made no such concession. I say that when I referred to the Blue Book, taking it in the aggregate, taking the general fact made manifest by the Blue Book, that the table was in the main and substantially correct. I say further that I am not familiar with all the various detailed sources from which the table was made up. If I had the opportunity to consult the gentleman who had the table prepared I might be able to state; but I see the general striking fact I mentioned, and this goes far to sustain the substantial accuracy of the table; and then I state another fact in connection with it which puts it, it seems to me, beyond controversy, to wit, if all the employés in the various navy-yards and all the other places in the country were taken into the estimate, the aggregate number would be much larger than the table represents it to be.

Now, touching the other table to which the Senator from Massachusetts took exception, I beg to say that I got that table from the same source, and I take it there cannot be much controversy about that, because the records show exactly how much money was expended during the periods mentioned.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes; but the table does not.

Mr. MERRIMON. I am not sure about that. I have no doubt the figures as made up by the Senator from Massachusetts from his sources of information is correct. I am ready, and shall be at all times, to say that I know he would not make the figures otherwise than correctly as he understands them, but I am not prepared to say how many items of one account and another he has omitted from his estimate that were properly put into the table I used. He may be mistaken, and is as likely to be as the gentleman from whom I take my table.

Mr. DAWES. I will tell the Senator where I got my figures; from the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, on the seventeenth page, and I did not give those who are responsible for the expenditures of the Government the advantage of the difference between actual expenditures and disbursements. There are one or two items there which are disbursements of money that do not properly belong to the ordinary expenditures of the Government, and I took it as a whole as it was, to show how utterly unreliable the Senator's table was. I would inquire of the Senator if he found that other table in the same speech where he found this about the Biennial Register?

Mr. MERRIMON. I take it that the discrepancy between the Senator's estimate and that of the table which I used grows out of the fact that certain sources of expenditure have been taken into this account which he did not take into his account; but the principal table that I produced the other day, and the one for which I vouched, I have before me now. That is from official and unquestionable sources. It is made up from the record.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Which one is that?

Mr. MERRIMON. By inadvertence it was not incorporated in my remarks of that day. That is, the table which I am now going to read. This table was prepared at the Statistical Bureau.

Mr. EDMUNDS. By whom?

Mr. MERRIMON. Compiled by Mr. Young, Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, or under his direction. I take it, therefore, that no one will question its accuracy. It was taken with a great deal of care.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that an official document that the Senator holds in his hand?

Mr. MERRIMON. I am reading from a speech delivered by a friend of mine in the other branch of Congress, and I vouch that this table is correct.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Can anybody get a copy of that speech and of the table?

Mr. MERRIMON. Yes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the number and name of it?

Mr. MERRIMON. I do not care to be troubled in that sort of way; and this, it seems to me, is not a respectful way to deal. I produce this table, and I am going to incorporate it in my remarks. If it is not accurate, the Senator from Vermont can show wherein it is inaccurate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Whereabouts in the RECORD does this speech appear, so that we can find it? The Senator does not mean to suppress his evidence, I suppose.

Mr. MERRIMON. I cannot point to the page. I cannot see the materiality of that. I produced the table, and if the table is not correct, the Senator can very easily detect the error or any false statement.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator let me see the table?

Mr. MERRIMON. I ask the Clerk to read the table which I send to the desk.

Mr. LOGAN. If you give us the date the speech was delivered we may find it that way.

Mr. MERRIMON. I ask the Clerk to read the table which I send to the desk. I am astonished to see Senators so sensitive about a matter that is so easy of verification.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no sensitiveness on my part, I assure the Senator.

Mr. MERRIMON. The Senator seems very captious.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am rather suspicious of tables that have turned out to be so false as those which the Senator has already presented.

Mr. MERRIMON. It does not appear yet that they are so false. When it does appear that they are so false by the record, it will be time to make such remarks as these.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. MITCHELL in the chair.) The Clerk will read the table.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Civil list and net ordinary expenditures of the United States Government, by periods of four years, from the organization of the Government——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that the heading?

Mr. MERRIMON. Yes, sir; that is the heading.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That does not purport to be very official, as far as I see.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Civil list and net ordinary expenditures of the United States Government, by periods of four years, from the organization of the Government. (Condensed from the report of the Register of the Treasury for 1875.)

Dates.	Civil list.	Net ordinary expenditures.
From March 4, 1789 to December 31, 1792	$1,138,052 03	$3,797,493 20
For four years ending December 31, 1796	1,607,960,07	12,093,205 35
For four years ending December 31, 1800	2,329,433,08	21,348,351 19
For four years ending December 31, 1804	2,297,648 17	17,174,432 96
For four years ending December 31, 1808	2,616,772 77	25,926,355 72
For four years ending December 31, 1812	2,887,197 08	36,117,857 94
For four years ending December 31, 1816	3,768,342 61	108,537,086 88
For four years ending December 31, 1820	4,494,606 42	57,698,087 71
For four years ending December 31, 1824	4,665,602 11	45,065,421 88
For four years ending December 31, 1828	5,271,124 34	50,501,913 31
For four years ending December 31, 1832	6,081,307 73	56,270,480 62
For four years ending December 31, 1836	7,659,086 86	89,522,286 68
For four years ending December 31, 1840	9,899,496 58	121,729,801 16
From January 1, 1841 to June 30, 1845	11,508,546 86	104,360,163 10
For four years ending June 30, 1849	10,615,571 14	165,381,026 34
For four years ending June 30, 1853	14,214,458 96	165,684,050 48
For four years ending June 30, 1857, (Pierce)	25,036,171 74	242,920,632 35
For four years ending June 30, 1861, (Buchanan)	25,180,671 39	261,165,809 62
For four years ending June 30, 1865, (Lincoln)	30,765,508 71	3,176,017,346 94
For four years ending June 30, 1869, (Johnson)	*66,412,391 61	1,012,420,202 14
For four years ending June 30, 1873, (Grant)	†69,989,774 16	656,066,892 39
For one year ending June 30, 1874, (Grant)	17,646,253 38	194,217,210 27
For one year ending June 30, 1875, (Grant)	17,346,929 53	171,529,848 27

*This includes $7,200,000 paid for Alaska; also $5,505,451.79 paid for mail service, Post-Office Department.

†Total in six years of Grant's two terms, $1,021,813,950.91.

Mr. MERRIMON. Now, Mr. President, all I wish to do is to cite the data from which that was made up. It is the statement of expenditures from the beginning of the Government to June 30, 1875, contained in the report of the Register of the Treasury for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the number of the document?

Mr. MERRIMON. It is not numbered. It is one of the annual reports.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The separate report. Was it printed by Congress?

Mr. MERRIMON. Yes, it is one of the printed annual reports, dated "Register's Office, November 4, 1875."

Mr. EDMUNDS. [Examining the document.] That is printed at the Department, not by Congress.

Mr. MERRIMON. Printed at the Government Printing Office. I will send the document to the Senator so that he can verify the document and the figures at his leisure. [Sending the document to Mr. EDMUNDS.]

I regret, Mr. President, that in reference to the other tables I am not more familiar with the various sources and items of information from which they were made up. I repeat what I said at the outset, they have been used, and, as it turns out, repeatedly, by a gentleman of large experience and information and one who has the reputation of being very correct in what he says. Then I think the general facts to which I have called attention show that he cannot be very much out of the way. Indeed, his estimate is too small if we count all employés of the Government.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to ask the Senator a question in reference to the table he produced the other day giving the number of employés of the Government, the increase from the beginning of the Government up to the present time. I understood him to say then that that table had been prepared at the Statistical Bureau of the Treasury.

Mr. MERRIMON. I did not. The table just read is the one prepared there, and if the Senator will turn to my remarks he will see that I so said.

Mr. LOGAN. I understood the Senator the other day to say it was prepared there, and I was satisfied it could not have been, and therefore I asked distinctly so as to correct the misapprehension that I might have.

Mr. MERRIMON. I did not say so, nor did I intend to be so understood.

Mr. LOGAN. I found it in the speech, and I was satisfied it could not be prepared there.

Mr. MERRIMON. I did not say so; I made special reference to the table just read.

Mr. LOGAN. Of course I misunderstood the Senator. I am glad he makes that statement.

Mr. MERRIMON. I did not say so, and am glad to correct the inadvertently erroneous impression on his mind.

Mr. LOGAN. Of course I misunderstood the Senator. I am glad he makes that statement.

Mr. CRAGIN. Mr. President, some Senators have suggested to me that the table for 1875 relating to the Navy, 10,105, may have been made up by including the employés in all the navy-yards. It is possible that is the way it was made up; but no account is taken of those employés in the Biennial Register. Therefore the statement which I made in relation to the number of civil employés in the Navy recorded in this Register is absolutely correct.

Mr. MERRIMON. I beg the Senator to understand that I did not question his statement at all.

Mr. CRAGIN. I was making this statement in reference to what some other Senator had suggested to me in private. Suppose it was so that these figures were made up from that source, why should they not have been made up from the same source in the years before? In 1869, only six years ago, the total of the number of civil officers in the Navy, according to this table, was one hundred and seventy-three. There were 10,000 men perhaps employed in the navy-yards during that year sometimes, and if the object of presenting this table is to show the increase of the employés of the Government, it should show the same character of employés during all these other years, in order that we could see whether there had been any increase.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Do I understand the Senator to say that the official Register does not contain the list of employés in the various navy-yards?

Mr. CRAGIN. Not at all. I ask the attention of the Senator to the Register itself.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Then there are employés at the various navy-yards—for instance, at Philadelphia, New York, Norfolk, and Boston—not included in the official Register.

Mr. CRAGIN. Certainly; and never were included.

Mr. MERRIMON. Suppose that these are taken into the estimate, I ask then whether the figures contained in that table are much out of the way?

Mr. CRAGIN. It is possible they are not, though I do not think that at any time during 1875 there were more than five thousand men employed in all the navy-yards together; not near as many as in 1869; not half as many as in 1869. I had occasion the other day, when another bill was up, to refer to a report of a committee of the House where it was shown that in 1858 there were about eleven thousand men employed in the navy-yards on the first Monday of November that year. There would be no objection if this table for 1875 was made up in that way if it had been made up for the other years in the same way; but to make it up for 1875 by adding the employés of the navy-yards and not do it for any previous year would not be a fair thing as showing any increase.

Mr. MERRIMON. That I concede.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question. I should like to know what he means by employés; mechanics, and machinists, and all the men who are repairing ships?

Mr. CRAGIN. I mean mechanics and laborers and so on. They are not regarded as civil officers. They are not commissioned. They are employed by the day, the same as fifteen hundred or more men and women are employed by the day in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. I think they are not included in this Register; they ought not to be.

Mr. MERRIMON. That is material in the view I used it to show the army of retainers that the party in power would have to aid in carrying an election.

Mr. ALLISON. Men employed by the day to do necessary Government work?

Mr. MERRIMON. Certainly; especially when they are sometimes put in just before the election.

Mr. CRAGIN. The supposition is that the Register is made biennially and is supposed to include the officers that are permanent, that hold their offices at least for four years. The employés in the navy-yards and many other places, the mail contractors and mail messengers that carry mails from the depots to the offices are employed for a short time. In the navy-yards sometimes there will be one thousand men employed and at other times in the year eight thousand perhaps. There is no reason why they should be in this Register at all.

Mr. DAWES. The gist of the whole debate is a comparison, and the purpose for which the table was used was a comparison, a comparison between 1859 and 1875, and there is not an element of fair comparison in it from beginning to end. The rule upon which the list was made out in 1859, whether that table is made correctly from this book or not, was a different rule from that of 1875, and it did not include men who are included in 1875; and to compare that list of 1859 and 1861 and 1863 with 1871 and 1873 and 1875, is to compare one thing with another different thing, and not the same thing, in two years. You might as well undertake to compare the Army with the Navy, or those employed in the Department of Justice with those employed in the Bureau of Printing and Engraving, and then undertake to say from the difference between the two that there has been or has not been an increase. It is comparing a cord of wood with a dozen of chickens. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. MITCHELL in the chair.) The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations, with instructions to report a bill limiting the total sum to $4,000,000, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, we have heard the Senator from Massachusetts and several others decrying the bill as it came from the House of Representatives and stating that it was prepared there by two or three members of a committee, and was not such a bill as ought to pass this body. I will state this fact, and if there be a Senator from either one of the States named who disputes the fact, I will thank him to correct me: The bill came from the House; the Senate committee proposed amendments to it striking out certain appropriations in certain States; I state now that the Senate committee proposed to strike out items in the bill as it came from the House making appropriations in the States of New York, Michigan, Wisconsin, Ohio, Connecticut, Massachusetts, Maine, Pennsylvania, Vermont, New Jersey, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Alabama, California, Mississippi, Kentucky, Georgia, West Virginia, Florida, Rhode Island, and Missouri; and I state further that when the vote came on agreeing to the amendments of the committee striking out the appropriations in those twenty-four States, the Senators from those States voted against the amendments proposed by the Senate committee and voted to retain the appropriations as provided for in the House bill.

Mr. CONKLING. As the Senator invites a denial and begins by naming my State, I beg to remind him that when the report of the committee was proceeded with in the Committee of the Whole of the Senate, both the Senators from the State of New York voted to strike out every appropriation from the State of New York as recommended by the Senate Committee on Appropriations. My colleague was in the Chamber, and I am quite sure I am not mistaken about him; I know I speak a verity about myself. When the bill had proceeded until the State of Michigan was reached, a Senator from that State took issue with the committee. Then, upon a division of the Senate, the committee was voted down. That process went on, I voting steadily with the committee, until, as I remarked once before, Monterey was reached. When the Senate voted down the committee on Monterey, I for one, like a patriot, surrendered. I believe the committee had come then, including its own members, to possess seven votes in the Senate. When it had come down to seven, I thought for one it was not worth while to rise any more; and, therefore, I consulted my ease and sat still.

Mr. COCKRELL. On "sober second thought," then, you asked that the amendments should not be concurred in striking out the appropriations for your own State?

Mr. CONKLING. On the contrary, Mr. President, after the committee had been voted down in respect of every other State in regard to brooks, creeks, spring-branches as some of the Senators called them, I voted to restore the appropriations in my State, not for such improvements, not for such streams, but for harbors on the great lake which is the frontier of the State of New York, Lake Ontario; and if the Senator who now has the floor will point out an appropriation proposed by the House or proposed in the Senate for any creek, any inland stream, any minor run of water in the State of New York, I should like to see it. The committee had reported to strike out the appropriation for the harbor of Dunkirk, for the harbor of Olcott, for the harbor of Sodus Bay, and I believe for one other harbor, I do not stop to recall it—all harbors on Lake Erie or Lake Ontario; and, when every thing else, with I believe two exceptions which were deemed unwarrantable by the Senators coming from the States in which they were situated, was voted in, when every other amendment of the committee, numbering seventy-odd, had been voted down, then I moved, in substance, that New York was entitled to be considered a State in the Union, and that she should be put upon the par with the other States, especially as her works in the bill which had been stricken out were for harbors on a great lake and so of the other amendments which have been voted down and appropriations restored were for brooks in which the engineers had told us twenty inches of water might be produced if the improvements were made.

Mr. HOWE rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. MITCHELL.) Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. As the Senator means to be entirely correct, it affords me the opportunity of saying that very early in the consideration of this bill by the Senate the Senate was called to act upon two amendments reported by the committee. One was striking out an appropriation for the improvement of the harbor at Menomonee on the boundary line between Wisconsin and Michigan, and the other was to reduce an appropriation from $15,000 to $5,000 for Two Rivers, in the State of Wisconsin, the last being within forty miles of the town in which I live and the former within sixty miles of that town. I sat here in my seat while both amendments were acquiesced in, and afterwards, after the Senate had voted down the amendments reported by the committee, I had to crave their indulgence to go back and mete out that justice or injustice to this locality which had been accorded to other States.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then the Senator did vote to non-concur in the amendments of the Senate committee?

Mr. HOWE. After every other amendment had been non-concurred in.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire now to ask the Senator if he voted to non-concur in those amendments simply because other amendments had been non-concurred in or because he believed the appropriations were just and proper?

Mr. HOWE. I have no sort of doubt that the appropriations for those two localities made by the House of Representatives are entirely just. They are warranted by the recommendation of the Engineer Corps. I only consented to allow them to be stricken out upon the theory that the Senate would not vote beyond a certain amount of money to be expended this year.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is correct. The appropriations, then, proposed by the House were legitimate and proper. The Senator from New York has taken his seat, but I know he will be courteous enough to answer this question: In his judgment were the appropriations of the House for the rivers and harbors in New York, which were stricken out by the Senate committee and restored by the action of the Senate, just and proper appropriations?

Mr. CONKLING. Yes, Mr. President, whenever the country and the Treasury shall not be sighing and gasping and struggling for life, as we are told by our friends on the other side is the case now. When the country is able to go on and improve generally harbors needing improvement, I believe that every one of these appropriations would be fit and proper within the practice of river and harbor bills.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You mean the appropriations in New York?

Mr. CONKLING. I mean the appropriations the Senator from Missouri asked me about, which he specified, being appropriations on Lake Ontario. The question which addressed itself to me as a member of the Committee on Commerce and as a member of the Senate was of a different kind. It was whether in the present pinch, as it is so graphically described to us, this was the time, this should be the accepted opportunity, to appropriate millions for works which could be deferred; and when, with appropriations for many minor works, the utility of which I must say I should doubt at any time with an overflowing Treasury, the effort of the committee was to rid the bill of amendments for such works, and the judgment of the committee had extended so far as to say that the more important works in New York could also be deferred for a season, I bowed to the committee and voted for the report; but when I found that all the brooks, all the sedgy streams, all the rills of mountain and meadow, which by looking through the report of the engineer I find described, and appropriations made for them in this bill, were to be restored, it seemed to me that it would hardly do for the Senators from New York to sit here and see invidious distinction made, quite contrary to the theory of the bill as it had come to be, against works of confessedly large and general importance, as harbors on Lake Ontario surely are. When I saw that the bill contained in none of its phases or stages one single appropriation to be expended in the State of New York upon such a stream as the Supreme Court has said is not a navigable river of the United States, is not a boundary river between States, is not a stream which the State may not dam, or bridge, or divert, or obliterate if it chooses to,—when I found that there was no appropriation in the bill for such streams as that in the State of New York, I felt all the more free and all the more fully justified in moving to put back the appropriations stricken out which related to works so large, so general, so national in their character, as the works situate in New York which can be found named in the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. The point that I was making was that the Senator from New York stated, as he now admits, that the appropriations for New York which had been made by the House and which had been stricken out by the Senate committee were just and proper.

Mr. CONKLING. At a proper time, yes.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator allow me right here to make a brief explanation?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. I think it will show the distinction made by the Senator from New York. The Engineer Bureau estimated for all these improvements above fourteen million and a half of dollars. The House committee agreed to appropriate four million and a half, or one-third of the estimate. Thereupon they sent to the Bureau of Engineers to ascertain what particular improvements ought to be made on the basis of one-third of their estimate, to wit, upon a total basis of four millions and a half. Then the House sent us a bill not based upon the estimates of the engineers at all. Those estimates omitted certain works which might be postponed and required distinct appropriations for certain great works which could not be postponed. But the House, instead of sending a bill of four millions and a half, sent us a bill of $5,872,000, without any reference whatever to the estimates of the engineers or to their revised estimates with regard to these improvements. They stuck in items here and there all over the country that were not estimated for at all by the Bureau of Engineers, and which they said could be omitted without detriment to the public service, and thus increased the appropriations suggested by the engineers a million and a half nearly and at the same time paid no attention whatever to their estimates.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the Senator let me ask a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes, sir; this is a regular old-fashioned Methodist love-feast, and I should like to hear all Senators give their experience.

Mr. HAMLIN. I wish in this connection to know whether I am right in my recollection, and I ask the Senator from Iowa if he did not read from the report of the engineer in regard to one appropriation where he said it ought not to be made, that it was a work that could not be made?

Mr. ALLISON. There are three or four instances of that kind. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me one moment more?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. The Committee on Appropriations undertook to revise this bill with reference first to economy, and secondly to the necessity of the improvements that are going on under the control of the Bureau of Engineering. Hence we struck out a great many rivers and a great many creeks and some harbors, such as have been stated by the Senator from Wisconsin and the Senator from New York, because the engineers thought if we were only to appropriate four millions and a half those works could be postponed until next year; but they said that there were other important works that could not be postponed under any circumstances. Therefore we did strike out and we did insert, but the Senate, as the Senator from Missouri very well knows, paid no attention whatever to the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations, but inserted every item that was rejected by that committee.

Mr. COCKRELL. We are not dealing with the reports of engineers. I am dealing with the distinguished Senators on this floor who have taken the privilege of reprimanding and lecturing those who have voted to sustain certain appropriations made by the House. The distinguished Senator from New York has indorsed every appropriation in the bill as it came from the House applicable to his State. In addition to that, that distinguished Senator has indorsed the amendments proposed by the Senate committee and those amendments only increased the appropriations of the House $245,000. Yet the distinguished Senator says that if the condition of the country was such as to justify these appropriations he would be in favor of the House bill, and he is in favor of the amendments of the Senate committee increasing the appropriations for his own State $245,000.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him right there?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator now, if I understand him, says that the Senate committee increased the total of the House bill two hundred and odd thousand dollars.

Mr. COCKRELL. For the State of New York alone. I am not talking about the general bill; I am coming down to individual items.

Mr. CONKLING. The truth is that the committee increased the aggregate of the bill $36,000, which was done by eliminating from the bill the works which the committee thought were unimportant, certainly unimportant now, and putting in the omitted works the importance of which the committee deemed transcendent or at least urgent.

Mr. ALLISON. And on the recommendation of the engineers.

Mr. CONKLING. And always on the recommendation of the engineers. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me one word further? He has been very good-natured in permitting me to interrupt him, and I do not wish to do it again.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am always good-natured. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. CONKLING. I think he always is. The Senator speaks of the State of New York. I beg to say in regard to the increase to which the Senator refers, that the appropriations as proposed by the committee were very inadequate as judged by the statements of the engineers. For example, to carry on the work at Hell Gate, being the removal of sunken rocks in an arm of the sea, the board of engineers reported that the allowance made by the House was inadequate; that more should be added to it for economy, for utility, for efficiency in the work. Thereupon the Committee on Appropriations, feeling that this was a very leading work, a work concerning all the States, especially all the Atlantic States, if it were worth doing at all, was worth doing economically and properly. They measured their appropriation accordingly, putting it down to the very lowest sum which would correspond with that definition. So they did in respect of the harbor of Buffalo. So they did in respect of the harbor of Oswego, which the Senator I suppose knows is the leading American harbor on Lake Ontario.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am not dealing with the general bill now; I am dealing with the particular States and the distinguished Senators who represent those States. There were for the State of New York appropriations in the House bill to the amount of $39,000 which were stricken out by the Senate committee. Those appropriations have been declared to be necessary and proper, and by the aid of the Senators from that State they have been restored. The Senate committee also increased the appropriations over and above those recommended by the House to the amount of $245,000. Take the bill as it came from the House and the bill as it came from the Senate committee and the increase of the appropriations for the State of New York was $206,000. The point that I make, and I shall make it plain to the Senate, is that from these twenty-four States their Senators have indorsed every appropriation made by the House; that they have stood here on the floor and demanded that they should be put back after the Senate committee had recommended that they should be stricken out. Even my distinguished friend from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] rose in his place and asked that the amendment of the Senate committee, striking out an appropriation for Vermont as it came from the House, should be non-concurred in. I am just making that point directly. I assert that the Senators from these twenty-four different States, either directly or indirectly, indorsed and ratified the House bill and said that the appropriations made in that bill were just and proper. I want to propound another question to all Senators. Is there an appropriation in this bill as it came from the House for any harbor, any river, any creek, any cove in any of your States that is not just and proper? I wait for an answer.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Keep on waiting, and you will get it by and by.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wait for an answer to know if there is a solitary river, or creek, or harbor for which an appropriation was made in the House bill that is not just, and appropriate, and proper? I ask the Senators from the States in which those appropriations are made to state whether that is so? I understand that they have indorsed every one of them and have asked that they should be restored here. In other words, they have asked that the Senate should non-concur in the amendments of the Senate committee striking out those appropriations.

Mr. WINDOM. I should like to ask whether the Senators from Missouri indorse the Osage improvement?

Mr. COCKRELL. I do most emphatically indorse the Osage River improvement.

Mr. WINDOM. Then I think everything else can be indorsed without any difficulty.

Mr. EATON. May I interrupt the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear from the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. EATON. My honorable friend has suggested that every Senator was anxious that all the provisions in the bill proposed to be stricken out by the committee should be replaced. He does not quite mean that. I think upon reflection he will not say that. At all events, as a Senator from the State of Connecticut, I said here upon the floor that in my judgment, under existing circumstances, I was perfectly satisfied to take the action of the Senate committee, except in one particular. The honorable Senator from Iowa, who has the bill in charge, will do me the justice to say that I said to him that as soon as I could get the floor upon a proper occasion I should move to reduce the appropriation which was made for one harbor in my State.

Mr. ALLISON. I must bear witness to the truth of the statement made by the Senator from Connecticut. He did say to me that he would be glad to see the appropriation for Saybrook Bar reduced, and that he would make a motion to that end.

Mr. EATON. I shall take occasion at some time before we get through with this matter to see to it that the appropriation recommended by the committee of the Senate be reduced, because I do not believe it to be necessary for that harbor in my State. Therefore my friend from Missouri will do me the justice to say that I am not here after a grab for my own State. We take care of our own trout streams and our own ponds, and build canals around the falls in our own rivers, and do not come here to ask the United States to do that sort of work for us. The only appropriations for my State are for harbors upon the Sound, where the vessels of Maine and Massachusetts and New Hampshire and foreign vessels pass through. They are harbors of refuge.

I desire to say one word here that my friend from New York omitted to say with regard to the appropriations for Hell Gate. Once take the rocks out of Hell Gate, and you reduce the distance between New York and all foreign ports three hundred miles. Three hundred miles will be saved to the commerce of the whole country. The wheat of Missouri and the wheat of Indiana and Illinois is as much interested in the New York improvement at Hell Gate as any other part of the country. New York herself is not interested one dollar in that matter. The commerce of the world is interested in it. You reduce insurance and you reduce freight on everything between this country and Europe whenever that great work at Hell Gate is completed. Gentlemen from different sections of the country should see the difference between a work like that and a mountain creek two thousand feet above the level of the sea.

Mr. COCKRELL. I was perfectly aware of what the distinguished Senator from Connecticut stated at the time that amendment came up, but I recollect equally as distinct that the distinguished Senator from Connecticut, who occupies the opposite side of the Chamber from me, [Mr. BARNUM,] asked that the item should be restored, and therefore half of Connecticut indorsed the appropriation.

Mr. EATON. I gave notice that I would move to have the appropriation restored.

Mr. COCKRELL. So much the better. The whole of the great State of Connecticut has indorsed the correctness of the appropriation of which the distinguished Senator has been speaking. They have indrosed it; they have said it was proper and correct and just, because they have asked Senators on this floor to vote to non-concur in the amendment striking it out.

Mr. EATON. The State of Connecticut is not very large, I beg to say to my friend.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have nothing at all to do with the merits of Hell Gate. It must be a very deserving improvement. Appropriations have been made to it for so many years that it is certainly worthy of consideration. I am not discussing that point.

In reply to the Senator from Minnesota, who put a question to me about the Osage River, I will say that that is, under the act admitting the State of Missouri, a public highway, one of the God-given highways of this country belonging to the General Government. It rises in the State of Kansas, traversing a hundred miles of that country, and runs through the State of Missouri, emptying into the great Missouri River. It is not a creek; it is not a mountain stream, such as the distinguished Senator from Connecticut speaks of, two thousand feet above the level of the sea, but it runs through a rich country. It is not a trout stream. We do not have that kind of fish in it. It is a navigable stream. It has been navigated for years and years, and prior to the war furnished all Southwest Missouri, the Indian country, and Northwestern Arkansas, with all their heavy freights, sugar, corn, iron, &c.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What sort of vessels navigate it?

Mr. COCKRELL. Steamboats.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Of what draft of water?

Mr. COCKRELL. In the average season, not at the highest or at the lowest water, they draw from three to six feet.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How much at the lowest?

Mr. COCKRELL. At the lowest stage of water there is generally eighteen inches over the shoals.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That must be a very good steamboat that will run six feet at high water and eighteen inches at low water. It is a good boat. [Laughter.]

Mr. COCKRELL. The distinguished Senator from Vermont has not been out in the western country. I am sorry he does not know that great Mississippi Valley, the heart and body of this great country, which is destined to assert its power and rule the country for its own good and the good of all other sections.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is doing it at this moment.

Mr. COCKRELL. As I stated—and the distinguished Senator understood me distinctly—when the water is at its medium, between low and high water, vessels drawing from four to six feet can navigate the stream, and at the lowest water there are generally eighteen inches on the shoals. Then there is no effort to navigate it with steamboats except very small vessels for the local trade between the shoals.

I asked if there was a Senator here who did not indorse the bill as it passed the House. The Senator from Connecticut has answered, and he has indorsed what I said. Is there another Senator on this floor who will state to the Senate that he has asked the Senate to non-concur in an amendment proposed by the Senate committee to the House bill when that improvement, where he wanted the appropriation non-concurred in, was not just and propor when it was in his own State? Gentlemen can criticise appropriations in other States, they can tell about the fish streams and the coves and creeks in their neighbors' States, but when it comes to their own State there is not a Senator on this floor who will now rise in his seat and say that he asked an appropriation for any river or creek or harbor in his State that was unjust or improper and ought not to have been given. If there is, I should like to hear him now or hereafter forever let him hold his peace.

I desire to speak in reference to Delaware. The distinguished Senator from Delaware, [Mr. SAULSBURY,] who is not now in the Senate Chamber, was spiritedly in favor of reform, and yet whenever his State was touched, whenever an amendment was proposed by the Senate committee striking out anything from Delaware, he was on his feet to protest against the amendment striking anything for Delaware. When it came to those five or six surveys of little creeks—I do not suppose they rise to the dignity of trout streams; they are minnow streams, for little minnows—the distinguished Senator made a controversy upon that. I helped defeat him, I believe, until the third vote, and when he called for the yeas and nays I then had to yield and permit these little streams, these minnow creeks, to be surveyed at the public expense. Then there are Senators from twenty-four of the great States of this country who have indorsed the House bill.

I desire to say a few words more in regard to this bill. The bill as it came from the House appropriated $5,872,850. As it came from the Senate committee their amendments increased the appropriation of the House bill $36,000. As far as the action of the Senate has gone, non-concurring in the amendments of the Senate committee striking out appropriations and concurring in the amendments of the Senate committee giving additional amounts, the bill stands $6,759,014. I believe the Senator in charge of the bill will bear me out that these figures are correct substantially.

Mr. ALLISON. That is near enough for general purposes.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is about correct. We are told of the extravagance of this bill. We are told that it is enough to bring the blush of shame to the cheeks of Senators. The distinguished Senator from Ohio, the democratic Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN,] has seen proper to deliver a reprimand and a lecture (I am sorry he is not in his seat now) to his brother democratic Senators, warning them that this bill would be brought up against them. How did the distinguished Senator vote? When those little amendments proposed by the Senate committee striking out appropriations for the State of Ohio were up, he appealed to the Senate to non-concur in them. The Senate non-concurred, and then he took his hat and has not appealed against anything else until he made this motion to recommit. The distinguished Senator, my good friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WALLACE,] has been voting to sustain the Senate committee all the way through, but when it came to an amendment striking out an appropriation in the House bill for the State of Pennsylvania he could not concur in it. He was willing to concur in the amendment striking out the appropriations for all the other States save the single State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALLACE. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. President, it is well known that my attitude upon this bill was one of support of the Senate committee. I sustained it throughout until there were but seven of us left voting in favor of the amendments of the Senate committee. When that had come to be the condition of things, I asked, at the request of a member of the House, to restore the sum of $6,000 toward the ice harbor at Chester on the Delaware River, a national highway, and I did it because it seemed that everything which had been stricken out by the Senate committee that was in the House bill was about to be restored. The State of Pennsylvania had in the bill as it came from the House $64,000. The Senate committee put into the bill $20,000 more, and the Senate added to that $6,000, making a total of $84,000 given by this bill to the State of Pennsylvania. If that be voting extravagantly, if that be voting improperly, I have voted extravagantly and improperly. These appropriations were, first, for the harbor at Erie on the lake, the only natural harbor on Lake Erie; second, for the improvement of the navigation of the Schuylkill, to take from the port of Philadelphia the grain and oil that accumulates there because of the increase of the terminal facilities at that point; third, the improvement of an ice harbor in that great thoroughfare, the Delaware River.

We have asked for no improvements in any of our internal rivers, for none for the heads of the Delaware, for none upon the Susquehanna, for none upon the Alleghany or the Monongahela. I have not asked for them because I believe the States yet have rights, and that the General Government ought not to go there with its agents and interfere with rights vested under the power of the States. Under this power the State by its constituted authorities has given authority to create booms for lumber, dams for slack water and canals, and water-powers for mills; but, sir, when the General Government goes to the State with its agents under such a bill as this it goes there with exclusive power and can take and destroy without let or hinderance the property there existing, and can control all the streams that have before been under the jurisdiction of the State, and under the power of which hundreds of thousands and millions of dollars of property have been created in that State.

I believe that a river that is under the control of the General Government is one that is navigable in fact and that does not require to be made so by the appropriation of money by the General Government.

The river and harbor bill was $3,000,000 in 1867. It is swollen now to $6,000,000, and before 1886 it will swell to $60,000,000 if this doctrine of distribution is to prevail. As one of the representatives of one of the great States of the Union, I assert the principle that the General Government has no right and ought to have no control over the rivers of that State that are not navigable in fact. That is the position I have taken on this bill, and by it I propose to stand. If this bill in its present proportions, giving but $80,000 to the State of Pennsylvania, be maintained at its present figures, I am willing to vote "nay" on the bill and say, "Let no money be expended this year upon rivers and harbors."

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to ask the Senator if the appropriations recommended by the House bill were just and proper?

Mr. WALLACE. That is entirely evading the real question. The Senate cannot disguise the fact that a combination of Senators on this floor overruled the Senate committee. It is as patent as anything can be that the Senate committee, acting upon principle, has been overruled by a combination of Senators; that the Senate has found itself powerless to resist; and that those who were not in the combination when this result was demonstrated attempted to protect themselves by asking that their States, too, should have that which was just and proper in the House bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. The distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania cannot evade a direct issue upon the question which I propounded to him. I ask if he has risen in his place on this floor and asked the Senate to non-concur in an amendment making an appropriation for the State of Pennsylvania, when that amendment was improper and unjust, when according to his own ideas he has done gross violence to our feelings and our judgment? The question that I put to him is, was there a solitary appropriation in the House bill for the State of Pennsylvania which was not just and proper? He has evaded that question. I am confining it now to individual States. He has refused to answer it. Silence gives consent. He indorses it. He shields himself under the general declaration of the rights of the States. I suppose I am probably as stringent a State-rights man as the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania. I believe that the Government is somewhat limited and restricted, and yet I believe that it possesses certain powers, and they are very important and necessary.

As to the charge which the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania makes that there is a combination here, that Senators have said, "If you will vote for my measure I will vote for yours," I ask how did the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania get the Senate to non-concur in the amendment as to his State if he was not in that combination? If there is any combination in the Senate, the Senator from Pennsylvania is in it, because he succeeded in getting the Senate to non-concur in an amendment of the committee striking out an appropriation for Pennsylvania. He said that a ring, a combination of Senators, had overridden the Senate committee, but that he tried to stand by the committee. Yes, Mr. President, he stood by it until it affected the great State of Pennsylvania, and then he asked that the amendment of the committee should not be concurred in, and he joined the ring, soul and body, and belongs to it today as far as any other member of the Senate belongs to it. I have asked Senators to answer these questions fairly and candidly. I have heard these insinuations and these charges made that there was a combination and a ring. I have put Senators upon the witness-stand. We have resolved the Senate into an old-fashioned Methodist love-feast, and they have all taken the liberty to answer questions and tell how they felt about all the appropriations for their own States. Every one of them has indorsed everything that the House has done for his State.

That is the way the bill stands. Every Senator here has indorsed the House bill in regard to the appropriations for his own State; and yet we hear talk about rings and combinations! The distinguished Senator from New York and some others have been talking about the extravagance of this bill. I simply desire to recall their attention to a little fact, one solitary isolated fact, and that is that the river and harbor bill of 1875–'76, making appropriations for improvements for that year was $6,791,517.50. I appeal to distinguished reform Senators here if they would not have thought from the declamations which have been proclaimed here in the Senate Chamber that this was the largest appropriation that ever had been made? The river and harbor bill for 1875–'76 was $6,791,517.50. If that is not correct, I will thank the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] or the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] to correct me.

Mr. ALLISON. That is near enough.

Mr. COCKRELL. I want it exactly. I have got the bill, and I assert now, while it is not in the appropriation bill in one place, the true amount there is $6,791,517.50. I appeal to the Senators present who occupied this floor and who had control of this body when that bill was passed to know if that is not correct. Was not the distinguished Senator from New York occupying a seat on the floor at that time? Was not the distinguished Senator from Vermont occupying a seat on this floor? Were not all the other distinguished Senators who have spoken against this bill occupying seats on this floor when the river and harbor bill of 1875–'76 was passed? Yet now they reprimand us for this bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Did we provide for the Osage at that time?

Mr. COCKRELL. No, sir; the year before you did.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But in 1875 we did not provide for the Osage; it had got too dry.

Mr. COCKRELL. The year before you gave $25,000 for it.

Mr. ALLISON. The engineers last year sold the implements and tools and abandoned the river; at least it is so reported.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am speaking of the reprimands which come from that side of the Chamber against the House of Representatives and against this side of the Chamber for extravagance and profligacy with the people's money, when only in the year 1875 the other side and their friends, who had possession of the other end of the Capitol, passed an appropriation bill for rivers and harbors appropriating $6,791,517.50, $918,677.50 more than the House bill of the present year; nearly a million more than the bill as it came from the House this year. Yet we are told of the extravagance and profligacy and want of regard of our friends for the tax-payers of this country!

I am exceedingly sorry that these distinguished Senators did not have that feeling when the other appropriation bills came from the House making far greater appropriations than this bill. I am almost sorry to say that some of my distinguished democratic friends did not also regard that when they were voting to concur in amendments increasing the appropriations made by the House of Representatives, while I was voting to retain them at the figures set by the House, honestly and conscientiously believing that those amounts were just and proper, and that the Government could be best administered, most economically and honestly and justly and efficiently administered on the appropriations as they came from the House. We are told now of the great extravagance of the bill as it has been agreed to thus far by the Senate. The bill as it now stands for recommittal to the Committee on Appropriations is $32,503.50 less than the appropriation in the bill of 1875–'76. What does this indicate? Every Senator seems dissatisfied with the bill and with every provision here except so far as it affects his own State. Every Senator thinks the appropriations for his own State are just and necessary. They have all so stated upon the floor of the Senate Chamber to-day. The appropriations made by the House for each State are just and proper, according to the understanding and views and judgment of the Senators from each of those States respectively.

What shall we do? The Senator from New York says that the appropriations for his State are just and proper. The distinguished Senator from North Carolina says that the appropriations for his State are just and proper. The distinguished Senator from Iowa who has charge of the bill, and his colleague, the chairman of the committee, [Mr. WINDOM,] both have said that an additional appropriation is necessary for the State of Iowa, and the Senate concurred in it. I want some Senator for whose State an appropriation has been made which is not just and proper to rise in his place and move to strike it out. If we shall come down to that point and strike out the appropriations which are not just and proper for our own States, we may then be able to arrive at a just conclusion. But how are we to do this? Every Senator says that the appropriations for his State are just and proper. They all agree upon that; but every other Senator thinks that the appropriation for his brother Senator's State is not necessary. I am in favor of reducing this bill to the lowest possible extent; but I am not in favor of recommitting it to the Committee on Appropriations to be revised and corrected and to be reported back to us at any given amount. Nor am I in favor of the motion of the Senator from Vermont to reduce the bill to $4,000,000 and to give it into the hands of the Engineer Department to expend this money when and where, and in what way, they choose. I am for arriving at a just and satisfactory estimate and amount in each State, as it is justly entitled to, and as the work demands, and then passing the bill. I should be exceedingly gratified to see the aggregate amount of the bill brought down to $4,000,000, but I cannot agree to the substitute offered by the Senator from Iowa. I do not think that is just or proper, and I cannot concur in it. I hope that a bill will be agreed upon which will appropriate $4,000,000 and no more for those rivers and harbors which really need improvement and where the money can do the most good. I assure the distinguished Senator from Minnesota that the Osage is certainly entitled to its $25,000.

The Senator from Pennsylvania spoke about the proportion of States. What proportion has the great State of Missouri got? Twenty-five thousand dollars for the Osage River and $10,000 appropriated to improve the Missouri River opposite Saint Joseph on the Kansas shore. We do not want to take any great portion of the State of Kansas, our young sister, away from her, and the river is about to cut through on the Kansas side. We are living in most amicable relations with our sister State, and we want the river stopped. We want Kansas to hold her own soil and territory. This is what is given to the great State of Missouri, the fifth State of this Union, and destined ere long, Mr. President, to be the brightest star in the galaxy of the Union.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What State is that?

Mr. COCKRELL. The great State of Missouri.

Mr. EDMUNDS. She is the brightest star now.

Mr. COCKRELL. She is destined to be the greatest State of this Union in wealth, population, resources, and everything that tends to make a State great. I ask that the Senate do not agree to the motion to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. OGLESBY and others. Let us vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not quite. The first break that was made on the Committee on Appropriations, who apparently with a fair fidelity endeavored, without regard to States or State lines, to omit appropriations for useless or unnecessary works, and those that could be dispensed with for this present time, was made for the improvement of the harbor of Frankfort, Michigan. If there is any Senator from Michigan here present, I wish he would tell me where the harbor of Frankfort is.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. It is north of the Grand River.

Mr. EDMUNDS. North of the Grand River. [Examining a map.] Let me see. Here on Lake Michigan?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore entered the Chamber.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I ask where is Frankfort Harbor and pause for a reply. That, I believe, is the stereotyped phrase.

Mr. FERRY. If the Senator desires to know where Frankfort is—I was out of the chair—it is on Lake Michigan.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Where on Lake Michigan?

Mr. FERRY. I cannot tell the Senator if he is so poorly posted in geography as that. I cannot attempt to instruct him in that case.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am very poorly posted, but I should like to know whereabouts on Lake Michigan is Frankfort Harbor?

Mr. FERRY. It is over one hundred miles from the straits. It is on the west coast of the State of Michigan, and south of Manitou Islands.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Can the Senator, while he is about it, tell us the population of Frankfort?

Mr. FERRY. I can tell you where it is.

Mr. EDMUNDS. [Pointing on the map.] O, there it is. The first break that was made on the Committee on Appropriations was on Frankfort Harbor, which is in the State of Michigan, just as the Confederate Cross Roads was said to be in the State of Kentucky. We had gone down through the bill to that amendment. As the Senator from New York has stated, the first amendment of the committee was to strike out the improvement of the harbor at Dunkirk, New York, $18,000. That was struck out without a division. The next striking out of the House bill was the harbor at Olcott, New York, $5,000. That was struck out with the acquiescence of both the Senators from New York and of the Senators from, let us see—the brightest star in the Union. The next item was for another harbor at Pultneyville, New York, $5,000. That was stricken out without any division and by unanimous consent, upon the idea not that these harbors might not properly be improved in respect of commerce in and of themselves, but upon the idea that in the present state of the public service and the public necessity it was thought proper that large reductions on the total appropriation should be made; and no Senators, so far as I know, were more willing to have it done than those from the State of New York themselves. Then there were others. At last we came to the first thing to be stricken out from the State of Michigan, "for the improvement of the harbor at Frankfort, Michigan, $5,000." On that we had a division. The Senator from Michigan who is so often in the chair, [Mr. FERRY,] with all the ingenuity and wit and persistence for which he is so famous, resisted that amendment. On the yeas and nays the vote in favor of the committee was 14, and the vote against the committee and against striking out the clause was 27; and among the twenty-seven I find the name of the distinguished Senator from the greatest star in the galaxy of States, if that was the expression.

Now, the harbor at Frankfort, Michigan, is at the mouth or somewhere about the mouth of a river called the River Aux Becseis. According to the map this distinguished harbor is in a part of the State that has a plentiful lack of population and a plentiful supply of timber. It is a timber harbor. The amount of water there is not very extensive, but the amount of pine trees and oak and all that sort of thing, as I suppose, is extensive.

Mr. FERRY, (standing at the Secretary's desk.) If the Senator desires to know especially in that respect, I can give him——

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator cannot address the Senate on the desk. If he will only come down to a common level with the rest of us, where we all have fair play, very well.

Mr. FERRY. The Senator criticized my coming down from the chair on a former occasion to take a place on the floor. Now, since I have come midway according to his idea of propriety, he complains because I step but half way down.

Mr. EDMUNDS. For I never was in favor of Mohammed's coffin, which was half way between earth and heaven.

Mr. FERRY. Then I will come down; and I can tell the Senator something about this if he desires to know. He spoke of pine timber. I can advise him that there is no pine timber there. It is not settled there for that purpose. It is a farming agricultural soil in the rear of this harbor, and there is a large iron-furnace there, and the timber is hard-wood, not pine.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then this is an iron-furnace harbor, as I understand.

Mr. FERRY. Not the harbor, but the business.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The business is an iron-furnace.

Mr. FERRY. Iron business instead of a lumbering business.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But there is a furnace there, and this is for the improvement of the harbor for the benefit of the furnace, as I understand it.

Mr. FERRY. So the Senator says.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And so I take it is the case. Now the Senator from Missouri and all the other friends of this bill, as the Senator from Michigan styles the caucus that was held over on the other side of the Chamber the other day—all the friends of this bill are to stick and make a break against this committee acting upon its careful investigation and responsibility, for Frankfort Harbor, and if anything is to be done this year to save the people of the United States from the immeasurable distress and starvation that we are told from over the way is impending over them, it is to save Frankfort Harbor. Now with what grace does the Senator from Missouri get up and deliver an oration at the Senator from New York, and the Senater from Vermont, and the Senator from Wisconsin, and the Senator from everywhere, upon an idea, if he were correct in that, as he is not, that they had voted for appropriations in their own States, and so therefore the bill must be correct.

Mr. COCKRELL. So far as applicable to their own States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator himself was one of that band of united brothers, "the friends of the bill," that undertook to and succeeded in breaking down the careful and intelligent investigation of this committee for the harbor of Frankfort, as it is called, in the State of Michigan; a little spot where the commerce of the world and where the commerce of the United States has never yet penetrated, but where it would undoubtedly be very convenient to have this iron furnace have an advantageous dock, &c., fixed, in order that it might for its profit and advantage carry on its operations, if that is the mission——

Mr. FERRY. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not at the present moment; I will yield in a minute. If that is the mission of the two Houses of Congress in appropriating the money of the people upon the theory that in order to regulate commerce among the several States we may improve the great national highways that nature has adjusted for the convenience of mankind, then I am glad to know it. Now I yield to my friend.

Mr. FERRY. I wish to say that I discover that the Senator from Vermont is making the harbor of Frankfort the pivot upon which he proposes to swing the opposition to the amendments that have been made in committee. Necessarily I rose to Frankfort, because it was the first case I think, or nearly the first case, in the State of Michigan that was reached in the consideration of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The very first case where the committee struck out anything.

Mr. FERRY. The very first case, the Senator reminds me, where the committee proposed to strike out. I did not at that time make use of what I might have done, but I stated the general principles of the case and my knowledge of the business and the necessities for the improvement of that harbor; but I will now go further, since the Senator has alluded to the careful scrutinizing labor of the committee, which I accord. I have felt the difficulty which the committee have contended with. I have appreciated it, and I think the chairman will bear me out that in the best spirit I have met it. I think the Senate will bear me out that in the best of spirit I have contended here for the interests of the commerce of the lakes. Now I desire, since the Senator has called attention to the fact that this committee have given so much care and attention to this bill and reported the striking out of Frankfort, to state that I hold in my hand the recommendation of the engineer of that district, upon the request that he should cut down the estimates to one-third, in which he recommends for Frankfort $10,000. It was stricken out by the committee. I say to the Senator from Vermont that the authority quoted here, an authority that should be respected, that upon a request that the estimates should be cut down two-thirds upon a basis of one-third, reported in favor of $10,000 for the harbor at Frankfort. I have the engineer's report in my hand.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now let me see your report. [Mr. FERRY handed a paper to Mr. EDMUNDS.] Is that the document?

Mr. FERRY. It is a copy.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Have you the thing itself?

Mr. FERRY. It is in the Department.

Mr. ALLISON. We have the original report.

Mr. FERRY. I state that it is a copy. Of course the Senator would not be technical about the original.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Of course not.

Mr. ALLISON. It is true that the local engineer did recommend $10,000 for this harbor; it is true that he reduced his original estimate just one-third; and in most instances, I believe, that engineer reduced his estimates upon a scale of arithmetic, dividing each estimate by three. But when we came to examine this harbor at Frankfort we found that the object of this appropriation was to extend this pier on the one side sixty-four feet and on the other one hundred and sixty-four, and we supposed that this iron-furnace or whatever may be there could rest one year longer, and especially when the engineer recommended that the appropriation for this extension should be all made in one year and that it would cost $30,000. We supposed that $5,000 would go a very small way toward extending the pier.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Exactly. Mr. President, that states the case precisely. The local engineer on the 25th of February, 1876, says to Major John G. Park, Washington:

If my estimates are reduced two-thirds, I would give Frankfort $10,000; Manistee $2,000; Ludington $15,000.

And so on. Now we find from the statement of the Senator in charge of the bill and from the statement of the Senator from Michigan that all there is there, so far as we have got it yet, is a farming country behind and an iron-furnace in front, and that the iron-furnace in sending out its iron—because I wish to state it fairly and fully—would like to have a pier there to enable them more carefully and safely to load the schooners and the flat-boats that take on the iron and carry it to Detroit or Chicago or wherever the place may be.

Mr. FERRY. The Senator does not wish to misrepresent of course, and will allow another interruption.

Mr. EDMUNDS. With pleasure. I am very happy to be interrupted. What I am after is the truth. I am not sure that I shall get it.

Mr. FERRY. If the Senator will listen to what I have to say in regard to it, he will have the truth.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It will be as far as my friend understands it, undoubtedly.

Mr. FERRY. The Senator implied in his remarks that it was doubtless a pine region. I know the habit of many Senators here, knowing that I represent a pine State largely, to suppose that anything that I may advocate in the way of harbor improvements pertains to the pine interest. For that reason I desire to correct the Senator, and to tell him it was not pine timber but hard-wood timber, and that at the mouth of that river was a large iron furnace. I said that there was arable land immediately in the rear of this used for agricultural purposes. I did not go to the extent of telling him how thoroughly it was occupied, but I will now state that it is in the county of Benzie, and south of the Manitou Islands, as he will see by consulting the map. That county has been settled by citizens from Ohio, and they have erected a college there which is in a flourishing condition. That whole township is occupied by people from the Buckeye State, and that is another interest connected with that harbor; that is their outlet.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am very glad to know that. Certainly every college ought to have a harbor. [Laughter.] There cannot be any doubt about that, and I wish to explain another thing lest I should be misunderstood. I did not say that the Senator represented a pine State. If I had been disposed to say anything I should have said quite the reverse, as I should say for myself and all other Senators here, that instead of representing a pine State we pine to represent a State. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, when you come back to the actual fact of this case, what have you got at Frankfort on which the Senator from Missouri, the bright and particular star in the firmament of this nation, on the yeas and nays, determined to overthrow the recommendation of the committee? You have got an iron furnace and a college; and that is all, from the very best and most willing witnesses we can have.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. If the Senator will permit me I will say——

Mr. EDMUNDS. With the greatest pleasure.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. There is a large agricultural country, rapidly improving, and equal to a very large portion of the great State of Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes; that it is, undoubtedly, and more than equal to a very large portion of the great State of Vermont. Undoubtedly there is a very large agricultural region there. Now my friend from Michigan on the reserve, not he on the skirmish line, says there is a large agricultural region. Well, what do they raise, and what do they do with it when it is raised? Has anybody undertaken to show that the commerce with the great lakes comes into the harbor at Frankfort? Not that we have heard of. The agriculturist—

Sings his song, and shoots his crow,
And raises his corn, if corn will grow—

in that benighted land. I do not know how that is. But what is the use of a pier? Will the pier keep off the west winds from the cornfields? Is that the object of it? Mr. President, as the Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] says, who always has the best phrases for everything, "this thing won't do;" and I do not speak of it in any sense as criticising the State of Michigan or its Senators in a State sense at all. What I am desirous to do is to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri, the bright particular star in our horizon, to the circumstance that he himself has been the chief leader, as he must be as he comes from Missouri, in breaking down the careful reductions of this committee on the first occasion he could get and for a harbor where I think he will agree there is no overpowering public necessity, either for iron or for colleges or for farms, that in this asserted time of distress demands that $5,000 of the money of the people of Missouri and of the rest of the Union should be applied. That is the point I am speaking about, and I hope my good friends from Michigan will not misunderstand me because I happen to take this as the first instance of the yeas and nays when the Senate divided.

Mr. FERRY. As the Senator is exceedingly facetious to-day, and singling out the harbor of Frankfort and confining his criticisms to whatever may be drawn out from the Senators from Michigan, I think perhaps the Senate will indulge me in interrupting the Senator to give him the information which he seems not to possess in regard to the resources of that harbor.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is I who indulge you, not the Senate. I want all the credit I am entitled to.

Mr. FERRY. I give the Senator full credit. It is at his hands and by his mercy that I hold the floor for the purpose of interrupting him a moment. I should like to call his attention to the fact that however local the development of the harbor may be regarded in one respect, yet as the line of commerce from Lake Michigan, and especially from the great harbors of Chicago and Milwaukee, passes directly between Beaver Island and Frankfort, the vessels are necessarily exposed to that shore, and every harbor that is made accessible becomes a place of refuge. So that whenever from the violence of the wind and the heaviness of the sea vessels are unable to proceed, they can put into those ports and save their property. Now, if the Senator will be fair enough when discussing the principle of the locality of the place to give it its merits in its general aspect, at least the State of Michigan will be thankful to him for it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Ah, Mr. President, yes, it is a place of refuge! I am astonished that my friend has not gone to it before now. [Laughter.] A refuge! I have not seen anything of that kind in the report of the engineers. I have not heard anything or seen anything in the reports of commerce of the United States about the harbor of Frankfort, as it is called, being a harbor of refuge. One would almost suppose that my friend from Michigan were a reluctant witness, as I think we have seen one not long since in some other place than this, I will say in order to be within the proprieties, from whom we are to drag whatever is to be got in favor of this harbor, and that he is very reluctant to tell us its great capabilities in one statement. First he says that there is an iron-furnace there; and when he finds that the iron-furnace is not quite sufficient to warrant a large appropriation of public money for improving its means of getting rid of its iron, then we discover that it has a college, and that is another reason, and we stop there. Then, when it is found that the college will not quite do, we understand that it is an agricultural region, that there are chickens there and eggs, and so on; and when it does not appear that that is a very satisfactory reason under the Constitution of the United States for doing something about it, we at last discover that it is a harbor of refuge; whether for vessels, or politicians, or refugees, or freedmen, or what, we do not exactly know. Why, Mr. President, if we are to build harbors of refuge every ten miles along the shore of Michigan, we shall have occupation enough, and shall not be obliged to go to the Osage River and provide another means of refuge for distressed navigators who are liable to be blown ashore, where a river is only four or five feet wide, every gust that comes.

But I wish to repeat, so that my friend from Michigan will not misunderstand me, that I am not criticising the State of Michigan or its Senators in calling to the attention of my friend from Missouri the causes that have led to the present attitude of this bill. On the very first amendment where the committee undertook to reduce an appropriation that obviously, I repeat now, could be dispensed with this present year, we find the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Michigan, I will not say caucusing and combining, although the Senator from Michigan himself states that he rallies to the protection of all the friends of this bill, which I take it to mean the friends of every item in it just as it came from the House; I will not say that that is the object, but I will say that it is a sufficient reply to what the Senator from Missouri has said in respect to what the Senator from New York has done or the Senator from Vermont or the Senator from Connecticut, or whatever, that he need not shake his gory locks at us and say that we did it. It was he himself and those who acted with him either by combination or without it who, without—I think I am justified in saying—a shadow of good ground, overrode the committee, either because this appropriation was for the State of Michigan or was for the great lakes or was within the understanding, or whatever it might be, that should put the House bill through. That is what it is. Therefore I think the Senator from Missouri is not justified in undertaking to support this House bill or the bill as it now stands upon the ground either that the Senator from New York or the Senator from Vermont has voted in favor of some appropriations that the committee struck out, for he knows just as well as we all know that both the Senators from New York and both the Senators from Vermont and I think both the Senators from Connecticut voted steadily to sustain the intelligent and careful inquiry of the committee until, on account of combinations or understandings or coincidences or something, the sustainers of the committee were reduced to the small number of seven votes in seventy-two, the whole number of the Senate.

When it came to that and it was evident that this bill was like the bill of 1835 or 1836 in Jackson's time to distribute public money among the States because we had a surplus to throw away, it was neither strange nor discreditable that the Senators from New York and the Senators from Vermont and other Senators should say, "If this is really going to be a distribution among States, then let us have fair play and equality among States as a matter of distribution." That was the state of the case, and I am amazed that a Senator so intelligent as the honorable Senator from Missouri and so fair as he intends to be should press upon the Senate the circumstances to which he has alluded. The Senator from New York has disposed of that part of it which related to New York. Now let me come to Vermont. Otter Creek was the subject to which my friend referred.

Otter Creek either ought to be provided for or it ought not; and it does not depend, I submit, nor does any other appropriation depend upon the circumstance that it is within the boundary of a particular State. My friend from Michigan will agree to that. We do not appropriate for the State of Michigan or for any benefit to that State as a State. We appropriate, if we appropriate at all, for the general interests of commerce. Now what are the facts about Otter Creek? because the Senator has said that the Senators from Vermont thought that Otter Creek was a correct case. So we did, and we think so still; correct in the intrinsic sense of being a proper and necessary appropriation, if at this time the public interests will allow of the expenditure of money for such purposes and to such an extent. The Senate had already decided, and decided by the votes of the Senators from Michigan and Missouri, that there was nothing in the state of public affairs which need cause us to hesitate for a moment to appropriate for every object that was right in itself. Was Otter Creek right in itself? If the Senator from Missouri—and he need not take my word for it—will inform himself, as he readily can, as to what Otter Creek is and what it has been and what it will be, I think he will agree—I do not wish him to vote upon my judgment or my wishes—that it is a fit and proper appropriation.

Otter Creek, as it is called, runs for six or seven miles from Lake Champlain up to the falls; and above that I might, like the Senator from North Carolina, point to an inland navigation where steamboats have run already above the falls for a great many miles through a rich farming country, and where there is a college, too, right toward the town of Middlebury, and an iron furnace, I will add, besides, all condensed right on Otter Creek; but we did not dare to ask for that.

Mr. FERRY. The Senator will allow me to ask him how much commerce there is connected with that creek?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, sir. Without giving the exact figures, because it is too much trouble to hunt them up, I think I may safely say that there is five times the commerce on Otter Creek that there is at Frankfort, in Michigan, or at Pent Water, in Michigan. Otter Creek is not so very insignificant a place historically or navigably. In the old French wars, when the armies of the French came down Lake Champlain, Otter Creek was a naval station of the British provinces where vessels were fitted out and built to resist the approach of the French as they were coming up Lake Champlain, just as at Ticonderoga, Crown Point, and at Plattsburgh great national events have taken place upon waters that were navigable in themselves, and within the strictest construction of the decisions of the Supreme Court, when Missouri was admitted, and within the constitutional sense subjects of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction. In the war of 1812 Otter Creek was a great naval station of the United States, and the navy was fitted out that beat the British on the 11th of September, 1812, in the harbor of Plattsburgh.

Mr. FERRY. What was the extent of that navy?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Large enough to beat the British Crown, let me tell the Senator, and much larger than any navy that every sailed from Frankfort or any other port of Michigan. [Laughter.]

Mr. FERRY. That does not answer my question.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, it does not answer the question in the arithmetical sense. Well, I will give a guess, as we say in the East, that it comprised from twenty to thirty sail of vessels of war that sailed out of Ottter Creek under the command of Commodore McDonough, and sailed down the lake northward to Plattsburgh, and in a somewhat celebrated engagement that possibly the Senator has heard of destroyed a part and captured the rest of the British fleet, and did that thing which resulted in the prevention of the invasion of the United States farther than the waters of the Saranac at Plattsburgh in 1813 and 1814.

Mr. FERRY. I should like to ask if it is for that reason that the Senator asked for an appropriation now, or asked us to non-concur in the amendment striking out the appropriation?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, Mr. President, that is not. I did not ask it on the ground of 1812, or on the ground of an iron-furnace, or on the ground of a college, or on any such ground. I did not ask it at all until it became a question of the distribution of funds among the States. But, if it were to be asked for at all, it would be upon the ground that at this present time, it being by nature a navigable river and navigated by steamboats and canal-boats, and sail-boats of all kinds, it carries on a large commerce with the Canadian provinces, with the city of New York, and with that great chain of towns and cities on the other side of the lake in the great State of New York. That is the reason.

But, Mr. President, I am spending too much time about Otter Creek, because it only comes into play here in the fancy of my friend from Missouri in undertaking to put my friend from New York and myself and other Senators in a false position on the theory that we voted for appropriations for these places, and therefore, as his logic is, it must be true that all the other appropriations voted for by other Senators in their particular States must be correct. What is the logic of that? The Senator from Missouri says the Senator from Vermont has voted for Otter Creek and overruled the committee; the Senator from New York has voted for Little Sodus Bay; the Senator from Missouri has voted for the Osage; the Senator from North Carolina has voted for the French Broad or for that steam-pump between the Neuse and Cape Fear rivers; and the Senator from Michigan has voted for Frankfort; therefore, inasmuch as the Senators from twenty-four States have each one separately voted for an appropriation in his own State, all of them must be right! That is the logic! Mr. President, I am probably very dull, but I do not understand that kind of logic. It would be the logic of the theologians if all the sects in this world were to get together and the Romanist were to vote that the Roman creed were the true one, and the Episcopalian were to vote that his creed was the true one, and the Baptist his creed, and the Methodist his creed, and the Indian his creed, and so on and so on among the hundred creeds or so that there are in this world; and so it is agreed that all the creeds should be put into one single bill and they are all right, no discrepancy, and every one must be in and of itself correct. What an absurdity, Mr. President!

The key to this whole thing is that there should not be, and there is not in the true sense, an appropriation for any State. We have no constitutional right to appropriate for any State. We have, if we have any right at all, the constitutional right only to improve the navigable waters of great public natural highways of the Union, in order to regulate and assist commerce among the several States. Now, what is navigable water? My friend from Missouri says the Osage is, and he says that when the State of Missouri was admitted there was an irrevocable contract, if I correctly understood him, that the Osage should be forever thereafter a free public highway. That is begging the question. The act that authorizes the people of the Territory of Missouri to form a State government, if I rightly recollect it, provided that the navigable waters of the United States within that Territory should be forever free. It did not say that the Osage or any other river was navigable water, and if I am incorrect I beg the honorable Senator from Missouri to correct me now, for he is undoubtedly more familiar with the law that provided for the admission of that Territory into the Union than I am. I take it I am right.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will get the statute in a moment and look at its language.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I feel very sure that when the Senator refers to the language he will find that instead of the act saying that the Osage should be forever thereafter a free highway, &c., it was only that the navigable rivers in that Territory should be free to all the citizens of the United States, and I might add by way of commentary, as he is a strict constructionist, as I am, that the Supreme Court of the United States has rather interfered even with that doctrine since that time, and has held that the jurisdiction of a State, one of the original States or one of the new ones admitted on an equal footing, cannot be interfered with at all by any such provision in an act of Congress, and that the sovereignty of the State over waters that in the maritime sense were not navigable, in spite of the act of Congress, was sovereign and complete; and then I may add, as we all know, that the state of the law at the time Missouri was admitted into the Union was that the jurisdiction of the United States over navigable rivers in the maritime sense was only over those rivers in which and up to the point in which the tide ebbed and flowed; but since that time the Supreme Court has enlarged its construction of the Constitution, I know, to this extent: that the great lakes, inland seas as they are styled and properly styled, fall also within the constitutional theory of being the public waters of the whole nation, and not the public waters of any particular State. But when you go beyond that and say that every little river in every State, great or small, where by nature and the commercial and maritime sense of the term it is not navigable, is to be taken possession of by the authority of the United States, and the money of the nation is to be expended to make it more convenient for floating logs or carrying bateaux or furnishing the means for fishing-canoes to go up and down, is wholly without the authority of the Constitution, and wholly beyond the limits and region of common sense. If the theory of the Senator from Missouri and of the Senator from North Carolina is correct, there is no limit to the authority of this Government to take possession of (because improvement implies that) any spot within any State where the water runs.

Mr. MERRIMON. I did not take any such position.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, the Senator did not take any such position, I know, but the logical and inevitable consequence of his doctrine is that. If you are to say that the French Broad is within the constitutional jurisdiction of the United States, to improve and regulate in respect of its navigation, that only having eighteen inches of water at high tide and only two inches at low tide, then why can you not say that the French Narrow, instead of Broad, if there be such a river, having only water in the time of showers and only trout or other fish at any time, should be dug out and water pumped into it and it made navigable in order to facilitate the convenience of the inhabitants along its borders in carrying their agricultural products, as at Frankfort, to a market or in enabling the students of the college, as at Frankfort—if that was where the college was—to have a convenient place for rowing a race.

Mr. MERRIMON. I take it the test would be as to whether it be a navigable river.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But what is a navigable river in the idea of the Senator?

Mr. MERRIMON. I believe the law is settled that where a river is navigable in the usual sense of the term——

Mr. EDMUNDS. But what is a navigable river in the constitutional sense?

Mr. MERRIMON. One that will float a steam-vessel up and down it. The river you are trying to deride in my State is one that at low-water mark has a depth of from four to six feet, according to the report of the engineers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is a navigable river?

Mr. MERRIMON. In the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, the appropriation for which I believe the Senator from Vermont favors so that he regards those as streams of which the United States have jurisdiction, I believe that an effort now is being made to get two and a half feet of water in those rivers and they are all in the State of Wisconsin.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator does me too much credit in saying that I am in favor of the appropriations for the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers. I do not know whether I am or not. I have never said anything of the kind, to the best of my knowledge, and I have never done anything of the kind.

Mr. MERRIMON. I thought the Senator voted for the appropriation at the last session, a very large one, for those rivers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If I did, I do not know it.

Mr. MERRIMON. If I am in error, I stand corrected.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not wish to be misunderatood about the Fox and Wisconsin. For aught I know, that is within the principle of navigable rivers. I do not know about it.

Mr. CONKLING. Manifestly it is, if the honorable Senator will indulge me for a moment. The object of the Fox and Wisconsin improvement is not to improve either or both of those streams per se, but it is to connect together two bodies of water. What are they? First that great boundary river, the Mississippi, and second the great lakes; to make a northern mouth of the Mississippi River, so that vessels can pass from that river into the great inland seas as we hear them called These two streams which make a natural valley, a natural carrying-place, a natural dug-out if I may so say, between the lakes and the Mississippi River, happen to be the spot selected for this channel; but the improvement I repeat is an improvement to connect together these two waters, themselves confessedly the subject of appropriations of this sort, and not because the purpose is to improve the Fox River per se or the Wisconsin River per se.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. If the Senator from Vermont will yield I should like to make one remark. Then it does not depend on the navigability of the river whether the appropriation comes within the Constitution or not, but upon the demands of commerce and connecting distant or near portions of water to contribute to the general commerce of the country.

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator from Vermont will indulge me a moment, I should like a little light from the honorable Senator from Michigan. Shall I understand that honorable Senator to maintain that a stream wholly within a State, in which the tide does not ebb and flow, is a navigable stream within the meaning of the Constitution? And then I want to ask him another question if he will allow.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I will answer that question. I do not understand that it is a navigable stream. I do not understand that the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers are in that sense navigable streams, at least near their heads.

Mr. CONKLING. But that is foreign to the purpose, because as we have seen if there was not any stream at all, if the object was to cut a canal across an isthmus to connect two seas, it would fall within the confessed constitutional power.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I believe so.

Mr. CONKLING. Now I want the Senator to answer this question: Is a river wholly within his State, which under the decision of the Supreme Court the State has a right to boom, to dam, to divert to dry up if there is power to do it and it chooses to, within the constitutional meaning, in the judgment of the Senator, the appropriate subject of river-and-harbor-improvement appropriations?

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. As a general rule, I should certainly say they were not, and yet in the very case of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers the State jurisdiction is just as complete as it is where the river is confined to a single State and no such improvement is proposed.

Mr. CONKLING. If I may be indulged once more I am amazed that a lawyer of so much eminence as the honorable Senator from Michigan will insist again upon that illustration. Now I ask him this question: Is there any doubt of the constitutional power of Congress to connect the Mississippi River and the great lakes by digging a canal through dry land where there is not a spoonful of water, across an isthmus?

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I have no doubt at all of the constitutional power.

Mr. CONKLING. Then why does the Senator repeat and insist upon the fact that the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, they being the channel which the Government is digging out, are diminutive streams, so that per se they would not fall within the constitutional power?

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. If the Senator from New York and the Senator from Vermont will permit me, I will explain.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will for one.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. The distinction is undertaken to be laid down here by more than one Senator, and the Senator from Vermont is one of those and the Senator from Pennsylvania another, that it is constitutional to make appropriations for the improvement of streams already navigable, but not constitutional to make any appropriation to improve a stream which is not already navigable. This is a very economical constitutional view, I confess, because it admits the power to make improvement where no improvement is needed and denies it where it is.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Well, Mr. President, that is rather a singular statement of the Senator from Michigan. He admits the law to be as stated by the Senator from New York, that we have the constitutional power to connect two great public lakes or two great public oceans, free to the commerce of everybody, by digging a canal, and he also admits that every little stream in every State is not within the constitutional power of Congress. Now, then, you come right back to the question whether every little stream in the State of Michigan or Vermont or Missouri or wherever does fall within the appropriate scope of congressional legislation in respect of the national treasure being expended for its improvement, which implies a national control over it, and on that my friend with a good deal of facility seems rather to evade the question. Where is the dividing line, if the Senator will be good enough to tell us?

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I understand the dividing line to be this: Where the improvement is confined entirely to one State, to a stream for instance heading in the State, ending in the State, to improve that river to its head, without reference to extending it to some other body of water forming a general line of commerce, would not come within my comprehension of the constitutional power of making appropriations to improve rivers. But if it does form a part of a line of navigation, whether the stream is large or small makes no difference whatever, whether it is navigable or not navigable, if it forms a part of a chain of water communication, when improved, which will be of general commercial utility, then I think it does come within the constitutional power; and it does not depend at all upon the fact whether the stream in its natural condition is navigable or not navigable.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then on the theory of the Senator of "general commercial utility," if that is the test, wherever at one end of a stream there is something that it will be of general commercial utility to get out, then it is lawful for Congress to assume control of the stream and to improve it for that purpose.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I do not know that the Senator from Vermont understood distinctly what I meant to say. "General commercial utility," I understand to mean in the sense in which I have been using the term as to the improvement of rivers, a line of water communication which is beneficial to more than one State. If it is confined wholly to one State and is not a navigable river, I might agree with the Senator entirely.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Well, now, let us see how that is. If it is beneficial to the people of more than one State, is that the test? Now, every highway, every pent-road in the remotest section of the forests of Michigan or the mountains of Vermont is of utility to everybody who has occasion to use it. It is not the citizens of the State who have any more right to use it than the citizens of any other State.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. If the Senator will permit me, that was not my definition. I admit fully that the improvement of a highway is generally beneficial; but if it opens a communication between distant portions of the country or distant bodies of water, and forms a general line of water communication which is beneficial to the commerce of the country or to the commerce of more than one State and the general welfare, it comes within the doctrine.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But every water line, be it long or short, must have an end; it must have a terminus a quo and a terminus ad quem, if that is the phrase my friend used to use in the supreme court of Michigan. That is perfectly true of the Huntington River in the State of Vermont, which rises not quite as high as the French Broad, two thousand feet above the sea, but begins by a little streamlet that you can step across and where you can scarcely dip up enough water to wet your whisky in, and it descends by a natural and graduat and regular course to the Winooski River; the Winooski River descends to Lake Champlain; and Lake Champlain descends to the Saint Lawrence, and the Saint Lawrence descends to the sea. Now therefore, on the logic of my friend, it would be perfectly constitutional for the supreme power of the United States to take possession of Huntington River in the mountains of Vermont and extend to that the discretion of Congress, bounded by nothing but the wants of commerce beneficial to the people of more than one State, to take up that river and dig it out and float a steamboat up to the top——

Mr. MERRIMON. May I ask a question?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not quite now. I have not quite half finished my answer to the question of the Senator from Michigan. I am perfectly willing to be cross-examined, but let it be by one counsel at a time.

I submit that that cannot be the Constitution; it cannot be good sense, because, as my friend has admitted, every highway made by the State, even the pent-roads of New England or of Michigan, if they have any in Michigan, where at every farm you must get down from your carriage or dismount from your saddle to open the gate, are beneficial to all the people of the United States just in proportion as they have occasion to use them, and are free to all. You cannot have a test of that kind. It will not do to say that the constitutional power of Congress may be exercised in the improvement of a stream within the borders of a State rising in the State and flowing as it must always out of the State somewhere, except possibly over in the sink of the Humboldt, where the river does not flow anywhere but stops—leaving that out of the question, generally it flows somewhere and comes out at last to the sea—and to say that every such stream falls within the scope of appropriate legislation if the public convenience of the citizens of the United States seems to make it in our discretion a wise thing to do, will not do. That cannot be the law, Mr. President.

Mr. GORDON. If the Senator will allow me I should like to read what the Supreme Court has to say about what is a navigable stream and what is a navigable water of the United States. It is very short. I read from 10 Wallace, the case of The Daniel Ball:

Those rivers must be regarded as public navigable rivers in law which are navigable in fact. And they are navigable in fact when they are used, or are susceptible of being used, in their ordinary condition, as highways for commerce, over which trade and travel are or may be conducted in the customary modes of trade and travel on water. And they constitute navigable waters of the United States within the meaning of the acts of Congress, in contradistinction from the navigable waters of the States, when they form in their ordinary condition by themselves, or by uniting with other waters, a continued highway over which commerce is or may be carried on with other States or foreign countries in the customary modes in which such commerce is conducted by water.

Just a moment more. That decision is sustained and enlarged, I think, to some little degree in the case of The Montello, 20 Wallace, pages 442, 443:

But there were difficulties in the way of rapid navigation even with Durham boats, and these difficulties are recognized in the ordinance of 1787, for not only were the "navigable waters" declared free, but also the "carrying-places" between them; that is, places where boats must be partially or wholly unloaded and their cargoes carried on land to a greater or less distance. Apart from this, however, the rule laid down by the district judge as a test of navigability cannot be adopted, for it would exclude many of the great rivers of the country which were so interrupted by rapids as to require artificial means to enable them to be navigated without break. Indeed, there are but few of our fresh-water rivers which did not originally present serious obstructions to an uninterrupted navigation. In some cases, like the Fox River, they may be so great while they last as to prevent the use of the best instrumentalities for carrying on commerce, but the vital and essential point is whether the natural navigation of the river is such that it affords a channel for useful commerce.

The whole decision, I think, turning on the word "channel."

If this be so, the river is navigable in fact, although its navigation may be encompassed with difficulties by reason of natural barriers, such as rapids and sandbars.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, that law is just as plain as the nose on all our faces is. There is no doubt about it. And when you apply it to the Susan Betsy, if that is the name of the river running up from Frankfort, and to the Osage, and to the French Broad, and so on, they would be ruled out at once.

Mr. MERRIMON. Now will the Senator let me put a question?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have not quite finished with my friend from Georgia yet. What is the essential principle which the Supreme Court has laid down, and laid down correctly? It is that a river must be in its natural condition a highway of commerce. What kind of commerce? The commerce between one county of a State and another county? Not by any means. The Constitution of the United States confines Federal concern to the regulation of commerce among the several States. Now when you give me a river that communicates between two States and that in its natural condition is susceptible of being a highway of commerce although not perfect, then I grant that the national Treasury may be called upon, if the necessity justifies it, for money to make that navigation more perfect and complete.

Mr. GORDON. But the Senator will admit that if in connection with another stream it bears commerce between one or more States it still is within the power of Congress to appropriate money for it under the Constitution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, Mr. President, not without qualification, by a good deal.

Mr. GORDON. So say the Supreme Court.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I beg the Senator's pardon; so do not say the Supreme Court. What the Supreme Court say is that if one navigable river in connection with another, connecting with another, furnishes a channel of commerce among the several States, you may improve it clear through. There is no doubt of that. I will not take North Carolina or Georgia or other rivers, because the illustration might be supposed to have some State application; but I will take the Winooski River in the State of Vermont, being by nature navigable for a great many miles from its mouth, or perhaps I had better go back to Otter Creek, which is better because we are getting partly familiar with that. It has been for a century a highway of commerce up to a certain city that stands upon it, and on its shores navies have been fitted out and arsenals established. Following it up for a hundred miles you come to its source, at last near that famous battle-ground of Bennington that undoubtedly our southern friends have heard of, for their forefathers and mine participated in that heroic engagement. Now, if you cross over a ridge of hills for about fifteen or twenty miles more, you will strike the headwaters of the Hoosac River, and the Hoosac River descends as a tributary and affluent to the Hudson, and the Hudson opens its arms to the all-embracing sea. Now therefore, says my friend, if his question has that point to it, it is within the constitutional competence of Congress to clear out the Otter Creek from its falls, where navigation has already stopped, up to its headwaters, dig a canal across the hills, connect with the Hoosac and get down to the Hudson, and there you have a national highway between two States.

Mr. GORDON. Not at all, Mr. President. The point I make is simply this, that if a stream is navigable within itself above falls or above obstruction, and if in connection with another stream it would afford by cleaning out that obstruction commerce between one or more States or with any foreign country, it is perfectly competent for Congress under the Constitution to clean out that obstruction, although that river may lie wholly within the borders of one State.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, but the question is what the Senator means by "being navigable above certain falls." There are some streams like the Ohio at Louisville where, above certain falls which interrupt commerce for a few miles, there is a great national highway deep and navigable and fine, touching the borders of many States. There is a clear case of national regulation of commerce; but you may take the very instance to which I alluded of Otter Creek. When you get above the falls, which are now the head of navigation from the lake, there is navigable water that has been and is navigated by steamboats for many, many miles; and so above the lake on every other river which when you reach its source grows smaller and smaller until at last you come to the springs, and then you have a divide where, in some way or other if you are to carry ships or vessels over, you must supply the water or carry them on tram-ways, and when you reach the descent on the other side of the divide you will certainly find a stream, and when you follow that stream down you actually find navigable water and at last the sea. The Senator's doctrine would make it perfectly constitutional for us to carry on the improvement of every stream that falls into the Atlantic over to the headwaters of every corresponding stream that rises on the other side of the divide into the valley of the Mississippi; and so going beyond that you would improve the Yellowstone and all the affluents of the Missouri and carry canals for ships and vessels of war over to the headwaters of the Columbia, and so on.

Mr. GORDON. Does the Senator say that in the case of the creek he refers to it is navigable above and below the falls or the obstruction, but it is incompetent for Congress to remove those obstructions or cut a canal around them in the case of Vermont?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, Mr. President, I do say so.

Mr. GORDON. The Supreme Court have supposed that exact case and have decided it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not so understand the Supreme Court to have decided, and if they have decided any such thing, then having the right to say it here, I say they are altogether wrong.

Mr. GORDON. Well, that is a question between the Senator and the Supreme Court.

Mr. EDMUNDS. A question between the Senate and the Supreme Court, where each within its jurisdiction has an equal right to its opinion, I take it.

Mr. GORDON. I propose to abide by the opinion of the Supreme Court as my rule.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I propose to abide by the Senate, as I belong to that, and not to the Supreme Court.

Mr. GORDON. Then if the Senator repudiates the Supreme Court I will not read its decisions any further.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I feel bound to repudiate the Supreme Court when I am acting in my duty as a legislator wherever I think it is wrong, just as the Supreme Court repudiates me in passing laws when within its jurisdiction a question arises wherein it believes that Congress has been wrong in exceeding its powers.

But, Mr. President, it is quite unnecessary to go into a controversy as to what the Supreme Court may or may not do, because I do not understand the decisions to which the Senator has referred as going to any such extent, far from it, as the Senator claims because he cannot fail to see, and he does not attempt to deny, that carrying out the principle that he asserts there is no limit to any appropriation that Congress may choose to make to improve the head brooks of any stream in any State in this Union, because every one of them as you follow it down at last becomes navigable and at last terminates in the open ocean, the great highway of commerce.

But, Mr. President, I was upon the question that the Senator from Missouri has taken so much pains to elucidate as to how we got into the condition that this bill now is, and I had undertaken to show that inasmuch as after the committee had been broken down by his and his associates' votes against the votes of the Senators from the States to which he alluded the whole thing went by the board as a distribution of surplus money, and then every State came in as a State, and therefore as the Senator from Michigan stated the other day it was our duty to take the House bill. Fall back upon that, said the Senator from Michigan, because that was the true thing; and the true thing, as the Senator from Michigan said, for what reason? Let me give his words:

Now that it appears obvious that the object of those who have supported later amendments is to load down the bill for the purpose of its defeat—

A most unjust and, if I may be allowed to say so, a most ungenerous suggestion, because it is not borne out by the fact of the course that this bill took. He proceeds to say—

I ask of the friends of the bill that we—

That is "we the friends of the bill"—

we waive all individual interest in special appropriations—

I did not know before that any Senator had an individual interest in any special appropriation. If he had, I should have supposed he would have excused himself from voting for it—and that we plant ourselves upon the judgment of the committee of the Senate in amount—

"In amount," observe, not upon the judgment of the committee of the Senate as to what ought to be done now or what ought not, but "we plant ourselves upon the judgment of the committee of the Senate in amount," not in substance—and rest on the House bill.

What is the effect of that? The Senate committee had struck out from the House bill I believe $41,000 for harbors in the State of Michigan, and they had added for harbors in the State of Michigan, or rivers, or whatever they are, certain other numbers of thousands of dollars. Now if, as the Senator from Michigan wishes the Senate to do, you reject the judgment of the committee as to the places and the objects of appropriation and rest upon its judgment as to amounts increasing the House bill, then the harbors of Michigan, instead of being reduced $41,000 would be increased above the Senate committee's amendments some twenty or twenty-five thousand dollars. Of course that is generous. I am very glad to observe that the Senator from Michigan can so far forget local interests as to be willing to go for a House bill amended in the Senate by increasing its amount and rejecting everything else, whereby the harbors of Michigan would get some $20,000 or $30,000 more than even the House gave them.

Mr. FERRY. Will the Senator allow an interruption to correct a statement of fact?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly, or for any other reason.

Mr. FERRY. The Senator states that the object of my taking the House bill in preference to the Senate bill——

Mr. EDMUNDS. I beg pardon; I have not said that the Senator had any object at all.

Mr. FERRY. Then will the Senator repeat what he stated, as he seems to be so technical about the exact phrascology?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am not technical at all, except that I am a little technical when a Senator says I have said something that I have not. That is all.

Mr. FERRY. But, as I understood the Senator from Vermont, he said that the House bill gave the State of Michigan some $25,000 more than the Senate bill. Am I correct?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; I did not say that.

Mr. FERRY. What did the Senator say, then?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I was going on to state if the Senator had not interrupted me.

Mr. FERRY. I listened patiently, and must have misunderstood him.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I said that, as I understood it, the House bill gave to harbors and ports in the State of Michigan—which I wish to state to the Senator over again has nothing to do with the subject whether it is in Michigan or in any other place, so that he will bear that in mind; I only speak of that because he has done so—the House bill gave to the State of Michigan $41,000 (and I believe I have his own words for that) more than the report of the Senate committee gave it if you adopt the recommendation of the Senate committee, and if you do not adopt their recommendations and hold on to all that the House proposed and then add other items that the Senate committee proposed for other places in Michigan or increasing some of those in the bill, it would make it larger still. That was my statement.

Mr. FERRY. The Senator is substantially correct, but yet not quite correct. The Senator is now attempting to give the motive for which I urged "the friends of the bill," as he terms them——

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, as you termed them.

Mr. FERRY. As I termed them and as he reiterates by quoting my language, naming the friends of the bill; that my motive was that it increased the amount for the State of Michigan. And when I appealed to the members of the Senate and asked them to waive their individual interest in special localities, the Senator was also pleased to carry the impression that it was because of personal interest to myself. I think the Senator is not courteous in such a reflection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Well, Mr. President, "the wicked flee when no man pursueth." There is a proverb of that kind.

Mr. FERRY. I am stating what I think is fairly deducible from what the Senator said. Now I will state about what I said. It was this: that the Senate committee had reported some $44,000 less than the House bill; that the Senate committee bill as amended by the Senate made up that $44,000 and increased it so that as between that and the House bill it gave the State of Michigan $3,000 more. I further stated that I would support the Senate bill as amended by the Senate. My vote has been given for it; I would vote for it then; I will vote for it now; but if it was the determination to break down the bill and have none at all, then I advised the friends of any river and harbor bill to fall back upon the House bill. That was my proposition.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Well, Mr. President, I have got it right here in the RECORD before me. The Senator says that he advised the friends of the bill to take the bill as the Senate had fixed it, not as the Senate committee had fixed it by striking out certain items in Michigan and increasing others and inserting others, if they did insert others, which made a general reduction for the State of Michigan of $40,000, or so; but with carefully selected language he says that he is perfectly willing to take the bill as the Senate has amended it, which gives to the State of Michigan more than the House gave and more than the Senate committee gave. That, I say, is generous; it is very generous; I have scarcely known an instance of such magnanimity as that. Now he goes on to say as the reasons for doing this act of generosity, although generally for acts of generosity reasons do not need to be given, but this was a logical generosity, a studied generosity apparently; and he proceeds to say:

As the two do not in the aggregate materially differ, we cannot by taking the House bill be much astray, since we have the confirming judgment of the Senate committee.

What does that amount to? The logic of it is this: The House passed a bill appropriating $5,000,000 or $6,000,000 for one or two hundred distinct objects of public expenditure; a committee of the Senate, on investigation, impartial, just, liberal, economical, found that many of these objects of expenditure are not, under the circumstances, justified by the public emergency; they find that others are too low, and that some new ones ought to be added; now, therefore, says the Senator, let us reject all this action of the committee and take the House bill, because it must be right, inasmuch as the sum reported by the committee is about the same as that proposed by the House. That is the proposition. So that, to illustrate, if the House of Representatives should send over a bill here for the support of the Army for the next year for $20,000,000, and the Committee on Military Affairs or Committee on Appropriations that should have that appropriation bill in charge should report it reducing the Army by one-half, demonstrating that it was totally unnecessary and that the appropriations by the House were altogether in excess of existing law, but should provide for other objects under the head of the Army that the existing law and the public service did require, the Senator says it is perfectly clear that the House bill must be right, because, although for entirely different objects and on entirely different grounds and of entirely different items, the Senate committee has appropriated just about the same sum. If that is logic, I do not understand it.

Mr. FERRY. Will the Senator yield to me a moment?

Mr. EDMUNDS. With pleasure.

Mr. FERRY. The Senator does not wish to misrepresent me.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I only read what the Senator said.

Mr. FERRY. The Senator will find by reading what I said that I stated "in amount," that the Senate committee's report did not differ essentially from the House bill, and I think I stated the amount, some $36,000 more. The report of the Senate committee was $36,000 more than the bill of the House as sent here. I stated, I think, that in form it was different, but in amount it was substantially the same, and that we could not go far astray if we had the affirming judgment in amount of the Senate committee in amount to the House bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the precise thing I am commenting upon. The Senate committee found seventy-eight different items that ought to be struck out of the House bill entirely. As for the improvement of Hell Gate Harbor, New York, the appropriation for it was altogether niggardly and too low, and there they put on $100,000 or $200,000 additional. Now, the Senator says inasmuch as the Senate committee has stricken out the false items in the House bill and has inserted true ones of great public importance, let us take the sum-total that the Senate committee has recommended and apply it to the false items! That is the logic.

Mr. FERRY. Will the Senator allow me once more, and I shall endeavor not to interrupt him again?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It does not disturb me in the least. I only want to get at the exact facts. I have the Senator's remarks before me that I have studied with careful attention.

Mr. FERRY. My purpose is the same. The Senator states that the committee struck out appropriations for several harbors, among which several were stricken out in the State of Michigan.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have not said that in this connection at all.

Mr. FERRY. The Senator has said that in the judgment of the committee those that were stricken out were not at the present time worthy objects of appropriation. In that connection I desire to call the attention of the Senator and the Senate to the fact that in every instance but one we have the recommendation of the engineer upon the basis of one-third of the aggregate appropriation for this year. In other words, when called upon to reduce his estimates to but one-third of the whole amount that he had recommended in his annual statement, his revised estimates include every point that was restored by the Senate in the State of Michigan, except one. Now, what I say is that when I asked the Senate to non-concur in the several amendments which applied to the State of Michigan, I was fortified by the report of the engineer upon the proposition of reducing the appropriation two-thirds and down necessarily to one-third.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, Mr. President, I had the impression, however, that the Senate of the United States was rather independent of the engineers in respect of not being obliged to appropriate money that the engineers recommend may be usefully expended in respect to a particular improvement. The Senator from Michigan is undoubtedly aware that the Corps of Engineers does not make its estimates at all with any reference to the state of public affairs. It makes its estimates solely in reference to the particular object, not judging even of the necessity of that that Congress by some previous order about a survey has decided may be the subject of an appropriation. That is what the Corps of Engineers does. The Corps of Engineers does not pretend to arrogate to itself any right whatever to say that any money at all ought to be appropriated unless in the judgment of Congress the state of the public Treasury and of public taxation and of public distress or public prosperity may warrant in the judgment of Congress the appropriation at a particular time. It is, therefore, no argument at all to say that the Senator is supported in the way he says he is by the report of the Corps of Engineers respecting the harbor at Frankfort—and I only take that as an illustration—any more than the Senate would be justified about Otter Creek, in the State of Vermont, where, as the Senator from Iowa showed us the other day, the report of the Corps of Engineers stated that, I believe, forty-odd thousand dollars were necessary to complete that improvement. I never should have thought of asking the Senate of the United States, but it is because I am dull, that we should go the whole figure, or any part of the figure, because the board of engineers said that $40,000 could be properly expended to do a particular thing at that river. A hundred thousand dollars could be appropriated to do a particular thing to that river, and do it well. It would make it deeper and wider forever, and so on.

That is not the point. All that these reports of the engineers show is that particular works, that as they understand Congress has authorized, require, in order to do what mechanically is necessary to complete them, certain sums of money, and that this year a certain sum can be expended profitably, and beyond that it is unnecessary to appropriate in order to do that particular thing in the due course. So it will not do to press this bill upon the Senate on the theory that in any respect, in any particular locality, either Otter Creek, or Pentwater, or Frankfort, or the Osage, or Hell Gate, the Corps of Engineers has said that a certain sum of money may be spent with useful results in respect of that particular improvement, because it is undoubtedly all true; but it does not touch the question. The question is—and that is one, I repeat, that the Corps of Engineers never undertakes to decide or to meddle with—the first and the great question is whether a particular harbor or river, considering its connection with the commerce of the country, is one that falls within the proper and appropriate jurisdiction of Congress in appropriating money to provide for it. That is a political question, not in the party sense, but in the high and just sense. Then, secondly, a question that the board of engineers never undertakes to decide is whether the state of the country and of the Treasury in a particular year will justify a great or a small appropriation. They say as to a particular work that is begun, in order to preserve what we have so much money will be necessary; in order to do anything useful, if we are to do anything at all, so much money is necessary; and that is all they have to do about it. The Senator is unjust to the engineers, as well as, it seems to me, mistaken in his political economies, when he brings forward here reports of the engineers as his justification or mine for voting any particular appropriation in respect of any particular harbor. They only have to do with the topography and mechanics of the affair, and not with the political or economical aspect of it

Mr. FERRY. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. EDMUNDS. With pleasure.

Mr. FERRY. If I am not mistaken the basis upon which the committee of the Senate adjusted their bill was the report from the Engineer Department. That has been the custom. If I am mistaken the chairman will of course correct me.

Mr. ALLISON. I would say that we did take the revised estimates of the board of engineers so far as it applied to works now going on, but in no case did we take their estimates without examining, as we did in the case of Frankfort, the exact nature of the improvement that was going on and deciding for ourselves whether or not it was necessary to build fifty feet of breakwater this year, or twelve and a half feet, as the bill proposes at Frankfort, on one side and fifty feet on the other. We took the revised estimates of the board of engineers and all other evidence that we could find, and then formed our best judgment thereon.

Mr. FERRY. The Senator will remember that Frankfort is not a new place for an appropriation this year.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly; but it is a place where this appropriation, if made, will be used wholly for the extension of a pier beyond where that pier now is, and the extension requires an expenditure of $30,000, and the engineer said this whole sum should be used in a single season. Therefore we refused to appropriate $5,000.

Mr. FERRY. What I wanted to reply to the Senator from Vermont was that I thought, and I believe now, that I placed myself upon a sound basis when I rested on the report of the Engineer Department. I called the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that the regular annual report showed a large amount for the harbor of Frankfort; but the reply was that a subsequent supplemental report on a basis of one-third cut down the amount so that the committee were justified upon that report in cutting out this place as well as others. Now I cite the fact that that supplemental report covers the harbor of Frankfort and proposes to give it $10,000 instead of $5,000, the amount of the House bill. So then I say upon the supplemental report of the engineer authoritatively coming to the Senate in every case I have advocated before the Senate, that report has recommended appropriations larger than the amounts I have sought to restore.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President——

Mr. ANTHONY. As everybody else has interrupted the Senator from Vermont, will he allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly, I yield to everybody.

Mr. ANTHONY. If it will not discommode any of the seven or eight Senators who have the floor, as it is manifest that we cannot get through with this bill to-night, I will move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield for that purpose?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have no objection.

Mr. INGALLS. It is desirable to have a short executive session for a few moments.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will make that motion; but first, with the assent of the Chair, I will move that when the Senate adjourn it be to meet to-morrow at twelve o'clock.

Mr. ALLISON. May I say one word with reference to that question? This bill if it is passed at all——

Mr. EDMUNDS. We have conference committees meeting between eleven and twelve.

Mr. ALLISON. If the bill is passed at all it ought to be passed in the first instance to-morrow, in order that it may go to a conference and be fairly considered, because it is a bill of detail and must be considered carefully by a conference committee unless we are to go into committee and bargain about these different places. I suggest to Senators that this bill ought to be completed to-morrow. We shall have the impeachment trial on Monday and Tuesday, and we certainly ought to be prepared to get all the appropriation bills out of the way by the last of next week, and unless this bill is finished to-morrow in the Senate we cannot get it out of the Senate before Thursday or Friday of next week.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should have been done long ago but for the fact that the time I have had the floor has been occupied, certainly two-thirds of it, by speeches of other Senators.

Mr. ANTHONY. I quite agree with what the Senator from Iowa says who has the bill in charge. We ought to complete it to-morrow, and I think we ought to come here determined to stay until the bill is finished to-morrow.

Mr. ALLISON. To-morrow is Saturday, and I appeal to the Senate to meet at eleven o'clock to-morrow and we can finish the bill during the day at a reasonable hour.

Mr. ANTHONY. We have so many committees of conference out that I think we really should facilitate business by meeting at twelve.

Mr. ALLISON. I know of no committee of conference which will meet in the morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island that when the Senate adjourns it be until twelve o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope we shall meet at eleven.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I hope we shall meet at twelve.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island.

The motion was not agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 20, noes 24.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were re-opened, and (at five o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, July 21, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate was ready to proceed upon the impeachment of William W. Belknap and to receive the managers on the part of the House, and that the Senate Chamber was prepared with accommodations for the reception of the House of Representatives.

PORT OF SAINT PAUL, MINNESOTA.

Mr. DUNNELL. I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on Commerce the bill (S. No. 413) establishing the port of Saint Paul, Minnesota, as a port of appraisement.

The bill was read for information.

Mr. HOLMAN. I must object to that bill, because I object to this mode of fixing salaries. I hope the gentleman from Minnesota will say distinctly in the bill what the salary is to be. This mode of fixing salaries leaves us always in the dark. I understand this to be the unanimous report of the committee.

Mr. DUNNELL. I think the salary is $2,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not think the salary would be as high as $2,000. But I hope the gentleman will withhold the bill until he has fixed the amount of salary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This question is not subject to lengthy discussion. Does the gentleman from Indiana object to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. DUNNELL. I understand the gentleman to object.

BUILDING FOR QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S DEPARTMENT.

Mr. TERRY, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted a report in writing in relation to the renting of the building at the corner of Fifteenth street and Pennsylvania avenue for the use of the Quartermaster-General's Department; which was ordered to be printed, and printed in the RECORD, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the following resolution, to wit:

"Whereas the Forty-third Congress at its first session passed the following enactment: 'And hereafter no contract shall be made for the rent of any building, or part of any building, in Washington not now in use by the Government, to be used for the purposes of the Government, until an appropriation therefor shall have been made in terms by Congress,' approved June 22, 1874; and whereas it is represented that the building on the corner of G and Fifteenth streets, used for ten years for offices for the Quartermaster-General of the Army, was vacated on or about the 17th of last November and another building on the corner of Pennsylvania avenue and Fifteenth street leased for the same purpose:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, requested to inform this House under whose direction and by what authority the Acting Quartermaster-General, Rufus Ingalls, leased the aforesaid building on the corner of Pennsylvania avenue and Fifteenth street, what time it is leased for, and the amount of rent to be paid yearly; also that the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, requested to transmit to this House true copies of all bills for material and labor paid by the post-quartermaster, Major Myers, acting quartermaster, including those approved and ordered to be paid by Acting Quartermaster-General Rufus Ingalls, on account of the building on the corner of Pennsylvania avenue and Fifteenth street, together with a copy of the lease, and also copies of the bills for moneys paid to restore the building on the corner of Fifteenth and G streets to the condition stipulated between the owner and the Government; and that the Secretary of War also inform this House out of what fund appropriated for the Quartermaster-General's Office these amounts were paid"— having had the same under consideration, together with the letter of the Secretary of War and the report of General Ingalls, Acting Quartermaster-General, transmitting copies of the papers called for in said resolution, beg leave to report that they have taken the depositions of Quartermaster-General Meigs, Major Myers, post-quartermaster, and H. T. Crosby, chief clerk in the War Department, and from the letter, report, and papers aforesaid, and said depositions, the committee glean the following facts: It seems that in 1861 the Treasury Department leased the Riggs building, at the corner of Fifteenth and G streets, which lease was assumed by the War Department in 1863 or 1864. On the 16th of August, 1875, General Ingalls, as Acting Quartermaster, applied to the Secretary of War for authority to rent, for the use of the Quartermaster's Department, the Randall building, at the southeast corner of Fifteenth street and Pennsylvania avenue, which authority was granted on the 17th of August, 1875; and on the 18th of August the Acting Quartermaster-General informed Major Myers that he was authorized by the Secretary of War to remove the public offices from the building at corner of Fifteenth and G streets to the building at corner of Fifteenth street and Pennsylvania avenue, and directed him to give to Mr. Riggs at once the three months' notice to terminate the lease, and to make arrangements for the occupation of the new building on September 15, 1875, which was done. The Riggs building was rented at $17,000 per annum with a provision requiring the Government when it should surrender the building to restore it to its condition when first occupied. The Randall building was rented at $12,000 per annum, payable monthly or quarterly, the owner paying taxes, water rents, &c., and to pay one-half of the costs of altering such portions of the building as might be designated by General Ingalls, not to exceed $1,800, and to provide additional means for heating the rooms if necessary.

About the middle of October the Quartermaster's Department was transferred to the new building. The lease of the Riggs building expired November 15, 1875, and the lease of the Randall building commenced on September 1, 1875, so that the Government was paying rent on both buildings from September 1 to November 15. By the transfer of the Quartermaster's Department from the old to the new building there was incurred the costs of restoring the old building and fitting up the new one. Major Myers states the costs of restoring the old building at $4,736.23, and fitting up the new one at $18,346. The rent of the old building for two and a half months, during which the Government was paying rent for the new building, being at the rate of $17,000 per annum, was $3,541.66. So that during the first year of the change the relative expense account upon the two buildings would stand as follows:

Rent of new building for one year	$12,000 00
Repairs of old building	4,736 23
Fitting up new building	18,346 00
Rent of old building two and a half months	3,541 66
Total expense for one year	38,623 89
Rent of old building for one year	17,000 00
Difference	21,623 89

But since some additional officers were accommodated in the new building who had previously occupied two other buildings, one at a rental of $1,800 and the other at $1,200, it is proper that $3,000 should be deducted from the above difference, leaving $18,623.89. It thus appears that the Secretary of War, upon the recommendation of the Acting Quartermaster-General, authorized him to make an exchange of buildings for the accommodation of the Quartermaster's Department, which necessitated an extra expenditure of $18,623.89 in the absence of any law authorizing the exercise of such authority, and the explicit language of the statute, approved June 22, 1874, and in force when this renting took place, clearly shows that it was the intent of Congress that officers should exercise no such discretion, nor could even the Secretary of War confer it. It is no justification to say that the new building was better adapted than the old to the convenience and accommodation of the Department, nor does it avail to say that the difference between the rent of the new and the old building and the rent of the buildings vacated will in a few years compensate for the expense attending the change. It is enough to say in the first place that the renting is only for a year, as the law does not authorize a renting otherwise; and in the second place, it is a plain violation of law.

But, as both the Secretary of War and the Acting Quartermaster-General plead that they so construed the law as conferring authority for their action, the committee is willing to give them the benefit of an honest intention, and ask to be relieved from a further consideration of the subject; nor do they recommend any change in the statute, as they regard it sufficiently explicit, even though it has been erroneously interpreted, but they would recommend to officers incapable of construing statutes to apply to the proper law officers for advice.

VETO MESSAGE—NELSON TIFFANY.

Mr. HURLBUT. I rise to a point of order. I believe that the business first in order this morning is the unfinished business of yesterday, being the consideration of the veto message of the President on the bill (H. R. No. 1337) for the relief of Nelson Tiffany, which is the unfinished business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is unquestionably true.

Mr. HURLBUT. I desire to ask unanimous consent of the House that that matter shall go over, on account of the absence of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BANNING,] until Wednesday of next week, after the reading of the Journal.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

SUITS FOR VIOLATION OF REVENUE LAWS.

Mr. HOPKINS. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following resolution:

Whereas a former United States attorney for the western district of Pennsylvania collected large sums of money for violation or alleged violation of the internal-revenue laws, which moneys it is claimed were not paid into the Federal Treasury; and whereas it is stated that the Attorney-General of the United States has decided that the moneys so paid to the United States district attorney did not release or satisfy the judgments upon which they were paid; and whereas it is alleged that the present United States district attorney, under instructions from the Attorney-General, is proceeding to collect again the amount of the judgments aforesaid, thereby working great hardship to the defendants in those judgments and their sureties: Now, therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Judiciary Committee be instructed to inquire into the truth of the statements aforesaid, and to report to this House during the present session such measures of relief as they may deem just to the parties in interest; and that, in the mean time, the Attorney-General be requested to stay proceedings in said cases.

Mr. KASSON. I suggest to the gentleman that he add after the words "just to the parties in interest" the words "and to the Government."

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest that the committee have leave to report at any time.

Mr. BELL. I object to the resolution. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order of business is the call of committees for reports of a private nature.

ANNIE GIBSON YATES.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill for the relief of Mrs. Annie Gibson Yates, widow of George W. Yates, who was killed at the battle of the Little Big Horn.

Mr. KASSON. I have no objection if the bill is to be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. The case has been examined by the Committee on Invalid Pensions. The bill is merely to provide a pension for the widow of Captain Yates, who was killed in the late massacre of General Custer's party.

The bill was read.

Mr. HURLBUT. I object.

Mr. CONGER. I insist that we should wait until we can have a bill which will provide for all these cases.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOPKINS. I understand that the gentleman from New Hampshire is willing to withdraw his objection to the resolution I proposed to offer.

Mr. DUNNELL. The regular order of business has been called for.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the call of committees for reports of a private nature, and the call rests with the Committee on Naval Affairs.

MILTON B. CUSHING.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Delaware, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 2008) for the relief of Milton B. Cushing, paymaster United States Navy.

The bill was read, as follows:

That the accounting officers in the Treasury Department of the United States are hereby authorized and directed to cancel a charge of $10,000 now upon the books of said Department against Milton B. Cushing, paymaster in the United States Navy, which is based upon a certain requisition purporting to be drawn by him on Paymaster Henry H. Pangborn, and bearing date May 2, 1866; said requisition being a fraud and forgery against the said Cushing.

Mr. EDEN. I raise the point of order that this bill makes an appropriation and must receive its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order is sustained by the Chair, and the bill will accordingly be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

WILLIAM TALBERT.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I now yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. JENKS] to make a report from the Committee on Naval Affairs for his colleague, Mr. ROBBINS, who is now absent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania,

[Mr. JENKS,] not being a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, cannot submit a report from that committee.

Mr. JENKS. It is signed by a member of that committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That may be so, but it must be presented to the House by a member of the committee from which it comes.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Then I will present the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is sufficient.

Mr. WHITTHORNE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3929) for the relief of William Talbert, of Washington City; which was read a first and second time.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill provides that the claim of William Talbert, of Washington, District of Columbia, for the use by the Government of his patented improvement for a marine railway shall be referred to the Court of Claims with authority to take jurisdiction thereof and to award judgment thereon, on principles of equity and justice, according to its value to the Government during the existence of said patent.

Mr. EDEN. I raise the point of order that that bill must receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order is well taken.

The bill was accordingly referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ASA MORRIS.

Mr. SINNICKSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 2940) granting a pension to Asa Morris, of Stanton, Michigan, late a private in Company B, One hundred and seventy-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

A. M. ATWOOD.

Mr. SINNICKSON also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 3251) granting a pension to A. M. Atwood; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. SINNICKSON also, from the same committee, reported adversely upon the following; which were laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

The petition of Anna M. May, for a pension; and

The petition of Anson B. Sams, for a pension.

JOHN H. BRITTAIN.

Mr. RICE, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3930) granting an increase of pension to John H. Brittain, late of Company A, Ninety-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ANNA KOENINGER.

Mr. RICE also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3931) granting a pension to Anna Koeninger, widow of Louis Koeninger, late private Second Indiana Battery; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JUDSON W. CALDWELL.

Mr. RICE also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 1454) to restore the names of the widow and minor children of Judson W. Caldwell, late first lieutenant Company I, Seventy-fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, to the pension-rolls; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. RICE also, from the same committee, reported adversely upon the following; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed:

The petition of Elias Anderson, for a pension.

NICHOLAS W. JOHNSON.

Mr. RICE. On behalf of my colleague on the Committee on Invalid Pensions, Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama, who is absent at home by leave of the House, I desire to report back, with a favorable recommendation, House bill No. 1892, granting a pension to Nicholas W. Johnson, of Butler County, Kentucky.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADA L. HARRISON.

Mr. RICE also, from the same committee, (for Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama,) reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill H. R. No. 2139) granting a pension to Ada L. Harrison, a minor child of Samuel Harrison, deceased, late a private in Company I, Eighty-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteers; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

AMOS A. YEAKEL.

Mr. RICE also, from the same committee, (for Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama,) reported back adversely the following bill; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. No. 2728) granting a pension to Amos A. Yeakel, of Mercer County, Pennsylvania.

THEODORE GARDNER.

Mr. RICE also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the following bill; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed:

A bill (S. No. 767) granting a pension to Theodore Gardner.

SOLDIERS IN CIVIL SERVICE.

Mr. JENKS. I am directed by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to report back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 1791) relating to soldiers while in the civil service of the United States.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That all persons who, under and by virtue of the first section of the act entitled "An act supplementary to the several acts relating to pensions," approved March 3, 1865, were deprived of their pensions during any portion of the time from the 3d of March, 1865, to the 6th of June, 1866, by reason of their being in the civil service of the United States, shall be paid their said pensions, withheld by virtue of said section of the act aforesaid, for and during the said period of time from the 3d of March, 1865, to the 6th of June 1866.

Mr. HURLBUT. I raise the point of order that this is a public bill, and not in order under the call of committees for private bills on a Friday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the bill is not before the House.

JOHN R. HARRINGTON.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina, from the Committee on Patents, reported back, with a recommendation that it pass, the bill (H. R. No. 3392) for the relief of John R. Harrington.

The bill was read. It provides that John R. Harrington, of Brooklyn, in the State of New York, have leave to make application to the Commissioner of Patents for an extension of letters-patent granted to him April 1, 1856, as re-issued December 11, 1866, for improvements in carpet lining, for the term of seven years; and upon such application so filed the Commissioner of Patents is authorized to consider and determine the same in the same manner and upon giving the same notice as if the application had been duly filed within the time prescribed by law. But such application is to be made within ninety days after the passage of the act; and no person shall be held liable for the infringement of the patent, if extended, for making use of the invention since the expiration of the original term of the patent and prior to the date of extension.

Mr. HARTZELL. I call for the reading of the report.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the petition of John R. Harrington, for the extension of letters-patent granted to him 1st of April, 1856, as re-issued the 11th of December, 1866, for improvements in carpet lining, report as follows:

Letters-patent were granted to John R. Harrington the 1st of April, 1856, for improvements in carpet lining, under which patent said Harrington diligently proceeded to introduce the improvements, but the article of carpet lining being more an article of luxury than actual necessity its introduction into use was slow; that in the year 1857 said Harrington transferred one-half his patent to a manufacturer to aid in introducing the article; that he diligently continued to endeavor to obtain remuneration up to the year 1865, when he became totally blind; that in the following year, 1866, by reason of his poverty and blindness, he was obliged to sell his remaining half-interest in his patent to another manufacturer for a small amount, $350; that at this time the introduction of carpet lining into use was quite limited; that only during the last few years of the patent was the lining introduced to any extent; that the patent was re-issued in the year 1866; that it appears the inventor by reason of his infirmity of blindness unintentionally transferred to the assignee the right to the extension; that when the case went before the Commissioner of Patents for extension, it was refused upon the ground that the facts showing why the petitioner should have an extension were not before him, and before the said facts could be brought before him the said Commissioner lost jurisdiction of the case under the statute, by reason of the expiration of the patent, and that the petitioner ought to have leave to go before the Commissioner of Patents to be reheard as to whether it is in his judgment, on the additional proofs to be presented by him, a proper case for an extension of seven years under the statute.

In conclusion, your committee state that this is only a patent which has run fourteen years, the petitioner having enjoyed but nine years thereof because of his blindness. That it reasonably appears that he would have had the statutory extension of seven years had he furnished the Commisioner of Patents the proper facts in his possession, which were omitted to be furnished by reason of his poverty and blindness; that he has realized but $7,703.76 from his patent; that the saving of the invention is about one-half the price of the carpets to which it is applied; that the public will not be unfavorably affected by the extension, as it does not appear to be an article of necessity and the cost to the public will not be raised by an extension.

That the manufacturers and dealers are not opposed to an extension of the patent for the benefit of this blind and worthy old man, now upward of sixty years of age, and that the whole interest is invested in him to the extended term, and he is willing to license manufacturers upon terms which they have expressed themselves satisfied with. Your committee, in view of the equities of the case and the helpless condition of the petitioner, recommend that this act be passed in order to enable the petitioner to be again heard before the Patent Office.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered;

and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LUTHER HALL.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. The Committee on Patents have unanimously instructed me to report back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (S. No. 398) for the relief of Luther Hall.

The bill was read. It authorizes the Commissioner of Patents, upon due application made to him therefor and upon the same evidence and rules of law as in ordinary extension cases, to extend the patent granted to Luther Hall and S. S. Hemenway September 27, 1859, and numbered 25605, for a machine for shaping heels of boots and shoes, for the term of seven years from and after the passage of the act; and the patent so extended shall have the same effect in law as if originally granted to Hall for the term extending to the end of the term for which it shall be so extended; but no person shall be liable for infringing such extended patent by reason of any manufacture, use, or sale subsequent to the 27th day of September, 1873, and prior to the passage of the act.

Mr. HURLBUT. I would like to ask the gentleman from North Carolina whether this bill does not by its own force extend this patent?

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. No, sir; it only allows the inventor to go before the Commissioner, and if he makes out a good case he may then obtain an extension. There is a report accompanying the bill.

Mr. HURLBUT. I would like to have the report read.

The Clerk read the following report of the Committee on Patents of the Senate:

The Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the petition of Luther Hall, of Boston, praying that an act be passed authorizing the extension of the letters-patent hereinafter mentioned, respectfully report:

That said Hall is the first and original inventor of certain valuable improvements in machines for trimming the heels of boots and shoes, for which letters-patent of the United States were granted to him and S. S. Hemenway September 27, 1859, numbered 25605, which expired the 27th of September, 1873. The said Hall bestowed time, labor, and skill in inventing and perfecting the improvement patented, and the letters-patent were issued to him and said Hemenway, as his assignee, in consideration of pecuniary aid to a small amount, which was furnished him by Mr. Hemenway while he was engaged in inventing and perfecting the improvement. Without fault on the part of Mr. Hall, he has failed to secure or receive any adequate or considerable compensation for or on account of his said improvement. Prior to ninety days before the expiration of the patent, and on the 18th of June, 1873, Hall, the petitioner, entered into a written contract with the McKoy Heeling-machine Association of Boston, whereby he sold and conveyed to said association all his right to the invention during the term of the letters-patent, and the extension thereof when granted, and agreed to execute all necessary papers to procure the extension or re-issue of the letters-patent; and the association, in consideration thereof, agreed to make all reasonable efforts to procure the extension of the letters-patent, and to pay all the expenses thereof. In and by the contract, the association agreed to pay to the petitioner a royalty of $5 for each machine manufactured or sold by it during the term of the letters-patent or their extension, containing any of the improvements secured by the patent. This, with other agreements contained in the contract on the part of the association, was the consideration for the sale and transfer by the petitioner of his title to the improvement. The petitioner was induced to enter into this contract by the representations of the agent of said heeling association, that it was then manufacturing machines embracing his said improvement, and that, if patent was extended, the royalty of $5 for each of the machines the association would make and sell during the extended term would amount to a large sum of money. Immediately after the making of such written contract, and more than ninety days before the patent expired, the petitioner, by the direction of the agent of the association, went to the attorney of the association and executed what he was informed were the necessary papers to apply for the extension of the letters-patent; and he fully believed that the application for the extension of the patent was properly made by the association, and would be granted. Subsequently, and about the time the letters-patent expired, the petitioner learned for the first time, from the agent of the heeling association, that the application for the extension of the letters-patent had not been made to the Commissioner of Patents, said agent alleging in excuse that the omission was by the negligence of the attorney of the association. The petitioner relied upon the association to file in time and prosecute the application for the extension of the letters-patent, and but for this reliance he would have procured an application for the extension to have been made before it was too late to do so. It appears that the said McKoy Heeling-machine Association has been and is manufacturing and selling machines which embrace the improvement invented by the petitioner, and which was secured by the aforesaid letters-patent.

The petitioner has been and is without any considerable means, except his daily wages as a mechanic, and he has made a contract with a responsible party whereby, in the event that said letters-patent are extended for his benefit, it is believed he will realize a fair and just compensation for his invention and improvement.

The committee are of the opinion that the petitioner is entitled to relief, and recommend the passage of the bill herewith reported. All of which is respectfully submitted.

Mr. HURLBUT. I desire to say in the first place that I am opposed on principle to all these extensions of patents which are sought to be obtained through Congress; and I do not find in this report any reason satisfactory to my mind why Congress should intervene in this case. The report, as I understand, discloses the fact that ninety days or thereabouts before this patent expired the patentee made an arrangement with some corporation, the name of which I did not exactly catch, by which they agreed to see that the extension was made. They became for that purpose his agent; and in order to induce them to obtain the extension he made an assignment of all his interest in the then patent and in the extension which might be procured, it being stipulated that he should receive a certain royalty from them. His claim is that this company by neglect of themselves or their attorneys failed to present the case before the Commissioner; yet it appears very clearly that this same company has been going on manufacturing machines embracing this improvement; and the conclusion is strongly suggested that they deliberately permitted the patent to expire so as to avoid carrying out their contract for the payment of royalty to the inventor.

This man, as I understand the law, has a clear, substantial, undeniable right of action against the parties who made that arrangement with him. He has the right to bring them into the courts and to recover from them in damages to the whole extent of what their laches cost him. But I do not think it is a case in which Congress should interfere, because the party has an abundant remedy at law against this corporation.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, this is a case in which the inventor was entitled to an extension under the law, and he depended upon his agent to secure the extension for him. The agent failed to do so; for what reason I am not able to say. It may be that the agent allowed the time to elapse so that Mr. Hall could not get his extension, because it would inure to the benefit of the company.

Mr. HURLBUT. I wish to call the gentleman's attention (for I do not mean to argue the question further) to the fact apparent in the report that this man had conveyed away to this company his entire interest, present and contingent.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. That is, he conditionally conveyed his interest; but inasmuch as the agent failed to secure the extension the transfer was not effectual, and the extension, if granted by the Commissioner, will be entirely for the benefit of Mr. Hall.

Now, let it be borne in mind that this inventor is a day laborer, a very poor man, working for wages; and he has received only about $500 from his patent. He had every reason to believe that the extension for seven years, to which he was entitled according to law, would be granted.

The committee have reported unanimously in favor of this bill; and it also comes to us with the approval of the Senate committee as well as the Senate. I hope the House will pass the bill.

Mr. BELL. Has not this invention been public property for almost three years?

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. Yes, sir.

Mr. BELL. Does not this bill propose, then, to patent an invention which is now public property? I think that is wrong.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. The invention has been in use for some time; but the bill provides that no person shall suffer on account of its use up to the time when the patent shall be extended, if it be extended by the Commissioner.

Mr. CRAPO. Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the very general prejudice which exists in the House against the extension of patents, but this is a case where, if this poor mechanic is refused the privilege of applying to the Commissioner of Patents for an extension of his patent, I think gross injustice will be done. The facts simply are these: This man Hall invented a mode of great merit in the manufacture of shoes. He was a poor man, and during the term of fourteen years he was unable to derive any special benefit from it; only some $500 as I understand it. As the mode attracted the attention of one of those corporations in New England which make large sums of money in the manufacture of shoe machinery, they made an arrangement with Mr. Hall by which they agreed to undertake the formal business in the extension of his patent for seven years, to which by law he was entitled simply on making application, and to pay him a royalty of $5 on every machine made by them. He was poor, ignorant of the rules of the Patent Office and of law generally, and relied upon them. It is true, as stated by the committee, that he did sign the necessary papers and did expect that business would be attended to, but after the ninety days had elapsed he found that the attorney of that corporation had neglected, either inadvertently or purposely, to file the proper papers to secure an extension of his patent for the seven years to which he was entitled by law. The facts show this same corporation which made the arrangement with him has been manufacturing and selling these machines.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HURLBUT] holds that this poor mechanic, without money, should go into a lawsuit with this rich corporation which is now using these machines and charging the people royalty in connection with other devices which they have.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts answer me one question?

Mr. CRAPO. Certainly.

Mr. BLAND. Will this company get the benefit of this extension?

Mr. CRAPO. This company will not get the benefit of this extension except by paying this mechanic.

Mr. BLAND. I understand they had an agreement by which they were to have the benefit on payment of a royalty for procuring the extension.

Mr. CRAPO. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAND. Will that contract be continued or repealed by this bill?

Mr. CRAPO. It will not be continued.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. That agreement becomes null and void.

Mr. HURLBUT. You cannot repeal a contract between private parties.

Mr. CRAPO. They have not complied with their part of the agreement, and the contract therefore is null and void.

Mr. BLAND. I think the bill should be amended to make that sure.

Mr. BELL. Let me ask the gentleman whether this mechanic is not now, and has not been during these three years past, in the employment of the same company?

Mr. CRAPO. Not at all; not one day.

Mr. BELL. Answer me another question, and that is, whether it was not the fault of this mechanic himself that his business was not attended to?

Mr. CRAPO. His fault was that he trusted to the attorneys of the corporation with whom he had made this arrangement, and they deceived him.

Mr. BELL. It was ignorance, then, of the corporation to which he had sold his extension?

Mr. CRAPO. But that corporation gets no benefit by this extension. It goes directly and entirely to this mechanic.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I feel as though this ought not to pass. This man has lain three years upon his rights.

Mr. CRAPO. The gentleman from New York will pardon me a word. In further explanation of the history of this, I wish to say that at the very next session of Congress this party, Mr. Hall, applied for this same permission. A bill granting the extension passed the Senate, came to the House, and only failed here for want of time. It had the unanimous report of the House Committee on Patents after having passed the Senate. He therefore is guilty of no neglect.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Whether he be guilty of laches or not, this fact is apparent, that there have been three years when any man, or any firm, or corporation, could have engaged in the manufacture of articles under what would be this patent if extended. Men have in all human probability invested their money in this machinery, as they may have done during the past three years, to enable them to carry on this business. This machinery, if this bill becomes a law, will then be thrown upon their hands.

The bill only provides, as I understand, that there shall be no recovery for any royalty or damages for having carried on this work during the three years that have intervened since the expiration of the patent.

Now, I believe there is no way to embarrass and annoy men engaged in manufacturing pursuits more than the renewal of patents after patents have expired. The principle is entirely wrong. And therefore I hope that neither this bill nor any such bill will pass the House.

Mr. CONGER. This is a case where under the Constitution and laws of the United States this mechanic had the right to the exclusive control of his machine for seven years longer than he did enjoy it. There are now four years of that time which under the Constitution and laws would have belonged to this man except for the wrong-doing, the failure, the neglect of persons whom he intrusted to go through the form of a formal application for an extension. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TOWNSEND] says that the public have acquired a right to this machine, and that this is taking that right away from them. Here is a very valuable machine invented by a common day-laborer, of immense value to the shoe trade, for which he has received comparatively no benefit whatever. If he had been a rich man, a speculator, a man knowing his rights and able to protect them, he would not have been compelled to procure the aid of any company to get his patent; he could have sold his rights and received his royalty. But he was an ignorant man and a poor man. He trusted those who he thought were interested with himself in this machine and they failed him. Under all views of the case he is entitled to the seven years' extension. The public had no right to the improvement really until those remaining seven years had expired; and yet he is not protected on account of the laches of those he trusted.

I am free to say, that, being careful and guarded, anxiously so, as I believe the Committee on Patents are and have been, not to report to this House for its favorable action any bill which would take away any public right, or any bill which was not dealing out exact justice and equity to the parties applying, I do believe this House may safely trust a report of the Committee on Patents when it is in favor of giving a party the right to claim what he may not by law have claimed. I think in the Committee on Patents there are the strongest objectors to withholding or withdrawing from the public any rights which they have acquired. There have been to my certain knowledge for the last three years, since I have been a member of that committee—there have been on that committee continually men who would object to, and oppose, and refuse to make a report unanimous in favor of any extension unless their reason and their judgment were convinced that the application was a just one, and that they could safely go before the House and before the country and claim that what they recommended ought in justice to be passed.

This is especially one of those cases. I think there was no member of the committee but believed it the duty, not only the privilege but the duty, of the committee to recommend Congress to pass this bill. Therefore, having had such an examination, having passed the Senate once, having had the unanimous report of the Committee on Patents in the last Congress and the unanimous report of the committee of this Congress, I trust there will be no objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. I call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to a third reading, and it was accordingly read the third time.

The question was on the passage of the bill.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 41, noes 50; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, under the rule, ordered tellers; and appointed Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina, and Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 59, noes 41.

Mr. SAVAGE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question being taken, there were—yeas 62, nays 110, not voting 112; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. John H. Bagley, jr., Ballou, Banks, Blair, Bradley, Cabell, Candler, Cason, Conger, Cook, Crapo, Davis, Dobbins, Douglas, Dunnell, Eames, Egbert, Gause, Hancock, Hartridge, Hatcher, Hendee, Henkle, Abram S. Hewitt, Hoge, Hubbell, Thomas L. Jones, Kehr, Kelley, Lane, Leavenworth, MacDougall, McDill, McFarland, Norton, Page, Pierce, Piper, Plaisted, Platt, Potter, Pratt, Rainey, Reagan, William M. Robbins, Sampson, Scales, Sinnickson, Smalls, A. Herr Smith, William E. Smith, Spencer, Thornburgh, Throckmorton, Tucker, Robert B. Vance, Wait, Gilbert C. Walker, Alexander S. Wallace, Wigginton, Willis, and Woodburn—62.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Anderson, Ashe, Atkins, Bagby, George A. Bagley, John H. Baker, Beebe, Bell, Blackburn, Bland, Boone, Bradford, Bright, Horatio C. Burchard, Burleigh, William P. Caldwell, Cannon, Cate, Caulfield, John B. Clarke, of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cochrane, Cutler, Darrall, De Bolt, Dibrell, Durand, Eden, Ely, Evans, Felton, Finley, Forney, Foster, Goodin, Gunter, Andrew H. Hamilton, Hardenbergh, John T. Harris, Hartzell, Haymond, Henderson, Hereford, Holman, Hopkins, Hoskins, House, Hunter, Hurd, Hurlbut, Jenks, Frank Jones, Kimball, Knott, Lamar, Franklin Landers, Lawrence, Le Moyne, Levy, Lewis, Luttrell, Lynde, Maish, Meade, Metcalfe, Milliken, Morgan, Morrison, New, Oliver, Payne, Phelps, Randall, John Reilly, James B. Reilly, Rice, Riddle, Robinson, Miles Ross, Savage, Southard, Sparks, Springer, Stevenson, Stowell, Tarbox, Terry, Thomas, Thompson, Martin I. Townsend, Washington Townsend, Tufts, Turney, Van Vorhes, John L. Vance, Waddell, Charles C. B. Walker, Walsh, Warren, Erastus Wells, Whitthorne, Wike, Willard, Alphens S. Williams, Charles G. Williams, James Williams, James D. Williams, and William B. Williams—110.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ainsworth, William H. Baker, Banning, Bass, Bliss, Blount, John Young Brown, William R. Brown, Buckner, Samuel D. Burchard, John H. Caldwell, Campbell, Caswell, Chapin, Chittenden, Collins, Cowan, Cox, Crounse, Culberson, Danford, Davy, Denison, Durham, Ellis, Faulkner, Fort, Franklin, Freeman, Frye, Fuller, Garfield, Gibson, Glover, Goode, Hale, Robert Hamilton, Haralson, Benjamin W. Harris, Henry R. Harris, Harrison, Hathorn, Hays, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hill, Hoar, Hooker, Hunton, Hyman, Joyce, Kasson, King, George M. Landers, Lapham, Lord, Lynch, Mackey, Magoon, McCrary, McMahon, Miller, Mills, Money, Monroe, Mutchler, Nash, Neal, O'Brien, Odell, O'Neill, Packer, John F. Philips, William A. Phillips, Poppleton, Powell, Purman, Rea, John Robbins, Roberts, Sobieski Ross, Rusk, Sayler, Schleicher, Schumaker, Seelye, Sheakley, Singleton, Siemons, Strait, Stenger, Stone, Swann, Teese, Waldron, John W. Wallace, Walling, Ward, G. Wiley Wells, Wheeler, White, Whitehouse, Whiting, Andrew Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, James Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodworth, Yeates, and Young—112.

So the bill was rejected.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. POPPLETON, is absent by leave of the House.

Mr. HANCOCK. My colleague, Mr. SCHLEICHER, is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. COCHRANE. My colleagues Mr. STENGER and Mr. ROSS are absent by leave of the House.

Mr. HENDEE. My colleagues Mr. JOYCE and Mr. DENISON are both absent on account of sickness.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was rejected.

Mr. BRIGHT. I would ask if the morning hour has not expired?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has expired.

Mr. RANDALL. Has not the House the opportunity to finish this bill now?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood the gentleman from Michigan to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was rejected.

Mr. LUTTRELL. The gentleman from Michigan did not vote with the majority, and therefore he has no right to enter a motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan will state to the Chair whether he voted with the majority upon this question.

Mr. CONGER. No, sir; I did not vote with the majority.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was rejected and to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. CONGER. I hope the gentleman will not insist on that motion. Why should the whole force of the House be pressed upon this poor mechanic?

Mr. RANDALL. If a motion to reconsider be entered, the bill will only come up to occupy another hour of the time of the House; and the House has already decided the question by a vote that renders it improbable that there would be any change of opinion in regard to it.

Mr. CONGER. If the gentleman will allow me to enter a motion to reconsider I will not call it up this session.

Mr. RANDALL. You can introduce a new bill next session.

The question was taken on Mr. RANDALL'S motion, and it was agreed to.

So the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was rejected was laid upon the table.

NEW YORK POST-OFFICE.

On motion of Mr. PRATT, by unanimous consent, the report of the Committee on Expenditures on Public Buildings and Grounds in regard to the construction of the post-office building in New York was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. No. 329) to remove the political disabilities of George Jackson, a citizen of West Virginia.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. BAKER, of New York, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

An act (S. No. 333) for the relief of Foster A. Hixon, late a paymaster in the Army;

An act (S. No. 952) to remove the political disabilities of G. T. Beauregard, of New Orleans, Louisiana;

An act (S. No. 983) to extend the duration of the court of commissioners of Alabama claims; and

An act (H. R. No. 3749) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of business on the Private Calendar. Pending that motion, I ask unanimous consent that to-day be considered as "objection day."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion of the gentleman from Tennessee is in order, and he asks unanimous consent prior to putting the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar that this day shall be considered as objection day. Is there objection to that understanding?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think this ought not to be made objection day.

Mr. WHITE. I object.

Mr. RICE. I desire to move to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill (H. R. No. 2803) to provide for arrears of pensions on account of death or wounds received or disease contracted in the service of the United States since the 4th day of March, 1861, and for the payment of the same.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is that a special order?

Mr. RICE. It is.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion of the gentleman from Ohio will be in order if the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee be voted down.

Mr. RICE. I hope the House will refuse to go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, as this is not objection day.

Mr. BLAND. Have I not the right to raise the question of consideration between going into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar and the bill reported from the Committee on Mines and Mining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill reported from the Committee on Mines and Mining cannot come up except in the morning hour. [Cries of "Regular order."] The regular order is the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 91, noes 41; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BRIGHT and Mr. RICE were appointed.

Mr. RICE. I would inquire if this is objection day?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not.

Mr. EDEN. I object to debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No debate is in order.

Mr. SAVAGE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the House refused to adjourn.

The House divided on Mr. BRIGHT's motion; and the tellers reported—ayes 110, noes 37.

So the motion of Mr. BRIGHT was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

LAND CLAIMS IN MISSOURI.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee was last in session it had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 819) to confirm certain land claims in the State of Missouri.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the bill be again read.

The Clerk read the bill.

The first section of the bill provides that the decisions made in favor of land claimants by the recorder of land titles at Saint Louis, Missouri, acting as commissioner, under the act of Congress approved June 22, 1860, entitled "An act for the final adjustment of private land claims in the States of Florida, Louisiana, and Missouri, and for other purposes," extended by an act of Congress approved June 10, 1872, as entered in the transcript of decisions transmitted by said recorder to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and by him laid before the Forty-third Congress, be, and the same are hereby, confirmed; saving and reserving, however, to all adverse claimants the right to assert the validity of their claims in a court or courts of justice, to wit: 8,000 arpents to the legal representatives of J. Clamorgan; 2,944 arpents to the legal representatives of Peter Provenchère; 7,056 arpents to the legal representatives of François J. B. Vallé; 7,056 arpents to the legal representatives of François Vallé, sr.

The second section of the bill provides that, if it shall be found that any tract or tracts confirmed as aforesaid, or any part thereof, had been previously located by any other person or persons under any law of the United States, or had been surveyed and sold by the United States, this act shall confer no title to such lands in opposition to the rights acquired by such location or purchase; but the individual or individuals whose claim or claims are hereby confirmed shall be permitted to locate so much thereof as interferes with such location or purchase on any unappropriated land of the United States that may be subject to entry at private sale; provided that such location shall conform to the legal divisions and subdivisions, and shall not interfere with the rights of other persons.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] offered the following amendment to the second section of the bill:

Provided further, That no location shall be made on any land north of the State of Missouri.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to move to strike out all in the second section after the word "purchase."

Mr. BUCKNER. Will the gentleman from Indiana state what will be the effect of his amendment? I do not exactly understand it.

Mr. HOLMAN. The only effect of the amendment is that in cases where the lands embraced in the original claim cannot be obtained, land scrip shall not be issued in behalf of those parties.

Mr. BUCKNER. Then the object of the gentleman is to violate the law of 1860.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state to the gentleman from Indiana that his amendment is not now in order, as there is an amendment pending.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mine is an amendment to perfect the text of the bill and I suppose it was first in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota is also to perfect the text of the bill and is first in order.

The question was put on Mr. DUNNELL's amendment; and on a division there were—ayes 41, noes 15.

Mr. BUCKNER. I raise the point of order that no quorum has voted.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BUCKNER and Mr. DUNNELL were appointed.

The committee divided; and tellers reported—ayes 41, noes 33.

No further count being demanded, the amendment was declared adopted.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now offer my amendment. I understand, although I have not been able to look into the history of these claims, that two of them have been reported on adversely by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. Will the gentleman from Missouri inform the committee what is the fact in regard to that?

Mr. BUCKNER. Two of them have been reported upon adversely by the Commissioner of the General Land Office; that is true.

Mr. HOLMAN. I find this statement in the report:

The claims thus provided for are described in the first section of the act as being for lands claimed by virtue of "grant, concession, order of survey, permission to settle, or other written evidence of title," emanating from any foreign government, bearing date prior to the cession of the territory out of which said States were formed, &c. The recorder of land titles at Saint Louis, after hearing the evidence in each of these cases, decided in favor of their confirmation, respectively, that is to say: to the legal representatives of Jacques Clamorgan, 8,000 arpents; of Peter Provenchère, 2,944 arpents; of François Vallé, jr., 7,056 arpents; and of J. Baptiste Vallé and François Vallé, sr., 7,056 arpents.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office approved of the decision of the recorder as to the two claims first above mentioned, and under the law his judgment is final and conclusive against the Government as to them. As to the two claims, each a league square, (7,056 arpents,) of François Vallé, jr., and J. Baptiste Vallé and François Vallé, sr., that officer disapproved of the judgment and decision of the recorder, on the ground that the papers "filed in these cases do not show either a grant, concession, order of survey, permission to settle, or other written evidence of title."

Now, there are two facts to which I wish to call the attention of the committee. The Committee on Private Land Claims assumed that the judgment of the recorder of land titles for the State of Missouri was final, and especially final if confirmed by the decision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. Now, the gentleman from Missouri in making the report is certainly in a mistake as to that. The act of 1860 does not make the adjudication of the recorder of land titles final or that of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, but simply requires them to report to Congress. This officer, the recorder of land titles in Missouri, was simply required to examine into the facts and report them to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and he was to report them to Congress for its action. I am confident that if we pass claims like these, which were rejected as far back as seventy years ago, when the facts were fresh and known, and two of which have been actually rejected by the Commissioner of the General Land Office on re-examination, we shall certainly be running the risk of doing injustice to the people of the county, and I think we should do no injustice in rejecting them after this long lapse of time.

I think this bill ought not to pass, and certainly it ought not to pass in such a shape as to give to these unknown persons, persons whose names are not furnished, the descendants of ancestors who must have died sixty-five or seventy years ago, land-scrip to be located in Missouri or in any other part of the country. I think we can safely stand upon the statute of repose, the statute of limitations in its moral force as recognized by all the States. After this lapse of time, after these claims have been rejected when the facts were fresh and new, it is perfectly safe to apply to them a reasonable statute of limitation.

Mr. DUNNELL. I have an amendment which I will offer. It is to strike out all of line 19 after the first word in the line, and all of lines 20, 21, and 22.

Mr. GUNTER. Is there not already pending an amendment to strike out that portion of the section?

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] must keep this fact in mind: that all these claims were rejected when they were perfectly fresh.

Mr. BUCKNER. I undertake to say that the gentleman is misstating the facts in regard to the law; they never were rejected.

Mr. HOLMAN. Did not my friend state that they were rejected?

Mr. BUCKNER. They were never rejected under the law of 1860, because that law did not cover this case.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly; but they were rejected under the law of 1805.

Mr. BUCKNER. Yes, and under the law of 1836.

Mr. HOLMAN. They were rejected under the law of 1805 and under the law of 1836, the first law having been enacted shortly after the treaty was made by which this territory was acquired and the other law having been enacted within such a period of time that the facts in regard to the case were comparatively fresh. In the disturbed period of 1860 a measure was urged through Congress, it would seem, simply with a view to give these claims the advantage of a favorable report by this subordinate officer, the recorder of land titles in Missouri, and the confirmation of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, after which they were to be brought before Congress for action.

These claims had been rejected at times when the facts certainly were better known than now. Now, after the rejection of these claims in 1805 and in 1836, I object that it is not common fairness that a law should be passed through Congress for the purpose of overruling those decisions and then making that law obligatory upon a subsequent Congress in order to confirm the improper advantage thus obtained. I am so impressed with the belief that the claims of this class against the Government are not entitled to favorable consideration by reason of repeated rejections when the facts were all known that I desire to submit a motion to strike out the enacting clause of this bill. I do not wish to see the public lands exhausted in behalf of these questionable and unknown claimants, when they should be held in sacred trust by this Government in order to secure homes for actual settlers.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the gentleman not to make his motion until I can be heard for a moment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will withdraw the motion for the present.

Mr. CONGER. So far as I have heard, no information has been communicated to this House that there is now in existence any human being entitled to this land, nothing to show who may be the claimants to this 100,000 arpents of land.

Mr. BUCKNER. Only some 20,000.

Mr. CONGER. There is one claim for 82,000, I believe.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is about 24,000 arpents.

Mr. BUCKNER. About 20,000 acres.

Mr. CONGER. I thought there was a larger amount in one of the claims, making the claims in all something like 100,000 arpents. That, however, is immaterial. Who are the men coming here seeking this action of Congress? What old land company has got up this claim? The gentleman has not told us.

Mr. BUCKNER. I will state to the gentleman——

Mr. CONGER. I would rather you would state when I get through.

Mr. BUCKNER. Very well, I will do so.

Mr. CONGER. How long has this scheme been concocting, to secure an old claim a hundred years old, or seventy years old, whatever it may be—how long has there been concocting a scheme to go into other States like Iowa, Indiana, Michigan, to go into the western territory, and take in lieu of some old dead, slumbering claim the public lands, that ought to be reserved for actual settlers in parcels of one hundred and sixty acres each? Why should these unknown representatives of these claimants, these unknown men, be allowed to go and select the choice parcels of land in other States, this Committee of the Whole having voted down an amendment to confine the location of any remaining part of their claim to the State of Missouri?

Mr. BUCKNER. The gentleman is mistaken about that; that amendment was adopted, and therefore Michigan is not interested in this bill.

Mr. CONGER. There was not a very large vote for the amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] was adopted.

Mr. CONGER. It may not be adopted by the House, and I thought it was lost in the committee. But why should we allow these persons to go into Missouri, where there may be public lands, and take 20,000 or 24,000 acres of the public land for, it may be, the representatives of a land company, a speculating company, take them from the settlers in Missouri? How will the Representatives from Missouri answer to their constituents when the corporation prosecuting these claims shall take 20,000 acres of land in Missouri, that ought to be divided up into small parcels for settlers, in order to satisfy this old, effete claim? Even in that case the argument applies just as well.

Now, sir, if this were a claim of the direct heirs of an owner who had presented his claim properly, and, without any fault of himself or his ancestors, had still a subsisting, valid, genuine, equitable claim against this Government under the treaty, the case would be presented in a very different light. But this committee has not been informed who the representatives of these dead claimants may be. We know nothing of the parties now interested in these claims. I certainly am opposed to granting any such application as this. Why, sir, all along the line from Mackinaw down the lakes, wherever the old French settlers had their homes while that territory belonged to France or while it was a portion of the territory of Great Britain, the direct descendants of claimants were compelled to take one-fourth, one-half, and three-fourths of their lands when they had conclusive title to those lands. Because the Government had disposed of a portion of those lands, they were compelled to take what was left; and this, too, when there had been only a few years' neglect to prosecute their claims. Here there is neglect to prosecute the claims either under one or the other of these governments for a hundred years, as I understand.

Mr. BUCKNER. No, sir; not that long.

Mr. CONGER. It is asserted here that these claims have been outstanding for seventy-five years, during which, as the gentleman from Indiana says, the authorities of the United States at long intervals apart have twice rejected these claims on account of their lack of validity. What new fact does the gentleman from Missouri offer as a reason why these claims should now be confirmed by Congress?

I cannot see that these claims conform even to the law of 1860, under which they are sought to be supported. I have heard nothing in this report or in the discussion to show that these claims come at all within the purview of that law. For myself I am entirely opposed to this bill.

I now return the floor to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] who yielded it to me.

Mr. BUCKNER rose.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BUCKNER] wishes of course to be heard; and until he has spoken I will withdraw my motion to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. BUCKNER. Mr. Chairman, it is a little singular that after millions and millions of acres of land in this country have been given to the corporations of the Northwest——

Mr. HOLMAN. And Missouri.

Mr. BUCKNER. No, sir; Missouri got very little. It is very strange after all these grants that objection should now be urged to this bill; and these objections come with a peculiarly ill grace from my friend from the Northwest, [Mr. CONGER,] when we are asking simply that a law which was designed to execute the treaty under which this territory was ceded to the United States shall be complied with. Gentlemen say that this is a stale claim.

Mr. HURLBUT. Will the gentleman state whether in the treaty there was not a limitation of time within which all these claims should be presented?

Mr. BUCKNER. Yes, sir; and these parties complied literally with that provision.

Mr. HURLBUT. And their claims were rejected.

Mr. BUCKNER. No, sir; they were never considered, because they did not come within the terms of the law under which the commissioners were acting. This appears from the reports which have been presented, and which will be found in the executive document before me.

A large number of claims that have been confirmed in the State of Missouri were confirmed under the act of July 4, 1836; and even as to claims which were rejected under that report, Congress has since authorized them to be allowed and confirmed.

But in the act of 1860, with which I had nothing to do, and I do not suppose that any gentleman on this floor had anything to do with it, Congress thought proper, in order to carry out the terms of its pledge of faith in the treaty with France, to amend the previous law. I will send to the Clerk's desk the law of 1860 in order that gentlemen may know the provisions under which they are acting, and if these claims are to be repudiated the circumstances under which it is done. This act of 1860 was continued by the act of 1872. While these claims were regularly presented, while regular notice was given of the existence of the claims, which notice was filed in the proper office, there was no law until 1860 by which they could be allowed or confirmed.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act for the final adjustment of private land claims in the States of Florida, Louisiana, and Missouri, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That any person or persons, and the legal representatives of any person or persons, who claim any lands lying within the States of Florida, Louisiana, or Missouri by virtue of grant, concession, order of survey, permission to settle, or other written evidence of title emanating from any foreign government, bearing date prior to the cession to the United States of the territory out of which said States were formed, or during the period when any such government claimed sovereignty or had the actual possession of the district or territory in which the lands so claimed are situated, shall be, and they are hereby, authorized to make application for the confirmation of their title to the lands so claimed in the manner following, to wit: They shall file notices in writing, together with the evidence in support of their claims, before the commissioners hereinafter designated within whose district the lands claimed may be situated, together with a brief abstract of the title of the claimant and copies of the plats of survey thereof, whenever such surveys have been made and are within the possession of the claimant, and accompanied with a sworn statement by the claimant of the lands supposed to be covered by his claim according to the legal divisions and subdivisions of the surveys made by the United States, if the land claimed is included in any surveys so made; and the said notices, evidence, and the decisions of the commissioners thereon shall be recorded in a book kept for that purpose, a transcript of which shall from time to time be transmitted to the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the registers and receivers of the several land offices in the States of Florida and Louisiana within their respective land districts, and the recorder of land titles for the city of Saint Louis for the State of Missouri, and their successors in office, shall be, and they are hereby, appointed commissioners to hear and decide, under such instructions as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, in conformity with this act and according to the justice and equity of the principles hereafter established, in a summary manner all matters respecting such claims within the district aforesaid as come within the provisions of this act; they shall have power to administer oaths, compel the attendance of and examine witnesses, demand and obtain from the proper officers all public records in which grants of land, warrants, orders of survey, or other evidence of claims to land derived from any foreign government may have been recorded, and shall make a report to the Commissioner of the General Land Office on the claims so presented to them for decision, dividing said claims into separate classes in the manner hereinafter provided, and giving their opinion whether such claims ought to be confirmed or rejected.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the claims so presented and passed upon by the commissioners as aforesaid shall be by them divided in their report into three distinct classes, as follows, namely: No. 1 shall contain all claims which, in their opinion, ought to be confirmed where the lands claimed have been in possession and cultivation by the private claimants or those under whom they derive title for a period of at least twenty years preceding the date of filing the claim by virtue of some grant, concession, or order of survey, permission to settle, or other written evidence of title emanating from some foreign government which held or claimed sovereignty or jurisdiction over the territory in which the lands are situated, and when the title emanating from such foreign government bears date anterior to the cession of said territory to the United States. No. 2 shall contain all claims which in their opinion ought to be confirmed where the lands are claimed under written evidence of title, as above provided in class No. 1, but where there has been no actual possession and cultivation of the land claimed for a period of at least twenty years prior to the filing of the claim. No. 3 shall contain all claims which in their opinion ought to be rejected, whether from defect of proof, suspicion of fraud based on probable ground, uncertainty of location, vagueness of description, or any other cause sufficient, in their opinion, to justify such rejection: Provided, That in no case shall such commissioners embrace in said classes No. 1 and No. 2 any claim which has been heretofore presented for confirmation before any board of commissioners or other public officers acting under authority of Congress and rejected as being fraudulent, or procured or maintained by fraudulent or improper means; nor shall any such claim be received or considered by the commissioners which has been already twice rejected on the merits by previous boards.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That whenever the said Commissioner shall approve the report of the commissioners in cases embraced in class No. 1 or No. 2, he shall report the same to Congress for its action; and whenever the said Commissioner shall approve the report in cases embraced in class No. 2, the rejection of the claim so acted on shall be final and conclusive, and the land embraced within the claim shall be considered and treated as other public lands belonging to the United States.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That all claims comprehended within any of the three classes aforesaid, on which there shall be disapproval by the Commissioner of the report made by the boards of commissioners aforesaid, shall be reported to Congress for its action and final decision thereon.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That whenever it shall appear that lands claimed, and the title to which may be confirmed under the provisions of this act, have been sold in whole or in part by the United States prior to such confirmation, or where the surveyor-general of the district shall ascertain that the same cannot be surveyed and located, the party in whose favor the title is confirmed shall have the right to enter upon any of the public lands of the United States a quantity of land equal in extent to that sold by the Government: Provided, That said entry be made only on lands subject to private entry at $1.25 per acre, and as far as may be possible in legal divisions and subdivisions, according to the surveys made by the United States.

Mr. BUCKNER. Mr. Chairman, it will be seen from that act that the rights of these claimants were extended as they never had been before. All these parties had presented their claims to the various boards authorized by Congress to determine them, but they never took jurisdiction of these particular claims for the reason that the law never authorized them to do so. Hence Congress for some purpose, I suppose to do justice to these claimants, authorized wherever there was written evidence of title emanating from the Government, from whom is acquired title, and the lands had been sold, that titles should then be confirmed, and this proceeding is precisely under that act.

Now, sir, it is for this House to say whether they will give these parties lands which have already been decided to be theirs according to the treaty between France and this country; or whether they shall, after having sold the lands which belonged to them, refuse to give them any compensation whatever. For that is the whole of it.

As to the objection raised here in regard to who these claimants are, let me say to the gentlemen who make that objection that the case is precisely the same in regard to these claimants as in regard to the parties to every other claim which has been confirmed in the State of Missouri. The land is to be given to these parties or their legal representatives, whoever they are. If they are corporations or if they are any other parties than the heirs of the original claimants, I know nothing of it; and it would make no particle of difference to me whether corporations owned the claim or not. The law is that the legal representatives of these parties—they or their legal representatives—should be entitled to this land. I know as to some of them, because I have received letters from the heirs of the Vallés inquiring about these claims, that the heirs of those old Frenchmen are still asking for those lands. There is no propriety, therefore, in attempting to excite the House with the idea that this is an old, stale claim, and put forth for the benefit of corporations. If there is evidence of that, the gentleman from Michigan should introduce it.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman cannot tell who are the representatives.

Mr. BUCKNER. I cannot tell; but I say that this confirmation is in the words of all the other confirmations in the State of Missouri covering a large portion of the State. The law gives the lands to these parties and their legal representatives; it may be heirs; it may be purchasers; it may be corporations; it may be anybody who can show he has a title from these parties originally entitled to the lands. That is a matter for the courts or for the laws of the State.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman from Missouri allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BUCKNER. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] said this case had been twice investigated; once in 1805, and again in 1832.

Mr. BUCKNER. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. By whom was it first investigated? By what tribunal?

Mr. BUCKNER. I will state, as I have stated heretofore, that all the French claimants were directed to file their claims at a certain office; and a board of commissioners, one of whom was recorder of land titles, was to pass on these claims and report to Congress. These parties filed their claims. But they decided they had no jurisdiction; not that the claims were improper, not that the claimants had no right under the French treaty, but that they had no jurisdiction under the law as it existed at that time. The law has been changed time and again. The first law we had on that subject in the State of Missouri confined these claims to parties who were in actual possession and had been in possession for ten years, and they could get but two thousand arpents each.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. Have there been reports from those commissioners?

Mr. BUCKNER. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I would like, if it would not take the gentleman out of his line of argument, to ask that these reports be read.

Mr. BUCKNER. I have not them before me now. They are very voluminous. The reports as to these claims occupy fully one hundred pages. But I state it as a historical fact, well understood, that Congress from year to year by a number of acts of legislation enabled various parties that were excluded by prior legislation to come in and get the benefits of the treaty. And these belong to that class of cases.

Up to the act of 1860, extended by the act of 1872, these parties had no right to this land, and it was sold under the act of 1836. All this land was sold; and yet Congress says in the act of 1860 that any parties who have any written evidence of title from the Spanish government or the French government might put in their claims. And really that is the only question, whether these parties had any written evidence of title. As I construe this, and as the Committee on Private Land Claims construe it, it means that if a person gave a written evidence of title which put the party in possession of land under the Spanish government or the French government, that was sufficient evidence of title.

Mr. FORT. Why did they not keep possession?

Mr. BUCKNER. Because the General Government sold the land away from them.

Mr. FORT. Is there any evidence of that?

Mr. BUCKNER. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONGER. Is there any single acre of this land remaining under any of these titles located anywhere as a nucleus for a starting-point of the claim?

Mr. BUCKNER. I do not quite understand the drift of the gentleman's question.

Mr. CONGER. Is there any portion of any claim or pretended claim that has not been sold by the Government?

Mr. BUCKNER. It has been all sold by the Government.

Mr. CONGER. Is there any boundary, any land-mark by which claims could possibly be located?

Mr. BUCKNER. Unquestionably. I have the report here of the recorder of land titles, showing the exact boundaries of the claims.

Mr. CONGER. Then, there being no land left, the whole object is to satisfy these claims by taking other Government lands?

Mr. BUCKNER. Yes, sir. Under the law of 1860 that has been done invariably. Congress has done it time and again. Congress did it in the settlement of the McDonough estate. You have been called on again and again to do this under the act of Congress. McDonough died, having a large amount of land in this condition; and the land was equally divided between the cities of Baltimore and New Orleans for the establishment of free schools. And that land has been already under this act of 1860 divided out between the cities of Baltimore and New Orleans.

Mr. CONGER. This is then virtually a proposition to give 20,000 acres of land in Missouri for 20,000 acres of land embraced in these claims which were sold seventy-five years ago?

Mr. BUCKNER. It is a proposition to re-imburse these parties for lands to which they were entitled under grants from the French or Spanish governments, which the Government of the United States has sold, and put the money received from that sale into the Treasury.

Mr. FORT. It occurs to me that if the parties were in possession of these lands seventy-five years ago and the Government sold the lands over their heads that was the proper time to try the question of title. Why did they go voluntarily off of these lands?

Mr. BUCKNER. Does the gentleman know, or does he not know, that under the decision of the courts of the United States a claimant under a Spanish title has no status in any court in the United States? The courts of the United States have decided that time and again, and hence these parties had nothing to defend themselves upon.

Mr. FORT. It is not very likely that the United States would send its surveyors upon the lands of people in possession under Spanish titles and deliberately survey and sell those lands, and the parties removed from the land without indemnity.

Mr. BUCKNER. Why, the same thing has been done in a thousand instances. After the passage of the act of 1836 any quantity of lands, which have been entered with claims of this sort afterward confirmed by Congress, were abandoned, and Congress authorized the parties to float their claims, which was the only way of re-imbursing them so as to give them lands elsewhere. That was the act of 1836.

I do not know that I have anything further to say on this subject. The bill is unanimously reported by the Committee on Private Land Claims after a full examination of the facts.

If this Congress thinks proper to violate the provisions of the law of 1860, of course that is a matter for themselves. These cases come clearly within that act, and there is no pretense that they do not. It is for the House to say whether they will carry out the act of 1860 or not.

Mr. DUNNELL. I would ask the gentleman if the Commissioner of the General Land Office has not formally decided against the three last claimants whose cases are embraced in this bill?

Mr. BUCKNER. No; only two.

Mr. DUNNELL. Two in number, but three parcels of land.

Mr. BLAND. I do not profess to understand this matter, but if I do I am not certain whether I favor this bill or not, although of course I would like to favor my colleague. If the effect of this bill is to issue land scrip to be located on lands in Missouri, thereby taking from the people the right of pre-emption and homestead, I am opposed to it.

I do not know if that is the effect of the bill, and I would like to have it explained. If the bill provides for the entry of lands by land scrip by private parties, lands that are subject to homestead and pre-emption entry, I am opposed to it. If that is the effect of the bill I shall have to vote against it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I find a great deal of legislation upon this subject extending back as far as 1805, and very ample provision was made for the protection of these titles.

Gentlemen will find that the old statutes are full of notes referring to the decisions of the court made touching these land titles. I call the attention of the gentleman from Missouri to the act of 1824, enabling the claimants of lands within the State of Missouri and Territory of Arkansas to institute proceedings to try the valitity of their claims. By that act these claimants under Spanish titles were authorized to go into the Federal courts for the adjustment of their claims.

Mr. BUCKNER. I undertake to say that there has never been until the act of 1860 any provision made under which parties who have mere written evidence of title from the French or Spanish governments had a right to go into the courts or before any other tribunal.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, we will see what the statute is.

I quote the first section of the act of 1824:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, That it shall and may be lawful for any persons or their legal representatives claiming lands, tenements, or hereditaments in that part of the late province of Louisiana which is now included within the State of Missouri by virtue of any French or Spanish grant, concession, warrant, or order of survey, legally made, granted, or issued before the 10th day of March, 1804, by the proper authorities to any person or persons resident in the province of Louisiana at the date thereof, or on or before the 10th day of March, 1804, and which was protected or secured by the treaty between the United States of America and the French Republic of the 30th day of April, 1803, and which might have been perfected into a complete title under and in conformity to the laws, usages, and customs of the government under which the same originated, had not the sovereignty of the country been transferred to the United States, in each and every case, it shall and may be lawful for such person or persons or their legal representatives to present a petition to the district court of the State of Missouri, setting forth fully, plainly, and substantially the nature of his, her, or their claim to the lands, tenements, or hereditaments, and particularly stating the date of the grant, concession, warrant, or order of survey under which they claim, the name or names of any person or persons claiming the same or any part thereof by a different title from that of the petitioner, or holding possession of any part thereof otherwise than by the lease or permission of the petitioner, and, also, if the United States be interested on account of the lands within the limits of such claims not claimed by any other person than the petitioner; also the quantity claimed and the boundaries thereof when the same may have been designated by boundaries, by whom issued, and whether the said claim has been submitted to the examination of either of the tribunals which have been constituted by law for the adjustment of land titles in the present limits of the State of Missouri, and by them reported on unfavorably or recommended for confirmation; praying in said petition that the validity of such title or claim may be inquired into and decided by said court; and the said court is hereby authorized and required to hold and exercise jurisdiction of every petition presented in conformity with the provisions of this act, and to hear and determine the cause on the petition, in case no answer or answers be filed after due notice, or on the petition in case no answer or answers of any person or persons interested in preventing any claim from being established; and the answer of the district attorney of the United States, where he may have filed an answer according to the evidence which shall be adduced by the petitioner by any person interested in preventing the decree of the court in favor of the title of the petitioner or petitioners, and by the United States, and in conformity with the principles of justice and according to the laws and ordinances of the government under which the claim originated, and the copy of such petition, with a citation of any adverse possessor or claimant, shall be served on such possessor or claimant in the ordinary legal manner of serving such process in the State of Missouri, at least fifteen days before the term of the district court of the United States to which the same is made returnable, and, in like manner, on the district attorney of the United States, where the Government is interested in the defense; and it shall be the duty of the United States attorney for the district in which the suit shall be instituted, in all cases where the United States are interested on account of the public domain, to take notice of each petition filed under the provisions of said act, in the said district, and to make defense on all just and proper occasions, in behalf of the public interest.

Mr. BUCKNER. That has no more application to this bill than to anything else.

Mr. HOLMAN. It applies to any French or Spanish grant, concession, warrant, or order of survey.

Mr. BUCKNER. And this bill relates to neither.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman says that these claims are neither grants, nor concessions, nor warrants, nor orders of survey; and yet he must bear in mind that this act was passed within twenty-two years after the treaty with the republic of France, and for the express purpose of a final adjudication of the claims under that treaty.

Mr. BUCKNER. There are several acts.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, in order to give effect to this very questionable measure of 1860—a measure of which I never heard in my life till it was brought up in this debate, although I was in the House at the time it was passed; it is a measure which manifestly arrested no attention—in order to give effect to that measure against all the legislative provisions interpreting the treaty of 1803, the gentleman now asserts that it is not probable that that legislation fully covered the whole ground. Why, sir, in looking over these acts I find that so tender was this Government of that French treaty of 1803 that in the act of 1812 it was provided—

That every claim to a donation of lands—

These claims I presume are for donations of lands. The gentleman certainly does not pretend that these lands were purchased either from Spain or from France. They were donations on condition of settlement.

Mr. BUCKNER. They were all gifts; those governments never sold their lands.

Mr. HOLMAN. They were all conditional grants. Any person who has looked into these grants has found how fruitful they always have been of frauds, even shortly after our Government came into possession of this territory, and as shown in the events that occurred in connection with claims founded upon the acquisition of territory from Mexico. Now this act of 1812 provides—

That every claim to a donation of lands in the said Territory—

The Territory of Missouri—

in virtue of settlement and cultivation, which is embraced in the report of the commissioners transmitted to the Secretary of the Treasury—

Referring to this very investigation of 1806 to which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BUCKNER] has referred—and which, by the said report, shall appear not to have been confirmed, merely because permission by the proper Spanish officer to settle has not been duly proven, or because the tract claimed, although inhabited, was not cultivated on the 20th of December, 1803, or not to have been confirmed on account of both said causes; the same shall be confirmed, in case it shall appear that the tract so claimed was inhabited by the claimant or some one for his use prior to the 20th day of December, 1803, as aforesaid, and cultivated in eight months thereafter, subject, however, to every other limitation or restriction prescribed by former laws in respect to such claims; and in all cases where it shall appear by the said report or other records of the board that claims to land have not been confirmed merely on the ground that the claim was for a greater quantity than eight hundred French arpents, every such claim, to the extent of eight hundred arpents, shall be confirmed.

This was the act 1812, confirming these donations of land, if the claimants had simply the advantage of proof of settlement and cultivation, so tender did our Government seem to have been of its duty to carry out in the most absolute good faith the provisions of the treaty by which this territory was acquired from France. Here, then, in 1812, eight years after the first act was passed, Congress passed an act of the most liberal character toward these claimants. Then came the act of 1824, which was still more liberal, allowing these people to go into the Federal courts and obtain a settlement of their claims.

Now here is a claim that was rejected in 1805, and rejected again in 1836. It now comes up again, and the gentleman demands that the old policy of the mediæval period of the Middle Ages shall prevail of large bodies of land held by a single person with a great body of subordinate tenants. The gentleman demands that that policy shall prevail as against the more humane and intelligent policy of the present period, which holds that the public lands are not subject to donation except to actual settlers, within such reasonable limits as will constitute homes for them. I think it is perfectly safe, after this lapse of time, to regard this claim as not one that should be recognized by Congress.

Mr. RIDDLE. Does not the gentleman conceive it to be the duty of Congress to confirm the title to claims in all cases that have been favorably reported upon by the Commissioner of the General Land Office?

Mr. HOLMAN. If the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RIDDLE] will look over this whole legislation from 1804 to the present time, he will find that those claims stand upon just the same terms as the others. The committee is right; the distinction which the Commissioner of the General Land Office seeks to make between the last claims and the two first is purely imaginary. The title to the one is just as good as to the other.

Mr. RIDDLE. Are we under no obligations in regard to those claims?

Mr. HOLMAN. Under no obligations? All the acts of Congress under the treaty up to 1860 were for the purpose of furnishing facts to Congress. I move to strike out the enacting clause of this bill.

Mr. FORT. I would like to say just one word.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the gentleman will renew my motion to strike out the enacting clause, I will withdraw it for the present.

Mr. FORT. I will do so. I see that in the eleventh section of the act of 1824 there is a provision which meets this exact case; a provision that where any lands belonging to these claimants under any grant, concession, or survey have been sold by the United States the claimant shall have the right to enter upon any other lands then subject to entry. This act of 1824 makes it lawful for the claimant to file his petition before the proper court, and to set up and maintain his right to the land; and if the land has been sold by the United States (as the gentleman from Missouri claims was done in this case) it is provided that the claimant shall have other lands in lieu of those sold.

In view of the provisions of this act of 1824, which cover the exact state of facts alleged to exist in this case, I can see no reason whatever for the passage of this bill.

Mr. BUCKNER. The act referred to by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. FORT,] as read by himself, provides that where a party makes claim under a grant, concession, order of survey, or permission to settle, then he shall be authorized to go into court and prosecute his claim. But the act of 1860, as I have said time and again, enlarged the rights of these parties by providing that any party who had any written evidence of title from the French government prior to the cession should have his claim confirmed.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does not my friend concede that the act of 1860 in its enlargement of the rights of these parties went far beyond the rights which they had possessed under the treaty with France?

Mr. BUCKNER. No, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly it did. The act of 1812 comes up fully to the requirements of that treaty.

Mr. BUCKNER. How does the gentleman know that?

Mr. HOLMAN. Because the act uses the very terms which are employed in the treaty, as the gentleman will find by making the comparison.

Mr. BUCKNER. Does the gentleman want to repeal the act of 1860?

Mr. BLAND rose.

Mr. HOLMAN. As the gentleman [Mr. BLAND] is a Representative from Missouri, I will of course withdraw my motion if he will renew it.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I have but a few words to say. As this bill was first reported I do not know that I should have opposed it. It seems that the Government, according to the claim set up here, has sold lands belonging to private parties, has derived the benefit of this sale, and the money has gone into the Treasury of the United States. But by an amendment to this bill it has been provided that the land scrip to be issued in lieu of the lands which have been sold by the Government shall be located nowhere but in the State of Missouri. I hope my colleague [Mr. BUCKNER] will not submit to such an injustice as that amendment would entail upon our State. As this money went into the Treasury of the United States, all the lands of the Government should be responsible for making this re-imbursement, not the lands of the State of Missouri alone. The United States having obtained the benefit of this sale and the money having gone into the Treasury, these claims should be settled from the common fund. Hence, I say that I hope my colleague will not insist upon the passage of this bill in its present form, which would perpetrate a great injustice upon the State of Missouri and her lands.

Gentlemen say that these lands are worth nothing. I say that they are. In my district there are large quantities of land still subject to pre-emption and homestead entry; and the people of my State would not look with favor upon a measure which would concentrate those lands in the hands of private parties or monopolies. As a Representative of the people interested in those lands, I protest against this bill in its present form as an injustice toward them and toward the State of Missouri.

With the amendment struck out I would not oppose the bill, for in that form it may be just; but there is great injustice in compelling the State of Missouri to refund to the Federal Government moneys which should come from all the States of the Union and not from one State alone. I hope the bill will not pass as now amended, for it would be a gross injustice to a large portion of the people of Missouri, an injustice which they would resent and ought to resent upon this floor.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now renew my motion to strike out the enacting clause.

The question being taken on agreeing to the motion, there were—ayes 71, noes 21; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BUCKNER and Mr. HOLMAN were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 78, noes not counted.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. SAVAGE. I move the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar had had under consideration a bill (H. R. No. 819) to confirm certain land claims in the State of Missouri, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment striking out the enacting words.

Mr. HOLMAN. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. BUCKNER. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Shall the enacting words be stricken out?

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the enacting words were stricken out; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FUNERAL EXPENSES OF AN EMPLOYÉ.

Mr. McMAHON, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be directed to pay out of the contingent fund the funeral expenses of Lawrence J. Riley, late an employé of this House.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted in the following cases:

To Mr. STEVENS indefinitely after the 23d instant;

To Mr. WALLACE, of South Carolina, for ten days on account of important business; and

To Mr. HATCHER indefinitely.

Then, on motion of Mr. SAVAGE, (at three o'clock and twelve minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned until Monday next.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. J. H. BAGLEY: Protest of the people of Coo-wee-skoo-wee and Delaware districts, Cherokee Nation of Indians, against the establishment of a United States territorial government over the Indian country, to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. CRAPO: The petition of Abiel Cadding, a soldier of the war of 1812, for a pension, to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

By Mr. HANCOCK: Papers relating to the claim of the heirs of David G. Burnet, deceased, for timber taken from his lands in Texas by United States troops stationed at Fort Lincoln in the year 1849, for building purposes, to the Committee of Claims.

By Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia: The petition of M. G. Harman, of Augusta County, Virginia, for payment of rent due by contract for the use of stables in Fredricksburgh, Virginia, by the United States troops in 1865-'66, to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, the petition of Adam Lushbaugh, of Augusta, Virginia, for compensation for property taken by United States troops, to the same committee.

By Mr. McDILL: The petition of citizens of Los Angeles County, California, against the passage of House bill No. 3364, to the Committee on Public Lands.

IN SENATE.

SATURDAY, July 22, 1876.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

THE JOURNAL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will come to order, and the Secretary will read the Journal of yesterday.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Before the Journal is read I should like to hear the first rule read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the first rule.

The Secretary read as follows:

1. The presiding officer having taken the chair, and a quorum being present, the Journal of the preceding day shall be read, to the end that any mistake may be corrected that shall be made in the entries.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

The Secretary called the roll, and thirty Senators having answered to their names,

Mr. HOWE, (at eleven o'clock and twenty minutes a. m.) Has the Sergeant-at-Arms been directed to request the attendance of absent Senators?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has requested the Sergeant-at-Arms to invite all Senators who are in the building to be present, but there has been no order.

Mr. HOWE. I move that that direction be given.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin moves that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to request the attendance of absentees.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Sergeant-at-Arms will execute the order.

Seven more Senators having entered the Chamber,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore, (at eleven o'clock and twenty-five minutes a. m.) There is a quorum present. Shall further proceedings under the call be dispensed with? The Chair hears no objection. The Journal of yesterday will be read.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. DENNIS presented the petition of Mrs. Elizabeth Barrett, of Washington, District of Columbia, praying for a pension as the widow of a soldier of the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present the petition of Manning M. Kimmel, of Hopkins County, Kentucky, praying for the removal of his political disabilities. A bill for the removal of Mr. Kimmel's political disabilities has already passed the House of Representatives, and I present this petition in pursuance of the custom of the Judiciary Committee of this body, requiring regular petitions. I move the reference of this petition to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CRAGIN. I present additional papers in the case of Albert Grant, of Washington, District of Columbia, in relation to his claim, which was reported upon adversely by the Committee on Claims. In connection with this additional evidence, I move that the motion postponing indefinitely the bill (H. R. No. 3182) for the relief of Albert Grant be reconsidered, and that it be recommitted with these papers to the Committee on Claims. As I understand, the chairman of the committee is willing that the bill shall be recommitted.

Mr. WRIGHT. This case has been called to my attention, and there seem to be some additional facts and some references to judicial records that were not before the committee at the time the bill was considered. In view of all the circumstances, I shall not object to a recommittal. I am not prepared to say that there is anything in the case as now presented that by any possibility will change the action of the committee, but I think it fair under all the circumstances that the case should be recommitted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire moves that the vote by which the bill was indefinitely postponed be reconsidered.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill with the papers now presented will be referred to the Committee on Claims, if there be no objection.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CRAGIN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 7) to provide for the sale or exchange of a certain piece of land in the Wallabout Bay, in the State of New York, to the city of Brooklyn, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. BRUCE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1236) granting a pension to Harris B. Lovell, late a private in Company C, One hundred and twenty-second Illinois Infantry Volunteers, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 370) to amend an act approved March 3, 1873, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act granting a pension to Captain Henry M. Scott,' approved April 9, 1872," submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1499) granting a pension to Mrs. Lydia Johnson, of De Witt County, Illinois, submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee was discharged from the further consideration of the bill.

FLOYD C. BABCOCK.

Mr. HOWE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 516.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 516) for the relief of Floyd C. Babcock. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Floyd C. Babcock, of Oconomowoc, Wisconsin, $556.55, to compensate him for services rendered by him while acting as deputy United States marshal, in the Indian country, in arresting and transporting four murderers to Fort Smith, Arkansas.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims, with an amendment in lines 5 and 6, to strike out "$556.55" and insert "$332.65."

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no report, the Chair is informed.

Mr. WRIGHT. There is a report in the case, a House report, which has been adopted by the Senate committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Perhaps the Senator from Iowa can explain the case without a reading of the report.

Mr. WRIGHT. It appears by the House report that the bill passed the House for the sum of $556.55. The report of the committee of the House was for the sum that is named in the amendment, but by some strange oversight the House passed the bill for the larger amount and paid no attention to the report of the committee. I suppose it was an oversight. We adopted the report of the House committee, and inserted the amount recommended by them. It seems this person was a deputy marshal. He was in the Indian country and was advised there had been a murder of a white family. There was no commissioner there who could issue process, but at the request of persons who knew of the murder, and he himself knowing something of it, he started after the murderers and succeeded in arresting them. They were indicted and two of them were convicted and executed. About the same time a murder was committed by another person. He was unable to get process, but succeeded in arresting the murderer, and he was tried, as I now remember. The Department of Justice, inasmuch as he acted without process, declined to make any allowance or pay to him. The testimony is full, showing that the amount now given by this bill is a reasonable sum and is justly due.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Did the Department of Justice recommend that he be paid?

Mr. WRIGHT. They recommend that he be paid, and state that they would have paid him, but for the lack of process.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the reading of the report will be dispensed with. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

RANDALL BROWN.

Mr. WRIGHT. There is a little bill reported from the Committee on Claims in favor of one of the employés of the Senate. It has passed both Houses, as I remember, and there have been two reports in favor of it. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 890.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 890) for the relief of Randall Brown, of Nashville, Tennessee. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Randall Brown $1,500 for property taken by the rebel forces while the same was being used by the Government of the United States, to be shown upon proofs and vouchers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the report read in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Claims, June 29:

Mr. JAMES WILSON, from the Committee on War Claims, submitted the following report:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 890) for the relief of Randall Brown, of Nashville, Tennessee, having had the same under consideration, report:

That the said Randall Brown is a colored man, resident of Nashville, Tennessee; that, during the late rebellion, in the year 1863, he was the owner of three teams, wagons, &c., and was employed with said teams, wagons, &c., on the forts then being constructed for the defense of Nashville by the Quartermaster's Department of the United States Army, with a promise or guarantee of protection against capture by the enemy; that, during the month of July, 1863, while engaged with his teams in hauling wood to Overton's Station, on the Tennessee and Alabama Railroad, on the 3d of July, the rebel forces made a raid upon the hands engaged in hauling wood to said station, taking them prisoners and capturing several teams, among others the teams, wagons, &c., of the said Randall Brown.

The committee are of opinion that the claimant was entitled to the protection pledged him, and that the capture of said horses, wagons, &c., was without fault or negligence on the part of the said Brown; that the said horses, ten in number, were worth the sum of $125 each, the price paid for horses for the military service of the United States at that time; that the wagons and harness were worth the sum of $250, and these facts are clearly established by satisfactory evidence.

Your committee, therefore, report back the foregoing bill with the recommendation that the same be amended by inserting in line 5 the word "five" in place of "six," and that as thus amended the bill do pass."

The Senate committee adopts the foregoing report, with the additional statement that at the time claimant's property was taken he was still in the employ of the Government under the contract that guaranteed him protection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The latter statement is the important point, that he was still in the employment of the Government, and I was going to ask the Senator from Iowa about that.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CORRECTION.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I do not want to tire the Senate with the repetition of matters about figures; but if there is anything to be made by making statements full of errors, I think it is worth while that these statements should be followed by an explicit denial of them. I find in the RECORD of this morning in what purports to be a speech delivered elsewhere by Hon. WILLIAM HARTZELL—delivered in the House of Representatives this RECORD says on Thursday, July 20, 1876—the same table which was shown here yesterday to be without the slightest foundation. This makes the fifth time that this table has been spread upon the RECORD, although the first time it appeared it was followed by the demonstration that there was no truth in it. I wish to read from this RECORD and then to make a statement.

In this connection—

I read from the third page of this morning's RECORD—

In this connection permit me to present two additional tables, one showing the increase per capita of taxation and the other showing the increase of civil offices.

After this first table, with which I have nothing to do at the present time, follows this statement:

The following statement of the number of employés borne upon the civil list of the United States from 1859 to 1875, inclusive, is compiled from the Biennial Register.

It is called first "a list of civil officers" and then it is called "a list of employés" in which it is stated, taking a portion of the table that was commented upon here yesterday, that the civil officers of the Government have increased since 1859 from 44,527 to 94,119 in 1875, that they increased from 57,605 in 1871 to 86,660 in 1873, more than 30,000 in two years, and from 1873 to 1875 they increased to 94,119, making more than 8,000 increase during the last period of two years.

I have to say, sir, that this is neither a correct statement of what the Biennial Register shows, nor a correct statement of either the increase of the civil officers of this Government or of the civil employés of the Government. Whichever term it goes by it is equally false and without foundation; and if the Senate will pardon me for troubling it every time this re-appears in the RECORD, it will be only from a feeling that, if any thing is to be made by piling up tables of figures that have no foundation upon which to rest, it is quite worth while, when they can be demonstrated as this can be to have no foundation in fact, that that demonstration should follow the table as often as it appears.

WASHINGTON MONUMENT.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I move to take up the bill making appropriation in regard to the Washington Monument reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 982) providing for the construction of the Washington Monument was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It appropriates $100,000 to continue the construction of the Washington Monument in the city of Washington. Before any portion of this sum shall be expended, the proper officers of the Washington National Monument Society, incorporated by the act approved February 26, 1859, entitled "An act to incorporate the Washington National Monument Society," are to transfer and convey to the United States in due form all the property, easements, rights, and privileges, whether in possession, or in action, or in expectancy, belonging to the corporation, for the uses and purposes set forth in the act of incorporation; and the charter is so amended as to authorize the executive officers of the corporation to make the transfer and conveyance in consideration that the United States agree to complete the monument. The construction of the monument is to be under the direction and supervision of the President of the United States, the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department, and the Architect of the Capitol, and in accordance with the laws regulating contracts and the construction of public buildings by the Treasury Department; and detailed reports of the expenditures are to be annually submitted to Congress.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I do not rise for the purpose of attempting to defeat the passage of this bill; but the subject having been referred for the last two or three years to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, I should deem myself derelict in duty if I were not to present the action of that committee. They have attempted on several occasions to come to some agreement with the officers and trustees of the corporation which now claims the control of this monument, but without success so far as to induce them to abandon the control of the monument or the character of the structure.

I may say that there is some doubt in relation to the foundation of this monument. The original excavation for this vast structure was, as I understand, but eight feet below the surface; that is to say, they have dug down for a solid foundation no deeper than they would for an ordinary dwelling-house in this vicinity, when they originally proposed to put up a monument about six hundred feet high. It would seem obvious that that is not a sufficient depth to secure a firm and enduring foundation. Why, some of our public buildings erected for the use of the United States Government have had their foundations in various cities go down to the extent of thirty feet in order to secure a firm base.

Then I have ascertained from a report of the engineer upon this subject that the base is now six-tenths of an inch out of level, which, of course, will carry the top of the monument considerably away from a perpendicular line, and as I have been informed by the former Supervising Architect of the Treasury there is a difference now, at the present height, of four inches from being plumb. Whether this has increased in the last few years or not, I am not able to say, but my point is this, that before anything of additional weight and height shall be put upon this structure it shall be thoroughly examined by competent engineers, so that the great risk of putting the additional amount of weight on the top shall be done under proper authority.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will ask my friend if his attention has been called to the report of the board of engineers on this subject?

Mr. MORRILL. I have it here.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have been unanimous for several years in relation to a change in this structure by which a thing of beauty could be put up, and at much less expenditure, and for this purpose I have sought the assistance of various architects, and I have here, if any gentlemen have curiosity to see them, the various plans that have been presented by architects showing that we might put up a triumphal arch that would be a proper monument for our greatest and earliest military hero, George Washington, and it would be something that would be entirely unique in this country, and probably if it be not put up in this place it never will be anywhere. I have some plans with different degrees of ornamentation, and of course costing somewhat in proportion to the size and character of the structure. One of them was sent to me from Florence, Italy, by an artist upon seeing some account of the proposition in the newspapers that there was to be a triumphal arch or that the question was mooted. These are generally designed for the purpose of having an equestrian or other statue of Washington upon the top.

Mr. President, let me say a word in relation to this monument, and I am not disposed to ridicule it. If it is put up at all, the only distinguishing characteristic about it will be its immense height, and that will be all that there is to recommend it. It is to be in the form of an Egyptian obelisk. Now, what is the true character of an Egyptian obelisk? I will not ridicule this proposed monument as the late Horace Greeley did, and call it a "pumpkin with a stick stuck into it;" but a real obelisk should be made from one stone large enough for the whole structure. What is this? It is a series of blocks with a hole in the center, making nothing but a huge chimney, and after all it is no more an object of admiration than a chimney for a huge factory or a shot tower.

Mr. President, there is another defect in this bill I fear. There have been not less than three, and I do not know but more, plans on the part of this corporation. It is true they surrendered their powers in 1858 or 1859, but nothing was done by Congress, and they then got an act of incorporation, I think in 1859, and resumed their powers. The first plan of the structure involved an expense of something considerably over a million of dollars, and the design then was as it is stated in the report:

The design embraces the idea of a grand circular colonaded building two hundred and fifty feet in diameter and one hundred feet high from which springs an obelisk shaft seventy feet at the base and five hundred feet high. This will be constructed first.

The vast rotunda, forming the grand base of the monument, is surrounded by thirty columns of massive proportions, being twelve feet in diameter and forty-five feet high, elevated upon a lofty base or stylobate of twenty feet elevation and three hundred feet square, surmounted by an entablature twenty feet high, and crowned by a massive balustrade fifteen feet in height.

The terrace outside of the colonade is twenty-five feet wide, and the pronaos or walk within the colonade, including the column space, twenty-five feet. The walks inclosing the cella, or gallery within, are fretted with thirty massive antæ (pilasters) ten feet wide, forty-five feet high, and seven and a half feet projection, answering to the columns in front, surmounted by their appropriate architrave. The deep recesses formed by the projection of the antæ provide suitable niches for the reception of statues.

And so it goes on in the most elaborate fashion for a whole page. At some time subsequently it was proposed to narrow the base to fifty-five feet square and to run up the obelisk to six hundred feet high. Now there is a different plan that is brought here for our consideration, I suppose, which proposes that the structure shall go up to four hundred and eighty-five feet high and to omit the colonnade at the foot. It is now one hundred and sixty feet high, and, with the base, about one hundred and seventy-four feet high. Here are three or four plans presented by this company, and here is a bill proposing to complete the structure without saying anything about under which plan or what it shall cost. It seems to me that that is going it blind, and instead that it ought to be particularly described under what plan the work is to proceed, or at least that the whole expense should be limited. I would much prefer that the commission authorized here should be allowed to put up any other structure that they might think more worthy of the Father of his Country and more worthy as an object of art.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. MORRILL. I suppose the Senate will allow this bill to be completed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think we had better do that. This bill is reported by the Committee on Appropriations, and might as well be disposed of now.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object, provided it is completed within a reasonable time. Therefore I will make it subject to a call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The consideration of the bill will be continued subject to a call for the regular order.

Mr. MORRILL. It was the judgment, as I have heretofore intimated, of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and of every architect or artist with whom I have ever conversed that it would be far more creditable to our country to put up a triumphal arch than to continue this heathen mythological monument. Let me say here that over the front door of the monument, as a matter of decoration, what do we now find? We find the sun and a couple of wings, representing in Egyptian hieroglyphics Osiris and Isis, or the sun and moon, as much as to say that the Father of his Country was a believer in the sun and moon. I suppose the artist who put on this supposed it to be a decoration instead of being a heathen mythological sign.

Mr. President, if the corporation that hold this monument now in their custody consent to abandon it, it seems to me that the Government of the United States ought to be left free to select their own style and character of a monument, and select one that we know in the outset will not cost more than a given and fixed sum. I have ascertained that we can complete an arch anywhere from $300,000 to $500,000, just in proportion to its amount of ornamentation; that there is enough in the huge pile of marble to construct it with the exception of such pieces of marble as would have to be decorated for the moldings or for any other purpose in the way of pilasters or columns. But if this bill is to pass, I propose to offer the amendment which I send to the Chair; and I leave it for the good sense of the Senate to do whatever they think best. If they think it best to finish this, and I would rather do this than do nothing, but I think it would be preferable to do the other thing and that it would be far less expensive to the United States, and when done it would be unquestionably a thing of which the country might be proud and entirely worthy of Washington, as this monument that is proposed I think will utterly fail to be.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. MITCHELL in the chair.) The amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment is to add to the bill:

SEC. 2. That before any work shall be commenced upon said monument a plan for its full completion shall be made and approved by the President of the United States, the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, and the Architect of the Capitol, and that the ultimate cost of the same shall not exceed the sum of $600,000.

SEC. 3. That prior to commencing any work on said monument an examination shall be made as to the foundation of the proposed monument in order to thoroughly ascertain whether it is sufficient to sustain the weight of the completed structure; and if the same shall be found insufficient or defective, or if the base shall be found out of level, the persons authorized to continue the construction of the monument under the first section of this act may make any change in the form and style of the structure which they shall agree upon, not to exceed the limit as to cost, mentioned in section 2 of this act, and which they shall judge will be equally appropriate as a national monument to Washington.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will detain the Senate but a moment. I supposed that this question of the construction of the Washington Monument was settled by the unanimous action of both Houses of Congress on the 5th day of July. I supposed that we had made up our minds to complete the Washington Monument as it is now proposed, and that that was settled by the unanimous vote of Congress on a resolution which I believe was sanctioned by almost everybody who spoke on the subject. The only doubt expressed by the people was that in some way or other our promise would be like the other promises which have been made before in regard to the Washington Monument. I am sorry to see any opposition made to this bill. Now let me answer in a minute or two all that was said by the Senator from Vermont.

In regard to the examination of the foundation, I hold in my hand an official report signed by Captain Marshall, of the Engineer Corps, and approved by General Humphreys, giving in detail the statement of the engineer that the foundation is ample. They have suggested certain modifications, and these modifications have been adopted. I have here also the plan of the present corporation, which is without means to execute it. Here is the authentic plan signed by John B. Blake, secretary, showing a shaft exactly similar to Bunker Hill monument. The Senator from Vermont ridicules the plan of this monument. It is an exact copy of the Bunker Hill monument, magnified many times. There cannot be anything so strangely absurd in it when the Bunker Hill monument is regarded, I believe, as the best monument in the United States to commemorate revolutionary events. Here is the monument, [exhibiting plan,] and it is completed now to the height of one hundred and seventy-four feet. The proposed height is four hundred and eighty-five feet. The foundation is eighty feet square, eight feet below the surface, and seventeen feet above the surface. There is an artificial structure seventeen feet above, making altogether twenty-five feet for foundation. The monument was commenced July 4, 1848; the cost so far has been about $230,000; and there is required to complete the structure, including the terrace, about $350,000, of which there is a detailed estimate in the document before me, being the report of the Select Committee on the Washington Monument of the House of Representatives, where these details are all given.

Unfortunately this work is now in the hands of a corporation created by Congress and subject to be repealed by Congress, and that corporation has not any means whatever to complete it. There have been complaints made that money heretofore given by private subscription to aid in the Washington Monument has been diverted or wasted in expenses, and the United States now have by solemn vote undertaken to complete this monument which will cost, it is said, $350,000, or about one-fifteenth part of the amount we propose to expend in a single year on the improvement of rivers and harbors.

Whatever may be said about the arch or the plan of an arch, let us complete one monument first before we complete another. This monument has been promised by several votes of Congress. First, in 1783 Congress resolved that the people of the United States would erect a monument to Washington. In 1799 Congress again resolved that the people would erect a marble monument in Washington to commemorate George Washington, and from that time to this abortive efforts have been made to carry this promise into effect.

I hope that now by a unanimous vote this attempt to fulfill the promise we made on the 5th of July will be made. If the Senate think it advisable to adopt the proposition of the Senator from Vermont, I do not know that I shall have any objection to it, except that it authorizes three men to change entirely the plan of this improvement. I do not think that power ought to be invested in any one. We ought to finish it according to the plan proposed, agreed upon, adopted years ago, and now finally after some modifications agreed upon by those who are intrusted with this work. But if the Senate think it proper to make the amendment I shall make no objection. I am willing to take the vote upon it. As to the examination of the foundation by a board of engineers, I have no objection at all, though that has already been done. Without detaining the Senate, I ask a vote on the proposed amendment and hope we may carry the proposition, whatever it is, that we agree upon by a unanimous vote.

Mr. MORRILL. A single word, Mr. President, in relation to the unanimous approval of the proposition on the 5th of July. There was not a word of discussion, and I must say that I did not comprehend what was before the Senate, coming in at the door just as it passed, until after it had passed. I merely, however, desire to call the attention of the Senate to what I have stated in regard to the uncertainty of the foundation, and I will read from the engineer's report:

The weight of that portion of the shaft already completed approximates 58,705,000 pounds, and of the foundation itself 21,565,800. The bed of the foundation has therefore borne for eighteen years, without signs of weakness or failure, the weight of 80,270,800 pounds, and while there is no apparent reason to believe that it will not bear the additional weight of 67,095,000 pounds yet to be placed upon it, there is only negative proof of its security; and it would therefore be culpable to attempt to complete the obelisk on the present plan until a thorough examination of the nature of the subsoil and its capacity to resist compression makes it certain, as far as human mind can foresee, that the monument will be as enduring as is the material of which it is composed.

Mr. SHERMAN. What does the Senator read from?

Mr. MORRILL. From the report of William L. Marshall, first lieutenant of engineers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What date?

Mr. MORRILL. Under date of February 19, 1873.

The weight of the entire shaft, if reared to the full height of 600 feet, allowing 170 pounds to the cubic foot of masonry, will be 125,800,000, bearing upon a base of 2,400 square feet. The pressure is, therefore, about 26 tons per superficial foot, or less than one-eleventh the crushing weight, supposing that the strength of the material does not exceed that of ordinary sandstone for building purposes.

Mr. SHERMAN. Ought not the Senator to state that the very suggestions contained in this report have been adopted by General Humphreys, and are incorporated in the plan on which they are working now? The modifications have been made.

Mr. MORRILL. This report goes on:

Owing, however, to the faulty manner of cutting and laying the blocks of the marble facing of the obelisk an undue pressure is thrown near the exterior edges of the joints. The chippings and splintering of the blocks from this cause may become aggravated as the weight of the obelisk increases, thus marring the appearance of the monument.

I only desire to call attention to this to show that the intimation I gave was not without sufficient authority, and I am not aware that any thorough examination has ever been made since 1873, the date of this report.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to call attention to the fact that this same officer in a letter to General Humphreys, dated Washington, District of Columbia, April 20, 1874, page 11 of this official document—this new board having adopted nearly all the suggestions contained in the previous report—makes an official statement that the foundation is ample and secure.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear a part of it, if you please.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will read it:

These modifications will reduce the additional pressure from 57,000,000 pounds to 22,000,000 pounds, or about one-third the entire weight of the obelisk as originally proposed. The additional pressure upon the foundation will be 1.8 tons per superficial foot instead of 4½ tons.

The stability of the shaft at this joint will not be reduced, and the structure will be of more elegant proportions when its height is seven times instead of eleven times its base.

The dimensions of the shaft, if so modified, will be 55 feet square at base, 38.33 feet square at top, and 437.8 feet from apex to base of foundation.

Herewith is inclosed a rough sketch, drawn to a scale of one inch to twenty feet, showing the relations between the shaft as originally designed, the portion now built, and the shaft as proposed above, with a plan for a terrace at its base 200 feet square at top, 17 feet high, terminated by slopes of two-thirds; with grass plots and paved walks, and ascend on the east and west sides by plain stone steps 24 feet wide.

The approximate cost of completing the shaft to four hundred feet and the terrace at its base is—

38,749.9 cubic feet marble facing at $3.25	$125,937 17
5,013 cubic yards brick-work, at $16	80,208 00
30,004 cubic yards embankment, at 40 cents	12,001 60

4,136 square yards flagging, at $7.29	$29,779 20
3,896 linear feet curbing, at $3.25	12,672 00
2,847 square yards sodding and solling, at 85 cents	2,419 95
250.4 cubic yards backing for steps, at $11	2,754 40
1,478.4 cubic feet cut-stone steps and coping, at $4	5,913 60
Iron roof and stairway	39,000 00
Total	310,685 92
For obelisk	$245,145 17
For terrace	65,540 75
	310,685 92

So that the very recommendations of the engineer have been adopted in this plan that I have, and this is the plan. [Exhibiting.]

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I am a little afraid that the amendment of my colleague, if adopted, would defeat the object we have in view. The persons who now control this monument are a corporation, and they have the rights that belong to a corporation to whom grants have been made. Even if we have the power, as I have no doubt we have—I think it is contained in the act—to alter, amend, or repeal the incorporating act, and if we were to repeal it, all the property that is there would still be theirs if they did not owe any debts. Now, as we have understood, the larger part of these gentlemen, and the people who have contributed the money so far as it has been contributed for the structure, are wedded to the idea of not taking down anything that has been started for the honor of Washington, so that I suspect that you would find this corporation would decline to transfer its property to the United States on the terms of the amendment.

My colleague states, and truly undoubtedly, that the base is now out of level by six-tenths of an inch as a fact. Supposing that to be the fact, as I have no doubt it is, then this amendment provides that if the persons charged with the completion of the monument find that to be a fact, then instead of going on with this monument they are authorized to go on with anything that they like with that material; that is the short of it. I do not think we shall get ahead at all with that provision. I should be quite willing to vote for a provision which said that these gentlemen having charge of the work, if they found that the base was so out of level as to furnish reasonable ground of fear that the greater weight upon it would still more displace it, and make the structure insecure, should report to Congress for further directions. That would be one thing; but to say that upon the existing facts—for that is what it amounts to—because the base is out of level by half an inch, this corporation is to turn over this structure to a commission to do what it likes with it, to make a triumphal arch, which certainly would be a very fine thing, it never will do it, because I have very good reason to believe (for I have interested myself in my humble way about this business for some years and early in this session introduced a proposition which went to my colleague's committee to complete this monument) that instead of the monument going on under that amendment nothing will be done about it. These gentlemen will not convey, they cannot be got to do it, as I now understand; and they merely represent that feeling which the people who contributed the money have, and are not standing upon any obstinate notions of their own that this obelisk to the memory of one of the chief founders of this Republic should not be taken down, but should go on. With the bill in the shape my colleague proposes, we shall find ourselves next year just as we are now.

I do think, therefore, that the true thing to do is to take the bill as the Senator from Ohio has introduced it, and if it should turn out at the next session of Congress on an inspection (which, of course, the President of the United States and the other people in charge would feel bound to make as a mere matter of ordinary discretion) that the foundation is so insecure that the monument cannot be carried any higher, they would take no desperate steps to run it up in order to see it fall, but they would endeavor to see carefully what the situation is, and then we can decide what may be done.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I withdraw the proposition which I first presented and offer this instead as additional sections——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, leave will be granted.

Mr. SHERMAN. A verbal amendment has been suggested to me in the variation of legal phraseology which I should like to have adopted first. I move to make lines 14 and 15 read:

Belonging to the said corporation to the uses and for the purposes set forth in said act of incorporation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is a mere technical change.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This amendment will be made, if there be no objection. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] offers an amendment, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment proposed by Mr. MORRILL, as follows:

SEC. 2. That before any work shall be commenced upon said monument a plan for its full completion shall be made and approved by the President of the United States, the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, and the Architect of the Capitol, and that the ultimate cost of the same shall not exceed the sum of $600,000.

SEC. 3. That prior to commencing any work on said monument an examination shall be made as to the foundation of the proposed monument, in order to thoroughly ascertain whether it is sufficient to sustain the weight of the completed structure; and if the same shall be found insufficient or defective, or if the base should be found to be out of level, then the further continuance of the work shall not be authorized by anything herein contained until the further action of Congress.

Mr. LOGAN. I did not hear the bill read. In whose charge is this work to be?

Mr. SHERMAN. The bill provides that it shall be in charge of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, the Architect of the Capitol, and the President of the United States, and it must be done under the laws regulating the construction of public buildings of the Treasury Department under contract. I will say that if it is true that the foundation is six-tenths of an inch out of level I do not think that would impair very much the strength of the foundation. But the Senator alleges a fact which would at once put a stop to the work; and on the statements of the Senator himself it could not go forward at all. Besides he speaks of its costing $600,000. Is that the cost from the beginning or only the cost from this time forth?

Mr. MORRILL. I only propose these sections, not for the purpose of embarrassing the bill, but of perfecting it. If the bill is to pass it certainly ought to be limited as to the amount that the United States shall become responsible to pay. I propose that the United States shall not be responsible for more than $600,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think that is more than enough.

Mr. MORRILL. I doubt whether it can be completed for that sum, certainly not for less, whatever the engineers and architects may say.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is only an invitation for them to spend $600,000. We have the report of the engineers that it will cost but $310,000.

Mr. MORRILL. If the Senate is willing to limit it to less, I shall go for a less sum; but I do not believe it can be completed for any such sum. It will take from thirty to fifty thousand dollars to finish up around the base.

Then, in relation to the base being six-tenths of an inch out of level, I do not know; but it seems to me that if this thing is to be run up to four hundred and eighty-five feet in height, and is four inches now out of plumb, it will be when finished like the leaning tower of Pisa. I should doubt much the prudence of completing it if it shall be found to be so much out of plumb.

I do not desire to embarrass the Senator from Ohio at all, if it is the sense of the Senate that this is such a bill as ought to pass; but I would infinitely prefer something that would cost not more than two-thirds of the money, and be, as I think, much better; but at the same time I do think that we ought to limit the amount, because otherwise the architects may go on and construct this under the first plan, the second, third, or fourth. There is no limit whatever to the ultimate expense, and certainly I think there ought to be an examination as to the foundation; for the late Architect of the Treasury, Mr. Mullett, told me he would not risk an ordinary building, such as he was putting up every day for the Government, on this foundation. The foundation ought to be examined there at least to the depth of thirty feet, to see what the nature of the ground is, or until they find hardpan.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the amendment proposed by my colleague by striking out of the last section the words:

Or defective, or if the base should be found to be out of level.

My object is to strike out these words which would seem to put a a stopper, an absolute stopper, upon any proceeding at all until some further action of Congress; but I still leave the effective sense that my colleague is after. That is the test of the sufficiency of the foundation. The foundation may be defective in a critical sense and still be absolutely sufficient for the purposes for which it is designed. Of course I need not illustrate that. It may be out of level and be absolutely sufficient for the purposes.

Mr. LOGAN. If it is not out of level it is the first foundation ever put up in Washington that was not out of level.

Mr. BAYARD. In common with all my fellow-countrymen, I feel the deepest interest in the completion at the earliest moment of this memorial to the great American. At the same time, it seems to me that we have seen enough in the past to warn us of the danger of persistence in errors, errors in taste, errors in theory as to what this grand monument should be. The gentlemen who have brought in this bill and those who have framed amendments to it, do probably understand their views of this matter; but it seems to me it would be right and just that the rest of the Senate should have a little more time to comprehend the plans proposed for our approval or our disapproval. The amendments to this bill are numerous, and they have not yet been printed. I suggest that some opportunity for consideration of the amendments be given to the Senate. I do not know that I fully comprehend the object of the amendments or the object of the bill brought in by the Senator from Ohio; but if the object of his bill is to continue the present structure upon anything of a theory which we can imagine from what we see of it, I should be very sorry to see such a plan further proceed. Why, sir, I have heard no man speak of the present unfinished monument except in terms of the most positive regret, if not of absolute disrepect. It seems to have nothing in it that can either impress you with awe for its grandeur or inspire you with admiration for its beauty. I do not believe that this present structure can be continued and produce any of those emotions upon us and the generations who are to succeed us in this land and those from other lands who come here to pay their tribute of respect to the great moral excellences of the man whose virtues this monument was designed to commemorate. I do not believe that the impressions we desire to produce upon them will in any degree be assisted by the continuance of such a blot upon architecture, as I must consider this obelisk which stands here half shorn in its height. There is in it to me nothing that is impressive, nothing that is beautiful, nothing that is tasteful, nothing that is remarkable, excepting perhaps the pious motives which induced it.

Therefore, if in this bill which I may not fully understand, or if in these amendments, which I do not fully understand, there is a proposition under any circumstances to continue expenditure upon this unfinished structure, I desire to record my vote against them. If on the contrary there shall be a scheme which shall submit the matter to those who have made art their study, to those whose professions have enabled them to obtain that which we so much lack in the hurry of the active business life which we lead in this country, and for them to present hereafter to Congress plans of an appropriate monument for this great and patriotic purpose, then I shall be very glad to assist in it, nor shall I stop upon the question of simple pecuniary amount as to this.

This is of all years the one in which this monument should be recommenced, in which some new signification should be given by the people of America of their appreciation of the virtues which called this monument into existence. But "art is long and time is fleeting;" and it is not for us in this time and hastily to be settling a matter which is to last as we trust for generations, perhaps centuries to come.

Therefore I hope that what has been presented to the Senate to-day may be put in print, may be brought up here at the earliest moment of the coming week, and that we may have the opportunity by seeing these amendments in print to understand precisely the design. As I understand it now—it may show my want of comprehension of the amendments—two architects are to agree upon plans which they are to put in some degree in execution without submission to the Senate at all. That I do not desire shall take place, for, as I have my share of responsibility, I propose to exercise my share of power in choosing the character of this monument.

Mr. SHERMAN. If my friend will allow me, I think it is the misfortune now of this Washington Monument that it has been talked of in Congress for one hundred years. We have made promise after promise, and the very moment we come to anything like the execution of the promise we are met by these delays. Now, let me give my friend from Delaware, who is a very reasonable man and I know a patriotic man, the facts. No plan is proposed. This Congress, in both Houses, by a unanimous vote declared its purpose to complete the Washington Monument; and now we propose to spend $100,000 in doing it. There is no controversy at all about the plan. The plan is a matter fixed by the board of engineers. The corporation that has this matter in charge has adopted the plan of the board of engineers and here it is. [Exhibiting.]

Mr. BAYARD. Am I mistaken in supposing from these diagrams that we have here one proposition which is a triumphal arch and one which is a mere obelisk upon a different plan?

Mr. SHERMAN. The plan of the triumphal arch is a plan which my friend from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] takes a great interest in. That involves tearing up the monument as it is and building a new triumphal arch. Would the Senate in the second century of our history commence by tearing down the only monument that has ever been attempted to be erected for Washington, in order to construct it upon some other plan? Before that triumphal arch could be finished or half way up, a new set of men occupying our places here might say that it did not conform to the laws of taste, and they would tear it down and build up perhaps a pyramidal arch.

I hope without any further delay, as the bill creates no new plan but simply carries into execution an existing plan adopted after full consideration, that we shall have a vote.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I understand the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] requires that a new plan shall be submitted. If the plan has been adopted and is a fixed thing, I do not know why we should want to adopt that amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. We do not want the amendment. So far as the plan of the Washington Monument is concerned, it has already been fixed.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. If there is nothing open, if the plan is fixed, the amendment ought to be voted down.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it ought to be voted down.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to say just a word in reply to my friend from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD.] He feels the same interest in this matter that we all do; he wants the right thing; but unless we begin afresh to build a monument of our own from the bottom to the top, as a fresh work, calling it a triumphal arch or whatever might be agreed upon by the architects and the President, then I submit from the knowledge I have about it, and that we all have, if we are not to do that we must take this property and this endeavor as far as it has gone from the people who have furnished the money, and build it according to their ideas. If their ideas are so bad, so outrageous in respect of taste and art as to make the thing when completed a discredit to the United States rather than a credit to all concerned, then we ought not to do anything about completing that monument; and if we do not do anything about completing the monument, what right have we got, either moral or otherwise, to confiscate their blocks of marble there and turn them into something else? They will never assent to it. The people who have contributed the money have a deep feeling about it.

What is this monument? My friend criticises it, and well he may. A barn may be criticised in the same manner that was half way up, or the most ornamental house which was ever built. Aside from certain flummeries about it of taste, which I have not anything particular to say about, and which have long since been discarded, this monument belongs to one of the fixed classes or species of architecture. It is an obelisk.

Mr. MORRILL. A class, if my friend will permit me to say, that was in vogue fifteen hundred years before the Christian era, in the time of the Pharaohs.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly; I am much obliged to my colleague, though I believe I knew that before, and I was just going to remark upon it. Like the Ten Commandments and other good things, obelisks were in vogue fifteen hundred years before the Christian era, and something like obelisks were in vogue long before the historic period. Everybody knows that. It is a question of form and grace that meets the taste and the eye and the judgment according as the eye may be naturally skillful or may be educated upon certain principles of acquired taste.

I do not join with my colleague in condemning obelisks absolutely. There are a great many obelisks in this world that are of noble proportions and are well worthy. They are perhaps the most worthy of any of the objects that have descended to us from that long time in the Orient, both of time and geography. Therefore I shall not feel very unhappy, and I do not believe the educated people of the United States (among whom I do not count myself, but speaking my belief of them) will feel very unhappy if at the end of a hundred years of endeavor they see an obelisk, although it is a species of architecture that has existed for many thousands of years, rearing its head to the skies in commemoration of this man. I do not think obelisks in the best sense have gone out of fashion, or out of taste, or out of propriety. In certain aspects and certain situations, in the heart of great cities, triumphal arches and pyramids also please the eye; but when you take the geography of this valley of the Potomac and wish to bring to the eyes of the largest number of people at the same time that commemorative object to this man which will affect the greatest number at the same time, some lofty structure must be resorted to. I take it you are not going to have a tower; they are almost barbaric. All that you have to do then is to have what in the technical sense is an obelisk. Whether it is handsome or whether it is ugly depends upon the proportion of its breadth to its height and the degree of its tapering. While this thing, as it now stands, is ugly, when you carry it up two or three hundred feet more, whatever the distance may be, with the suitable diminution of its breadth, it will be entirely a different thing from what it is now; and from all the hills for twenty miles, for more than twenty miles, diameter around this valley, it will be the most prominent object next to this Capitol that appears to the eye of the beholder. I should be sorry to lose it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont to the right of the Chair [Mr. EDMUNDS] to the amendment offered by his colleague, [Mr. MORRILL.] The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment to the amendment is to strike out from the second section of the amendment the words:

> Or defective, or if the base should be found out of level.

So as to read:

> And if the same shall be found insufficient, then the further continuance of the work, &c.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is now on the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] to add certain sections to the bill.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Is the proposition divisible?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly; there are two sections.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are two separate propositions, which are divisible.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I call for a division.

Mr. MAXEY. The first proposition is a distinct proposition as to the plan; a second branch of the amendment provides for looking into the old structure before we go on with it.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to give notice that if this bill occupies any more time I shall ask for the regular order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You cannot get it. We will finish this bill to-day.

Mr. WHYTE. Mr. President, the amendment, as I understand it, is directly in the teeth of the bill. The bill proposes that Congress shall take out of the hands of the Washington National Monument Association, which is a private corporation, a chartered association, the monument, as it now stands, and construct it in accordance with the views of that association and the plans which it has adopted for its final completion. The proposition in the bill is that the United States shall take possession of the monument and assume its completion. The bill appropriates for the commencement of the work, when the United States has taken hold of it, the sum of $100,000, but provides that before any of that money shall be used this corporation shall transfer to the United States the property and the work as far as it has gone. We know that to complete that column, according to the lowest estimate, will take between $300,000 and $400,000.

The Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL,] the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, has given this subject great consideration. He has called it to the attention of the Senate Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. We have examined it with great care, and I for one do not hesitate to express my great regret that Congress should appropriate a large sum of money to complete this monument on the plan as adopted by this association. To my taste it will commend itself solely for its height. It is to be as high as the top of the cathedral at Strasbourg, without the breadth below that spire to sustain its great height. This will be a straight shaft, with a base eighty feet wide and a height of four hundred and sixty-three feet; nearly three times as high as that beautiful monument which my own State has erected to the memory of George Washington. How much out of proportion will it be in architectural finish to the breadth of love and affection which the Father of his Country has in the hearts of the American people! It will be a single square spire, almost like the mathematical definition of a straight line, "length without breadth." It will not add to the architectural reputation of the people of the United States. It will look merely like a plain memorial shaft, exaggerated in character, such as we see in the cemeteries around the various cities of this Union. But the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL,] anxious to build a monument which will do honor to our name as a people, who have advanced in art, has proposed a triumphal arch, which will be attractive to the eye, which will make the heart of every American when he looks upon it beat with joy and inspire in us a laudable pride that here in this new century we have erected a memorial to Washington, honorable to his great name, creditable to us, and which will go down to posterity as "a thing of beauty and a joy forever."

I would be willing to vote a million dollars for such a triumphal arch as that proposed by the Senator from Vermont. When, in passing along the Champs Elysées in Paris, looking toward the sky, I have seen that magnificent triumphal arch which the French erected in honor of the grand army under the decree of the first Napoleon, while I have felt proud of my own country and proud of the memory of Washington, I hoped to see the day when we, too, would construct some splendid monumental testimonial which would, in the time to come, tell the people, and the children of the people now born and hereafter to be born, that Washington had such a hold upon our hearts that the most refined art of man had been called into requisition to devise and the ingenious hands of the famed artisans of America to execute a splendid work of art, which would be beautiful to the eye—as costly as you choose—but such a work as would do honor to the man who is first in the hearts of the American people.

I prefer the amendment because it gives us the opportunity to erect a triumphal arch. I prefer it, because you are only, in my judgment, voting five or six hundred thousand dollars in the bill to complete a structure, of which I will not say we shall be ashamed, but of which I do not think the American people will be proud.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] to add additional sections to the bill. A division has been called for, and the question will be taken on the first section proposed to be inserted.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask for the yeas and nays on the first amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COCKRELL and Mr. NORWOOD. Let the amendment upon which we are now to vote be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first branch of the amendment will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That before any work shall be commenced on said monument a plan for its full completion shall be made and approved by the President of the United States, the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, and the Architect of the Capitol, and that the ultimate cost of the same shall not exceed the sum of $600,000.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to ask the Senator from Ohio what amounts have been estimated to complete the monument? This amendment requires it to be constructed under a different plan.

Mr. SHERMAN. The engineer estimates it at $310,000. The association estimates it at $350,000.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is to finish it according to its present plan?

Mr. SHERMAN. To finish it according to its present plan.

Mr. DAVIS. Does the Senator from Ohio object to this amendment?

Mr. SHERMAN. This first amendment authorizes these three men to tear up the Washington Monument and to build a triumphal arch. It defeats the whole object.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 14, nays 33; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Bayard, Bogy, Bruce, Cooper, Dennis, Gordon, Morrill, Norwood, Paddock, Ransom, Robertson, Saulsbury, and Whyte—14.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Barnum, Booth, Boutwell, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Cockrell, Cragin, Davis, Dawes, Edmunds, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Hamlin, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Kelly, Kernan, Key, Logan, McMillan, Maxey, Mitchell, Oglesby, Sherman, Spencer, Wadleigh, West, Windom, Withers, and Wright—33.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Caperton, Clayton, Conkling, Conover, Dorsey, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Hamilton, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, McCreery, McDonald, Merrimon, Morton, Patterson, Randolph, Sargent, Sharon, Stevenson, Thurman, and Wallace—25.

So the first division of the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the second division of the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the second amendment be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That prior to commencing any work on said monument an examination shall be made as to the foundation of the proposed monument in order to thoroughly ascertain whether it is sufficient to sustain the weight of the completed structure; and if the same shall be found insufficient, then the further continuance of the work shall not be authorized by anything herein contained until the further action of Congress.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The word "proposed" ought to be stricken out. It seems to imply a new monument.

Mr. MORRILL. I have no objection to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection that modification will be made.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I observe that the amendment provides for examining the foundation. That is all proper and right, but it does not specify by whom the examination shall be made.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will say to the Senator that that is provided for. The bill itself provides that this work shall be done under the direction of the President of the United States, the Supervising Architect of the Treasury of the United States, and the Architect of the Capitol.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I was not aware of the terms of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment inserting this additional section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there anything in the bill limiting the amount to be expended?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us first concur in the amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the first section of the bill itself read, constituting the commission.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100,000 to continue the construction of the Washington Monument in the city of Washington: Provided, That before any portion of said sum shall be expended, the proper officers of the Washington National Monument Society, incorporated by the act approved February 26, 1859, entitled "An act to incorporate the Washington National Monument Society," shall transfer and convey to the United States in due form all the property, easements, rights, and privileges, whether in possession or in action, or in expectancy, belonging to the said corporation, to the uses and for the purposes set forth in said act of incorporation; and the said charter is so amended as to authorize the executive officers of said corporation to make said transfer and conveyance in consideration that the United States hereby agree to complete said monument. And the construction of said monument shall be under the direction and supervision of the President of the United States, the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department, and the Architect of the Capitol, and in accordance with the laws regulating contracts and the construction of public buildings by the Treasury Department; and detailed reports of such expenditures shall be annually submitted to Congress.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to insert after the words "the United States hereby agree to complete such monument" the words "at a cost not exceeding $350,000." Certainly there ought to be a limit.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Here is a monument, the plans of which are all made, the cost of which can be ascertained. It will cost $300,000 for the specific thing we are about to do. As I understood my friend from Vermont, he proposed in his amendment $600,000, and I think I heard him say he did not think it could be completed for that sum. The amount which we limit regulates the plan, and to insert that plan is to say that we will construct the monument according to the plan adopted.

Mr. SHERMAN. Here is the difficulty. How can we tell how much this plan will cost? We have the estimate of the engineers who put it at $310,000. How can they tell how much it will cost until completed? Suppose the cost of stone should rise next year, or the cost of labor?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I merely call the attention of the Senator from Ohio to the fact that under some plans it may cost a great deal more than a million. The Senator seems to think it can be completed according to the estimate of the engineer which he holds in his hands. If so, I think it ought to be limited to that.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not care whether it is limited or not. It is said here it will cost $350,000. That is the highest estimate proposed.

Mr. LOGAN. It will be seen by the Senate that if the proposition is adopted as the bill now reads and should not be a sufficient amount, the deed made by these trustees amounts to nothing. The proposition in the bill is that we will complete the monument, not for any particular price but according to this particular plan. Hence the conveyance will amount to nothing unless we carry out the plan.

Mr. MORRILL. There is no plan specified.

Mr. LOGAN. It is the same thing.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not care anything about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] to insert the words "at a cost not exceeding $350,000."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think there ought to be added to the words in constituting this commission words which would show that these three officers are to act as a joint commission, and that it does not depend upon the individual will of every one of them if they do not agree about going on. Therefore, after the word "Capitol," to save all possible question, I move to amend by inserting:

Which officers are hereby constituted a joint commission for that purpose.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill providing for the completion of the Washington Monument."

ARTIFICIAL LIMBS TO DISABLED SOLDIERS.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask to take up House bill No. 1516.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the duty of the Chair to state that the morning hour having expired he will lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill known as the river and harbor bill, on which the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. LOGAN. This will take but a moment.

Mr. ALLISON. I must insist on the regular order. It has now gone over one hour beyond the time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will yield to my friend from Illinois so far as I am concerned.

Mr. LOGAN. If this bill leads to any debate, I shall withdraw it. It is an act to regulate the issue of artificial limbs to disabled soldiers, seamen, and others. It is an amendment to the old act.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

Mr. LOGAN. I have been pressed a great deal about it and it has been here a great while. It will take but a moment to act upon it. If there is any objection I shall withdraw it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois to proceed to the consideration of the bill he has named.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 1516) to regulate the issue of artificial limbs to disabled soldiers, seamen, and others.

The Committee on Military Affairs proposed to amend the bill in section 1, line 7, by inserting after the word "appliance" the words "or commutation therefor."

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear that explained.

Mr. LOGAN. The explanation is this: Almost in the words of the bill a law of this kind has existed, passed in 1870 or 1871, and the construction of it is that it only extended for five years and that therefore they cannot issue after the first issue. When the apparatus has been worn five years so that it cannot be used the next five years, there can be no re-issue. This is almost a literal copy of the bill, extending it every five years.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How does it differ from the law?

Mr. LOGAN. It does not differ at all except to change from the Secretary of War to the Quartermaster the furnishing of transportation. It is the same bill precisely except these changes and extending to every five years, which was the intention of the law.

Mr. ANTHONY. Is this commutation for the limb itself? I thought we had voted that down once.

Mr. LOGAN. No, sir; that is in the original law.

Mr. ANTHONY. Then a soldier who has lost a limb has a right to have an artificial limb or a certain sum of money in lieu thereof?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes; here is the statute:

> Every person in the military or naval service who lost a limb during the war of the rebellion, but from the nature of his injury is not able to use an artificial limb, shall be entitled to the benefits of section 4788, and shall receive money commutation as therein provided.

That is, where the limb is so destroyed that they cannot use it, then we give them in lieu of that a certain amount of money. That is the law that exists now and this does not change it.

Mr. ANTHONY. I recollect we had a very long and fierce debate here on the propriety of giving a commutation for the limb, and it was very properly voted down.

Mr. LOGAN. But it was put in the law as it stands now, and the only thing that this bill does is, as I stated, to change the transportation from the Secretary of War to the Quartermaster-General's Department and to extend the time; that is to say, it gives a different construction from what the War Department gives; it allows a limb to be given every five years. That was the intention of the original law, but the construction of the Department is that it does not allow a renewal every five years.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the bill read again.

The bill was read.

Mr. LOGAN. I move to amend the first section, so as to conform to the old law in that particular, to read:

> Every officer, soldier, seaman, or marine.

So as to include only those who were regularly in the service.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think this bill gives commutation for the limb—"limb or appliance or commutation therefor."

Mr. ALLISON. While the Senator from Illinois is preparing his bill and getting it into such shape that he himself will be satisfied with, I suggest that we go on with the regular order. He can call it up again.

Mr. ANTHONY. I suggest "commutation therefor in cases where commutation is now allowed by law."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa calls for the regular order.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator will allow me a moment, I will say that this bill was carefully examined by the Surgeon-General and is proposed just as it was examined and reported by the Military Committee on their construction of the law. I do not know who draughted the bill, but I examined it and I noticed that the change was that it used the word "person" instead of "soldier, seaman, or marine." I am now willing to make that change and make it conform to the original law. That is all there is of the bill. The Surgeon-General gives a construction that he cannot re-issue these artificial limbs. The commutation is the same and everything is the same, except the change I have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee in line 7, after the words "or appliance," to insert "or commutation therefor."

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the amendment after the word "therefor," by inserting "as provided by existing law;" so that the commutation will be exactly as the law now is.

Mr. LOGAN. I have no objection to that.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Illinois who reported this bill to the law of 1874, approved June 18, which declares—

> That all persons who are now entitled to pensions under existing laws and who have lost either an arm at or above the elbow, or a leg at or above the knee, shall be rated in the second class, and shall receive $24 per month: Provided, That no artificial limbs, or commutation therefor, shall be furnished to such persons as shall be entitled to pensions under this act.

There appears to be a conflict between this and the bill which the Senator from Illinois proposes now to pass, and I would suggest to him whether the effect of that bill will not be to repeal this provision in regard to the pension laws and thereby increase the pensions of a certain class of soldiers who are now disabled, to the exclusion of others.

Mr. LOGAN. I said I would withdraw this bill if it created discussion, but I want to say that the law has existed in this way although the pensions were given. No person is entitled to an artificial limb unless he was a soldier, unless he had done his duty properly and was properly discharged. You may call it by what name you please, if he cannot use the limb he gets commutation for it; that is to say, the price of the limb in lieu of it. The men may either take the limb or the price the limb costs in lieu of it. That is the construction of the law as it stands now. I hope the bill will pass.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. I suggest to the Senator from Illinois to amend his bill, by an additional section or proviso, to the effect that this act shall not be held to be in conflict with the act of June 18, 1874.

Mr. LOGAN. I will say to the Senator that, if the bill conflicts with it, that may be the object. I think the Pension Committee did very wrong in passing the law they did, depriving these poor men of their commutation where they cannot use the limb. They certainly get a very small pension, and I think they ought to have this limb besides. It has always been given since the law passed, and I am in favor of giving it again.

Mr. ALLISON. Let me suggest to the Senator that if I understand the law quoted by the Senator from Kansas that was an act to increase pensions in certain cases and it did increase the pensions of this class of soldiers, but it provided that if they availed themselves of this act they should not have artificial limbs in addition. Now it seems to me, if we pass the bill proposed by the Senator from Illinois, it will have the effect to decrease the pensions provided by this act if they accept the provisions of that act.

Mr. LOGAN. It will not, because the bill already provides, if you will read the amendment adopted, that according to existing laws they shall receive this.

Mr. ALLISON. The existing law is that if they have increased pensions they shall not receive it.

Mr. LOGAN. If that is the existing law, that is the end of it.

Mr. INGALLS. It is my impression, from an examination of this law and from hearing the bill reported by the Senator from Illinois read, that it is the intent by indirection to increase the pensions of this class of disabilities; that the object is to get around the law of June 18, 1874, so as to enable this class of pensioners to receive not only the increased pension but also the commutation for the limbs. While this may be right, and I have no objection to it on principle, still it is obtaining a certain result by indirection and at the same time works a manifest injustice to that class of pensioners who do not get an increase by this or by any other law.

Mr. LOGAN. The ones who get the increase are not the ones affected by it, and the Senator is certainly wrong. According to the law in reference to granting pensions, those who get the increased pensions it provides shall not have this extra limb.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator's bill provides that they shall have the limb or commutation, irrespective of the pension.

Mr. LOGAN. But as it has been amended—I called attention to the fact a moment ago—by the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont it is "as provided by existing law;" hence the existing law already depriving them as a matter of course will do it as to that class. That amendment has been adopted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It might be better, to save all possible doubt about the words "as provided," to add "and limited;" so as to read:

> As provided and limited by existing law.

Then there cannot be a possible question, because if that is a limitation it is a limitation on this. I move that amendment.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not accept that amendment. It is not necessary at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LOGAN. The word "limited" there is exactly what we are trying to cure It is limited now by the construction given to it by the officers of the law, that these men are entitled at all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is only as to the commutation, I will say to my friend; it does not apply to the rest of it, but is only a limitation on the commutation. If the man does not take his limb, it is to apply.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not know but that the lawyers who control by their construction the statutes of Congress would give it that construction. The Surgeon-General has given it the construction I have stated. I do not know who else has, but probably the Secretary of War has. Anyhow it is construed so that no one is entitled under existing law to the provisions in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My amendment does not apply to the general object of the bill as a limitation upon that; but to the amendment reported by the committee about commutation, which, as it now stands modified, is "commutation therefor as provided by existing law." I propose to add after the word "provided" the words "and limited;" so that it will be:

Or commutation therefor as provided and limited by existing law.

So that the limitation only applies to the money part or commutation and that relieves the difficulty that the Senator from Kansas suggests.

Mr. INGALLS. I want to ask the Senator from Illinois a single question. The act of June 18, 1874, provides for an increased pension instead of commutation. Now I ask him whether the intention of this bill is to give the pensioner increased pension and commutation for a limb that he cannot use?

Mr. LOGAN. There is no such object at all. The law was passed without reference to the pensions. The object is just what is expressed on the face of the bill, to give the man an artificial limb who lost a leg or arm in the service.

Mr. INGALLS. He has a right to that now.

Mr. LOGAN. He had the right to it except that the Surgeon-General construed the law not to extend further than the first five years. Hence it cuts him off; and this is only to extend it every five years as the original intention of the law was. That is what the bill means, and that is all it was intended it should mean.

Mr. HARVEY. My understanding of this question is that the object of the bill proposed by the Senator from Illinois is to enable pensioners of this class to procure from the Government artificial legs at the rate that the Government arranges with certain companies to furnish them, enabling the soldier to procure the artificial limb upon much more favorable terms than he could possibly get it from the companies or the dealers, dealing with them individually. I have had some soldiers speak to me about this bill, and as I understand, having to purchase these limbs each on his individual account, they cost something like 30 per cent. higher than the rates at which the same quality of limb is provided under the arrangement of the Government with the companies. The object of this bill is to do away with the ruling that the Senator from Illinois has referred to, that after the first five years the soldier, without such legislation as is proposed, cannot secure a limb under that arrangement and must make an individual arrangement on the best terms he can.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. I move to add as a proviso the words:

Provided, That this act shall be subject to the provisions of an act entitled "An act to increase pensions in certain cases," approved June 18, 1874.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator is a very good lawyer, and after having the amendment made to this bill providing that it shall be subject to all limitations of the law, I presume no one knows better than he that that does bring it within the very proposition he now makes. But for some reason or other it is impossible to make a bill so plain that some one must not have an amendment put to it, not for the purpose of showing his ability or his facility in getting up laws or anything of that kind, but for the purpose of having it amended to make it so plain that he cannot even understand it himself. That is about what results from these amendments. I ask the Secretary to read the bill with the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont. It does exactly what the Senator from Kansas proposes to do now.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That every person who, in the line of duty in the military or naval service of the United States, shall have lost a limb, or sustained bodily injuries depriving him of the use of any of his limbs, shall receive once every five years an artificial limb or appliance, or commutation therefor, as provided and limited by existing laws, under such regulations as the Surgeon-General of the Army may prescribe; and the period of five years shall be held to commence with the filing of the first application after the 17th day of June, in the year 1870.

SEC. 2. That necessary transportation to have artificial limbs fitted shall be furnished by the Quartermaster-General of the Army, the cost of which shall be refunded out of any money appropriated for the purchase of artificial limbs.

Mr. LOGAN. "As provided and limited by existing law." That covers exactly the proposition the Senator from Kansas desires. If his proposition goes in I shall ask that the other be stricken out. They are both the same, and they mean the same.

Mr. INGALLS. Since reading section 4787 of the compiled laws I am more than ever convinced that while the Senator from Illinois may be entirely sincere, as I have no doubt he is, in his advocacy of this bill, it has a purpose which is not disclosed on the surface. Let me read the language of section 4787:

Every officer, soldier, seaman, and marine who was disabled during the war for the suppression of the rebellion in the military or naval service and in the line of duty, or in consequence of wounds received or disease contracted therein, and who was furnished by the War Department, since the 17th day of June, 1870, with an artificial limb or apparatus for resection, or who was entitled to receive such limb or apparatus since said date, shall be entitled to receive a new limb or apparatus at the expiration of every five years thereafter, under such regulations as have been or may be prescribed by the Surgeon-General of the Army.

Now, Mr. President, can anything be more direct or explicit than that language? What is there in that which requires the passage of this bill? The direction is explicit that within a period of every five years after the very date named in the bill, the soldier, seaman, or marine shall be entitled to the artificial limb and apparatus for resection or commutation therefor. Now, in view of the statute of June 18, 1874, there is no doubt in my mind whatever that the purpose of this bill by re-enactment is to give a certain class of pensioners an advantage over others who are not on the list. While I do not object to the increase of pensions, while I do not pretend to say that these men receive or will receive too much, what I do ask is that all classes shall be treated alike; but if you are going to increase pensions in one case, increase them in all.

Mr. LOGAN. I am very much surprised at the Senator's imputation. Why the construction has been given to this law that has been given to it, I cannot state. As I said a while ago, these lawyers or men having the power to construe statutes give a construction that might not be the construction the persons would give who passed the laws. But that is not for me to determine. They have so construed it, and that is what this bill proposes to remedy—the construction given. In reference to commutation you will find the same provision here in sections 4790 and 4791.

SEC. 4790. Every person in the military or naval service who lost a limb during the war of the rebellion, but from the nature of his injury is not able to use an artificial limb, shall be entitled to the benefits of section 4788, and shall receive money commutation as therein provided.

SEC. 4791. The Secretary of War is authorized and directed to furnish to the persons embraced by the provisions of section 4787 transportation to and from their homes and the place where they may be required to go to obtain artificial limbs provided for them under authority of law.

The bill now is almost the same language as the existing law; and it is merely to avoid that construction of the statute which has been given to it by those who have the right to furnish these limbs or apparatus. Why the construction has been given I do not know; but it has been given that these men are not entitled to artificial limbs after the first five years. The only object of the bill is to remedy that.

So far as the amendment is concerned I care nothing about it; but if it is put in, the other amendment ought to be stricken out, because they both mean the same thing precisely. The Senate having voted in the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont, certainly it obviates the necessity of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas, unless it is a mere desire, as I said, to have the bill so amended that nobody can understand it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask that the amendment that I suggested be made, to strike out "person" in line 3 of section 1 and insert "officer, soldier, seaman, and marine;" so as to read:

That every officer, soldier, seaman, and marine of the United States Army who in the line of duty in the military or naval service, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. U. S. GRANT, jr., his Secretary, announced that the President had this day approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. No. 391) to authorize the Secretary of War to purchase a parcel of land on the island of Key West, Florida;

An act (S. No. 843) establishing the rank of the Paymaster-General; and

An act (S. No. 983) to extend the duration of the court of commissioners of Alabama claims.

CHANGE OF NAME OF VESSEL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business, being the river and harbor bill, is now before the Senate.

Mr. HAMLIN. I ask the Senate to allow me unanimous consent to take up a bill to change the name of a vessel, which will not take a minute. It is material to the man who wants it changed.

Mr. ALLISON. He can wait one day more.

Mr. HAMLIN. It will not take one minute to pass the bill. I hope the Senator will not interpose any objection.

Mr. ALLISON. If it will not give rise to any debate, I will yield.

Mr. HAMLIN. If there be one word of debate, I will move to lay it on the table.

There being no objection, the bill (S. No. 992) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue a register and change the name of the schooner Captain Charles Robbins to Minnie was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3022) making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the motion of Mr. THURMAN to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to reduce the aggregate amount of the appropriations contained in the bill to a sum not exceeding $4,000,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. ALLISON. Before the Senator from Vermont proceeds, I desire to say that I shall ask the Senate to remain to-day until this bill is completed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Would not the Senator say to-morrow? [Laughter.]

Mr. OGLESBY. I wonder if the Senator from Vermont will get through with his speech to-day.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I shall not, if I am interrupted by orations from other Senators as I was yesterday. What I had to say would have been said within thirty minutes, but I think an hour and a half was occupied by my little speech being filled up with padding by the speeches of other Senators; and my only consolation is that what they said was so much better than what I could have said that the country will believe—which I am always looking to of course—that it was all my speech. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, seriously speaking I am rather sorry that when a bill of this importance—for it is very important—is before the Senate, we should find ourselves at this moment with a scant quorum. I take it for granted that we have one; otherwise I could not go on at all.

When I left off last evening I was still on the subject of the river and harbor bill itself. By and by, in the course of my remarks, if I do not get too tired, I shall refer to some other topics that have been very properly drawn into this discussion, as to the general state of the country, the taxation, expenditures, &c.; but for the present time, I am on the topic introduced by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERRY] of taking the House bill, or, if we cannot get that with its $40,000 more for Michigan, as the songs used to go in the war times:

> We are coming, Father Abraham,
> With forty thousand more,

which I believe is the exact sum of dollars that my friend from Michigan wishes to have the Senate understand his State gets, or, if we cannot get that, then we are to take the bill as the Senate have perfected it—save the mark—not as the committee, but as the Senate has perfected it, by increasing $40,000 more for Michigan to $50,000 or so. But the particular point to which I wish to draw the attention of the Senate now in the remarks of my honorable friend the President of the Senate as the ground for pressing this bill through, hit or miss, without regard to the perniciousness of any of its items, but as a whole, is that in his remarks of the 15th of July, as the prime or cardinal reason for our swallowing the bill whole, he said:

> We will have a bill that appropriates $5,800,000, which the House of Representatives has passed, and this, remember, is the body of the people.

Whether the Senator meant by that that the House of Representatives is the body of the people as the posse comitatus in the counties is the body of the county that the sheriff may call upon in case of sudden distress and everybody rallies to the flag, or whether he meant, as I suppose he did, that the body called the House of Representatives is a body that comes from the people, I do not particularly know, but I suppose that is what he meant, and I take it in that sense. I infer from that remark that the Senator imagines and believes that this body does not come from the people, but comes from some extraneous foreign source or territory, and that it does not represent the just, conservative, steadfast, uniform judgment of the people of the various States; and, therefore, no matter what our individual opinions may be about this item or that item or the other, we are bound to take it because the House of Representatives, being "the body of the people," or, as in old times, six, or eight, or ten years ago, used to be called the tribunes of the people, have thought it was wise or expedient, and that the only discretion left to us was that very narrow one that belongs to the servants to register the edict of the other House, because it is "the body of the people."

Mr. President, with the greatest possible deference to my friend from Michigan, I must be excused if I differ with him. According to my understanding of the frame-work of this Government, the Senate is just as much the House of Representatives, and in just as large a degree the body of the people as the House is. Who are Senators? Are they not of the people? Are they not citizens of the United States and of their respective States just as the members of the House of Representatives are? Are they not presumably equally respectable and equally intelligent? Is it not to be presumed that within the sphere of their habitations, among the people, and of the people, they may understand, man for man, just as much of the interests, of the wishes, of the prejudices, of the emotions of the people as the members of the lower House? I think that question must be answered in the affirmative; and if my honorable friend from Michigan will only recall to his recollection the history of the formation of this Government, he will find that such was the concurrent sentiment of the people of the United States, without regard to State lines. That great body of patriotic and intelligent men who composed the nation at that time, ordained and established this body just as much, in just as large a degree, the representatives of the people as it did the House of Representatives; with this difference, that the House of Representatives, being elected three times as often as Senators, reflect more perfectly the temporary passion of the hour, if I may so call it, or emotion of the hour, or sentiment of the hour, than the Senate. The reason why they gave Senators a long term of office as distinguished from the short term of the members of the House of Representatives, was that they intended to provide against the possibility of any sudden popular clamor or emotion, or prejudice, or interest which it was supposed, according to the infirmities of human nature, might affect a member of the lower House who was watching for a re-election presently, when it might not affect a member of this House who would have the courage to believe that if he stood against the tide of clamor and emotion there would be time for passion to cool and for reflection to come in, and that he, before his time expired, would be justified by the unanimous sentiment and judgment of his countrymen.

I know of no theory of the Constitution—and I cannot help believing that my friend will agree with me, because these words of his, of course, were spoken in the heat and hurry of an interlocutory debate—which removes this body any more from being "the body of the people" than it does the members of the other branch of the legislative department of this Government. The one is the sudden and responsive element in the Government that fills every breath and breeze of popular emotion, be it hasty and ill-judged, or be it patriotic and wise; while this body does not represent such emotions, because the duration of its term is too long, as human affairs go, to have any prejudice or interest, or fear, or favor applying to its members largely influence, their judgments. And, I think I may say, Mr. President, as to both these branches, that the theory of the frame-work of the Government was, as it must be of every just government where it is not the government of a mob, that is for this thing to-day and for that thing to-morrow, that it is the responsible Government of selected representatives of the people who, when selected, are subjected in both Houses to the test of a solemn obligation in the presence of Almighty God that, not according to popular passion, or prejudice, or interest, or wish, but according to the solemn judgment of each man, he will vote according to what he believes, and nobody else may believe, to be the public interest. So I must ask to be excused from going for this bill on the ground that the House of Representatives is "the body of the people;" and I feel quite sure that my honorable friend from Michigan on reflection will agree with the general principles that I have stated.

Mr. FERRY. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. EDMUNDS. With pleasure.

Mr. FERRY. Mr. President, I do not know from what the Senator has said that I am disposed to take back what I stated, but I think I will reiterate it. The view in which I stated that the House of Representatives represented the body of the people was that the members of the House of Representatives are elected by the people by districts casting their votes directly for the members representing those districts and composing the body of the House of Representatives. It was in that light that I spoke of that body as more immediately representing the people. In the theory of our Government I understand that the Senate more directly represents the States inasmuch as the Senators are elected by the Legislatures of the States, which bodies are elected by the people of the respective States.

I do not differ with the Senator from Vermont when he states that the Senate of the United States also represents the body of the people; but according to the theory of our Government this body is farther removed from the people, and, as he said, the members of the House of Representatives represent the fluctuating sentiment of the people, because their election was more frequent and they are more often called to answer to the judgment of the people. So in that sense I wish my words to stand that the House of Representatives rather than the Senate represents the body of the people en masse, while the Senate represents them in their aggregated capacity in the form of States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, my friend says that he wishes his words to stand in the sense that he now puts upon them, which is exactly the opposite from the natural sense that reading his words as he stated them would bear to any intelligent reader, for he was urging us, almost commanding us, to put this bill through, right or wrong as it might appear to our judgment, because the House of Representatives had passed it and it was the body of the people. The Senator now says that he understands the true meaning of this language of his to be that all there is about it is that the House is the body of the people because it is elected oftener than we are, and the people elect them directly instead of selectively by other agents of theirs chosen to make a more careful examination. That is the theory. Whether they do make it, of course my friend and I would be a good deal inclined to doubt.

Mr. FERRY. I have no doubt in my case. I do not know how it is with the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My honorable friend goes on to say:

I am willing to face the country on this approval rather than let the knife be plunged into the life of this bill.

I take it the Senator meant by that, either that the knife was the motion of the Senator from Ohio to recommit the bill with instructions to reduce the total, by eliminating works that could now be dispensed with, to $4,000,000, or that he alluded to the amendment I had the honor to offer to reduce the sum-total to $4,000,000, and leave, as we did in 1869, the application of it in the discretion of the Secretary of War and the Corps of Engineers to the most necessary works. If those be the knives that are inserted into the life of this bill, then the life of the bill is the largest possible total, for that is the only life that these two propositions assail unless the proposition of the Senator from Ohio may be considered as implying the postponement of Frankfort, and of Pent Water, and of McCargoe's Cove, and Otter Creek, and Swanton, and so on. If the life of this bill depends upon the people of Frankfort or the people of Vergennes—and I take them both in order that my friend may not suppose that I am addressing personal observations at all; I am on the substance of the thing—if the life of this bill that my friend is so eager to save depends upon the fact that the public Treasury shall be drawn upon this year to provide for Frankfort, and McCargoe's Cove, and Otter Creek, then my friend is probably right, because the chances are altogether that if this bill be recommitted to the committee with instructions to limit the appropriation to $4,000,000 by items, McCargoe will disappear from the scene, and Frankfort will go with its college and with its iron-furnace and with its agriculture without the aid of an appropriation; and Otter Creek will dream over its former glories as a naval establishment and wait for "the good time coming."

What then does the Senator mean by appealing to the friends of this bill to stand by it and to stick to it as the House passed it, or better still, stick to it as the Senate fixed it in spite of its committee so that Otter Creek and McCargoe and Frankfort, &c., shall be sure to come into the enjoyment of the luxury of the expenditure of public money in their localities?

Mr. FERRY. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. EDMUNDS. With pleasure. It is always a greater pleasure to me to hear my friend than to speak myself.

Mr. FERRY. If that were the case, the Senator would have yielded to me to occupy the floor more than he usually does, for I think he first criticised me for leaving the chair and then criticised me for occupying the chair so much; but I would like the Senator now to classify his position; whether he is the friend of the Senate bill or not. I have stated that I was a friend to the bill, and I appealed to the friends of the bill, including all who are friendly to it. I ask the Senator where he stands on it; whether he is a friend or an enemy of the Senate bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am not wise enough to know that there is any Senate bill. I thought it was a House bill.

Mr. FERRY. I ask that the Senator may understand me; he does not wish to avoid my question, I suppose, because we are trying to get at the facts, as he stated a while ago. I mean the bill reported from the Senate committee as modified by the Senate in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, Mr. President—I am willing to be catechized upon that subject—I am not in favor of the bill as modified by the Committee of the Whole, although it contains Otter Creek and Swanton, and although it should contain every trout brook and every spring in the State of Vermont and every valley. I am not in favor of it then, because I believe it transcends the true principles of the Constitution and is an utter waste of the public money; and if I cannot have any popularity at home (for we are enough of the people, notwithstanding my friend's opinion, to be rather fond of being popular) except at the expense of taking out of the Treasury of the United States money to improve the internal streams of the State of Vermont, then I do not wish to be popular. But candor compels me to say that the people of the State of Vermont, as I believe, have not got educated up to the high pitch of supposing that it is any part of my mission to tax the people of New York, or Maryland, or Louisiana, or Missouri to assume the control of the streams over which the State of Vermont has absolute and sovereign jurisdiction, to improve them and regulate their use for the benefit of the people of the other States or for the benefit of the people of our own State. I have not got to any such pitch of perfection as that yet. So I am quite able to say that I am not in favor of the Senate bill, as the Senator calls it; as it has been perfected, as he calls it. I think I should have voted for the bill of the House as it was proposed to be amended by the committee of the Senate, who, by a careful analysis and examination, endeavored to strike off what could be dispensed with and to preserve and increase, where necessary, what the public interests of the whole nation demanded, although I should have done it with great reluctance, because I believe that in the present state of the Treasury we ought not to expend from it so large a sum as the committee of the Senate reported finally as the total; and as to the House bill, the Senator himself, in respect of some of the items in that section of the country where he resides, has been forced to admit—no, I will not say forced, because that would imply that there was some want of candor—has candidly admitted that there is no present public necessity for the expenditure of any such money.

Mr. FERRY. In what respect?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Well, for McCargoe, for instance.

Mr. FERRY. The Senator in a measure is correct so far as my course in that respect is concerned, and I think it justifies the position I have taken upon this bill. I appealed to the Senator from Iowa, who has charge of the bill, to know what had been reported in this case, as I had no personal knowledge of it. Adopting the plan that I had pursued, that upon the statement of any Senator, he verifying the necessity for any appropriation, I was disposed to vote for such appropriation, I appealed to the Senator from Iowa if he had any such information. He did not give it; and therefore as upon my own information I could not press it. I did not do so; but the appropriation was inserted in the House. I knew nothing about its merits personally, and because of that I was consistent in not pressing it upon the attention of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, my friend is abdicating already, although he is not of "the body of the people." "The body of the people" has said that McCargoe was a matter of indispensable necessity, of course, because the House would not have passed a bill that contained anything that was not; but my friend abandons it all at once. That is not at all consistent with that respect, that obedience which from the Senator's remarks is due to the House of Representatives. But now let us see.

Mr. FERRY. Allow me a word just there.

Mr. EDMUNDS. O, certainly.

Mr. FERRY. On the same principle, following "the body of the people," when I did ask that the House bill should be taken in case the Senate bill could not be adopted, on the same principle precisely I stuck to Otter Creek, because the body of the people, the people whom the Senator so eminently represents, had insisted on it; but upon my own knowledge, such as I have of that, I should not have voted for it unless the Senator stated, as he has I believe stated, the necessity of it. Upon my own knowledge I should not have voted for that; but as the bill comes from the House as a whole necessarily perhaps it includes exceptional cases. While I might not vote for the exceptions singly, yet taking the House bill as a whole I was disposed to support it, and I am still.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the use of having a Senate if, when the House sends us a bill which has items in it that are both exceptional and exceptionable to our knowledge and belief, we are not authorized to say so and reject it? What is the object of this body? Is it to have an elegant parliamentarian, a first-rate presiding officer, and to meet at twelve and adjourn at four, and go home to dinner and come back again the next day? Or is it to do some serious work for the protection of the interests of the people against the improper expenditure of their money? If the latter is the object then I submit that when the Senate finds a McCargoe's Cove or an Otter Creek that it does not see any ground for, it ought to have the courage to say so. But the Senator says he was somewhat ignorant about this matter in the State of Michigan, and that was because, I suppose, of the fact that he was not one "of the people;" but I find that he states that he appeared before the Committee on Appropriations and made propositions, as I suppose, between two high contracting parties. He says:

I first proposed to the Committee on Appropriations in behalf of the delegation of Michigan that we would consent—to a modification of the House appropriations for that State, to the reduction of $40,000, yes, $41,000, as I am reminded by my colleague.

How gracious, Mr. President!—

"Appropriations for that State!" Mr. President, I believe I have said—if I have not I say it now—that I do not know, on the theory of this bill or on the theory of any other bill of national concern, that we make any appropriations for a State. McCargoe's Cove would be just as important if it were in the State of Wisconsin or Ohio or New York, I suppose. The commerce of the country, the great national interests would be equally at stake with the business of McCargoe's Cove if it were out of the great and noble State of Michigan. So it appears to me that my friend is occupying a rather uncertain attitude, in respect of its correctness but not in respect of its definition, because that is perfectly plain, as he always is when he talks about appropriations of this character for any State. They are appropriations of the nation's money for national objects; and when they cease to be that, they cease to be not only constitutional but to be either reasonable or just. That is my opinion; but I may be wrong. If this is a bill of distributions, as of a dead man's estate among his heirs, then the Senator is right; but if it be a bill for the execution under the Constitution of great national instrumentalities of commerce among the several States, then the locality of the particular harbor or of the particular port is of no sort of consequence, and the harbor of New York (if the State of New York, as was proposed once during the rebellion, should have been divided, and the Island of Manhattan should have been set up as an independent State) would have been just as national, just as important to the whole interest of the country as it is now, forming the harbor of the Empire State of the Republic. It is not correct therefore, I submit with great deference to my honorable and learned friend, to speak of this bill or to look at it, so far as its merits are concerned, with any reference to how much or how little money is to be expended within the territorial limits of any particular State. When it descends to that, it descends to the region of the lobby, to the region of combinations and of log-rolling, as it is sometimes called, and ceases to be a national appropriation for national objects and comes to be a combined grab at the money of the people, to be spent among the people of particular localities. Any such bill, I am sure, my friend would not be any more in favor of than I am, if he understood it as I understand it, because we cannot disagree upon any such principle, I am quite sure.

Now, Mr. President, where do we find ourselves? We find ourselves, as the fact is, and as has been stated everywhere where an audience could be obtained, in a state of general stagnation of trade and of the active industries of the country, excepting those of agriculture and those other industries, if they can be called such, of the consumption of necessary articles of life; and therefore it has been said, as it ought to be said, that the greatest possible economy should be exercised at this present time, and that every expenditure that can be dispensed with ought to be dispensed with. Can there be any dispute about that? I have heard no dispute about it. No man, no party, no newspaper, no public meeting, no anybody has undertaken to controvert that proposition.

Where are we then? The State of Michigan—and I only speak of it now as a section of the country because on my view States have nothing to do with it except in the attitude I have named, that when we have left the Constitution and have left the public welfare, and have descended to scooping, as they say out West, money out of the Treasury—the State of Michigan, spoken of merely as a locality for the shortness of the name, has prospered and grown rich and grown wise in a degree that we all admire and most of us would emulate, without having yet had any appropriation for this year for Frankfort, or McCargoe's Cove, or Pent Water, or any other of the numerous bays and inlets and streams that flow from that beautiful peninsula into the great lakes; and if the people of Michigan were able to prosper within this last year with these harbors as they are, in a time of great public distress and hardness, can they not wait for another year and prosper just as well? Has the prosperity of Michigan for the last year depended in any essential degree upon the circumstance that a half million dollars of the money of the United States has been expended within her borders for improving harbors of refuge and rivers and navigable streams? I think not. My friend will not contend that. Of course, the expenditure of money is an advantage to the people who receive it, but it is no advantage to the tax-payer who owns the farm close by a particular pier or a breakwater or a river where obstructions are to be removed. He does not get any of it. It does not help the general body of the community particularly. Then am I not safe in saying that Michigan—and when I speak of Michigan, as I have just now said, I repeat I only speak of it as merely one term as representing one of the various localities in this broad land of ours—or I will take Vermont—am I not safe in saying that Vermont would not have been any less prosperous in any essential degree if in the last year the breakwater at Burlington, Vermont, had not been extended one hundred feet, although at that port there is poured into the Treasury year after year nearly a million dollars of actual collected customs dues? It would have made no difference to us. It is possible, it is true, that a vessel that got shelter there might have gone ashore, and the insurance companies would have had to foot the bill; and it is certainly true, as it is with most of the places in Michigan, that national interests require in the proper way and at the proper time, when we are able to do it, that some reasonable facilities for the transaction of commerce with foreign nations and among the several States should be granted and provided for. And yet I venture to say that in this last year of the stagnation of trade and of commerce the people of the State of Vermont and of the State of New York on the opposite side of the lake, for which the ports on both sides are common of course, would never have known that they were not just as well off if last year's appropriation of $25,000 for Burlington, $50,000 for Plattsburgh, and so many for Whitehall, whatever it may have been, had never been made at all. Is it not one of those cases where we should act as a prudent farmer would do with a mortgage on his farm—as the national debt is a mortgage on all our income and all our property, if we have any honor, as I take it we have—when he has one year and another year and another of bad crops and disasters and low markets, so that he has no margin? Then he gets on with the old barn instead of building a new one; or, if he has not any barn at all, he stands by the ancient stack. Although my friend from Texas over the way [Mr. MAXEY] contended that every man ought to have a new thrashing-machine and a new mowing-machine every year without any regard to what his resources were, and he could not stand by the flail and the scythe any more, I think that is a little overdrawn. We all know that every prudent man who has sense enough to be kept out of an idiot asylum, when hard times come, stops improvement in the sense that we are now speaking of it. He gets on with the old barn and the old house and the old wagon and the old horse and the old flail and the old shoes and the old coat and the old everything; and yet, when he puts in his crop, nature yields him the same increase it would have done had his barn been new, with a cupola and covered with a roof of gold, if you please. So I say, in respect to these internal improvements, as they are properly called; the time to pause in internal improvements is when there is a lack of money, a lack of prosperity, and no essential injury is done to the Republic if we wait, much less indeed than if we go on, because the money is much more needed for other purposes that cannot wait; for every dollar of money that gets into the Treasury and is appropriated for these purposes comes out of the pocket of somebody. The man who drank his cup of coffee, or not many years ago ate his ounce of salt, had to pay a tax upon it which went to swell the funds in the Treasury. So, now, this money in the Treasury, this six or seven millions that it is proposed to appropriate for these objects, in some way or other, in a large degree, comes out of the pockets of all our people, not absolutely in the case of customs, I admit, because the foreign producer bears a certain indefinite proportion of those expenses undoubtedly; but, in the general sense, every man, woman, and child in this country who has money enough, as he must have, to buy anything, be it even the product of the soil, contributes something to this sum of money that is to be expended in this way; and if the times be as they are stated to be, are we justified in doing things which if omitted we shall find ourselves substantially as well off next year as we are now when there is this universal stagnation, when there are these numerous failures of business enterprises, of manufacturing and of commerce particularly, rather than to wait until the forces of commercial nature, if I may use such a phrase, are again recuperated and the people go on in prosperity?

I am not making these remarks, sir, for the purpose of showing that we ought not to pass any bill at all. I am only endeavoring to press upon the minds of Senators the necessity of the highest degree of economy compatible with the protection of the works of internal improvement that have been commenced and of such completions and extensions as the great wants of national commerce in the broadest sense will lead us to believe we are justified in providing for at this time. That is my proposition, and in making it I appeal with some degree of confidence to my honorable friend from Michigan, I appeal with some degree of confidence to my honorable friends from Missouri and from Texas and to every Senator, however much their pride in developing the capacities of their particular localities without regard to State lines as I have said before may be, there is still, or there ought to be, that conservative economy that should compel us now to save every penny that is in the Treasury that the urgent and pressing demands of a broad national interest do not require us to expend. We found in 1869, when a bill of this character coming over from "the body of the people," as it is called, was so improved upon and amended in the Senate that it got into exactly the condition that this bill is now, that I believe almost by common consent, although the country was not then in the condition of depression that it is now, we dropped it as a thing unwise and extravagant and out of proportion, and provided the modest sum then I believe of two millions or two millions and a half of dollars. I propose $4,000,000 now, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, and so of course through the careful examination of that Bureau in his Department called the Corps of Engineers, who look after these things for the most necessary and important purposes. We found when the year rolled around that the public weal had been promoted rather than injured; and it is not altogether certain that that two millions or two and a half millions, or three millions, whatever it was, had not done as much real good to the national interests of our whole people—not of States, not of localities, but of all as a nation—as the whole sum of five or six millions of dollars, mentioned in detail in the bill that we dropped and rejected would have done had it been expended. Can we not, then, in this time of our trouble and distress resort to a similar method with a similar well-grounded confidence that the public interests will be promoted and will not suffer?

I was talking just now about taxation, and I said what perhaps the Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] stated or referred to the other day, that this money which we are expending is the fruit of taxation; and so it is. Yet, on the other hand, the tax that the nation imposes, as we all know, although we seem very careful to keep it out of sight, is not a taxation that hampers anybody's industry. It is not a taxation that bears upon the manufacture of carriages or shoes or cloths. It is not a taxation like that provided in the Constitution upon the States according to their representation in the lower House of Congress. But it is in substance and effect, with a few minor exceptions, a taxation upon imports and a taxation upon whisky and patent medicines and tobacco. Whisky is considered to be in most communities a luxury that in hard times can be dispensed with, although the people of Michigan and of Vermont might feel that the harder the times the more whisky they would want to drown their sorrows. [Laughter.] I cannot say how that would be. I do not know that my friend and I would feel that way, or perhaps one of us.

Mr. FERRY. The Senator speaks for himself.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, I will speak for myself. Perhaps I should need whisky, as the water of Vermont is not very good, as we are a mountainous country, and should drink that, while my friend from Michigan would drink of the waters of McCargoe's Cove and would be at once inspirited. Seriously speaking, and leaving off this badinage which my friend and I are so fond of, the tax on whisky, which is the large share of our resource from internal revenue, is not a tax which embarrasses the productive industries of the country. The tax is not paid by the man who sells the corn that makes the whisky; it is neither paid nor borne by him. The tax is not borne by the man who makes the whisky and sells it to somebody else, in any large degree. Undoubtedly, theoretically, a share of it falls upon him and diminishes his profit, but the great bulk of the tax raised out of whisky is paid by the man who walks to the bar and pays his ten cents, or whatever the price is—what is the price? [laughter,]—and swallows his glass of whisky. That is where the tax is paid; so that it is useless to say that the people are now ground down by taxation imposed by the National Government. That is a delusion among honest men, and it is a fraud whenever it is represented by anybody else; because there is not a particle of truth in it. It is a tax upon luxury; it is a tax upon indulgence; it is a tax upon vice, that my friend will agree, to a certain extent.

Therefore it will not do to say that the present condition of this country, its paralyzed industries, its diminished income, and its general stagnation of business, so far as there is that stagnation as there is in manufacturing operations, arises at all out of any tax imposed by the National Government. If the States have heavy taxes it is an affair with which we have nothing to do. We are not to blame for it, so far as I know. Then we come to the other branch of taxation, that derived from customs. My friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALLACE] has very well illustrated that, although I am not quite sure that he meant to do it, when he said that taxation was grinding the people of Pennsylvania; that the forges were closed, that the furnaces were shut up, and that the rolling-mills were closed, and all the great iron industries of that magnificent State were in a condition of enforced repose. Taxes are too high. How are you to help that? Does he mean to reduce the duties upon iron? Is that what the people of Pennsylvania are after? Would that revive the furnaces of Pennsylvania? When iron is now so low in the markets that they cannot afford to produce it, do you mean to take the tax off the importers of iron in order that the furnaces of Pennsylvania shall start with a still larger influx of the foreign commodity to compete with them? Is that the kind of democracy that my friend from Pennsylvania, who I am sorry is not here, is preaching? That is the effect of what he says, that the people of Pennsylvania are ground down by taxation. I suppose he meant, if he was talking to the purpose at all, taxation imposed by the National Government. I have disposed of the tax on tobacco and on whisky and on patent medicines, taxation by customs, taxation upon articles that so far as they affect the industries of the State of Pennsylvania, every per cent of it, cent by cent, is a protection and encouragement to those industries.

If the Senator wishes to tell the people of Pennsylvania that their true redress is to diminish imposts upon the articles that they produce, chiefly iron, then I think it will take him a good while to convince the people of Pennsylvania that that is the right way to do it. It is quite the reverse. Speaking from a Pennsylvania point of view, I think it might be safely said that the furnaces of Pennsylvania, and its rolling-mills, and its forges would begin work again when the tariff upon iron should be so increased that the foreign producer could not compete in the American market with the home producer, and not otherwise. Why can he compete now? He can compete now because the men in foreign countries who do the work do not get the pay that the men who work in Pennsylvania do. Not getting the pay, they do not live in the comfort that the laboring-men of Pennsylvania live in. Where the Pennsylvanian gets fresh beef twice a week, at least, perhaps six times a week, the worker in the mines and in the iron-mills of Great Britain or of Belgium, or wherever it may be, does not see it once in six months. Where the Pennsylvanian lives in a cottage of two stories with glass windows and with a carpet in its best room, possibly with a melodeon or some instrument of music for the amusement and education of his family, and where his children go clean and well-dressed to school, his colaborer on the other side of the Atlantic never heard of such a thing. He lives in a hovel with a clay floor; he sees neither beef, nor butter, nor white bread; his children never go clean or otherwise to school; and he is in misery. That man, be he democrat or republican, or other, who feels it to be a part of his duty to provide first for the poor and starving and unfortunate of some other country than his own, is not the democrat or the republican for me.

Some of our friends over the way have said that one part of our misfortunes has been in the terrible extravagance of the republican administrations, that, as they say, have cursed the country from 1861 down to this day; that appropriations and Government expenses have constantly increased, while the prosperity and the welfare of the people have constantly diminished. That is a very serious charge; and if it were true in the just sense the republican party ought to be turned out of power, and some better party, if there could be one, ought to go in. It is true that the republican party after 1860 increased the expenditures of the Government from forty, or fifty, or sixty, or seventy millions a year under Buchanan, and they ran up in a year or two to billions. There is no doubt about the fact; but what made them run up? Was it the fault of the republican party that it had the temerity, without the consent of the body of the people, as my friend from Michigan would say, or the body of the democratic party, to vote for their candidate for President instead of the other one? Is that the cause of it? Not quite. Opposing civilizations, to quote an ancient phrase, had at last come to a critical climax, and under whatever name or under whatever pretext, it was essential in the due order of things that at last one of those opposing civilizations should yield to the other.

So there was the rebellion, if by the use of that phrase I offend no Senator here, and I am sure I do not. There was the rebellion; and in order to conquer the rebellion it was necessary to raise vast armies of men, to withdraw them from the peaceful pursuits of industry at home and to turn them into the terrible conflicts of the battle, and the terrible privations of the camp and of the prison. In order to do that, it was necessary that taxation should be vastly increased; that public expenditures should swell a hundred or a thousand fold; and they did. Yet our distinguished friends on the other side of this Chamber have imputed that to the republican party as one of its crimes, and as one of the crimes for which the republican party is to be dismissed from the confidence of the people and from the administration of the Government, and that the men who forced the republican party to that dire necessity shall be put in power. Who are the men who forced the republican party to that dire extremity? Of course the representatives of the Southern States who went into the rebellion, so far as their power and their skill could go, confessedly did it; but that was not all the democratic party. I say as far as the democratic party of the North was concerned as a body, organized, with its captains of Tweeds and other men, it was just as responsible in the moral sense for this enormous increase of taxation, this enormous expenditure of treasure, this frightful destruction of human life and frightful increase of misery in this land, as the men who took up arms for the rebellion. In my opinion this rebellion would never have reared itself into the proportions it did, had not its leaders and the body of its supporters sincerely believed, as they had good ground to do, that the democratic party of the North would not permit a State to be coerced and kept in the Union in spite of its will. They believed that, and they had a very good right to believe it. In those northern States during the war where the power of what is now called the republican party was most potent, like the one which I have the honor to represent in part, all the patriotic members of the democratic party for the time being disbanded and joined the Union republican party, ran no candidates for office, and put their brave shoulders to the wheel to preserve the unity of the republican government of the Republic. Wherever, as in other States, the members of that party either from want of power or want of courage did not do that, by just so much in those States was the cause of the Union imperiled and retarded. There was the great State of New York. In the midst of rebellion, with a democratic executive and a democratic party behind him, thousands upon thousands of the soldiers of the Army of the United States, including one brigade from my State, had to leave the theater of war and encamp in the squares of the city of New York in order to preserve that State from aiding the rebellion by overturning everything that was used to support the Republic. That is a part of the expense that this republican party is responsible for.

So, Mr. President, I think it is not precisely just for Senators on the other side of the Chamber to appeal to the people of the United States at this day and hour against the republican party upon the ground that after 1861, when it came into power, the expenses of the Government were enormously increased, and therefore the Government ought to be turned over to the people whose crimes or whose misfortunes or whose misunderstanding of their rights compelled such great expenditures of life and of money.

Let us see how this was. My honorable friend from North Carolina, [Mr MERRIMON,] who found it to be his special mission to assail the republican party for its terrible extravagance, submitted as documentary and conclusive proof of his assertions some tables that he said at first, as I understood him, were official, or at least prepared from official sources. The first one is a—

Summary or comparative statement of expenditures or appropriations—

"Or appropriations." Mark the word; as if one word were taken when that would answer best and the other when that would answer best, for there is no such head in any Treasury accounts, I beg to assure my friend—in the several branches of the public service named, in the fiscal years from 1868 to 1875, respectively.

The first one is the Post-Office, in 1868, $22,000,000; I leave off the hundreds of thousands and so on, in order to condense what I have to say as much as possible; in 1875, $33,000,000; these he gives as the net ordinary expenses. I pass by what has been said so well by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] about the utter falsehood of these tables, taking them separately, as compared with the official documents before every Senator, in many instances showing that they are not compiled honestly from any official source. I pass all that by for the time being and take the thing as it stands in the table. My friend has complained, if there is any point in his speech at all—as of course there is, for he always speaks to the point—of the extravagance of republican administration about the Post-Office. That is the first item. What is that extravagance? He complains that its expenditures have run up from 1868 to 1875 by the sum of $12,000,000. What made it run up? If it was the extravagance of the republican party, it ought to be condemned. If it was not, it ought not to be condemned. What was the state of the post-offices in this country at the beginning of the fiscal year 1867? These are fiscal years, the statement ending on the 30th of June in each one of these years, beginning with 1868. What was the state of the Post-Office in this country in the year from 1867 to 1868? We did have a postal system that extended all over the United States. We had post-offices, and postmasters, and mail-carriers, and mail-contractors, and all the machinery that distributed to all the people of the several States intelligence according to the Constitution. What became of those post-offices in eleven or twelve States of the Union some years before? A body of men who undertook to separate from the United States destroyed all the system that the United States had. They seized the post-offices that the money of the people had built. They confiscated the postage-stamps and the postal moneys that the people of the United States had provided for, and the mail-bags, as my friend [Mr. HAMLIN] says, and the locks—everything; I believe, even the horses and the carriages of any mail-contractor who still had any faith in what was called the old flag.

Then when the year 1867–'68 came, and there was peace in the land again—if it can be called peace—peace enough to re-instate the postal system, we were obliged, and it was not only a duty but a pleasure, to resupply all this service in all these various States. In order to do that and be honest we were obliged to re-employ postmasters and post-boys, and mail-carriers, and mail-bags, and advertisements for routes; everything that makes up the multifarious expenditures of the postal system for the benefit of the people. It took millions of dollars to do it. Yet the Senator stands up in his place and assails that as one of the items in the aggregate wherefrom he brings a grand footing of crime, of extravagance, of wickedness on the part of the republican party! In addition to that, and apart from the topic I have now spoken of, the postal system is being, as it ought to be, prudently and economically, constantly extended into new States and new Territories, in order that the chief life of the Republic, the dissemination of intelligence, the coherence of parts, the unity of the people, may be constantly promoted; and that requires the expenditure of money. That is assailed as the extravagance or the crime of a republican administration. I should like to have the Senator go to some Western State or Territory whose hardy pioneers have built up their cabins, and are producing their crops, and educating their children, and accuse a republican administration of giving them the means of communicating by letter with their friends elsewhere, and of receiving every Saturday night their weekly newspaper, be it religious or otherwise. I do not think he would convict us upon an indictment of that kind. I think he would be dismissed out of court for want of jurisdiction quicker than any cause has been dismissed before us for want of jurisdiction a good deal.

Then the next item is the "Indians;" in 1867–'68, $3,900,000; in 1875, $8,384,000. That is a crime, it is said. Has the Senator pointed out or attempted to point out any one respect in regard to which this increase has been wrong or wicked? Not at all; but because there is an increase, therefore there is an extravagance, or therefore there is a crime! To many minds there might be a slight want of logic and sequence in a proposition of that kind. If the Senator will only go to the items that make up this increase, (and for this purpose I say I take his table to be true, just for the fun of it, not because it is true,) upon his own case he will find that a system of justice, of care, of economy, as diminishing military expenditures, has been inaugurated by the President of the United States, a system that, whatever may so far be its defects and however short it may so far have come of accomplishing the full beneficence of its purpose, was one that commended itself to the conscientious judgment of the religious denominations in the whole United States—denominations composed in equal degree of men of all parties, all creeds, all conditions of life; because what otherwise would have necessarily been expenditure under other heads, for Indian wars and for a thousand things, is now consolidated into this item of "Indians." Therefore, says the Senator, a republican administration has been guilty of wasteful extravagance or of criminal neglect.

Next is the war expenditure; in 1868, $123,000,000; in 1875, $51,000,000. There is a diminution there, but not so great a diminution as there ought to have been in one sense of the term. I add to the Senator's observation, for, as will be seen, a large proportion of the expenditures of the War establishment is directly due as an inevitable consequence of the rebellion, and as we indulged in the luxury of compelling the Southern States to be a part of the Union we must bear the necessary consequences of that in those increased expenses of the Army that still come down to us from that great source.

The next is the Navy, $16,000,000, if I correctly read the figures, in 1868; $20,000,000 in 1875. There is an increase. How is it accounted for? My honorable friend says by extravagance, by fraud, by peculation, by corruption; and yet if he will only take the trouble (for he is quite competent to do it) to go to the Treasury accounts, item by item, of Navy expenditures, I feel safe in prophesying that he will not find in all that increase even $15,000, even $10,000, that he will say is in and of itself either extravagant or wrong. The end of the war found us with a vast amount of crazy and broken-down material in the Navy, old hulks and ships of every description that were worn out and good for nothing, built in haste of green timber and put together not with great skill, for the time would not allow of perfection; and so from year to year those in charge of the Navy Department, and within the appropriations made by Congress, have endeavored, and I am happy to say with some degree of success, to rectify this state of things, to bring a consolidated order, if I may so express it, out of the chaos of material and of organization that existed at the close of the rebellion. Instead, therefore, of there having been extravagance or wickedness or crime, you will find, if you will only look at the items, which Senators do not seem to be particularly anxious to do, that instead of extravagance there has been economy, and that to-day, instead of having no Navy or a crazy and illy-regulated one, you have a Navy that makes he just influence of the people of the United States respected on every sea and on every shore. But that, the Senator says, is a crime. Perhaps he would agree to have the Navy what it was on the 1st of April, 1861, so that—I will not say "so that," for the Senator does not wish it so—but in such a condition that if some new insurrection should arise or some new tumult, some new war, to which all nations are exposed and will be until the millennium comes, the United States would find itself where it was when the rebellion broke out, absolutely paralyzed in respect of its naval power and of its naval capacity. The people of the United States are appealed to, with an air of confidence, to condemn a republican Administration for preserving and economizing this force upon the sea in order that the interests of the people may be protected.

There is the Coast Survey which has gone up from four hundred and odd thousand dollars to seven hundred and odd thousand dollars. What has run up the Coast Survey? Where are the light-houses and the beacons and the buoys that before 1861 the money of all the people of the United States had provided over more than a thousand miles of the southern coasts of the United States? What became of them? They "went away," as was said about the Americans at the battle of Bladensburgh. They disappeared; and in their places were obstructions and decoys, instead of buoys marking the channels of commerce, and torpedoes and false lights to decoy vessels ashore. The wicked beneficence of the United States has restored them. My friend complains of it. At the mouth of Cape Fear River, in the noble State of North Carolina, the great light-house destroyed by the rebels once more spreads its beams over the sea. That, I suppose, is a crime. That is the reason why the Coast Survey expenses have run up from the end of the war until this time. Restoration, oblivion, good-will, fraternity has taken from the pockets of the people of the United States money to rebuild the light-houses of the southern coast, to restore the buoys in the channels of commerce, and to have peace and intercommunication once more; and that is charged to us as a crime.

Then there are the judiciary expenses, running from seven hundred and odd thousand dollars in 1868 to three million and odd thousand dollars in 1875. Where is the justification for that crime? There were eleven or twelve States of the Union from which all the judicial organization of the United States had been swept. War had taken the place of law. The courts of the United States, and the court-houses, the records, all the machinery of justice had been buried in the bottomless sea of rebellion. When at last order was restored, by the exercise of power, there was the natural consequence of irritation, of discontent, of prejudice, of violence, of mobs, of assassinations, of organizations to persecute men for political purposes, to drive "the cursed republicans" from the land, and to reduce the negro practically to his old condition. There were the Ku Klux and the White Lines, and whatever other organizations may have been. They could not consist with the reign of law. They could not consist with that reign of peaceful order out of which unity and prosperity only can grow. In order to establish courts and through the courts in order to enforce peaceful justice against turbulence and crime, the people of the United States have poured out of their Treasury large sums of money. That is another crime and extravagance of the republican party. Why not leave the Ku-Klux alone to work out their own salvation? Why not let the White Line carry its red banner wherever it pleases? Why not send home to every northern State, as there came home to my own more than once, the dead body of some white republican whose only crime had been that he asserted the independent right of a citizen of the United States to have an opinion? Wherefore spend money for the objects of the administration of justice, for the peaceful supremacy of law? That is our crime.

Then, we have the subtreasury. "The trail of the serpent," as the poet says," "is over them all." Every one of these items flows out of that vast fountain of blood and trouble. Even the subtreasury, as far removed as that may be supposed to be from these causes and these consequences, comes in for a share. The subtreasury expenses have run up from $260,000 to $430,000. What has increased the expenses of the subtreasury? Exactly the same cause: the collection of the customs entirely overthrown and disordered, the disbursements of the public moneys accumulated an hundred fold, all flowing out of this same fountain of wickedness and blood; and yet we are told that to restore administration and to regulate public accounts and to make these enormous disbursements—and this rebellion has caused it—that it is a crime in a republican administration to have spent any money to accomplish it.

Then, next and last, for I am sorry to weary the patience of the Senate, comes the miscellaneous items of expenditures, increasing from $53,000,000 in 1868 to $71,000,000 in 1875. Let us see how that happens. I have in my hand the report of the Secretary of the Treasary, Forty-fourth Congress, first session, Executive Document No. 2, not a speech by somebody "elsewhere," as the saying is, but the official document wherein on the fourth page of tables attached to the report is shown what makes up this total of the miscellaneous expenses of the United States, and where the plain mind of the wayfaring man can see how and why it is that they have increased. First in respect of a certain part of the Light-House Department, to which I have already referred, and the Coast Survey, which also is a part of the same general system, and the building and repairs of light-houses. This is only the last year, and not for all this period of seven years from 1868 to 1875. One single item is "return of proceeds of captured and abandoned property," $880,000. That is one of our extravagances that has run this thing up. Another item is "repayment for lands erroneously sold," that is, lands sold for the direct taxes in the Southern States, which, I believe, had something to do with the rebellion, $35,000. Another is "payments under relief acts," ninety one-hundredths of which, if not a larger proportion, are relief cases growing directly out of the rebellion, $157,000, without giving the odd numbers. The next one in this long list of items that the mind of my friend from North Carolina is too great to descend to, as he only looks at totals, is "refunding proceeds of cotton seized," $36,000. The next is "southern claims commission," $51,000, the table making millions in respect of items that grow directly, and by name, out of the consequences of the deplorable state of things that existed from 1861 to 1865. When you take every one of the other items, marine hospitals, refunding duties, and all the ten thousand items that go into the miscellaneous expenses of the Government, there are more than half of them that have increased necessarily in a stream that flows directly, and without any river and harbor improvement to get rid of obstructions, from this same great cause.

The Senator has labored under what I think is the misapprehension of supposing that when the rebels laid down their arms in the spring of 1865 there was not only oblivion as to the crime of the rebellion, but there was oblivion as to all public obligations and all claims and duties arising out of the then condition of things, that everything was to be stricken out and that we had no right to know and no right to bear any of the enormous expenditures which follow, as the night follows the day, or the morning the evening, from such a state of things as existed.

When you come to the employés you will find exactly the same thing wherever in the rare instances the employés have increased from 1868. Of course they have been enormously increased since 1859, because you cannot keep a million of men in the field and have billions upon billions of public money collected and expended and allowances made without an enormous increase of all the civil establishment of the Government to carry it on. Since that time, since 1868, wherever in the very rare instances there has been any increase at all, it has been directly attributable to the necessity of settling claims and adjusting accounts growing out of the rebellion. But when you come to take it on the whole, as the Senator can inform himself without borrowing from any member in another place or anybody else, but going himself to the sources of information, instead of there having been an increase in the persons employed by the United States since 1868 there has been decrease. The Senator foots up his totals in the Blue Book upon the idea that that represents the actual increase of the civil establishment, when in point of truth, as he can satisfy himself, if he will, (and I know he wishes to do it if he has the time,) what he calls the increase of the Blue Book is only the circumstance that by a new method of reporting in the Blue Book the names of persons employed who had not been inserted before, but who have always been employed of the same kind and the same degree year by year as the public service required it are inserted. It is just as if the census-taker were to come to my friend and to me and say, "What does your family consist of?" and I say, "Well, my family consists of four: my wife and my two children;" and my friend says, "My family consists of six: my wife and my four children;" and the next year the census taker comes around and puts the same question and we give the same answer; but then he asks, "Have you not somebody employed; have you not hired somebody this year?" "O, yes." "Well, whom have you hired?" "Tom, Dick, Harry, Joe, Smith, Jones," &c., and so down they go. Now, some enemy of ours desirous to write a book puts this down, and it is published; and then it is said, "The Senator from Vermont and the Senator from North Carolina must be very corrupt men; they must be getting rich at Washington; their establishments have increased four-fold since the last census. At the last census their establishments only consisted of four for one and six for the other, and now there are ten for one and twenty for the other. There must be something 'rotten in the state of Denmark.'" Yet the simple truth is that my friend and I have told the census-taker that we had employed this servant the last month and the other servant the month before, and we had this mechanic to mend our horse-shoes and that other one to mend our own shoes, and so on; and it all goes down into the book.

Mr. President, I cannot doubt that my honorable friend from North Carolina has had a sincere desire to correct what he supposed to be an evil; but I beg to suggest to him if he mounts his horse and takes his lance in hand to correct evils, it would be perhaps just as well as wise to first inquire with some care and not on anybody's say-so, but from the records themselves, whether the truth warrants the undertaking.

Mr. KERNAN. Mr. President, I wish to inquire of the Senator from Vermont to what trouble he referred when he said the United States were required to camp its troops in New York during the rebellion?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I referred to an occasion in the year 1863, I think it was.

Mr. KERNAN. The Senator means the occasion of the riot in New York.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will send for the book and get it for the Senator, as he does not seem to be familiar with the visit of the Vermont troops to New York on that occasion.

Mr. KERNAN. I will get at the matter without any controversy with the Senator.

Mr. EDMUNDS. He certainly cannot get into any controversy with me; I yield in advance.

Mr. KERNAN. There was a riot in New York. It was a riot that arose out of a state of things that existed there in reference to the draft. Excitement grew up; there was a breach of the law; there were grievous wrongs done from excitement and prejudice among a class; but it did not require any of the United States troops to restore order, I believe. My word might not go very far; but on an occasion in the constitutional convention of 1866-'67, of which Mr. Opdyke, a republican, who was mayor of New York when that riot occurred, was a member. There was some such allusion made to the riot and the then governor of New York as has been made here, and I can state in substance what he said. He said that he felt called upon, as he was the mayor of New York when that outbreak occurred, to state that he was there when the democratic governor came to the city, and he desired to bear his testimony in justice to that gentleman that he in every way discharged his duty as a good, patriotic, and an efficient governor, in aiding him at once in restoring order there.

That the Senator from Vermont may see that I do not state it erroneously, though I state from memory what Mr. Opdyke said, it will be found in the debates of that convention of 1866-'67. This was a sudden outbreak. There was no previous warning. The governor immediately went to the city. He used such means as were in his power to suppress the outbreak. He confronted and addressed the excited crowd, urging them to abide by the law, conferring with the republican mayor of the city, and acting with him in restoring order.

Mr. President, speaking only from memory, I want to say a word in reference to the State of New York and its people without regard to the political parties into which they were divided; and I say, and I am sure the record will confirm it, that when the call was made for volunteers in 1861 the governor of the State, who was not a democrat, appointed committees in the counties to raise troops without reference to party; and I know who acted on the committees in my own county, and I know they raised and sent out from that county during 1861 and 1862, without any coercion by the draft, without any inducement by large bounties, five full thousand-men regiments. They volunteered. They went out, democrat and republican, side by side, and they were officered by democrats and republicans, sometimes a democratic colonel and sometimes a republican. They served out their time, they fought side by side, and there was mourning in our State as often in democratic families as in republican families. So long as the volunteer system was adhered to New York furnished her full quota of soldiers. The governor of New York subsequently, and in 1863 or 1864, remonstrated that we had furnished more than our quota, and a commission on that subject was appointed and met at Washington. The matter was looked into, and it was ascertained that the State had furnished more than its quota. It was not an idle complaint.

Therefore, in justice to the people of New York, I say that they as a mass acted without reference to party unitedly in raising troops to sustain the Constitution and the Union. The regiment that marched out of Utica immediately after the Massachusetts regiment had been fired upon in the streets of Baltimore was a regiment made up of democrats and republicans, equally intent upon doing their duty to their country, in upholding the Constitution, and suppressing all armed resistance to it and the laws made in pursuance of it. It is not just, therefore, to the mass of the democratic party to say that they encouraged the rebellion, that they failed to do their duty in aiding to uphold the Constitution and laws by suppressing the rebellion, or that they as a party, or any large number of them, in any way gave it encouragement.

I say for the mass of the democratic party in the State of New York, and I say it that it may go home to the people who know in every neighborhood whether I speak truly or not, that while they differed from their political opponents with reference to the policy of the Administration, while they believed many of the measures adopted unwise, yet on every occasion they sent out volunteers to their full share to uphold the Constitution and maintain the Union. In 1863, when there was a sudden incursion of the confederate troops into Pennsylvania, the democratic governor of New York received the public thanks of the President and the Secretary of War for the promptness with which at their call he ordered out and sent our militia regiments into Pennsylvania to aid in repelling that incursion.

I do not want to claim anything beyond what is just; but I do wish to say in presence of all the people of the State of New York, that the man who attempts at this day, or at any other time, to get up a pretense that there was any body of men in that State or that the democratic party as a body sympathized with the rebellion and were not disposed to do their full duty in suppressing it, does them a very great wrong.

The Senator from Vermont talks about the democratic party having control of the State of New York. It had a governor during 1863 and 1864, but during neither of those years had it the Legislature. The governor acted in entire accord with those who were aiding the Federal Government to troops and doing their duty to that Government in reference to suppressing the rebellion.

One or two other suggestions. I have been in favor of reducing the amount appropriated by the bill under consideration in the interest of economy. I am also opposed to some of the items in the bill because they are outside of what I believe to be the sphere of the action of the Federal Government. I understood the Senator from Vermont to be of the same opinion; and yet he has made an argument here that there is no need of economy, if I understood him correctly. He says in substance that there has been, if I understand him, all the economy exercised which could be exercised in the administration of the Government during the last five or six years.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That does not prove that there is not need to continue it, does it?

Mr. KERNAN. No; I was simply going to say that I do not think there has been all the economy in the administration of the Federal Government during the last five or six years which could be exercised or which ought to be exercised by those administering it. I am not one who has thought that any good came here from saying by way of taunt "you have done this" or "you have done that;" but when the Senator from Vermont, replying to gentlemen who on this floor respectfully urge and argue that there must be more economy now and in the future than there has been, argues to the contrary, I think he is at issue with the great mass of the press and of the intelligent people of this country.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But I have not argued to the contrary. I have argued that there should be the utmost possible economy all the time.

Mr. KERNAN. Well, my friend has said that this needed expenditure came from the rebellion. Does he think that when he gets up on this floor and attempts to stir up feeling by saying, "Why all this expenditure was caused by the war," he is making a fair argument in favor of economy?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do.

Mr. KERNAN. The gentleman knows that men of his own party, leading men of high character, as long ago as 1872, before the election, by addresses to the people, by speeches in this Chamber and the other, by addresses on the platform, told the people of this country that there was maladministration, that there was need of great reform in the civil service; and some of them, leading men and long prominent members of the republican party of high distinction, said that they left that party because they believed they could not work out the reforms in the civil service which were necessary within that party. This is not my testimony. I appeal to Sumner, and Schurz, and Trumbull, and a number of others who put forth those views.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What do they say now?

Mr. KERNAN. Mr. Sumner has gone where he does not speak. I have not heard of any one of those living, whatever they may say now, who commends the civil service which they and Curtis said needed reform, and which they and Curtis have said down to this time has never been reformed.

Now take a portion of the press and a respectable and large portion of that supporting the nominees of the Cincinnati convention; they are full of articles stating that the party must unload, that the party must satisfy the people that there will be reform and greater economy and more retrenchment. While I am not here with book and table of amounts, and have not looked into the figures, yet when the gentleman supposes that those who speak as though there was need of retrenchment can be silenced by saying, "Why, this debt and expenditure were caused by the rebellion, and you men of the South were in it and the democracy of New York favored it," I tell him that I do not think he is saying anything that is beneficial to the country or beneficial to any party in whose behalf it may be said.

There is a feeling, wide-spread, among our intelligent people, that there is need of great retrenchment, of great reforms in the administration of public affairs. I assume that both parties come before the people promising that if they come into power they will make them; but, as I understood, the argument of the Senator was, "it has all been in the purest line of patriotism and expenditures have been only what were caused by the war;" and if that be so there can be no need of reform.

No, Mr. President, in my judgment the real friends of this country will welcome to their ranks the men who are in favor of scrutinizing appropriations of the public money, cutting them down where it can be done, admitting that there can be great reforms in the civil service, admitting as they fairly may that where a party is long in power evils will grow up and should be corrected when discovered. On a bill like this we should examine and see how much must be appropriated and how little properly may be. There will come no good to the country by the exhibition here of partisan feeling, none by taunting one another justly or unjustly in reference to the action of our respective political parties in the past. I think we should settle down to the business before us and endeavor to do our duty to this people now eleven years after the war by economizing all we can, reducing taxation as we shall be able to do if we do economize, and then we shall have done something to perpetuate the Union better than attempting to make anybody believe that a large portion of the people of the North really were traitors to their country, to their Constitution, and to their duty.

All I meant to say in opening was that the people of the State of New York, without reference to party, were, as a whole, all through the war loyal to the Constitution, ready and willing to sacrifice their men and their means to maintain the Union under it, and anxious that when the war should be over we should bear the burdens it brought upon us North and South, taking care while doing so to cut off needless or extravagant expenditures and to bring back simplicity and purity and economy to the administration of public affairs under whichever party that administration may be conducted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I accept with due humility the rebuke of my honorable friend from New York for introducing these disagreeable subjects, evidently disagreeable to him, into this debate; but I only did it in self-defense, and I believe self-defense is recognized by the Senator from New York as one of the fundamental laws of human existence. It was not any republican member of the Senate that on this river and harbor bill launched out into the cognate question of where the money was to come from and what had increased the expenses of the Government and made it, as the Senator says and as the Senators over the way have said, extravagant and wrong. It was his own party, his own associates, who under cover of this bill—I do not say illogically, for every bill that appropriates money naturally raises all questions of taxation, of revenue, of cause, the consequence of public-debt extravagance, everything—but they brought it into this debate——

Mr. MERRIMON. Will the Senator allow me one word?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MERRIMON. With all due respect to the Senator, I deny that I brought this matter first into this debate. I deny that any Senator on this side did it, for I heard every speech that was made. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] on Monday made a furious assault upon the democratic party. His speech is in the RECORD now, and it will appear that that gave rise to this discussion. He denounced it for corruption, denounced it for treason, and for everything else that could scandalize and demean a party and render it unfit to enjoy the confidence of any people.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So he did, Mr. President, and he did it because my friend and his associates, or my friend or his associates, I do not remember which, gave him a just and necessary and imperative occasion for it.

Mr. MERRIMON. In what respect?

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator will only be good enough to look at the RECORD, as he seems to be opposed to looking at official figures, perhaps he will be willing to look at the RECORD, he will see. I am not going to waste the little strength I have in educating the Senator upon that topic.

Now, Mr. President, I will come back to my distinguished friend from the Empire State. I repeat that I have not said the little that I have said, by way of making any assault upon anybody; but when I see the administration that I have labored to the best of my ability to elect and support, in whatever respects I believe it to be worthy of support, (and those are in almost every, but not every, respect,) assailed as being profligate, corrupt, extravagant, wicked, I do not intend, so far as my small voice can go, whether it is on this bill or any other, to let falsehood and misrepresentation put on the garments of truth and go out to the world in that sort of guise. I have not introduced anything that has not been referred to before; I have only analyzed the causes and the particulars out of which the honorable Senator from North Carolina and the others draw their aggregate of infamy that they file upon the republican party; and if the honorable Senator from New York can point out a single instance in which I have misstated, or understated, or overstated any one of those facts I have referred to, I shall be very much obliged to him.

Mr. KERNAN. The gentleman, of course, does not mean to have it go forth that I put forth those facts?

Mr. EDMUNDS. By no means.

Mr. KERNAN. When my friend and the Senator from North Carolina get into a controversy about figures, is it entirely fair to bring New York in and display temper about it? Because he has done something in the Senator's view, is New York to be kicked?

Mr. EDMUNDS. We shall see. I am now bringing New York in because New York has assailed me. I am not bringing it in any hot temper, as the Senator suggests, but I am rather in earnest. I am bringing the Senator from New York in because he has accused me apparently, if there is any point in his remarks at all, and there always is, of fanning up old sorrows and old discontents and old troubles that ought to be buried in oblivion. That is the crime that I have committed according to the Senator from New York, if I rightly interpret the scope of his remarks. Now, have I? When his associates who are engaged in the same political enterprise that he is, undertake to assail me and my votes (because I have voted mostly to appropriate the money that these administrations have spent) for extravagance, and corruption, and blindness to public interest and insensibility to public demands, I imagine that I have the right to put the plain truth before this body, in order that it, or if not it the people, may know who is responsible and who is not. If I am wrong in that, I beg my honorable friend's pardon. Of course I am not.

The Senator says that the people, the liberals who joined the democracy in 1872, were crying out for reform. So they were. Many of the leaders of them were crying out for office, and one of them got a nomination for it from a party whose wickedness he had done more to expose than any other man in the United States; and if I am wrong in that, as I am alluding to a distinguished citizen of the State of New York, I will yield to my friend to correct me. The great body of what are called the liberals ought not to be left with the remark I have just made. It does not apply to them. The great body of the men who had before acted with the republican party who voted for Mr. Greeley in 1872 were undoubtedly men of sincere convictions and honest purposes; but, like many other good men in times gone by, always excepting those in the State of New York who never make mistakes, they were laboring under a delusion that they have happily discovered. They have found from the bitter experience of careful observation and the bearing of heavy burdens how delusive are the promises of the democratic party, and how utterly hopeless (as much as the republican administrations may need further reforms and further economies) it is for honest and intelligent men to expect anything, so much as a crumb or a thimbleful, from the party of which my honorable friend is a distinguished member. They have seen the spectacle in the last seven months of one democratic organization, elected on the cry of reform, civil service reform, the discarding of political ideas in the selection of public servants, come into power, and with pitchfork and bludgeon pitch out the one-armed soldiers of the Union from little places of trust and small emolument and put in their own creatures. They have seen a body, elected on the cry of reform, pass bills as extravagant and reckless and wicked as the one that we now have under consideration, to say the least. They have seen claims that upon the principles of law and public policy ought never to find a place in a legislative body, go easily through. They have seen a great political convention manufactured into a preponderance for a particular candidate, as it is stated—I do not know it to be true, and I have not access to the accounts as my friend over the way has to the Treasury accounts—by paid for advertisements in newspapers before hand, puffing the particular fellow who was expected to run up. They have seen prize-fighters and gamblers leading the cohorts of the reform democracy to select a reform candidate for the benefit of the people of the United States. And so, Mr. President, speaking of those honest and intelligent men who having no lust for office and no taste for politics, feeling hurt and troubled at the slowness with which republican reform as they thought was going on voted for Mr. Greeley, they have come back again to the true church and to the true path, with whatever imperfections, as it has imperfections, it may still continue to bear, in the hope that the republican party in the future, as it has done in the past, with a unanimous fidelity to the great principles of constitutional liberty and the reign of law in this country, will continue, as it has begun to do year after year since the war closed, to diminish expenses, diminish taxation, diminish officials, and gradually and steadily build up and perfect the public service of the country.

So much for the liberal part of my friend's argument. Now, the worst thing that I have done, after all, if I have done it untruthfully, is what I have said about the democracy of the State of New York and other States during the war. My honorable friend misunderstood me if he understood me to say that the men who composed a part of the democratic party in that State and almost every other of the Northern States were as individuals opposed to maintaining the supremacy of the Union, and that the brave and patriotic democrat from the farms of Oneida County did not volunteer just as cheerfully as the brave and patriotic democrat on the hills of Vermont did. I did not say or intimate any such thing. The reverse is true; the patriotic sentiment ran through the people of all parties in the North, but there was the corporation still with its Tweeds and its Deans and its Pendletons at its head, and that corporation, in the State of New York particularly where politics are reduced to an organization with drill and obedience and discipline, I repeat in my belief, and history will approve it, threw its heavy weight all the time against the cause of the Union and for the cause of the rebellion; and I repeat that I believe had not our southern friends, misguided as they were in that belief, supposed that that corporate authority would control the masses of the North, they would never have undertaken the desperate deed they did, of breaking up the Union.

Ah, Mr. President, the idea that that organized clique of men who out of Tammany Hall and other similar places have ruled the democracy for the last thirty years were in favor of prosecuting with vigor and fervor the war against the rebellion is one that cannot be proved. The reverse can be proved, in my opinion. There was no act of Congress, there was no movement of troops, there was no call by the Executive either for money or for men, that that corporate organization did not put itself in some way, either by force or by casuistry or by doubt or by trouble about the Constitution or something, heavily against, and it culminated in an open public and official declaration at Chicago in the summer of 1864, when the scales of battle were trembling in the balance and when if our friends at the South, as we now call them and as I now feel them to be, felt that if they could only hold out a little longer the North would be discouraged, its money depreciating, its homes depopulated, its taxes burdensome, they would achieve the independence that they had sought for and fought for so bravely—what did the democratic party in its most solemn form do then? It met at Chicago and in the face of all the people and of all the country North and South, by its committee of which a distinguished member from the State of New York, now a candidate I believe for a high position, was a member, reported to the convention and the convention adopted and put forth to the people of the world the solemn declaration that this war for the Union was a failure. That is what my friend from New York calls helping it, I suppose, and at a time when but for the providence of God, who did not intend that a republic should exist on this continent whose corner-stone was slavery, it would have turned the scale; but it fell upon the people of the North, among democrats as well as republicans, as the blatant and wicked declaration of a treasonable clique; but it was the organized democratic party as far as that party could be said to have any life at all in the Northern States.

I do not want to be told, therefore, unless my friend has got some counter-evidence, that the organization—not every man of the rank and file, not half the men of the rank and file, perhaps not a quarter of the men of the rank and file, but the great leaders whose characteristics prominent and public I have already referred to—did not do this thing. And if they intended the natural consequences of their own acts, as every man must be wise to do, they did it in order that the rebellion might succeed, that the Union forces should be withdrawn, and that peace, honorable and victorious to the rebellion but dishonorable and infamous to the Union, should be concluded.

But I am supposed to have done injustice to the State of New York in respect of the incident, which is only a mere circumstance to which I referred as one item in this long catalogue of trouble, going to show that the democratic party as a party, and its chief and responsible and official leaders in the State, as such, did not exert themselves as they might to maintain the Union, and I said as a consequence of that the troops of the armies of the United States were withdrawn from the theater of war and its brigades, one of those from my own State among the number, had to sit down in martial array in the chief city of the Union in order to preserve the consistency and the existence of the Republic. The Senator has not denied that for some cause the armies of the United States to the extent of thousands upon thousands, and brigades upon brigades, were withdrawn from the front and were encamped within the streets and squares of the great city of New York. What was the need that these men, drilled veterans, in the very stress and crisis of the rebellion, should be carried a thousand miles from the theater of war and located in this peaceful and patriotic State? What led to it? Where was the chief executive of that State? Where were the loyal democrats of that State controlling its organization and commanding its militia? If they were swift to put down some little disturbance and riot in the city of New York, why did they not hasten to the scene? The telegraph was everywhere. President Lincoln and Secretary Stanton were undoubtedly in telegraphic communication with the chief authorities of the city of New York and of the State of New York, and I think it safe to say that if the militia of the State of New York could have been obtained to respond to the interests of peace and order in that city in the enforcement of the draft, the soldiers from the front would not have traced their weary way from the Potomac and the Rapidan to the banks of the Hudson.

There is evidently something about it that needs explanation. The explanation that the world received at the time was that the governor of the State of New York either would not or could not produce force enough, he being the commander-in-chief of its military forces, to put down this so-called riot, really a rebellion in the greatest city of the Union. Could he have done so and had he done so, this thing would not have been done. But my friend says that he did everything that he could and that he received the thanks of the President of the United States, not because he failed to put down the rebellion in the city of New York and failed to call on his militia to restore peace there, but because he graciously condescended to allow the militia of the State of New York to go down into the State of Pennsylvania to repel General Lee at Gettysburgh on the 4th of July. Perhaps the governor of the State of New York was entitled to thanks. I doubt if he did more than his duty. I do not, any more than I do about this bill regulating commerce, know any State lines when one State is assailed by a foreign or rebellious foe which would prevent the militia of one State from going into another State to help their brethren maintain order and restore peace, although to the shame of the State of Vermont be it spoken that we once had a governor who took that view of constitutional law in the war of 1812. When the militia of the State of Vermont, just before the battle of Plattsburgh, were gathered at Burlington in order to go across the lake and help to repel the British, the then governor of the State of Vermont thought the constitution did not allow him to permit our militia to leave the borders of the State. The consequence was, what might have been expected, that the militia left the borders of the State of Vermont in spite of its constitution, in spite of its governor, and fought at the battle of Plattsburgh and helped my friend's constituents to repel Sir George Prevost and all his host—I believe that is the way the song used to go—back again into Canada. That is the only instance known to me where the governor of any State has felt any particular scruple or has been entitled to any particular thanks because the forces of one State marched into another to assist in repelling the common enemy.

But whatever Governor Seymour did about that let him be thanked for. I have not assailed him about that, and it was rather a military flank movement, I suppose, that transferred the scene of war in the mind of my friend from the city of New York to Gettysburgh. I was speaking of the city of New York; Mr. Seymour was the governor; and here is the record of what took place. The riots, as my friend has stated, arose out of the draft. That was the ostensible cause. The compiler of the work before me, once a famous democratic candidate for the Presidency, Horace Greeley, and therefore I suppose good authority, proceeds to state:

Governor Seymour, who addressed a large gathering in the New York Academy of Music, in language carefully weighed beforehand and tempered by the obvious requirements of his official position, was far more measured and cautious in his assaults and imputations than were the great majority of his compatriots.

Who as I infer spoke on the same occasion, and here are the speeches of his compatriots that refer in very pleasant terms to General Lee and other people rather prominent at that time, but I will not take the time to read them.

Yet he opened with this allusion to the nation's imminent perils and the disappointed hopes, the blighted expectations of those who, whether in council or on the field, were charged with the high responsibility of upholding its authority and enforcing its laws:

"When I accepted the invitation to speak, with others, at this meeting, we were promised the downfall of Vicksburgh."

This meeting was held on the very 4th day of July, at the very time, although Governor Seymour did not know it, that that wickedest of men and most corrupt of administration operators, General Grant, in the view of our friends over the way, was making rather a disturbance in that peaceful town of Vicksburgh.

"When I accepted the invitation to speak, with others, at this meeting, we were promised the downfall of Vicksburgh, the opening of the Mississippi, the probable capture of the confederate capital, and the exhaustion of the rebellion. By common consent all parties had fixed upon this day when the results of the campaign should be known to mark out that line of policy which they felt that our country should pursue. But in the moment of expected victory there came the midnight cry for help from Pennsylvania to save its despoiled fields from the invading foe; and almost within sight of this great commercial metropolis, the ships of your merchants were burned to the water's edge."

That was to encourage the draft, I suppose, to help the authorities of the United States to stimulate democratic patriotism to respond to the roll-call that used to be repeated in the North, I believe, in some very effective lines:

> Now, now, while your brethren are fighting and falling,
> Fill up the ranks that are open for you.

That was the way he would fill up the ranks. Mr. Greeley's history proceeds:

Having completed his portrayal of the national calamities and perils, he proceeded:

"A few years ago we stood before this community to warn them of the dangers of sectional strife—

That is patriotic—

but our fears were laughed at. At a later day, when the clouds of war overhung our country, we implored those in authority to compromise that difficulty."

O! compromise, how many crimes have been committed in thy name!

"We implored those in authority to compromise that difficulty, for we had been told by that great orator and statesman, Burke—

You will notice that a great orator always quotes Burke; it is an infallible test—that there never yet was a revolution that might not have been prevented by a compromise opportunely and graciously made." [Great applause.]

And I suppose that compromise would have been to have said that Lincoln had better resign and allow the other fellow, whoever he was, to sit at the chief seat in the capital. That would have done it for the time being. The orator proceeds:

"Our prayers were unheeded. Again, when the contest was opened, we invoked those who had the conduct of affairs not to underrate the power of the adversary, not to underrate the courage and resources and endurance of our own sister States. This warning was treated as sympathy with treason."

And so it was.

"You have the results of these unheeded warnings and unheeded prayers. They have stained our soil with blood; they have carried mourning into thousands of homes; and to-day they have brought our country to the very verge of destruction. Once more I come before you to offer again an earnest prayer and beg you to listen to a warning."

What was that warning? To fill up the ranks or to test the constitutionality of the draft? We shall see:

"Our country is not only at this time torn by one of the bloodiest wars that has ever ravaged the face of the earth; but, if we turn our faces to our own loyal States how is it there? You find the community divided into political parties, strongly arrayed, and using with regard to each other terms of reproach and defiance.

What were those terms of reproach and defiance? The republican party I believe has generally been credited with a good deal of persistence and sincerity for prosecuting the war, and the only terms of reproach and defiance that the democratic party could have showered upon it were because it was prosecuting the war at all, raising taxes, borrowing money, issuing paper, opening slaughter-pens, making a draft upon the free and enlightened democracy of the State of New York. That was what it was reproached for. I suppose there were only two sides to the question, so I add to what I said a little while ago this august authority, the chief magistrate of the State of New York, for the fact that the democratic organization was reproaching and defying the republican party in respect of the matters that the republican party was trying to accomplish.

"It is said by those who support more particularly the Administration that we who differ honestly, patriotically, sincerely, from them with regard to the line of duty, are men of treasonable purposes and enemies to our country.

"Hear, hear!" was the cry. Then, I take it, we have the statement of this witness that he and those who acted with him officially and otherwise did differ with the administration in respect of its policy, to use the very words of the governor, and that policy I believe we all agree was the most vigorous prosecution of the war.

"On the other hand, the democratic organization—

I hit the very word, my friend will see, when I spoke of the organization as distinguished from the men in it—

"The democratic organization look upon this administration as hostile to their rights and liberties.

There is patriotism for you! The securities and liberties of the democratic organization that the administration had anything to do with or attempted to have anything to do with were that, in common with all the other people of the United States, its able-bodied men should fight for the cause and that its rich men should pay taxes for the cause.

"They look upon their opponents as men who would do them wrong in regard to their most sacred franchises. I need not call your attention to the tone of the press or to the tone of public feeling, to show you how at this moment parties are thus exasperated, and stand in defiant attitudes to each other. A few years ago we were told that sectional strife, waged in words like these, would do no harm to our country; but you have seen the sad and bloody results. Let us be admonished now in time, and take care that this irritation, this feeling which is growing up in our midst, shall not also ripen into civil troubles that shall carry the evils of war into our own homes.

"Upon one point, all are agreed, and that is this: Until we have a united North, we can have no successful war.

I take it, therefore, he thought on the 4th of July, 1863, that the North was not united on the subject of the war. I put his testimony against that of my distinguished friend. They are both of them reputable witnesses. This witness spoke at the time with the fact before him. My honorable friend speaks now after a distance of thirteen years, over which, according to the mission of his party, a good deal of oblivion has spread its wings.

"Until we have a united, harmonious North we can have no beneficent peace. How shall we gain harmony? How shall the unity of all be obtained? Is it to be coerced?

There comes the draft, you see; coercion.

"I appeal to you, my republican friends, when you say to us that the nation's life and existence hang upon harmony and concord here, if you yourselves in your serious moments, believe that this is to be produced by seizing our persons—

That is, conscripting citizens of the State of New York—

by infringing upon our rights, by insulting our homes, and by depriving us of those cherished principles for which our fathers fought, and to which we have always sworn allegiance. [Great applause.]"

Was that encouragement to the administration of the Government of the United States? Was language like that calculated to cheer able-bodied men who heard those words from the greatest statesman of the State of New York and from the chief executive, through whose power alone, as the able-bodied man supposed, he could be compelled to serve the country in the time of its peril? Or was it calculated—mark the word; I do not say designed—was it calculated to stimulate, as it did stimulate, as the consequence showed, to the utmost resistance, breaking out in riot and rebellion, calling for portions of the regular and volunteer Army to turn their faces northward again in order that the ranks of the Army at the front might not be filled up by the able-bodied democrats of the city of New York. I will not read any more of this speech. There is a good deal of it which is equally suggestive reading; it is all in the same strain. There is no inconsistency in the remarks of the executive. The writer proceeds:

These orations are mild and cautious compared with the great mass of democratic harangues on this occasion. The allusions to Mr. Vallandigham's arrest as a lawless outrage and to the States as guardians of the rights of their citizens (with direct reference to the impending draft, which Governor Seymour with the great mass of his party was known to regard as unconstitutional) and all kindred indications of a purpose to resist the Federal Executive even unto blood, in case his "usurpations" and "outrages" should be repeated and persisted in, were everywhere received with frenzied shouts of concurrence and approbation, and a proposition to organize at once to march on Washington and hurl from power the tyrant enthroned in the White House would have elicited even more frantic manifestations of delight and approval.

So says the last democratic candidate of the democratic party for the office of President of the United States. I commend it to all his followers and supporters. He proceeds:

The first draft in the city of New York for conscripts under the enrollment act was advertised to commence at the several enrollment offices soon afterward; and, as a preparation therefor, the several democratic journals of that city seemed to vie with each other—especially in their issues of the eventful morning—in efforts to inflame the passions of those who at best detested the idea of braving peril, privation, suffering, and death in the prosecution of an "abolition war." That the enrollment here was excessive and the quota required of the city was too high were vehemently asserted, that there would be unfairness in the drawing of names from the wheel was broadly insinuated, but that the draft itself—any draft—

And the emphasis is that of Mr. Greeley, not my own—any draft—was unconstitutional, needless, and an outrage on individual liberty and State rights, was more emphatically insisted on.

And then he quotes from the Journal of Commerce, and from the New York World, and from the Daily News, and speaks of handbills. Then he speaks of the state of the mob and of the condition of the organized militia:

The organized militia of the city were generally absent in the interior of Pennsylvania; the Government had no military force within call but a handful on Governor's Island and in the forts commanding the seaward approaches; while the police, though well organized and efficient, was not competent to deal with a virtual insurrection which had the great body of the foreign-born laborers of our city at its back, with nearly every one of the ten thousand grog-shops for its block-houses and recruiting stations.

It must have been a charming democracy there, Mr. President.

The outbreak had manifestly been premeditated and pre-arranged; and the tidings of its initial success, being instantly diffused throughout the city, incited an outpouring into the streets of all who dreaded the draft, hated the war, or detested abolitionists and negroes as the culpable causes of both.

Then he goes on to speak how the riot accumulated as unrepressed riots generally do, and the things they did. They began on Monday. They were kept up through the three following days. He then proceeds to say:

But a riot stoutly confronted and checked has reached its culminating point; and this one—which would almost certainly have broken out on the fourth, but for the news of Lee's defeat at Gettysburgh—was now prosecuted under the heavy discouragement of the full tidings of Grant's triumph at Vicksburgh; while the first news of Banks's capture of Port Hudson, of Holmes's bloody repulse at Helena, and of Gillmore's initial success at Morris Island, now pouring in from day to day, proved a quick succession of wet blankets for the spirits of the rioters.

Now I come to Governor Seymour:

Governor Seymour had been in the city on the Saturday previous, but left that afternoon for New Jersey, and did not return till Tuesday forenoon, when he was at once escorted to the City Hall, and thence addressed the crowd who flocked thither—many, if not most of them, from the mob just before menacing the Tribune office—as follows:

My friends, I have come down here from the quiet of the country to see what was the difficulty; to learn what all this trouble was concerning the draft. Let me assure you that I am your friend. [Uproarious cheering.] You have been my friends [Cries of "Yes," "Yes," "That's so." "We are and will be again."] and now I assure you, my fellow-citizens, that I am here to show you a test of my friendship. [Cheers.] I wish to inform you that I have sent my adjutant-general to Washington to confer with the authorities there.

What for? To show them that volunteers from all parts of the State are flocking in and that there is no use to resort to this invidious operation of drafting? Not exactly. I am afraid I am wrong in making that free recitation; let me give his exact words again:

I wish to inform you that I have sent my adjutant-general to Washington to confer with the authorities there, and to have this draft suspended and stopped.

That is my friendship for you; that is my loyalty to my country and my Government; that is what will dispense with turning thousands of the Army back again toward their northern homes to keep us in order. All will be peace in the State of New York, for she is not called upon to help fight the battles of the country!

[Vociferous cheers.]

He probably struck the key-note then.

I now ask you, as good citizens, to wait for his return; and I assure you that I will do all that I can to see that there is no inequality and no wrong done any one. I wish you to take care of all property as good citizens and see that every person is safe. The safe-keeping of property and persons rests with you; and I charge you to disturb neither. It is your duty to maintain the good order of the city; and I know you will do it. I wish you now to separate as good citizens, and you can assemble again whenever you wish to do so. I ask you to leave all to me now, and I will see to your rights. Wait until my adjutant returns from Washington, and you shall be satisfied. Listen to me, and see that no harm is done to either persons or property, but retire peaceably.

So he promises them that, if they will only wait, the object they have in view by these riots shall be accomplished without any further destruction of the property of their fellow-citizens and the lives of their fellow-citizens in the city of New York.

Mr. President, I think I have gone far enough with this particular incidental topic, which was only one drop in this great bucket of proof, to show that I did not do any injustice to the distinguished governor of the State of New York when I said that the organization of the democratic party and the action of the executive of that party at that time in the State of New York were adverse to the cause of the Union, and that all that doubt and difficulty and riot and hanging back could do to give aid to the rebellion and to break down the cause of the Union was done. I do not mean by that to say that Governor Seymour intended and desired that the rebellion should succeed; but he was stuffed so full of the dignity of the State of New York and was so crazy on the subject that any draft under national authority must be unconstitutional that he resorted to the same method of eloquence that demagogues—not that he was one—do to a mob to keep the peace and get what they desire without violence if they can; if they cannot, what then? Where was the militia of the State of New York, with its four million people? They were not all at Gettysburgh; they were not all at the front. New York, like Vermont and every other northern State, although they all poured out their quotas for the war, still had men enough, able-bodied men enough in reserve to have fought a great many battles and enforced order in a great many cities larger than the city of New York. But that governor who alone had the constitutional power in and as the head of that State to bring the force of the State to bear against this insurrection, as Mr. Greeley calls it, did not do it, and the forces of the nation were recalled from posts of infinite importance and at a most critical period in the history of the war to enforce that peace in the loyal State of New York which we were trying to enforce by arms over the seceded States.

Now, Mr. President, I am done, I believe, with that topic, and I only want to say one word more. I have not come into this debate—and it is not half exhausted; I am quite ready to begin again whenever I am obliged to do so, much as the people of New York submitted to the draft apparently—I have not come into this debate with any desire to stir up unhappy remembrances; but when what my honorable friends on the other side of this Chamber say in respect of the conduct of republican administrations necessarily leads to the root of this tree then I shall dig to the root, be satisfied or dissatisfied who may.

Mr. KERNAN. Now, Mr. President, I submit that the charge of the Senator from Vermont so elaborately made not to reduce this appropriation bill, but for other purposes, is an unjust charge. The riot in New York of which he has spoken was not fomented and there was no wish to excite hostilities or disturbance in New York with a view to aid the rebellion. What were the facts? I hope every American citizen will always remember the history of raising troops to put down the rebellion, if we ever have war again. The calls made for troops by the President were filled, and more were sent than were wanted up to the ordering of the three-hundred-dollar draft, as it was called. That draft never got the Government men. Prior to this draft there was never a call for troops when they were not raised by volunteering; and you will remember that prior to the order of this draft—I may not get the date accurately—there was an order issued from the War Department that they would not take any more men. There was no call on the States or the people for men and a refusal to furnish them prior to the ordering of this draft. I allude to it only to state what I think was the cause of the great dissatisfaction with the draft and of the riot in New York. There came an order for a draft, and every man drafted who could pay $300 could stay at home by doing so. It did create excitement and feeling among poor men in every neighborhood. Before that in my own county, and I take it as a fair sample, we had raised without difficulty the needed troops from the men who were willing to volunteer; but when the order came that there should be a draft and that the drafted men who would pay $300 each need not serve, the men without means who must go, although it was difficult for them to leave their families, became dissatisfied. Whether this was right or wrong I shall not discuss here. There was a feeling that this was an effort to make the poor men go as soldiers while others could get rid of going by paying $300. That is what made the dissatisfaction, and that is what made it necessary for men in every neighborhood to appeal to that class to keep them from becoming very much excited in reference to what they thought an unfair discrimination. The result of it was that it did not give us men. Democrats and republicans alike throughout our State where there were cases of hardship raised the money and paid the Government the $300, for it only asked the one or the other. This made excitement. Women with children, whose husbands could not raise the money, were alarmed and excited. A few months before we could call meetings and raise men by the regiment as volunteers from the class who had not wife or children depending on their daily labor to keep them in bread; but when this order for the draft came there arose dissatisfaction and excitement, not from bad men exciting disquiet, but because the class of laborers who had families and no means believed this mode of getting soldiers was unfair and unjust toward them. There was a very large body of this class of men in the city of New York; and let me say to the Senator from Vermont that those who were republicans and acted with the republican party of this class were excited just as much as democrats. They all thought it was an effort to make those go to the field without the credit of volunteering who could not raise $300. That was what made the excitement which led to the riot in New York.

Did Governor Seymour incite it? Does the Senator from Vermont pretend to say that when he spoke in his address on the 4th of July, 1863, about differences between parties he meant they were stirring up hostile dissension and violence between parties? There were differences then; there were irritations arising out of arbitrary acts of the Federal Government; there were things in reference to the draft that created excitement; and when he appealed to the Government at Washington to let the State of New York raise her quota and not enforce this draft upon men who could not raise the $300 and let all those who could stay at home, he did, in my judgment, what was wise and patriotic toward the Federal Government, and did not do it from any desire to prevent the Army from being filled with efficient soldiers. Everybody knows that sort of a draft was an utter failure. It did not furnish men; it degraded the whole thing down to selling a man for $300.

But the riot broke out; and it probably grew to greater proportions than it otherwise would owing to the absence of our militia regiments from New York and its vicinity in Pennsylvania, to which I referred before. Our governor did not try to stop them going out of the State, as did the patriotic governor of Vermont in the war of 1812, as mentioned by the Senator. They went to Pennsylvania on the order of our governor, as commander-in-chief of the militia of the State. Everybody remembers how promptly it was done. They were sent from the eastern part of the State because thence they could be transferred promptly to the relief of the Federal Government in Pennsylvania.

But the troops of the United States did not have to go to stop the riot. The riot was all stopped before the troops came. There were men ordered from the interior, but they did not get to New York until the riot had ended. But these excited and deluded men, who thought there was to be a system, not of volunteering, but of making those who were poor go to the war, were stopped by the efforts of Governor Seymour and the local authorities, and the speech made by Governor Seymour and referred to by the Senator, which has been so much abused, aided to stay violence and restore order. Governor Seymour is denounced because he addressed them as "my friends."

Remember, as I said before, it was that particular thing that called out Mayor Opdyke. He was with him. He thought he acted most firmly and wisely and prudently. It was a similar reference to that made by the Senator from Vermont here that was made in the convention that led Mr. Opdyke to make the speech to which I have alluded. The city was under a republican mayor at the time of this riot. Governor Seymour had spent Sunday out of the State, at a place where he had relatives, in New Jersey, and he hastened back to the city on the first intimation of the riot. The mayor and he together went to the scene of threatened violence, and he addressed the excited multitude as men. It was his duty to stay and disperse them without bloodshed if possible. They were men excited, not with a purpose of marching down South to help the rebellion, but they were men who had been excited by the idea that they, laborers, with families and without property, were to be dragged to the Army, while everybody who could pay $300 would escape. He appealed to them as friends. A man who is a coward or who sympathizes with a mob will run away from it; but when a brave man or officer finds that his neighbor's life or property or the public peace is threatened by an excited mob, he does just what Governor Seymour did in this case. He, brave, patriotic, and honest, steps out before the mob and talks to them in the language of kindness, while it is also the language of firmness. He did address them in that way. The riot went down. He said that he had sent his adjutant-general to Washington. It was to make an arrangement that the State of New York might, in accordance with what had been the previous and wiser mode, be allowed to promptly furnish her quota of soldiers by volunteers and be relieved from this draft, which was peculiarly odious, because it permitted all who could pay $300 to remain at home and required the laborer, who had not means, to leave his family in want and go to the war for years.

I submit to the distinguished Senator from Vermont, speaking as he does here in the absence of one whose life has been before the people of this country, speaking of one as to whom I would appeal to his political opponents in my own State for his purity, for his patriotism, for his sincere desire to do his full duty as a public and private citizen, whether he really can stand on the ground he has assumed here to-day in reference to Governor Seymour. I think he has done injustice to that distinguished citizen in carrying the idea that, first, he was a traitor to the Constitution of his country when he was governor; second, that he sought to incite men to resist the Government, and, thirdly, that when he addressed that mob he was not doing what was his duty, endeavoring to quell it, but telling them that he would endeavor to arrange so that the quota of New York might be raised in the future as it had ever been in the past, full and up and over of able, active young men who were willing to go to the Army as volunteers, but who did not wish to go as conscripts.

I leave it, as the Senator says, to history. I am not here to question the accuracy of Mr. Greeley's History of the War. He has gone to his grave. If I should read some of the things that he said in excited moments of large masses of republicans they would have to say that he did them injustice, and I should admit it. Does the gentleman say that a history written under the excitement of the war by a man of his character is to be taken always as true as to what he suggests as to motives of men from whom he differed politically? We nominated Mr. Greeley, as the Senator states, and he was not elected.

I have nothing to say so far as the Senator has read from that history what Governor Seymour said. All I ask is a fair interpretation of it. On the 4th of July, 1863, he was speaking on the great important point of the people of the North being united. United how? United on a policy as to the war which would suppress it speedily, which would uphold the Constitution, and which, the moment the men who resisted the Constitution laid down their arms, would insure them protection and republican government. That was the policy of many men in the State of New York throughout this entire war. They spoke against the wisdom and justice of arbitrary arrests in our own and other States where there was no war, and which excited bad feeling; they spoke in favor of our people standing together, in favor of putting down the rebellion by armed force, in favor of sending our share of men, in favor of raising our share of money, and making it a war solely for the Union, and with no other or ulterior or sinister motive of any kind. And now to read in this debate the remarks made by Governor Seymour on the 4th of July, 1863, which the Senator from Vermont has read, and to insinuate or charge that by those remarks Governor Seymour meant or intended to encourage or favor those in rebellion against the Constitution of the United States which he had sworn on the 1st of January, 1863, to uphold, is doing him great injustice. I submit that the Senator from Vermont is entirely unjust.

I am willing to leave the history of the State of New York, of its democratic governor, of the party that acted with him in that State, to the judgment of fair men; and I would leave it to Governor Morgan, who was governor in 1861 and 1862 himself. He knows whom he put on as committeemen and chairmen of committees in the counties where men were to be raised in 1861 and 1862; he knows how the response was from the day of the first fire to the end of his administration; and I think that any one looking at it will find that the Federal Government was as fully sustained through the administration of his successor, Governor Seymour, as it was by the governor of any of our sister-States, and I believe as a rule they acted patriotically and they acted well.

Mr. MERRIMON. Mr. President, much as I regret to protract this debate I cannot allow the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] to assign me by inadvertence or on purpose a false position, or, if I can help it, to evade the force of the points I endeavored to make against the republican party the other day. He says in substance that I provoked this debate so far as it is partisan in its character. That I absolutely deny, as I have done repeatedly before. The Senate will bear me witness and the RECORD will bear me witness that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] made a furious and what I regarded as an unjust assault upon the democratic party. He arraigned its leading men and denounced its principles and its policy and its practice. I thought that I had a right to say what I might deem proper in vindication of the policy of the democratic party at this time, and that I had a right in reply in some measure to arraign the republican party; and ventured on Tuesday last to do it. Out of what I submitted on that occasion has sprung, as the Senator from Vermont alleges, this warm debate. He would have the Senate and the country understand also that I dragged the war into the debate, and that all the declamation that has been indulged in in reference to the war was provoked by some argument or some statement made by myself. That imputation is equally as groundless. I expressly excluded the war from what I submitted to the Senate. I did not base any estimate that I made or any argument I made upon any expenditures or alleged maladministration during the late war. On the contrary, I said that the war was the occasion of increased expense; that during the time it prevailed the civil service was necessarily increased. There were many considerations that tended to increase the expenses of the Government during that time, and I avoided entering into a discussion of the war, or its causes or its consequences. Nor did I advert to the increase of the public debt or any of the practices that were carried on for which the republican party were responsible during that time. I put that on purpose entirely out of the case. Nor did I take into consideration the public debt for the purpose of seeing whether it was created on account of the war or on account of other causes. I put that entirely out of the calculation. I said in substance that, conceding for argument's sake, which I denied as a fact, that I was responsible for the war, that the southern people were responsible for the war, that the democratic party was responsible for the war, that all the crimes and outrages which were perpetrated during that time were chargeable to the democratic party, and that the republican party was virtuous and patriotic and did in all things what it ought to have done, could all that concession make any apology for the ruinous extravagance, the unheard-of frauds and fraudulent practices tolerated by, and in many instances connived at, by the republican party of the nation? That is the ground I based my remarks upon, and the Senator cannot by his ingenuity now draw me into a controversy about the war. It is in no just or proper sense a legitimate subject of discussion before the Senate at this time.

I shall not undertake to vindicate the course of the South or the course of the democratic party of the North, or anything that was done by any person who sympathized with the South during that tragic period; now is not the time or the place to do so; but I do undertake to say, and I have a right to say it, that, whatever the republican party may have done that was virtuous and good during the war or since the war, this can be no excuse or apology for any crimes and maladministration and frauds and corruptions which it may have tolerated since that time. If since that time it has proved faithless and unfit to be charged longer with power, the country ought to know the fact. And another material fact to be taken into this account is that, whatever might have been the position of the South during the war and however responsible it may have been for the war—I will not discuss that question now—since that time the people of that section of the Union have had to contribute their part of the public revenue, and they have paid it and are paying it to-day. They are responsible for their part of the public debt. They are responsible for and have paid and must continue to pay their share of the current expenses of the Government, and being so they surely have a right to be heard here in reference to the way and manner in which they are taxed, the revenues are collected, and public expenditures are made, and for what causes, and whether the authorities of the United States have administered the Government purely and honestly and for the best interests of the people.

It was in that view, and in that view alone, that I ventured on Tuesday last to engage in the debate, and exercise my right on this floor as a Senator representing in part one of the States of the Union. Is there anything wrong in that? Am I to be complained at for that?

Why make this ad hominem argument, that I am responsible for the war? What does it prove? Suppose that my hands to-day were red with traitorous blood, is that any argument in favor of the ruinous policy and practices of the republican party? Suppose that the whole South have committed savage crimes, as the Senator would intimate, and which I deny, is that any apology for the misrule and general distress brought on the country since the war by the republican party? I think not; and I apprehend that an intelligent people will not allow such an argument, however ingeniously put, and which goes off on immaterial points, to have the weight of a feather, when they come to pass upon the merits of the republican party and its conduct since the war.

The points I endeavored to make in what I said the other day were, first, that the republican party had utterly failed to administer the internal-revenue laws of the country in the matter of collecting taxes upon distilled spirits faithfully. I went on to show, and by data which no one denied, and which I undertake to say no one can deny, that in the neighborhood of a billion and a half of dollars ought to have been collected and should have gone into the Treasury of the Union from that single source of revenue, when less than one-half, not more than one-third of that amount was collected and accounted for. I went on further to show that, while a large part of the revenue due from this source was not collected, large sums were collected and not accounted for, and the republican party, having complete control of the Government, was responsible to the people for not having it collected and accounted for.

Mr. SHERMAN. I understand the Senator to say that is not denied. I denied it. I deny it now. I say there is no ground whatever for an assertion of that kind. I am surprised to hear the Senator from North Carolina say that two-thirds of the revenue that ought to have been derived from spirituous liquors has been lost by the republican party.

Mr. MERRIMON. That is not what I said.

Mr. SHERMAN. Or that we have failed to collect the tax, and only collected one-third of what we ought to have collected.

Mr. MERRIMON. What I said the other day and what any one can see by turning to the RECORD was this——

Mr. SHERMAN. I am turning to it now.

Mr. MERRIMON. A civil-service commission was raised under a statute by the republican party at a time when the better class of that party—and good men in it have been protesting against manifest frauds all the time—were crying out against the frauds and corruption of those men who had got the control of it, and that civil-service commission put down in their report, from which I read, that one-fourth of the revenues were not collected; and that was not denied nor can it be denied. They not only asserted it but they said that estimates had been made by persons who were well qualified to speak on that subject and who had passed upon it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire——

Mr. MERRIMON. I beg the Senator's pardon. I did not interrupt the gentlemen on the other side and I do not want to be interrupted now. I want to consume as little time as possible in setting myself in a fair, just light. The Senator will have sufficient time after I am through to say what he thinks proper.

Then I said, furthermore, that the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Fessenden, in 1864, set down in his report that the annual product of distilled spirits in this country at that time was 100,000,000 of gallons, I believe he said.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator yield to me right there?

Mr. MERRIMON. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say that Mr. Fessenden did say in 1864 that the consumption of whisky in 1860 was about 100,000,000 gallons; but afterward a most careful commission was created by the two Houses of Congress, of which David A. Wells was the chairman, consisting of three men, and they went into the whole question of whisky production, not only in the year 1860 but for a long series of years, and they concluded that less than 40,000,000 gallons was the average annual production of whisky.

Mr. MERRIMON. The statistics of the country show that the number of gallons of distilled spirits is more than that; that it is more than double that amount.

Mr. SHERMAN. Upon that point the Senator ought to allow me to make a statement.

Mr. MERRIMON. I think Senators ought not to be interrupting me in this way. They may correct me after I get through if I am in error. I cannot hear or yield to half a dozen at once.

Mr. LOGAN. We want to state the facts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina decline to yield?

Mr. MERRIMON. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well.

Mr. MERRIMON. I do not want to be interrupted further. Upon that statement made by a republican Secretary of the Treasury, and which I never heard contradicted until the other day by the honorable Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] I made a calculation—an estimate—the accuracy of which cannot be denied, whereby it will appear that during Andrew Johnson's administration more than $650,000,000 were lost. I said a great part of that was not collected at all, and because it was not collected the republican party was responsible. It was stolen by faithless officers and misapplied by others whom the republican party kept in office when they ought to have punished them for it. That is what I said, and I repeat it, that it was right and proper that the American people should hold the republican party responsible for it. That is one point I made. In all the arguments made here I have not heard that satisfactorily answered, and I do not believe it can be. The estimate may be extravagant, but I know and the country knows that it has been a standing ground of complaint by the better class of men in the republican party and by the country generally that the Internal Revenue Department has lost millions since the close of the war through faithless officers and frauds of the most appalling character.

Another point that I made was that the republican party was not an economical party; that growing out of the way of administering the Government during the war, growing out of its extravagant notions of policy and principles, or some cause, it did not administer the Government economically; and I cited figures to show that fact. I undertook to show that the material figures that I cited are substantially correct, and no Senator has shown them materially incorrect. One or two of the tables which I have cited have been assailed to some extent, but they have not been assailed successfully in a material point of view. I showed that although in the first table showing the increase of the civil service there might have been some irregularity and inaccuracies about the details of the compilation and in the several items from which the table was made up, yet in the aggregate, taking the basis of estimate adopted by a distinguished republican, it was not far out of the way. The Blue Book, containing the names of officers, employés, and agents, contained over twelve hundred pages; and estimating seventy names to a page, as was done by the gentleman referred to, the number would be something over 84,000 officers and agents and employés in the service of the Government. Then it was not denied that the names of employés at the navy-yards and at many other places where persons were employed at one service or another were not contained in the Blue Book nor taken into the calculation at all; and if they had been the number in the table which I cited was not sufficiently great. As to the other table, about the current expenses, I could not see that there was any very great difference between the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] and myself. I had not verified the table to which he adverted last, as I told him and the Senate; but to-day, on looking at the report of the Secretary of the Treasury and comparing some items there with corresponding items in this table, I find that they harmonize exactly.

There is another fact in connection with that table to which the Senator from Massachusetts did not advert. If he had looked at the margin on the right-hand side of the table he would have found certain items put down as items of expenditure and other items as items of appropriation. He did not make that distinction which was material in determining its accuracy. So learning that there were errors in that table, I cited another table of which there could be no question, which I vouched for when produced, and it was the only one for which I did vouch. That table shows, as I insisted yesterday and on Tuesday, not only an extraordinary, but an unnatural, increase of the expenditures of the Government. I insisted that the republican party were responsible for that unnatural increase, and I so insist to-day. Senators in undertaking to answer these points may go off and declaim about the war and denounce the democratic party for sympathy with the rebellion and all that, but I take it sensible men will not allow that argument to weigh much with them when they come to consider the two points I have thus made. The people are interested in knowing whether these charges are true in whole or in part. There are the figures and the data; let every one calculate for himself. Those are the matters we are at issue about—not about the war and its crimes and calamities.

I have not time now to enter into an elaborate reply to the long, labored, and studied speech of the Senator from Vermont; but I am going to cite some striking statistics from the record, which I happen to have before me, in order that any man who has the capacity to calculate figures and reason at all may see in a general view the force and truth of the points which I made and have just restated. If Senators can show that this general view is not true, I respectfully challenge them to do it.

In the year 1850 the population of this country was 21,191,876. The net annual expenditures for administering the Government that year were $37,165,990.09. Mark the proportion now of the increase as I pass along. In 1860 the population of this country was 31,443,321 In that year the net ordinary expenses of the Government were $60,056,754.71. In 1870 the population of the country was 38,558,371 See now how the expenses go up, out of all reasonable proportion In 1875 the net ordinary expenses of administering this Government were $171,529,848.27, nearly three times what it was in 1860.

Mr. EATON. Exclusive of the pension-list.

Mr. MERRIMON. I think neither the appropriation for pensioners nor the interest on the public debt is included in that statement of the Government expenses. I know the interest on the public debt is not included. This is only the ordinary expenses of administering the Government for the last year. The increase for administering the Government is nearly three to one. The increase in population is not more, I believe, than ten millions in that time. Now, I put it to any one who can reason at all whether, taking the growth and development and the circumstances of the country, it is necessary in the year 1875 in carrying on the ordinary operations of the Government, to increase it to three times what it was in 1860? If it is not necessary, then I ask my republican friends where has from forty to fifty million dollars in one year gone to? Answer that. Forty or fifty millions of dollars is an immense sum according to my notion of expenditures.

Then I call attention to another fact tending to show the extravagance I allege. The House of Representatives is fresh from the people, elected on the ground of reform and retrenchment. They came here to look after the people's interest, and they have done it as far as they could with lights before them and the circumstances surrounding them. They say that they have made appropriations sufficient to carry on the Government and to carry it on efficiently. And they have cut down the appropriations from last year $38,000,000 in round numbers. Now I ask, if this is true, if the public expenditures the current year may be reduced $38,000,000, why might not that sum have been saved last year and for several years past? Let him who can answer. Yet if the republican party, who have administered the Government since the war, have collected the revenues, have allowed no frauds, have administered the Government fairly and honestly in all respects, how is it possible that the democratic House have ascertained that the Government can be sufficiently supported during the year 1876–77 and reduce the amount of revenue to be applied to that purpose $38,000,000? That is something I cannot understand, and that is what I leave my republican friends to explain. My friend says it is not the fact, but has he risen here to say these figures can be denied? I cite the record here as to the fact. I cite the report of the Secretary of the Treasury as to the amount expended for administering the Government in the several periods I have mentioned. Can they deny that? Can they point out why the expenses in administering this Government in 1875 shall be three times as much as it was in 1860, leaving out the War Department and the war expenses? I leave them to answer that question. I put these striking facts and figures to the people, and I call upon them to call upon this party to explain how this is; and if they cannot explain it to their satisfaction, to condemn them at the ballot-box.

The Senator from Vermont, instead of meeting these figures, facts, and arguments, and showing they are false or substantially so, goes off in declamation, and the main part of his speech is devoted to the war, its crimes and horrors. He seems to want to divert attention from this subject by a stirring reference to the war. I do not go into that subject at all. I can see no good to come of doing so, and it is not material to do so. Then, too, he abuses the democratic party for what they did during the war. It is not my province to defend the democratic party or anything they did during the war. There are others who can do that more properly and who know more about it; but what transpired since the war I have a right to talk about, and I have talked about it.

The other day the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] almost alarmed me about the character of the speech I had made. He said I had denounced the republican party in a most wholesale manner; that I had said they were common thieves, robbers, dogs, scoundrels, and all that sort of thing. I wonder that he could so express himself. I never indulge in such language as that here or elsewhere. I was glad the next morning in looking over the RECORD to find that anybody looking at what I said could not truly say there was a coarse word of anybody in it. Nor did I deny that there were honest men in the republican party. On the contrary, I expressly said, I believe in reply to a question put by the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. LOGAN,] that there were good men and thousands of them in the republican party just as there are in all parties; but I did insist that bad, selfish, and corrupt men had gotten into that party in such numbers, they had got such control upon its vitality, that the party was not able to purge itself; and if the American people expected to rid themselves of this incubus they would be obliged to change the administration of the Government. That is what I said. I did not use any disrespectful word to any respectable republican on this floor or anywhere else. I did not charge the party as the Senator said I did, and I cannot see any reasonable motive for insisting that I charged the party in that way. That is the position that I occupied and now occupy, and so I wish to be understood.

This, Mr. President, is about all I care to say now. I do not want to protract this debate. I am anxious that we should come to a vote on this bill as soon as possible, but this much was due to myself.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion to him?

Mr. MERRIMON. Yes, sir.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator was speaking about the extraordinary expenditures of the Government and comparing them with the expenses of 1860. I should like to suggest one or two little items which will probably refresh his recollection. We estimate the Army to cost about $1,000,000 to a regiment yearly. When the war broke out we had ten regiments. If the Senator will look into the condition of the Army now he will see a difference of about $20,000,000 in that respect. If the Senator will examine the amount of claims that have been allowed every year since the war by the Quartermaster's Department and by the Commissary Department for horses lost in the service, for provision, for fuel, for destruction of property, and things of that kind growing out of the war, he will find another addition perhaps.

Mr. MERRIMON. I would remind my friend that expenses of that character are not embraced in the net ordinary expenses of the Government. In 1875 the gross expenditures in administering the Government were $682,000,885.32.

Mr. LOGAN. That is paying interest—and everything else—every claim possible.

Mr. MERRIMON. Certainly; and paying these very expenditures which we are talking about.

Mr. LOGAN. For what year is that?

Mr. MERRIMON. Eighteen hundred and seventy-five; and here is the record if the Senator wishes to see it.

Mr. WINDOM. In 1875?

Mr. LOGAN. What does the Senator mean?

Mr. MERRIMON. The gross expenditures in 1875.

Mr. WEST. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him one moment? The Senator gives correctly the gross expenditures, but there is a very great difference between the amount of money expended and what it costs to carry on the Government.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. WEST. One moment.

Mr. MERRIMON. I do not think I have ever seen a time——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield?

Mr. MERRIMON. If I can find out which gentleman to yield to. I do not want to be in any way discourteous to any one; but to which Senator shall I yield?

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator now makes a statement that the expenses of the Government during the last year were $682,000,000, and with an air of triumph he says he has got it here in a report right before him. Surely a Senator of the United States ought to be very careful about making a statement which every boy in the whole land will wonder at at once. Everybody knows that is not so. The very next figure to it, within half an inch of the statement of that large expenditure of $682,000,000, which was the gross expenditure, shows there was paid in refunding the public debt $407,377,492.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is a mere change of the accounts.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is the very next figure [pointing on the report] only so far from that statement. That amount was expended in refunding the public debt, changing one bond to another.

Mr. MERRIMON. That included the sinking fund and other things, did it not?

Mr. LOGAN. And that sum of $400,000,000 applies to the statement the Senator referred to as gross expenditures, and is to be deducted therefrom.

Mr. MERRIMON. Certainly, the gross expenditures. There are the figures, and Senators are denying the fact right in their faces.

Mr. LOGAN. The amount of money paid on the public debt is a part of the expenses of the Government, the Senator says, and when it was paid on a debt incurred by himself and others, a debt that the war produced.

Mr. MERRIMON. Here I will advert to one matter mentioned by the Senator from Vermont. He talked a great deal about the amounts that had been paid out to claims against the Treasury for cotton, &c. The Senator ought to have been candid enough to say that in paying out that money it was paid out because it had been covered into the Treasury when the cotton that produced it was seized and sold, and it was paid out to those who were entitled to it under the decisions of the courts of the country.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Undoubtedly; but the Senator's point was that the total expenditures of the Government had gone on increasing and increasing so as to show by the mere total that they were very extravagant. One item I say is paying that money down South for their confederate cotton. Is that extravagant? That was my question.

Mr. MERRIMON. No, sir; I did not pretend to say that it was extravagant.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then what did the Senator say this was the total of extravagance for?

Mr. MERRIMON. That money was not gotten from the people by taxation, nor was that taken into the account which I have read, which shows the net ordinary expenses of administering the Government every year from 1865. If any Senator can answer the point I made, let him answer it. The figures and facts cited cannot be answered by going off on the war.

Mr. WEST. Some of your figures have been answered.

Mr. MERRIMON. I do not know when it was done.

Mr. WEST. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] answered your figures.

Mr. MERRIMON. No, sir; I read exactly what was in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

Mr. MERRIMON. It included other matters, and I intended to state what the gross expenditures were.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator read it just as the man read the Bible: "If Satan entice thee to sin, consent thou;" and there he stopped, leaving off the "not."

Mr. MERRIMON. That is a very poor way to meet a fact and an argument.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I submit to the Senator that it is.

Mr. MERRIMON. Making laughable suggestions here, there, and elsewhere does not meet the point. Can any Senator, will any disinterested man in this country, contend that the internal-revenue system has been properly, judiciously, wisely, and faithfully administered since the close of the war; and that the amount of money has gone into the Treasury that ought to have gone there? The amount of money was not collected that ought to have been collected, the officers have not accounted for all the money that they ought to have accounted for, and they having failed to do it the republican party, having absolute control of the Government, are responsible for it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator——

Mr. MERRIMON. Then here these figures——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. MERRIMON. No, sir. Here are these figures which show this unnatural, this abnormally extravagant increase of the expenses from year to year since the war. Has any Senator accounted for that to the satisfaction of any disinterested mind?

Mr. WEST. Which figures do you speak of?

Mr. MERRIMON. I trust the Senator will not interrupt me again. If I allow one to do it half a dozen will do it, and I must be courteous alike to all.

Mr. WINDOM. The Senator was asking somebody to account for it. We thought perhaps he would like to have it done.

Mr. MERRIMON. In the proper way and at the proper time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. "In some other way," as Agrippa said unto Paul.

Mr. MERRIMON. Instead of coming down to these points and showing how money ought to have been collected and how much was collected and accounted for, the Senator has gone off into the war to rekindle the fires of hate and discord. I shall not join in that work.

I adverted to the fact that extravagance was made manifest in that the democratic party in the House of Representatives have reduced taxation $38,000,000.

Mr. WINDOM. By what bill?

Mr. MERRIMON. I mean appropriations. I explained that the other day. That is another subterfuge. That is the way you undertake to answer a point.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. MERRIMON. I will not yield; I do not want to be discourteous, but if I yield to one, I will have to yield to half a dozen others, so that I cannot go on with the remarks I intended to make before taking my seat. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] the other day, with an air of triumph asked the Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] or some other Senator, has the House sent in a bill here that proposes to reduce taxation one dollar? He thought that argument was a complete answer to the argument being made by the Senator on this side of the Chamber. It is appropriate to allude to it now in answer to the suggestion the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] makes.

The answer to it is twofold and very plain. The republican party have administered this Government since 1860. Passing by the war, they have had absolute control of the Government since 1865, and what is the condition of the country to-day? Prostration of industries and business everywhere, and we witness distress on every hand. We hear of failures every day amounting in the aggregate to millions of dollars. Thousands of laborers are in want of bread and cannot find employment. Who is responsible for this disordered state of the country if the republican party are not? Is it not plainly attributable to their extravagance and misrule? The maladministration in the collection of the revenues is sufficient to produce widespread disaster. This alone, in my judgment, has contributed much to the present public distress and discontent.

How is it that all this evil has come upon the country while this party are and have been in power, while they are ruling? The Bible says, "When the wicked rule the people mourn," and the people mourn to-day. We hear of commercial failures; we hear of industrial failures; we hear of failures in every respect in every walk of life. On which side soever we turn our eyes we see distress and hear loud complaints. Who is responsible for it? All this is brought about by misrule. It has not come without a cause; and in such a country as this, with such a people, with such resources, want and distress cannot come if they are properly and faithfully governed. The revenues of the country are drawn from the same source they were drawn from last year, and they will fall short many millions of dollars; and we get that fact from the Treasury Department of the Government. The public distresses have impaired alarmingly the sources of revenue. Hence the taxes may not be reduced, unless in the contingency I will now mention. The House has reduced the appropriations $38,000,000. If this republican Senate will concur in that reduction then we may expect a bill before we adjourn reducing the taxes of the people of the country $20,000,000. Concur in the appropriation bills as the House passes them, and let us see if we do not get a reduction of taxation to that amount. The House, of course, cannot send a bill here reducing the taxes until they see what a republican Senate will do with the appropriation bills.

Mr. WINDOM. Would the Senator like to have me give a specimen of those reductions?

Mr. OGLESBY. I want to see a statement of those reductions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield?

Mr. MERRIMON. Two gentlemen want to put questions. I do not know to which Senator I am to yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator yield to the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM?]

Mr. MERRIMON. I am obliged to yield.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is not fair. I asked the Senator to yield to me first.

Mr. MERRIMON. If anybody is going to misconstrue my motives, I will not consent to yield to anybody.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Go on; there will be time enough by and by.

Mr. MERRIMON. My purpose in rising was not to go into a general discussion. I am not prepared to do it now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is evident.

Mr. MERRIMON. If I should take time and belabor the subject and study it as the Senator from Vermont has done, I would make many points that he would fail to meet, as he has failed to do to-day, the points I made the other day; he would make another speech based on the war! I have simply endeavored in the course of a hasty running debate to correct some misrepresentations and to restate two points, which seem to have given Senators on the other side so much trouble ever since. I believe every day since I spoke first in this debate Senators have been endeavoring in one way or another to get rid of two rather troublesome points made against their party. If I have the opportunity I can make the argument tenfold stronger, and the time will come before the November election when I will do it.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I want to ask the Senator for a piece of information.

Mr. MERRIMON. I do not think I can yield to my friend from New Jersey.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. All I want to know is this: My friend told the country and told me that the expenditures of the Government for 1875 were $682,000,000. Is that correct?

Mr. MERRIMON. No, sir; I did not say that at all.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. You certainly said so.

Mr. MERRIMON. No, sir; I did not say so, nor anything like it.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. And that the report of the Secretary of the Treasury proved it.

Mr. MERRIMON. I said that the net expenditures of the Government were $171,529,848.27; and I said that that was nearly three times as much as the administration of the Government cost in 1860, when the population has increased less than ten million; and I called upon the Senator from New Jersey and the Senator from Louisiana and all the republican Senators to explain to the American people how that happened. Let them do so, if they can, here or elsewhere.

Mr. WEST. As the Senator has alluded to the Senator from Louisiana, will he allow me to say a word to him, being what I wished to say to him a few moments ago?

Mr. MERRIMON. When I get through I will yield. There seems to be a persistent purpose on the part of a number of Senators, if possible, to divert me from the line of discussion I am pursuing and interject speeches of all sorts and character into my remarks. I am sure I did not interrupt any Senator in that way.

I was going to say that I did not expect or care to engage further in this debate and I rose this evening, after what the Senator from Vermont had said to-day, simply to restate the points I had made and to cite some figures from the record which happened to be convenient, which add weight to what I said on the former occasion. Whatever they may say about these two tables excepted to, no Senator upon that side has yet shown that they are substantially wrong. I repeat, no Senator has shown that either of those two tables is substantially wrong. Outside of and apart from those tables I desire to cite these figures from the record in order to show that the data upon which I rely for the points I made the other day are true as taken from the records, and I beg Senators, when they come to comment upon the positions I took the other day, to come up to the point and to meet the facts. When they shall do so successfully the country will be better satisfied than they will be with fiery declamation about the war and its horrors. The war is over; the people now want peace and faithful, honest, wholesome, government.

Mr. WEST. I want here to interpose and call the attention of the Senator and the Senate to some of the facts in connection with these tables. Whether the Senator from North Carolina said so or not, certainly the Senator from New Jersey so understood him, and certainly I so understood him, that the gross expenditures of this Government in the year 1875 were $682,000,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator said so.

Mr. WEST. That point was immediately answered by the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] who called the attention of the Senator from North Carolina to the fact that in the very next column of figures $407,000,000 of that amount was accounted for in the changes in the public debt. I want to call the Senator's attention also to this column of net ordinary expenditures, as they are called and rendered in the Treasury book-keeping. They are no criterion whatever of the expenses of the Government. They are the disbursements out of the Treasury of the United States for any and all purposes and are obliged by law to be stated as expenditures. If the Senator will recur to the foot-note under that table, he will see one very prominent and marked instance, and that is the case where the money invested by the United States for the benefit of the Alabama claims claimants to the extent of $15,500,000 is charged as an expenditure of the Government. This sum of $682,000,000 is the disbursement out of the Treasury of the United States. It has nothing to do with the expenditures whatever or the cost of the Government.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from North Carolina made a statement so extravagant and so wild upon this floor that when he made it it excited my surprise and perhaps rather an undue heat in reply to it; but here the figures are before me in black and white. I wish to point out to the sober sense of candid men in regard to this whisky tax, for that is all I shall refer to, the ample and full explanation given by official documents of the discrepancy between what it is alleged we ought to have collected and what was really collected. The Senator commenced by assuming an entirely erroneous estimate of facts; I do not care how it is called.

Mr. MERRIMON. I gave the estimate made by Mr. Fessenden.

Mr. SHERMAN. It was made casually by Mr. Fessenden. If you will show me the language of Mr. Fessenden I can explain it. I cannot find it. Here is his annual report as Secretary of the Treasury, and it is not in it. I will read from the speech of the Senator from North Carolina:

> According to a statement which I have before me giving the amount of internal revenue raised from distilled spirits from the year 1863 to the year 1875, the aggregate number of gallons upon which the Government received revenue was 616,890,390. The number of gallons that ought to have been accounted for in that time is 13,000,000,000, according to the estimate made by the late Mr. Fessenden (then Secretary of the Treasury) in 1864.

Mr. Secretary Fessenden never made such an estimate. He died long before the expiration of the time that this estimate covers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is probably their reason for supposing he made the estimate!

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from North Carolina commenced by saying that Mr. Fessenden stated we should have collected taxes on this large amount:

> The number of gallons that ought to have been accounted for in that time is 13,000,000,000, according to the estimate made by the late Mr. Fessenden (then Secretary of the Treasury) in 1864.

That is, that Mr. Fessenden made an estimate that there was manufactured in this country from 1863 to 1875 13,000,000,000 gallons. Mr. Fessenden, unfortunately for the country, died in 1870.

Mr. MERRIMON. What I meant——

Mr. SHERMAN. I know what the Senator meant. I take what he stated as his data. In the first place, the whole basis for this computation alleged to have been made by Mr. Fessenden was a remark made by him either in debate here on the floor or in his report as Secretary of the Treasury. It was not made in his report as Secretary of the Treasury, because I have looked over that report. He would not have made it there, but in some speech he said that in 1860 we manufactured in this country 100,000,000 gallons, as shown by the census. This was a casual statement, such as we often make; just as my friend said the gross expenses of the Government for 1875 were $682,000,000. But Mr. Fessenden was mistaken, because when you look at the census returns it is different. I have here the census returns of 1850, and they show that the entire amount, the highest amount that was ever estimated to be made in this country—not what was actually manufactured, but what was estimated to be made in this country—was 90,412,581 gallons, which it is said was made in 1860. Here is a falling off of 10,000,000 gallons to commence with; but that was not all. When this number of gallons was made, whisky was worth in Missouri and Illinois about fifteen or sixteen cents a gallon. It was largely consumed. Nearly one-third of the whole whisky was consumed for what was called burning-fluid, and the rest was made into alcohol at a very cheap rate and exported. This is shown by the official document that I have before me, and which is no less a document than Mr. Wells's report made to Congress, a gentleman who is an acknowledged authority upon this question.

Mr. LOGAN. A recent democratic candidate for Congress.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know that he was a democratic candidate for Congress in Connecticut a short time ago. At all events he is a gentleman of character. Mr. Wells gives a statement of the former production of whisky and shows how rapidly it has fallen off, and then he says:

> Since 1860, when the foregoing returns of the Census Office were made, a very large reduction in the distillation and consumption of distilled spirits in the United States has taken place. The first, and undoubtedly the largest, element in such reduction has been the disuse of alcohol for the preparation of burning-fluid, which is commercially prepared by mixing one gallon of rectified spirits of turpentine (camphene) with from four to five gallons of alcohol. Each gallon of alcohol thus used requires 1.88 gallons of proof spirits, by which is to be understood a mixture of about 50 per cent. alcohol and 50 per cent. water.
>
> For some time previous to the year 1861 the use of burning-fluid in the United States as an illuminating agent, in places where coal gas was not available, was almost universal. Its price from 1856 to 1861 ranged from forty-five to sixty-five cents per gallon.
>
> It would appear, by the investigations made into this subject by the commission, that the amount of alcohol converted into burning-fluid by mixing with rectified spirits of turpentine, (camphene,) and consumed during the year 1860, could not have been less than 12,000,000 gallons, which must have necessitated the use of upward of 19,000,000 gallons of proof spirits. At the South and West, however, large quantities of burning-fluid were prepared by mixing the alcohol directly with the crude or commercial spirits of turpentine, without subjecting the latter constituent to rectification; which amount being allowed for would probably increase the figures above given by one-third, and make the total consumption of alcohol, for the preparation of burning fluid in the country, during 1860, 16,000,000 gallons, requiring over 25,000,000 gallons of proof spirits.

Here are 25,000,000 gallons gone, because in 1861 petroleum became the substitute for burning-fluid. Thus 25,000,000 gallons disappeared at once from the consumption of the country and the amount was reduced from 90,000,000 to 65,000,000 gallons, instead of 100,000,000 gallons, as the Senator assumes.

Mr. MERRIMON. Allow me to ask the Senator one question.

Mr. SHERMAN. No; I want to get through with this explanation because I am now reading from documents.

> Since 1862 the production and consumption of burning fluid in the United States have almost entirely ceased, and its price on the 1st of September, 1865, was reported to the commission as about $4 per gallon. This result may be attributed mainly to the discovery of petroleum, and the use of its cheaper and less dangerous derivatives for illuminating purposes, and partially to the high price of spirits of turpentine in consequence of the rebellion, this article having advanced from forty-seven cents per gallon in 1860 to $2.15 per gallon at the close of 1864. With a return of spirits of turpentine to its former price and a reduction of the tax on distilled spirits, it is the opinion of dealers most conversant with the trade that a partial revival of business of manufacturing burning fluid may be expected.

But the truth is that by reason of the great cheapness of petroleum, all this burning fluid, even from turpentine, is now superseded by the petroleum. This reduces the enormous estimate of the Senator down to 65,000,000 gallons. But I have here also the statement made by the same distinguished source, together with his associates of the revenue commission, showing that in 1866 by this and other causes stated in the report the production of whisky in this country had been reduced to 40,000,000 gallons on account of the tax being put upon it, and for this reason among other causes these commissioners recommend the reduction of the tax on whisky.

Let us go back again for a moment to the statement of the Senator from North Carolina and see if such an exaggeration would not excite surprise in a person who wished to get at the facts. I will read again what the Senator said:

> In that year he said in his report, in making his estimates on the subject of the internal revenues, that the number of gallons distilled was equal to about one hundred millions per annum—

I should like him to furnish me the authority. I cannot find it in Mr. Fessenden's report certainly. I have the report, and I have given it to the Senator, and I should like him to find the authority—> and if that amount of spirits was distilled in 1864 it is reasonable to estimate that after peace returned, and when the industries of the country had been in some measure renewed, the number of gallons produced annually would increase; but for the sake of certainty and fairness I take it that the annual production of spirits in this country since 1864, and anterior to that time as far back as 1863, was equal to 100,000,000 gallons per annum,

In the first place, I show that the whole basis has dropped out of this estimate; first, that in 1860 only 90,000,000 gallons were produced; next, that in 1861 the amount fell off to 65,000,000 gallons by the authentic report of your commission, and that the following year by the same statement and report the amount fell down to 40,000,000 gallons.

Mr. MERRIMON. Will the Senator say that there is a less quantity of spirits distilled in this country now than in 1860?

Mr. SHERMAN. I am not saying a word about that now; I am coming to that. The Senator confuses dates. I say that in 1864 the official report of these commissioners certifies and shows that the amount produced in this country was not over forty millions of gallons, and they thought that was an overestimate, and that in 1863 and 1862 it could not have exceeded sixty-five millions, and the reasons were given for this estimate. Now take up the Senator's figures made up on this false assumption, first upon a statement that I do not find in Mr. Secretary Fessenden's report:

Mr. MERRIMON. But you admit he did say it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I admit he said in some speech that the amount produced in 1860 was one hundred millions, but that was not correct. But the Senator, instead of taking official data and looking at the census report himself, takes an ad captandum remark made by a Senator as the authentic basis for a remark that would sink the whole republican party into infamy if it were true. Upon this false basis he goes on and makes this arraignment of the republican party which I say would cover them with infamy if it were true:

> If that is correct, I repeat the number of gallons that ought to have been made from 1863 to 1874 was 13,000,000,000 of gallons. In the years 1865, 1866, 1867, and 1868 the tax on spirits was $2 a gallon. This ought to have yielded $8,000,000,000 in those years. Now hear the fact, and a material one, that only $104,000,000 were realized; so the loss to the Government pending that time was $896,000,000! I ask the Senator from Indiana and I ask the Senator from Ohio, who propounded their questions with such an air of triumph a while ago, where did that money go to; into whose pockets did that go? It went into the pockets of those who collected the revenue and those who controlled the revenue; it went into ten thousand avenues to corrupt and demoralize and impoverish the country and prostrate the industries of the country, and to bring about the present state of general public distress and suffering.

Thus the Senator upon the basis of a single error of his own, upon, first, a false quotation, and next a false estimate, and next a false computation, makes a charge against a political party that it had squandered, put in its pockets and scattered among its leaders as an agency of corruption $695,000,000. The Senator may think that that is a good stump argument; it is not a senatorial argument, for nobody believes that this money was ever collected; it has never gone into the hands of anybody or ever corrupted anybody, except so far as distillers and others engaged in the manufacture of whisky may have been able to steal and rob, and perhaps a few store-keepers and other officers may have been able to evade the law in collusion with them.

But let us go further. Take the Senator's own figures now. He quotes from a table which I suppose is correct; I have not stopped to verify it. He shows that in 1863 the number of gallons of whisky on which the tax was paid was 16,149,954. That was when the tax was twenty cents a gallon, and I have no doubt that probably represents all that was made during that year, because Senators must remember, those who were here at the time will remember very well, that when it was first proposed to put a tax upon whisky every distiller in this land went to work to make as much as he could continuously; the distilleries were run to the very utmost extent of their capacity in order to bring into the market unpaid whisky as they had a right to do. It was a part of their business. The result was that at the time our tax law took effect there was supposed to be on hand one or two years' supply. Whether that be so or not, it is difficult to tell; but at any rate for nearly a year after the tax of twenty cents took effect there was very little whisky manufactured in this country. The amount on hand filled the channels of consumption. I, among others, endeavored to put a tax upon the spirits on hand, but we found ourselves opposed by a large majority of both Houses of Congress and could not do it, on the ground that it was difficult to trace this whisky. The fact was that before the tax took effect probably 100,000,000 gallons had been manufactured and put on the market. Afterward, and most unwisely, there was an effort in the country—and it was voted for by a majority of both Houses of Congress against my earnest remonstrance—to raise the tax from twenty cents to $2 a gallon. I believed then that it was a most suicidal attempt, but the very moment that proposition was made in either House of Congress, the distillers again went to work with full fury, every distillery was run to its utmost capacity, and in a single year they ran up the manufacture of whisky in this country at a tax of twenty cents a gallon to 85,295,393 gallons in 1864. They pushed it to the utmost extremity, and they had nearly a year at their utmost capacity to run up this whisky, and it was said the distilleries were running day and night; distilleries were built merely for the purpose of availing themselves of the opportunity. My friend from Missouri [Mr. BOGY] I have no doubt is familiar with the history of the western country. Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois started in this business with great fervor and fury in order to evade the two-dollar tax. They ran into market in less than a single year 85,000,000 gallons and paid the tax of twenty cents a gallon on it, and what was the result? The channels were filled. The uses of whisky had been somewhat varied; the consumption had fallen off largely. The tax was so high at $2 a gallon that it made the price $2.50 a gallon. Its uses fell off and from and after the taking effect of that tax of $2 a gallon there was very little whisky, comparatively, manufactured in this country. These commissioners estimate the amount at thirty to forty million gallons manufactured after that time; but unhappily this was accomplished in 1865 when the $2 a gallon tax took effect just about contemporaneous with the coming in of Andrew Johnson, and the controversies which arose between the then President and the Senate, the republican party and the democratic party, as to who was responsible for Mr. Johnson.

The tax itself was unwise, and attempting to levy a two-dollar tax the republicans ought to take their full share of the responsibility, but I believe that every democrat in either House voted for it. It was not a party matter. It was an effort on the part of the temperance people of both political parties to gain the highest possible revenue out of whisky; but it was a piece of bad political economy. We defeated ourselves. I am glad to say that I voted against it, and I always have opposed these sudden and outrageous changes of our revenue laws. The result was to force the product of whisky before the two-dollar tax took effect to so great an extent that the channels of consumption were full, and for two or three years after that we raised scarcely anything. We did the same thing last year with partially the same effects, though I tried to defeat it. In 1865 the number of gallons of distilled spirits under the dollar tax had fallen to 16,958,845; in 1866 to 14,847,943; in 1867 to 14,588,739; in 1868, the last year of Johnson's administration, to 7,224,808 gallons. Thus, first by the operation of a bad law, and next by the operation of the political controversies that led to bad men being employed for the collection of the revenue, the whisky tax fell down until there was one year only $14,000,000 received from it.

Mr. President, the idea that any one should come in now and insist or claim as a political argument to be used on the stump, not here, that during those four years when Andrew Johnson could only collect a tax on seven million gallons there were one hundred million gallons of whisky made each year and that the republican party collected the tax on one hundred million gallons and used all except the $14,000,000 collected as a corruption fund, is so strange, so extravagant, so wrong, that in a deliberative body like this it seems to me such a suggestion ought not to be made. Sir, it does seem to me that when one knows the facts as they are, to use such an argument before the people so as to mislead them into a gross and erroneous idea of a state of corruption that does not exist except in the imagination, is wrong.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Will the Senator allow me one question?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I understand the Senator from Ohio to say that during the administration of Mr. Johnson in one year there were only about seven million gallons produced. I think the Senator means to say that is the amount on which revenue was paid.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I want to know whether in that year and subsequent years there was not a vast amount of illicit whisky distilled upon which there was no revenue collected?

Mr. SHERMAN. Undoubtedly; and here is this report of the Revenue Commissioner made in 1867 calling attention to it, and it became so gross and glaring that it led Congress to repeal that act and to retrace its steps. There were wholesale frauds committed in Mr. Johnson's administration.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I want to ask the Senator this question, to be honestly answered, whether if the revenue officers during that period had performed their duty and those charged with the administration of the Government had discharged their duty, could that illicit whisky have been manufactured and put upon the market?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not believe in a broad country like ours, with every opportunity to evade the laws, with mountains and streams and sparsely populated all over, it is in the power of man to collect a tax of $2 a gallon on whisky. The cost of manufacturing whisky is only sixteen cents. I appeal to my friend from Delaware now to answer me in honesty when I ask him whether, if there is any responsibility for the failure to collect the revenue in those memorable years, it is not shared by both political parties, because Johnson sent us only men who belonged to his political faith, and we only confirmed the best that we could get from him?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will answer honestly the inquiry. In the first place, I disclaim what has been attempted to be made here in argument the impression on the country, that the administration of Andrew Johnson was a democratic administration; but even if it had been a democratic administration the history of the country shows that the republican Congress changed the law and would not permit Mr. Johnson to turn out at his pleasure the revenue officers and other officers that he had the appointment of, and that he could only make appointments by the consent of the republican Senate. If there was any failure to have proper revenue officers it was not the fault of Mr. Johnson, but the fault of those who controlled his action by their legislation.

Mr. SHERMAN. I can divide with my friend even on his own argument. The tenure-of-office act, which he thinks transferred the responsibility from Andrew Johnson to the republicans, was not passed till nearly two years after Johnson was President.

Mr. STEVENSON. Johnson was a republican those two years, any how.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is it not ridiculous in the Senate of the United States to have this matter discussed as a question of responsibility for the loss of this whisky revenue when no human power could collect? It was a wrong law, sustained by both political parties, endeavored to be enforced at a time when from the nature of things and the political controversies that existed it was impossible to collect it. Therefore I know, without asking the answer of my honorable friend, that he would not make this broad, sweeping charge against the republican party for the corrupt use of $696,000,000.

Let us go further, Mr. President. The result was that in 1868–'69 at the last session of Congress during Mr. Johnson's administration Congress undertook to correct this evil and reduce the tax to fifty cents, and from that time until the last two or three years the tax on whisky has been collected as closely as any tax levied by the Government of the United States. That is the judgment of the officers.

Mr. MERRIMON. Why, look at the prosecutions all over the country!

Mr. SHERMAN. I say that until the last three years the tax has been collected regularly, and the tax has been collected on more gallons of whisky, with a gradual increase of the number of gallons, than was estimated by the revenue commission which sat in 1869. The very table produced by the Senator from North Carolina will show that since the time General Grant became President of the United States, from 7,000,000 gallons which paid the tax the preceding year under Johnson's administration, it sprang up in 1869, the first year after we put in effect the new fifty-cent law, to 62,926,416 gallons; the next year after that to 78,490,198 gallons, and that year was the year that we changed and tampered with to some extent the fifty-cent law, by putting on the complicated barrel-tax and some other taxes. Under this new complication, or change, or enlargement of the tax, the number of gallons which paid tax was reduced. The next year it fell to 62,214,000; the next year after that, 1872, to 66,285,000; the next year after that to 65,603,000; the next year after that, 1874, there was a falling off to 62,000,000. From the commencement of Grant's administration until 1873 the whisky tax, I repeat, and I can fortify it by official testimony of the highest character, was collected as closely and regularly as any tax imposed by the Government of the United States; and the only evasion of that tax was in those sparsely populated Southern and Northern States where whisky could be made in the mountains and on the streams beyond the reach of the ordinary revenue officers, and where it was necessary to carry the military in order to enforce the collection of the revenue.

Then unwisely, as I again repeat, we tampered with this whisky tax, and raised it, and the result was that we threw into the pockets of men who held whisky large sums of money and we lost revenue. And the result of this increase of the tax, and of every increase of the tax beyond a reasonable limit, or beyond that limit which experience shows to be the one best adapted for revenue, is wrong, and reduces the revenue instead of increasing it. Therefore, since 1873 the amount has not been so large, and this is probably due also to a falling off in consumption caused somewhat by hard times, because although that circumstance affects whisky less probably than anything else, for people will have their grog anyway, yet it does affect it to some extent by taking away from them the ability to buy their grog; but last year the tax-paid whisky had risen again somewhat, to 64,425,912 gallons. What it is this year I do not know.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the Senator let me ask him a question?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEVENSON. I should like to know how much the Government lost by these late robberies by these rings in various cities, Saint Louis, Milwaukee, and so on?

Mr. SHERMAN. I cannot tell.

Mr. STEVENSON. What is the estimate of the Treasury Department as to the loss of the Government arising from these robberies?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know. I do not know that there is any basis for an estimate; and I here desire to say that, so far as they are concerned, all these whisky thieves, the men who endeavor to evade taxes, I am very glad to see them punished and glad to see them pushed to the extreme.

Mr. STEVENSON. Does not my friend know that some of those appointments were protested against as unworthy and incompetent to the President himself when they were made?

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Kentucky, with more discretion than the Senator from North Carolina, wants to change the issue as to whether sometimes bad appointments were not made; but the Senator from North Carolina charged us with $696,000,000 wasted and squandered, and put in the pockets of politicians in four years and scattered around as a corruption fund.

Mr. MERRIMON. No, Mr. President, I do not think that is fair.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is the statement.

Mr. MERRIMON. I laid down certain premises and deduced an argument from them.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Ohio is commenting on the falling off of the whisky tax for 1874 and 1875, but he does not take into consideration one element that had considerable to do with it. The question of the change of the whisky tax was pending here some six months, and every distillery was run night and day for six months in anticipation of that change of the tax. The necessary consequence was that the statistics that year would be greatly swollen and the next year greatly fall off.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is true, and that operated just as it did at the time when the tax was raised to $2. It appears that one year, in 1864, the number of gallons run up to 85,000,000 on the twenty-cent tax in anticipation of the two-dollar tax.

But I desire to say in conclusion that the statements made by the Senator from North Carolina, exaggerated as they are shown to be, entirely untenable, blown up, calculated to mislead and deceive the people and convince them of a state of corruption that does not exist, are answered by the simple facts I have presented taken from his own speech in great degree. There is no desire, I am sure, on the part of the republican party, there can be no motive on the part of the republican party to see a falling off of the revenue or to see corruption and abuses in the collection of the whisky tax. Why, sir, the only men who have been punished have been punished by republican administration. General Grant himself has never deviated one hair's breadth from the declaration he made "let no guilty man escape." But whether he did or not, I do not want to be drawn into a mere political issue as to whether bad appointments are sometimes made and good appointments are always made. That is one question; but as for the charge made by the Senator from North Carolina, it seems to me when explained it will only excite derision, and every fair man will see that, while there may have been here and there a loss of the whisky tax, here and there frauds and corruption in the collection of this as of other taxes, the charge as made is a gross exaggeration, tends to mislead and deceive the people, and does not do justice to them or give them an opportunity to judge fairly of the facts that are submitted to them.

Mr. MERRIMON. Now, Mr. President, I wish simply to point out how unfair, in my judgment, the Senator from Ohio is. I made arguments. I took certain data; I pointed out to the Senate where I got those data, explained it fully, and then made certain deductions from them. Every man who reads my speech will see that I got at the data just in that way; and notwithstanding what the Senator says this evening, and we have for the most part his simple opinion about it, I think that he is very greatly mistaken about the amount of spirits distilled in this country.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have read the report.

Mr. MERRIMON. Here are the returns of the Internal-Revenue Office one year eighty-five million gallons.

Mr. SHERMAN. I explained that.

Mr. MERRIMON. Yes, you explained that in one part of your speech, and you go on covering it up in another.

Mr. SHERMAN. I say that during that year, tempted by the near approach of the two-dollar tax they ran their distilleries night and day.

Mr. MERRIMON. I believe that there are all of a hundred million gallons of spirit distilled in this country annually, and even more than that. Of course what I stated was a mere estimate, but I gave the data on which that estimate was made so that nobody could be misled by it. The figures are enormous; they are startling; they are alarming, and taking half of it to be so, it is still appalling.

Mr. SAULSBURY. (At five o'clock and fifty minutes p. m.) I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope that will not be done. Let us finish the bill.

Mr. CRAGIN. I appeal to the Senator to withdraw his motion to allow me to introduce a resolution. [No! no!]

Mr. SAULSBURY. It is near six o'clock.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn. I want to see——

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is debate.

Mr. ALLISON. I merely want to say that an adjournment on this bill now——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is not debatable. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the motion to adjourn.

The yeas and nays being taken; resulted—yeas 8, nays 32, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Bogy, Booth, Hitchcock, Oglesby, Saulsbury, Sherman, and Stevenson—8.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Barnum, Boutwell, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Cockrell, Cragin, Davis, Dawes, Dennis, Frelinghuysen, Harvey, Howe, Ingalls, Kelly, Kernan, Key, Logan, McMillan, Maxey, Merrimon, Mitchell, Morrill, Norwood, Paddock, Ransom, Spencer, Wadleigh, Withers, and Wright—32.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Caperton, Clayton, Conkling, Conover, Cooper, Dorsey, Eaton, Edmunds, Ferry, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton, Hamlin, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, McCreery, McDonald, Morton, Patterson, Robertson, Sargent, Sharon, Thurman, Wallace, West, Whyte, and Windom—32.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am not going to make a speech; but I am going to ask my honorable friend from North Carolina, who stated that my statements respecting what made up what he calls the net ordinary expenses of the Government did not include the items to which I referred directly referable to the rebellion, to turn to pages 16 and 17 of the report of the Secretary of the Treasury for this present session. There he will find the items for the War Department for the years 1865, 1866, 1867, 1868, 1869, 1870, 1871, 1872, 1873, 1874, and 1875, and for the Navy Department for the same years, for the Indians for the same years, for pensions, to which I did not allude, amounting to $30,000,000 each year in round numbers.

Mr. MERRIMON. The Senator misunderstood me; I did not say that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator will be good enough now, as he told me, to wait until I can make some consecutive statement of figures that possibly if he will look at he will understand, he will oblige me. And then there are the miscellaneous expenditures. These five heads are there given, and then comes a table of the ordinary net expenditures, not his table, but a table which the Senator will find on page 16 and page 17 of Executive Document No. 2 of the Forty-fourth Congress, first session, now here. Instead of my being mistaken in respect of what items went to swell these aggregates, if the Senator will only be good enough to look at it himself and not take any member of any other body in any other place for his authority, he will see that I was perfectly correct in every particular. The only want of correctness that my observations had in respect of these expenditures was that I only stated the leading items, for I would not weary the patience of the Senate by going through them. This shows, if there is any value at all in statements of expenditures made officially to Congress, and not in speeches, the book being here, that wherever there has been an increase of expense, it has been directly referable to the unhappy causes to which I alluded, and the charge of the Senator was that that was extravagance in the republican party.

Mr. MERRIMON. I do not care to continue the controversy this evening. There may be an opportunity on another occasion. I am anxious for a vote.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope there will be another occasion, for I have a good deal more to say.

Mr. NORWOOD. I move to lay on the table the motion to recommit the bill.

Mr. MORRILL. Would not that carry the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That motion would carry the bill.

Mr. STEVENSON. I hope the Senator will withdraw the motion.

Mr. NORWOOD. Does the Chair rule that the effect of my motion would carry the bill to the table if it should prevail?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks that would be the effect.

Mr. MERRIMON. A motion to lay on the table in case of an appropriation bill does not take the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Why not vote directly on the question?

Mr. NORWOOD. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. STEVENSON. I shall vote for the recommittal of this bill as proposed by the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN.]

I shall do so for two reasons: First, because the bill contains large appropriations to objects purely local, exclusively within the cognizance of the States, and forbidden in my judgment by the Constitution of the United States; second, in this hour of monetary depression, when the Treasury is depleted, and the people are threatened with increased taxation, I deem it impolitic to appropriate one dollar more to works of internal improvement already commenced than is absolutely demanded; and, as to works not commenced, I think their construction should be postponed to a more convenient season. I understood the Senator who has this bill in charge, [Mr. ALLISON] unequivocally to say, that the House bill contains many large appropriations to works already commenced, which the engineers having them in charge report can be reduced without detriment to the public service. If this be true, expediency and economy alike demand that such reductions should be at once made. I do not intend to be drawn into any discussion of the political issues of the presidential campaign upon which we have just entered. Such a debate belongs more appropriately to the hustings than to the Senate Chamber. But I must be pardoned for saying, that the country will demand, and has a right to expect, retrenchment and reform from all parties, and especially an economical reduction of the annual expenditures of the Government. That is the surest way to reduce taxation. Economize by lessening appropriations, and what remains of the annual revenue received each year from taxation will go to a reduction of the public debt. With its diminution come lower taxes.

I will not say, after the reprimand the other day of the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MORTON,] that "the wolf is at the door, and that the Government is threatened with bankruptcy," words charged by him to have been improperly used in some late impromptu speech by the democratic candidate for President, Mr. Tilden, and which seemed somewhat to stir up the ire of that Senator. But really, as it seems to me, there was no occasion for it. The words, if used at all, were used figuratively, to denote the disordered and depressed condition of our public affairs and the oppression of the people under onerous Federal taxation. It was a very pardonable and usual license of clear, strong illustration; one which Mr. Clay in former times often indulged in, when arraigning his political opponents for mistakes and maladministration of our public affairs. He would often declare: "We are in the midst of a revolution, bloodless as yet." The people are groaning under political misrule greater than "war, pestilence, or famine." Mr. Tilden, doubtless, never supposed that in resorting to similar figurative illustration, he would subject himself to so sharp and personal a criticism as that indulged in by the Senator from Indiana upon him for an innocent play upon words.

No one can deny, Mr. President, that, whatever republican speakers may say about the material wealth of our country, and the inexhaustible character of its resources, it is self-evident that the present monetary and industrial condition of the whole country is deplorable. Its business energies paralyzed; its currency disordered; the national credit abroad depressed; the future uncertain; and the people groaning under the burdens of an oppressive, frightful, and ruinous taxation. This is what Mr. Tilden intended to portray; nor is the picture overdrawn. I am informed that the business failures of 1875 amounted to seventy-seven hundred and forty, and during the first three months of this year exceeded twenty-eight hundred, with aggregate liabilities in that period exceeding $264,674,000. Public confidence is shaken, business is disturbed, and bankruptcies overwhelm the land.

No matter, then, to what source these evils are to be traced, whether to the maladminstration and mistakes of the party in power; or to any other cause, no one doubts the fact of their existence. Consequently, all legislation having for its object reduced expenditures and lower taxation, became an imperative obligation upon all political parties. Government is a trust, and all intrusted with its administration are trustees for the benefit of the people within the limitations and the exactions of the Constitution. If the pending bill, therefore, contains a solitary appropriation not clearly authorized by the Constitution, let it be stricken out. So, too, if appropriations to objects clearly constitutional are greater in amount than competent engineers in charge of them say, present necessities demand, let them all be reduced.

Like my friend from Maryland, [Mr. WHYTE,] I have been reared, Mr. President, in a political school of strict constructionists whose founders and followers have never believed that the Federal Government possessed the constitutional authority to enter upon a general system of internal improvements. I know it is a school which some democrats deride and would now discredit; still there are some of us who are not ashamed of its faith and still cherish its doctrines. We still think, that, as in the past so in the future, it may turn out that a rigid adherence to the Constitution, strictly construed, with a simple Government, honestly and economically administered, may prove the best mode of preserving free institutions.

Our fathers believed that a recurrence to fundamental principles would often prove a safeguard against dangerous political evils. My belief is, that it is because certain great principles of the Constitution have been departed from, that the Government has of late been so often in peril. We have proved our ability to preserve the unity of Government from all armed and direct assaults from without or from within. But the problem of our capacity to resist internal perils is yet to be solved. The dead empires of the past have found their graves in extravagance, luxury, idleness, and corruption. Our safety and our success, as a free constitutional Republic in the past, has been based upon the ready adherence and obedience of the people to the restraints and limitations of the Constitution imposed by them on their own power. Their willing observance of the law, and their unwillingness to overleap its barriers, under any temptation and in any emergency, has been hitherto our shining excellence.

When river and harbor bills, or other similar enactments containing immense appropriations from the Treasury of the United States to objects in every section of the country, in which the people of every State where the proposed improvement is located, are so deeply interested, are under consideration, I know how difficult it is for the representative so to read the Constitution, uninfluenced by local self-interest, as to find among its provisions a negation of power to make an appropriation to objects in his own State. This difficulty has been signally illustrated in the great conflict of opinion which has existed in the past, among the most eminent and distinguished statesmen upon the extent of constitutional power in the Federal Government to make these improvements. All agreed, in the main, that the constitutional power extended to objects national, as contradistinguished from local; to improvements of a general character, in which the whole country were interested, rather to such as were wholly within a State, local in their character and within the exclusive cognizance of State jurisdiction. But the great difficulty was, what was national and what was local? That was the precise point of conflict which has existed, and still exists.

While vetoes of river and harbor bills have often marked democratic administrations, yet it would not be difficult to find in many of the bills that have received the sanction of democratic Presidents some objects of questionable constitutional power. I know, too, and I trust I deeply appreciate, the present condition of the South, and the imperious call for necessary appropriations to improvement of their rivers and harbors, most of which are clearly within the sphere of the Constitution. Nor do I undervalue the deep interest of Southern Representatives for the passage of this bill. It makes large appropriations for improvements in the South. Here comes the test. The conflict of self-interest, with the barriers imposed by the Constitution against such a forbidden appropriation. I shall not be guilty of the ungracious task of criticising, or attempting to point out the various items of appropriations in this bill which are wholly and purely local.

No such bill as this was ever presented to a democratic President, and none such, if presented, could have received his assent. No Senator can deny, that the bill does contain appropriations to objects clearly local, and not sanctioned by the Constitution. The test of the truth of this statement which I propose is this: Let each separate object for which this bill makes an appropriation be put into a separate bill, and how many of them would pass muster either in the House or in the Senate? I put it to Senators upon this side of the Chamber to tell me, is it not a dangerous precedent for us, in an hour when we have been decrying against the usurpations and unlicensed assaults of centralized power on the constitutional rights of the States, to allow a combination of local interests in the States to blind our eyes to any open violation of the Constitution for any purpose? Why, Mr. President, there can be no cavil about the fact, that a large number of the appropriations in the House or in the Senate bill, are made to objects for which Congress has no power to appropriate the public money. And how unequal and unjust is this unauthorized distribution? The House bill contained appropriations to an amount exceeding $5,000,000, and yet I am informed that two States—neither of them very large in extent or in population—neither of them bordering on the seaboard—one an inland State—have received one-fifth of the whole sum appropriated by that bill. This is certainly a significant fact, and does not indicate the safest plane for enlightened or wise legislation. The Senate Committee on Appropriations struck out eight or nine hundred thousand dollars, I believe, of the appropriations contained in the House bill; but yet that committee substituted other objects to which they appropriated amounts greater than those contained in the House bill, increasing the sum appropriated by the House some $30,000. If I err in this statement I hope some Senator will correct me.

My honored friend the Senator from Virginia [Mr. WITHERS] is amazed that Senators who claim that the House bill was objectionable, because it contained many appropriations clearly local, and therefore unconstitutional, should have voted to non-concur with the Senate committee in striking out these objectionable items. My friend tells us, that if he should ever require a political Mentor, he would take care never to seek him from among his brother-Senators who have been guilty of such political inconsistency. Mr. President, I happen, like the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN,] to be one of the Senators who find themselves in this unfortunate category of the Senator's exclusion. Now I have no ambition whatever to be the political Mentor of any Senator, or of anybody else. I have neither the acquirement nor experience to fit me for so exalted a position; but, if I did aspire to such a distinction, I utterly deny that the fact stated by my friend from Virginia, would be any argument or proof of my disqualification to teach even him, political orthodoxy and consistency as a democrat of the old school.

There would have been great force in the suggestion of the Senator, of an alleged inconsistency on the part of these Senators who voted to non-concur in the amendments of the Senate committee—if that committee had stricken out all the appropriations to local and unconstitutional objects in the House bill, and retained only those clearly within the sphere of constitutional power. But unfortunately for my friend's logic, the Senate committee did no such thing. They struck out local appropriations from the House bill, it is true; but they put in their stead other objects even more local and more objectionable. The Senate committee increased the entire appropriation over that made by the House some $30,000. The House bill, although it contained many objects clearly unconstitutional, was preferable to the bill brought in by the Senate committee. The latter contained as many local objects, but in addition, increased the gross amount of money appriated. I voted therefore to non-concur in all the amendments of the Senate. I did so to kill both bills if possible, and if I failed in that, I preferred the House bill as containing the smaller appropriation and consequently the lesser of two evils. The Senate committee struck out a small appropriation to Rock Castle River of $2,000, and to Cumberland River, above Nashville, which had been put into the House bill. But while these appropriations were stricken out, the Senate committee put into the bill, as amended by them, a large appropriation to Elk River, in West Virginia, and another to the Little Kanawha, in the same State. If the first were local, the last were. If there was to be a general distribution of money to local objects in the States, instead of appropriating to rivers and harbors authorized by the Constitution, I desired justice should be done to Kentucky, which is among the largest tax-paying States. If local objects were stricken out in Kentucky, I desired them stricken out elsewhere, so as to have an equal and exact justice in the distribution among the States. But neither the restoration or exclusion would have secured my vote to either bill.

Mr. WITHERS. A general distribution, then, would control your ideas as to constitutional obligation?

Mr. STEVENSON. By no manner of means. I have just said that I would vote against both Senate and House bills, and the fact that they contained appropriations to local objects in Kentucky four times greater than the insignificant sums contained in the House bill would never change that vote. The fact that an appropriation is to a local object in Kentucky will never, I trust, affect the standard of my judgment upon the question of constitutional power. No appropriation to an object deemed by me outside of the Constitution, whether large or small, in Kentucky or out of Kentucky, will ever receive my sanction.

Mr. WITHERS. Then you ought not to vote for the House bill.

Mr. STEVENSON. I will never vote for it. I said I never could be induced to vote for either bill in their present shape. I am only surprised that a Senator coming from Virginia, trained in and familiar with the construction of the Constitution which made that noble old Commonwealth illustrious, from the foundation of the Government to 1860, doctrines illustrated by Jefferson, Madison, and Monroe, could have so far forgotten his early political teachings as to be willing to vote for such a bill as this, because it contains appropriations to local creeks within the confines of Virginia. I was also raised in that same Virginia school, and I may say, I cling to its doctrines of close construction and rigid adherence to all the limitations of the Constitution upon congressional or executive power with greater tenacity now than ever, as the palladium of political safety. If local combinations in bills like this shall override the constitutional barrier and inhibitions upon Congress to appropriate money except to national objects, the end will soon come.

Mr. WITHERS. I will say, with the permission of my friend, as he has expressed surprise at my position, that I received my ideas on the subject of the powers of the Government in this line from a distinguished Kentuckian, who, although he was born in Virginia, made his reputation as a statesman of Kentucky. At his feet I was brought up in my political faith. He had no such scruples of conscience about appropriations for improvements.

Mr. STEVENSON. No one respects more than I do the fame of that distinguished Virginian who has rendered illustrious the Commonwealth which I in part represent in this Chamber. I never agreed with him in political opinion.

Mr. WITHERS. I did.

Mr. STEVENSON. I looked, as I said, to Jefferson, to Madison, and Jackson as my mentors, and believed with them in a closer construction of the Constitution than Henry Clay did; but my friend, the Senator from Virginia, can never find shelter under Mr. Clay for the support of any such bill as this. Never, sir; never! I went over his record upon that subject this morning, and I defy the Senator to show that Mr. Clay ever advocated a bill with appropriations like those which we are called upon on this occasion to sanction by our votes.

The distinguished statesman to whom my friend has referred was a liberal constructionist. He believed in appropriations to our harbors, on salt water or fresh, on the lakes or on the oceans. He favored liberal aid to the Mississippi and all its tributaries, the Ohio, the Arkansas, the Missouri, the Red, and the White, indeed to all objects of a general and national character. I have no doubt he would have supported the Pacific railways, as he did the Cumberland road, but nowhere can his vote be found for objects such as are contained in this bill. At least such is my opinion, and I think I would vouch the record in support of my statement.

I hope this bill will be recommitted and that the committee will reduce the appropriations to objects that are clearly national. While I am a Kentucky Senator, charged with the protection of her interest and honor, I do not forget that I am also a Senator of the United States. I shall vote liberal sums to our harbors North and South, to our lakes and to our great highways and national thoroughfares. I include those made for our rivers like Cape Fear, which empties into the ocean and which is a harbor of incalculable value. So of many others of like character. As was said by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. EATON] the other day about the removal of obstructions at Hell Gate, near New York, which when accomplished would shorten the voyage from New York to Liverpool three hundred miles, what State in the confederacy is not interested in and would not be benefited by that improvement?

But in all these appropriations I must look to the limitations of the Constitution. I have no other guide. In the faithful observance of its sanction is our safety. Let not appropriations in the several States beguile representatives into the support of appropriations not warranted by the organic law. Madison, Monroe, Jackson, Polk, and Pierce all vetoed measures like this, but containing no such objectionable objects as the pending bill. All these vetoes rested upon the invasion of the sovereignty of the States, which appropriations by the Federal Government to objects clearly local, and wholly within the domain and cognizance of the State, would invariably inaugurate. If this measure pass, it is the opening-wedge to unlimited appropriations under this head as our country expands and the applications for appropriations to local objects increase. Such legislation, if continued, must ultimately beggar the people. It is six millions to-day, it may be twelve next year, and twenty a few years hereafter. There is no limit. If States are to be seduced into the support of bills like this because objects within their territorial limits receive large appropriations, then States may combine and disregard all limitations of the Constitution.

If objects contained in this bill be constitutional, I am unable to perceive any limit to which the power of appropriations may not be carried. Increased taxation, higher protective tariffs, and corrupt legislation must be the legitimate fruits of such a policy. The States will become mere stipendiaries of the Federal Government, mere playthings of its unlimited appropriations. It was but a few years since, that Congress was asked to charter an Ohio company to construct a railroad across the domain of Kentucky, against the consent of the State, from Cincinnati to Chattanooga, in Tennessee, with no guards, or only such as Congress might be pleased to put into the act of incorporation. The proposed legislation was resisted and failed to become a law. Kentucky, through her Legislature, has since granted a charter, under proper guards and restrictions, and the road is being rapidly constructed.

So, too, a similar effort was made to obtain from Congress a charter to build a railroad from Washington to New York without the consent of the States to be traversed; but Maryland, Delaware, and, I believe, New Jersey opposed it, and it failed. Let us leave local improvements to the States. What is to become of their sovereignty if the Federal Government possesses the power to appropriate money to any and to all local objects wholly within State cognizance? The Federal Government acquires exclusive jurisdiction whenever it constructs improvements and appropriates the public money! Where will the Federal power end? What State will be exempt from its influence, if improvements are to be carried on without stint on the scale contemplated by this bill? I have been surprised to hear during this debate certain powers claimed, and certain doctrines announced by Senators on the other side of the Chamber. The power to make these appropriations is asserted to exist under the common-defense-and-general-welfare clause of the Constitution; and we have heard the statement, that, if the Government were to-day to appropriate twenty millions to these improvements, it would have a good influence in stimulating industry and production, and in giving employment to labor. This is not and never can be the doctrine of reformers!

It would be retrenchment, economy, and reform with a vengeance! If Senators on this side of the Chamber mean to aid in the correction of existing abuses; if they intend to reduce extravagant expenditures of the public money; if they are in earnest in one common effort to take away incentives to public profligacy, I entreat them to recommit this bill.

The country is in no condition now, to enter into such a general scheme of improvements of rivers and harbors as is here proposed. Whatever Senators may say, and whatever peans they may sing, as to the inexhaustible resources of this country, the masses of the people, irrespective of party, crushed beneath the load of oppressive taxation, have felt personally the pressure, and are determined upon a simpler, more honest, and more economical administration of public affairs.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I rather enjoy this wrangle between the representatives of the democracy of Kentucky and Virginia; but I do not rise to participate particularly in the points discussed by the Senator from Kentucky, except some portions of the foremost part of his address this evening. He has referred to the extreme distress that pervades all parts of the Union in relation to all branches of industry, and also to the numerous bankruptcies that have occurred the past year. I want to repel the idea that this country has been brought to the extreme of bankruptcy or is in any position where we cannot make such appropriations as are just and proper for the support of the Government.

As I understand it from the latest estimates of the Treasury Department we shall have revenue sufficient to defray all the ordinary expenses of the Government, all the interest of the public debt, and yet have a sinking fund sufficient to pay 1 per cent. upon the public debt, which amounts to something over $30,000,000 a year; and by the bills, as presented here by the Senate Appropriation Committee, the appropriations will be upward of $20,000,000 less than the estimates; showing conclusively that we shall have at least $50,000,000 to devote to the payment of the public debt the present year unless the House has already sent or shall send here extraordinary appropriation bills that we shall be forced to agree with, which shall increase the expenditures of the Government.

Now, let me say a word in relation to the general prosperity of the country. Take the agricultural interest. I assert, without fear of contradiction, that never for a quarter of a century has the agricultural interest, taking the whole country together, been in as prosperous a condition as at the present moment. Not in a single State will you find any staple crop that is cut off, but in almost all there is an average or an excess.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Will the Senator allow me to ask a question?

Mr. MORRILL. I only propose to speak for a few moments, and do not desire to be interrupted.

There is no grasshopper plague; there is no drought or anything that has brought general distress on the agricultural community in any portion of our country. The only distress that exists is in the mercantile, manufacturing, and the mining interests; and what is the cause of that? Simply overproduction. It is not greater here to-day than it is in Great Britain; and why? We see there that the amount of cotton and wool and flax that have been manufactured has very largely increased within the last ten years, but the increase has been greater on the continent; so has it been here; and, in addition to our usual competition, the South has awakened to the idea of establishing manufactures in the South, and this year we find that, instead of the entire amount of cotton manufactures being confined to the North, perhaps the only really prosperous manufactures of cotton are located in the South, where they make regular and fat dividends, while in the North they are unable to do that in consequence of being so far away from the raw material and in consequence of not being able to employ as cheap labor. In Great Britain the same result has taken place from the fact of a 5 per cent. protective tariff upon cotton goods in India, and they have, therefore, there very largely increased their manufacture in India. So that it is competition that has caused distress among the manufacturers, both here and abroad; and I may say the same thing has taken place in relation to the iron manufacture. The surest and cheapest way of securing cheap fabrics, cheap products, is to encourage their production broadcast all over the country. To-day we find printing cotton sold for three and three-fourths cents a yard, and calicoes already printed, in some cases, for five cents a yard. Never was the time before when these fabrics were sold at so low a rate.

Now I want to deny, for one, that the country is suffering in the extremes of bankruptcy at this present moment. To be sure, with the manufacturing interests, with the mercantile interests, in the fall of prices, the great diminution in the prices of goods, a large amount of business is stopped and must stop until people begin to purchase again; but, while these facts exist, men will wear their old hats for three or four months longer and women will buy fewer silk dresses than they otherwise would.

But, Mr. President, in relation to bankruptcies, let me ask why did not the Senator from Kentucky state the whole facts in that connection? In the first quarter of this year it is very true there was a large amount of bankruptcies, but they have been steadily decreasing all the time since; so that the last three months present no discouraging feature; and I may say in relation to this that the bankruptcies across our borders in Canada are much larger than they are here. If they were to be only equal to our bankruptcies they should have been one-fifteenth part, while in point of fact they are one-sixth part of all the bankruptcies that have taken place in this country.

Then let me call attention to another and most healthful aspect in our commercial affairs. I find that the imports for the eleven months ending May 31, 1876, were $490,535,488, while for the eleven months ending May 31, 1875, they were but $426,495,382, making sixty-four millions in our favor for this year of exports. Then look at the exports for 1876. The exports for eleven months ending May 31, 1876, were $544,724,585, and in 1875 $517,417,767, leaving about $27,000,000 in excess of last year. So that whether we look at our exports we find them increasing, whether we look at our imports we find them diminishing—ninety-one millions in our favor—and when we diminish imports we not only save the amount of duties that would be paid to the Government, but we save the amount of the entire cost of the goods abroad which amounts to from sixty to seventy millions this year. Therefore, I say that the Treasury of the United States and the country is in a healthy condition and it is not to be impeached by these general tirades as to our poverty, as to our bankruptcy, or anything of the sort. I agree to economy and perhaps, so far as I am concerned, as I generally do, shall vote for the smallest sum that may be proposed. I shall, therefore, vote for any amendment that may be proposed on this appropriation bill which will reduce the amount.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Mr. President, I agree with much that has been said by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] in regard to the condition of the country, and I disagree entirely to the theory that if the condition of affairs for the moment were as unfavorable as represented by gentlemen on the other side, therefore necessary expenditures on public works should be omitted. Whatever may be the condition of affairs to-day, nothing can be more certain than that the country has in the future a career of prosperity. We have credit; we have resources; and above all we have great capacity for labor. Now, so far as public works have been undertaken, the undertaking of which was wise, it is more wise to prosecute them and prosecute them with vigor under the circumstances that exist, and if the circumstances were more unfavorable so with stronger reason ought we to prosecute these works.

The reasons are two: first, they can be now prosecuted to completion at less cost than they can be when the affairs of the country are in a more favorable condition, and, second, although I would not undertake public works, and especially those not necessary, for the purpose of giving employment to the people, yet, when public works are undertaken and when those works are necessary, there can be no higher duty resting upon a Government which has both resources in property and resources in credit than to prosecute those works to successful completion.

A government should be above the reach of panics, which necessarily affect individuals, and under unfavorable circumstances we should exhibit courage, not only because the exhibition of courage is favorable in a pecuniary point of view to the Government itself, but we set an example to people who otherwise would be lacking in courage, and they will take advantage of opportunities which in a less degree are equally favorable to their own fortunes. Now, if our friends on the other side will excuse me for the statement of a fact which occurred during the war, I will venture to make it. In the darkest days, when our enemies were pressing us at every point along the line and when from the steps of this Capitol you could hear the reverberation of the cannon across the Potomac, we voted an appropriation for the completion of this Capitol. It was notice, whether taken or not, it was notice, and it was so given to our then enemies, that we did not intend to abandon this Capitol.

Now, there are in this bill appropriations that I think are unnecessary, and to me they are very disagreeable, and I am at this moment quite in doubt whether I shall vote for the bill or vote against it; but the time is coming, if it has not now arrived, when the representatives of the people, without distinction of party, will resist appropriations for works which, whether constitutional or not, have no such national importance that they ought to be undertaken and executed at the public expense; and unquestionably there are in this bill such appropriations and similar appropriations have been made in years past. But we are all concerned in putting an end to such drains upon the Treasury which profit nothing in a large sense probably. By the States and by the people where these works are the attempt would never be made for their execution. We ought to unite and abandon this system of making appropriations in one State because men in another State want other appropriations and stand as representatives of States upon the fact. If the representatives of a State can satisfy their associates here that the works for which they ask appropriations are national works and the country is in a condition to undertake those works, let the work be undertaken. But in this bill there are appropriations for improvements which are not national, which if anything are local, and which ought never to find countenance in the Congress of the United States. What I shall do about this bill in the end I cannot say, but I am at present in favor of recommitting it in the hope that the committee will strike out all these appropriations that are not national, whether the works have been undertaken or whether they are new ones, and let us for once, if we can, pass a bill which, whether it appropriates $3,000,000 or $6,000,000, we can stand upon and say to our constituents and to the country, "These appropriations are made for important public national works that will yield a return in the facilities that will be afforded to the commerce and business of the country."

Now, Mr. President, I depart from the particular subject before the Senate for the purpose of introducing a document which I have had in my desk for many months waiting for just this occasion, a statement prepared at the Treasury with great care, showing the net expenses of the Government in the years 1800, 1810, 1820, 1830, 1840, 1850, 1860, 1870, and 1875. There is a minute and analytical comparison of the expenses of the Government in 1860 and 1875, excluding in the latter year all those expenditures which arose from the war, and there are tables containing items of the expenditures which are thus excluded, so that, if the whole shall be printed, any person who chooses to examine will have an opportunity to see whether those items classed as belonging to the war are properly so classed. This table was prepared under the direction of and by Mr. Charles F. Conant, who is now Assistant Secretary of the Treasury. His letter to me is dated at the Treasury Department, Washington, September 16, 1875. He says:

I inclose herewith tables showing the comparative expenses of the Government for the years 1875 and 1860, excluding war charges.

Mr. Conant is the responsible person for this document and upon my request made it. The total expenditures for the fiscal year 1875 were $274,623,392 84; the total expenditures for the year 1860 were $63,025,788.98. After deducting the expenditures for the year 1875 on account of the war—and there are appended to this, which I will have printed, analytical tables showing what these deductions are—the net result is that the expenditures for the year 1875 were $84,773,762.49 in currency, but the expenditures in 1860 were in gold.

Mr. Conant has deducted 12$\frac{615}{1000}$ per cent. as the premium on gold for the year 1875, leaving a net expenditure in gold for that year of $74,028,688.09. Then there are deductions made both from the expenditures of the year 1860 and of the year 1875 growing out of the method of keeping the books of the Department. Upon that point there is an analytical statement of the deductions and also a note showing the reason for them. He says:

The following items which are included in the aggregate as expenditures both for the year 1860 and 1875 are deducted from each for the reason that they are not expenditure in the true meaning of the word, as they involve no outlay of money by the Treasury and are no burden upon the tax-payers, they being merely entries on both the debit and credit side of the books (made necessary by the system of book-keeping in the Department) of moneys received from persons and subsequently returned to them or expended in their behalf, namely.

And then he gives the items in each year. After deducting the amounts thus placed to the debit and credit side of the books for the years 1860 and 1875, respectively, the result is that the expenditures for the year 1875, excluding the war expenditures, deducting the premium on gold, excluding the amounts placed to the debit and credit side of the books in the Department, were $69,856,117.77. The expenditures upon the same basis for the year 1860 were $61,402,408.64.

Mr. BOGY. By whom is the table furnished?

Mr. BOUTWELL. By Mr. Conant, the present Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. BOGY. It is not official, is it? because it states facts that cannot be official. They are absurd. The premium on gold certainly can play no part in the expenses. In 1860 gold was the only coin used, and it cannot properly be added or deducted. It plays no part. This is an individual table.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Senators will deal with the processes as they think justice requires; but Mr. Conant—and in that I concur—had deducted from the currency expenses of the year 1875 the premium on gold, so that the expenses are represented ultimately in this table as gold expenses in 1860 and gold expenses in 1875.

Mr. BOGY. The premium on gold can correctly play no part in a table of that kind. It is not correct at all. It can be neither added nor deducted; it cannot be treated as an item at all.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I desire now to call the attention of the Senate to the tables showing the expenses per capita in each of the years which I will mention.

The expenses per capita, including slaves who paid no part of the expenses of the Government directly, were in—

1800	$2.038
1810	1.171
1820	1.897
1830	1.176
1840	1.424
1850	1.766
1860	1.952
1870	1.781

In 1875, estimating the population at 40,000,000, which was the estimate of the Treasury Department, the expenses per capita were $1.746.

But, estimating the population in 1875 at 43,000,000, which is my own opinion upon the best information I can obtain, the expenses were $1.60 for each inhabitant, including those who had formerly been slaves. This table I will hand to the reporter with a request that the whole of it may be printed.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Does it contain any items which the Senator has not read?

Mr. BOUTWELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I believe the rule was applied to this side of the Chamber that it must be read, or otherwise it ought not to go into the RECORD.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well, let it be read. We cannot dispense with it.

Mr. HAMLIN. It is done every day.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I hope the Senator from Delaware will not object to these tables being printed. The tables show the items of deductions made on account of the war expenses, and are very necessary to a proper understanding of the tables themselves and also furnish the evidence by which the correctness of the estimates here made will be ascertained, either established or refuted. I should not like to withdraw them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to allowing the tables to be printed in the RECORD?

Mr. BOUTWELL. It will take a couple of hours to read them, I dare say.

Mr. BOGY. The table is the work of a gentleman who may be holding office, but it is not an official paper at all, and does not pretend to be an official paper. But taking the figures stated by the Senator from Massachusetts they would show that the expenses of the Government are now, or were in 1875, about $150,000 000. The total amount of expenses mentioned in that document, unofficial as it is, is $274,000,000, from which should be deducted fairly about $100,000,000 for the interest on the public debt; it is a little less than $100,000,000, but call it $100,000,000 in round numbers; and $30,000,000 for the pension list.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How about southern claims?

Mr. BOGY. Taking these two main items from $274,000,000, there will remain about $144,000,000, or say $150,000,000 in round numbers as the expenses of the Government other than expenses created for the Army or the Navy, or what the gentleman from Vermont has so often stated have grown out of the late unfortunate war. Nevertheless the fact remains that the expenses are about $144,000,000 or $150,000,000 besides the amount paid for interest and the amount paid for the pension-list. I have no objection to the statement being published; I have no objection to the facts going before the country, no matter where they come from; but this is not an official document; it is the mere production of a gentleman who may be holding office, but it has no evidence of official character even, and some of his items are, in my estimation, very absurd and should not be in a statement of this character.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I move that the Senate adjourn. I think there is not a quorum present.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President——

Mr. BOUTWELL. I believe I have the floor, and I wish this paper to be read as part of my speech if there is objection to its going in the RECORD without being read.

Mr. HOWE. Is there objection?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like much to hear it, as its accuracy is assailed.

Mr. HAMLIN. I rise, Mr. President, to a question of order, that no objection prevents a Senator from incorporating such a paper in his remarks. It is done almost every day.

Mr. EDMUNDS. He can have it read by a majority vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that there is no rule of the Senate on the subject. A majority of the Senate can determine the matter in the judgment of the Chair. The Chair will submit the question, if it is the desire of the Senator, whether this statement shall be incorporated in the RECORD without being read. Senators, those in favor of this permission will say ay; of a contrary opinion will say no.

Mr. STEVENSON. I ask for the yeas and nays on that question of order. It is an important question of order.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SAULSBURY. On account of the appeals made to me by my friends on this side of the House, I will withdraw, if it is not too late, the objection, while my own judgment is that it has been the rule of the Senate not to permit statements to be incorporated in the RECORD which are not read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being withdrawn, the point of order falls, and the statement will be incorporated in the RECORD.

The tables produced by Mr. BOUTWELL are as follows:

Table showing expenditures per capita.

Year.	Population.	Expenditures.	Per capita.
1800	5,305,925	$10,813,971 01	2.038
1810	7,239,814	8,474,753 37	1.171
1820	9,638,131	18,285,534 89	1.897
1830	12,866,020	15,142,108 26	1.176
1840	17,069,453	24,314,518 19	1.424
1850	23,191,876	40,948,383 12	1.766
1860	31,443,321	61,402,408 64	1.952
1870	38,555,983	68,684,613 92	1.781
1875, (estimated)	40,000,000	69,856,117 77	1.746

Note.—For explanations of deductions see accompanying statements marked A to K, inclusive.

STATEMENT A.—Congress.

Reporting debates in Congress	$45,625 00
Printing for Congress, including debates	259,527 38
Printing for Treasury Department	136,000 00
Printing for War Department	43,284 00
Printing for Interior Department	102,000 00
Printing for Department of Justice	5,100 00
	591,536 38

STATEMENT B.—Executive.

	Expenses in 1860.	Expenses in 1875.	Increase.
Salaries in Treasury Department:
Office of Secretary	$47,931 00	$476,698 97	$65,600 00
First Auditor	35,470 00	72,908 81	37,438 81
Second Auditor	35,470 00	266,583 22	231,113 22
Third Auditor	132,905 70	246,801 97	113,896 27
Fourth Auditor	27,737 80	77,697 46	49,959 66
Fifth Auditor	17,621 43	51,304 83	33,683 40
First Comptroller	28,340 00	72,454 75	44,114 75
Second Comptroller	26,840 00	110,926 97	84,086 97
Treasurer	26,751 15	414,361 44	387,610 29
Register	51,707 11	243,337 50	191,630 39
Comptroller of the Treasury		134,764 01	134,764 01
War Department and its Bureaus	145,564 02	972,535 17	826,951 15
Navy Department and its Bureaus	107,300 00	121,735 20	14,435 20
Interior Department, Pension Office	126,206 46	464,821 21	338,614 75
Internal Revenue Office			335,166 80
			2,889,065 67

STATEMENT C.—Judiciary.

The expenses of courts incurred on account of internal revenue suits are estimated by the First Comptroller at one-third of the total expenditures, or	$1,395,876 07

STATEMENT D.—Foreign Intercourse.

Salaries and expenses of United States and British claims commission	$2,093 25
Awards to British claimants	1,929,819 00
Salaries and expenses, court of commissioners of Alabama claims	84,374 70
		2,016,286 95

STATEMENT E.—Miscellaneous.

Payment of judgments, Court of Claims		$516,531 35
Salaries and expenses southern claims commission		51,800 00
Examination of national banks and bank-note plates		705 75
Expenses of engraving and printing		1,581,669 44
Expenses of national currency		330,978 27
Expenses of national loan		2,444 47
Refunding national debt		150,255 51
Refunding proceeds of cotton seized		51,229 47
Payment for lands sold for direct taxes		23,920 00
Return of proceeds and expenses of collection of captured property		881,249 84
Refunding taxes illegally collected		893 00
Re-issuing national currency		64,244 76
Support of free schools in South Carolina		3,900 00
Refunding excess of duty to national banks		258 40
Defending suits and claims for seizure of captured property		26,124 00
Compensation of persons employed in insurrectionary States		4,068 65
Expenses of assessing and collecting internal revenue		5,188,513 31
Support of Freedmen's Hospital and Asylum		50,000 00
National Association for Relief of Colored Women and Children		10,000 00
Compensation in lieu of moieties		67,134 18
Postage in lieu of franking privilege		1,022,165 13
Extraordinary expenses incurred for the District of Columbia:
Payment of indebtedness	$1,300,000 00
Payment of interest on 3.65 loan	154,554 64
		1,454,554 64
Public buildings and improving rivers and harbors in 1875	15,365,012 30
Expended for same purposes in 1860	2,913,371 48
		12,451,640 82
Expenses of collecting revenue from customs, including revenue-cutter service, in 1875	8,006,678 10
Cost for same service in 1860	3,324,430 53
		4,682,247 57
		28,616,528 53

STATEMENT F.—Pensions.

The entire amount on account of pensions is deducted, as it is not reasonable to suppose that many persons who would be entitled to the benefits of the old pension laws are now living	$29,456,216 22

STATEMENT G.—Military establishment.

Bounty under act of July 28, 1866	$227,111 44
Traveling expenses of California volunteers and Michigan cavalry	12,185 15
Bureau of Refugees and Freedmen	34,716 20
Horses and other property lost in military service	$83,720 68
Re-imbursing States' expenses in suppressing rebellion	186,667 93
Claims of loyal citizens for supplies furnished during the rebellion	1,265,170 40
Publication of official records of the war of rebellion	20,000 00
Commutation of rations to prisoners of war	4,000 00
Stoppages or fines due National Home for Disabled Volunteers	911,505 12
Expenses under reconstruction acts	240 04
Bounty and prize money to colored soldiers and sailors	80,000 00
Keeping, transporting, and supplying prisoners of war	2,195 35
National cemeteries	168,869 59
Head-stones for graves in national cemeteries	134,989 17
Medical and Surgical History of the War	40,000 00
Total of claims actually paid	3,171,371 07

Increased expenditures of the Army in consequence of the war:

	1860.	1875.
Pay of the Army	$3,828,924 55	$10,870,760 39
Commissary Department	2,745,162 67	2,851,334 74
Quartermaster's Department	6,470,472 58	12,950,263 22
	13,044,559 80	26,672,358 35	13,627,798 55
			16,799,169 62

STATEMENT H.—Naval establishment.

Prize-money to captors	$842,582 22
Bounty for destruction of enemy's vessels	50,419 32
Payment to officers and crew of United States steamer Kearsarge	2,040 87
Navy pensions	96,363 93
Extraordinary expenditures on account of construction of four new vessels	4,000,000 00
	4,991,406,34

STATEMENT I.—Public debt.

Interest on the public debt	$103,093,544 57

STATEMENT K.

The following items, which are included in the aggregate as expenditures both for the years 1860 and 1875, are deducted from each, for the reason that they are not expenditures in the true meaning of the word, as they involve no outlay of money by the Treasury and are no burden upon the tax-payers, they being merely entries on both the debit and credit side of the books (made necessary by the system of book-keeping in practice) of moneys received from persons and subsequently returned to them or expended in their behalf, namely:

Items.	1860.	1875.
Refunding excess of amounts deposited by importers for unascertained duties	$814,826 87	$1,863,657 85
Debentures and drawbacks	585,158 39	1,696,562 17
Refunding duties erroneously or illegally collected	3,821 55	9,810 93
Patent fund	219,573 53	672,539 37
Total	1,623,380 34	4,172,570 32

Comparison of the expenditures of 1875 with those of 1860.

Objects of expenditure.	Expenditures for fiscal year 1875.	Deductions of expenditures arising in consequence of the rebellion, 1875.	Expenditures on peace basis, 1875.	Expenditures in 1860.
A. Congress	$5,137,012 47	$591,536 38		$2,619,529 43
B. Executive	10,152,860 68	2,889,065 67		2,347,458 05
C. Judiciary	4,187,628 21	1,395,876 07		1,181,667 93
Territorial governments	290,416 77
Total civil list	19,767,918 13	4,876,478 12	$14,891,440 01	6,148,655 41
D. Foreign intercourse	3,231,067 13	2,016,286 95	1,214,800 18	1,163,207 15
E. Miscellaneous	48,071,697 72	28,616,528 53	19,455,169 19	20,658,007 92
Indians	8,384,656 82		2,384,656 82	3,935,686 59
F. Pensions	29,456,216 22	29,456,216 22
G. Military establishment	41,120,645 98	16,799,169 62	24,321,476 36	16,409,767 10
H. Naval establishment	21,497,626 27	4,991,406 34	16,506,219 93	11,513,150 19
I. Interest on public debt	103,093,544 57	103,093,544 57		3,177,314 62
Total	274,623,392 84	189,849,630 35	84,773,762 49	63,025,788 96
Deduct 12.675 per cent., the average premium on gold during the year, the expenditures here given being in currency while those of 1860 were in gold			10,745,074 40
			74,028,688 09
K. Deduct items which are not in reality expenditures, but which appear so by reason of the system of book-keeping in practice in the Department			4,172,570 32	1,623,380 34
			69,856,117 77	61,402,408 64
Excess of expenditures of 1875 over 1860			8,453,709 13

Mr. SAULSBURY. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts give way to the Senator from Delaware for that motion?

Mr. BOUTWELL. I understand that the tables are to be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. By unanimous consent.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Then I will yield the floor.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the Senator from Delaware withdraw his motion for a moment?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEVENSON. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] takes issue with the statement made by me. He says that this country is not depressed, and that its financial and agricultural and commercial interests are in a good condition.

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator states it too broadly. I stated that it was not in that extreme condition of poverty and bankruptcy which had been alleged.

Mr. STEVENSON. I did not say anything about bankruptcy.

Mr. MORRILL. You mentioned the amount of bankruptcies that had taken place.

Mr. STEVENSON. I stand now by my statement, and I take issue with the Senator from Vermont. I say that the statistics in New York will show that over eight thousand and some hundred bankruptcies occurred in the year 1875, and in the first three months of this year more than two thousand occurred. I say further from information from republicans and democrats alike in the city of New York that rents are fearfully depressed, that business is in a very unsatisfactory state, and from every section of the country I hear clamors of great pecuniary distress and of increased taxation.

Mr. MORRILL. I merely stated that this extreme exaggeration about the condition of the country was entirely unfounded. I admitted that the manufacturing interests and the mercantile interests and the mining interests were depressed; but I claimed that the agricultural interest was never more prosperous, and that is the greatest interest of this country. Why, Mr. President, the amount of cotton that will be produced this year will be an average crop. The hay, which is the largest agricultural crop perhaps in the country, is good all over the country. There is not a single article of agriculture in any portion of the country that I am aware of the crop of which this year does not promise well.

Mr. STEVENSON. Let me ask the Senator what the price of cotton is now, and whether it is not at one-half the price it used to command?

Mr. MORRILL. It is one-half what it was during the war, but it is about two cents a pound more than it was prior to the war.

Mr. STEVENSON. Is it not one-half now what it was the year before the last—seven years since the war? Still I only wanted to correct the Senator's statement as to my position. All I said was that there was great popular distress in this country and that all species of its business were unsettled and depressed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What are the causes of that condition of things?

Mr. STEVENSON. That is more than I can tell.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the thing we ought to know, in order to correct them.

Mr. STEVENSON. I know that in the old times when the democratic party in the days of Mr. Van Buren were charged with the responsibility, the bad management of its rulers was then said to be the cause.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What does the Senator say now?

Mr. STEVENSON. I do not intend to go into any political discussion. What I say to the Senator from Vermont is that the people are competent to judge. They will render their verdict as to what the cause is in November, and by that verdict I am willing to stand.

Mr. MORRILL. Will the Senator answer me this?

Mr. STEVENSON. I will answer any question.

Mr. MORRILL. Is not the cotton crop not only prosperous in the South, but are they not producing vastly more of the cereal crops and more stock than prior to the war?

Mr. STEVENSON. I do not understand it to be so.

Mr. MORRILL. I do.

Mr. STEVENSON. The gentlemen who raise cotton tell me it is not so, and certainly the price of cotton, if we were in good times, would be a great deal more than three and a half to four cents.

Mr. OGLESBY. Mr. President, what has become of the motion to adjourn?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to adjourn was withdrawn.

Mr. OGLESBY, (at six o'clock and fifty-five minutes.) I renew the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is moved that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the Chair allow me an opportunity of making a request of the Senator? There is a very earnest necessity for an executive session, and I hope the Senator will allow me to submit that motion.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will yield to that.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator yield to me? We have remained late. We have all lost our dinner, or are likely to, whether we adjourn now or an hour hence; and I do submit that the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Vermont can settle the question of the causes of the trouble, if we have any now in this country, on Monday just as well on some other bill as on this.

Mr. STEVENSON. I have no unsettled question. I have finished all I have to say.

Mr. ALLISON. Then, if it is all settled, I hope we shall go on and vote on the bill. We can get through with it and adjourn in fifteen minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware insist on his motion.

Mr. SAULSBURY. If the Senator from Maine wishes an executive session I will yield for that purpose. Otherwise I insist on my motion.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope not.

Mr. HAMLIN. I will not make the motion. I want an executive session, but I want to close this bill more than I want that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no motion before the Senate, the yeas and nays will be taken on the motion to recommit.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The question being put, a division was called for; and the ayes were 4, and the noes 32.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate refuses to adjourn, but there is not a quorum voting.

Mr. HOWE. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SPENCER and others. Another division will do.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that absent Senators be sent for.

Mr. MORRILL. The yeas and nays will ascertain the fact.

Mr. FERRY. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion. That will test whether we have a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays are called for. The Clerk will call the roll on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. CRAGIN. I suggest that there is a quorum evidently present. Another division will show it, without wasting time in calling the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate is out of order. The question is on the motion to adjourn. The yeas and nays will be called.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 5, nays 35; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Booth, Edmunds, Hamilton, Oglesby, and Saulsbury—5.
NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Barnum, Bogy, Boutwell, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Cockrell, Conover, Cooper, Cragin, Davis, Dawes, Dennis, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Hamlin, Howe, Ingalls, Kelly, Kernan, Key, Logan, McMillan, Maxey, Merrimon, Mitchell, Morrill, Norwood, Paddock, Ransom, Spencer, Windom, Withers, and Wright—35.
ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Caperton, Clayton, Conkling, Dorsey, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Harvey, Hitchcock, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, McCreery, McDonald, Morton, Patterson, Randolph, Robertson, Sargent, Sharon, Sherman, Stevenson, Thurman, Wadleigh, Wallace, West, and Whyte—32.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I do not rise at this late hour to discuss this question. I submitted some views upon it a few days ago, and do not propose to detain the Senate with any extended remarks in reference to this bill. But I find in the RECORD of to-day remarks of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] yesterday in which he alluded to my course of action on this bill, to which I desire to make some reference. The Senator said:

> I desire to speak in reference to Delaware. The distinguished Senator from Delaware, [Mr. SAULSBURY,] who is not now in the Senate Chamber, was spiritedly in favor of reform, and yet whenever his State was touched, whenever an amendment was proposed by the Senate committee striking out anything from Delaware, he was on his feet to protest against the amendment striking anything for Delaware.

Now, I wish to correct the statement made in that paragraph by the Senator from Missouri. In the first place, there was no amendment of the Senate committee striking out any appropriation whatever that had been made in the State of Delaware. Consequently, I had no occasion to protest against striking out appropriations for the State which I have the honor in part to represent. There was in reality but one appropriation for that State. There was an appropriation made for the pier at the town of Lewes, which is a national work, which is not designed for the interests or benefit of the people of the State, and upon which no citizen of the State puts his foot without the permission of the Federal authorities in charge of the work. That certainly is not an appropriation to the State of Delaware. So again of the ice harbor at New Castle. New Castle is situated just above the head of the Delaware Bay. The river at that point being not less than two miles wide, it frequently becomes necessary for vessels going up the bay to Philadelphia to take refuge in that harbor. It was not put there for the purpose of benefiting the people of Delaware in any respect. But there is an appropriation to Wilmington Harbor, which lies within the State, and in which the citizens of our State are particularly interested. Wilmington is a port of entry, a place where there is very great commerce, and where a large number of iron ships and other vessels are built, and where the Government vessels to-day are laying for the purpose of being repaired.

The Senator referred also in his remarks yesterday to streams which were incorporated in the section of the bill providing for surveys, and represented them as mere minnow streams. Why, sir, there is not one of those streams but what has very considerable commerce upon it and tide-water navigation. There is scarcely one of them upon which vessels are not built. Upon one of these streams, Mispillion Creek or River, within the last three years a vessel of nine hundred tons burden has been built; and so upon Jones River and Duck Creek; and every stream incorporated for a survey is a stream where there is tide-water and upon which there is a considerable commerce, and upon which vessels constantly ply.

I rose simply to correct that mistake, because I have not had incorporated into this bill any survey except a survey of a navigable stream, and where there is already a very considerable commerce. I have felt it due to myself to make this correction of a statement made perhaps inadvertently by my friend from Missouri.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I have just listened with pleasure to the constitutional doctrine applicable to this bill stated by the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. STEVENSON,] and yet I shall probably not vote with him. I cannot vote for the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] which is to appropriate $4,000,000 and leave it the administration of the Secretary of War. I do not think $4,000,000 is a sufficient appropriation. I shall not vote to recommit the bill because the chairman of the committee or the Senator having the bill in charge has submitted to the Senate a substitute for the bill, which probably incorporates all the advantages we would derive from a recommittal, and I propose, when the opportunity comes, to vote for that substitute.

I confess that I feel more kindly toward this measure than some of those with whom I am in the habit of coinciding. If I believed that this country or nation was poor, I would move and vote to lay the bill on the table. I know that the country is not poor. The people are somewhat poor, and I am very sorry for it; and there need be no question as to what makes them so. If in a circle a hundred miles in diameter on our prairies you gather all the cereals produced in the land for five or six years and then drive in all the sheep and horses and oxen, and pile on all the fabrics and all the productions of a highly stimulated industry and then gather around it the best youth of the country, with their energy and muscle and capacity to produce, and let them put the torch to that vast funeral pile and then leap into it themselves, no one would wonder that as the smoke from that destruction went up to propitiate the Moloch of war that there should be poverty in the land. Or if you stimulate every energy of a country so that it is fevered and excited and every nerve so strained that it is ready to break, it is certain that there will be a reaction, an exhaustion, a prostration; and that is just what this country is now suffering.

The people are poor, but the country has vast hidden resources, and it seems to me that the way to make the people rich is by developing those resources; and I do not think that I am stating an extravagant proposition when I say that the only means of making the people rich is by developing those resources, for I do not know any other source from which we derive wealth and luxury but this rugged earth from whence we come and whither we go.

If I believed that this bill was to burden the people with taxes I would move and vote to lay it on the table, but I know it is not. The question whether we appropriate four million or five million is the question whether we shall next year pay one million more or less on the public debt, and that is all of it. I believe that by appropriating with reasonable liberality and developing the resources of the country we enable ourselves to pay five million five years hence much easier than we can pay one million next year.

Mr. President, it seems to me that we should learn something from the past. Look at the developments and at the increase of the wealth of the country in the last fifty years. I can remember when the good and patriotic men of the country feared that the nation was going to be ruined by its very increase and development; by the remoteness of its parts they feared that it would fall to pieces. Then it was that hidden in the earth was found the wealth of iron, which was followed by the introduction of railroads, binding the land together, and then by the invention of the telegraph, which has made the people of this vast continent one community, so that San Francisco is to-day for all practical purposes nearer, much nearer to the Atlantic seaboard than Cincinnati was then. Then I remember that reflecting men said we were to be ruined for the want of fuel, and then we found the illimitable fields of coal, supplying not only domestic purposes but the vastly greater demands of manufacturing and transportation. Then, as the New London whaler came in without any cargo, thoughtful men said we were to have an oil famine and that we would be straitened what to do in the numerous purposes to which it is applied; then some man in Pennsylvania drove a pipe down into the earth and developed a supply of oil, enough for the world. A great man has said of the world what is true of this country; he said that the world is God's hot-bed that He has planted deep and multifariously, and there are many things which have not yet come up. The Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. HOWE,] in a speech of a few minutes the other day, hit the very point when he said that it was the duty of the Government to water our country's crops and make the seed sprout.

But, Mr. President, besides all that, this is the proper time to make the appropriation. We have hitherto decided that these improvements are fit to be made and valuable, and we now can make one dollar of expenditure produce two dollars in the results of work, and the people want the occupation and the money. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] says that is making this Government parental. Well, if developing the wealth of the country even if the people do thereby incidentally gain employment, if increasing the revenues of the nation is making the Government parental, let it be parental. There is much of wise political economy in the saying of Solomon: "There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty."

Neither do I think that these appropriations should be confined to salt water or to deep water. I do not differ from the Senator from Kentucky as to the constitutional rule relative to internal improvements. The question which determines the propriety of an appropriation for an internal improvement is whether it will be for the general welfare. In the language of the Constitution, do "we lay the taxes, duties, imposts, and excises in order to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States?" If we do, we are acting in harmony with the Constitution. It is the eighth section of article 1 that gives us the constitutional power to make these appropriations, and the question suggested is the test as to whether any particular improvement comes within the purview of that section of the Constitution.

It may be that a stream three feet wide may float lumber and grain and coal so as to promote the general welfare of the United States, and if it does its improvement is within the legitimate powers of the Constitution. If it be waters entirely within one State confined in its benefits to a mere locality, it is a perversion of the Constitution to claim that the General Government is to spend money in its improvement. The provision of the Constitution relative to the regulation of commerce which has been so much discoursed upon has nothing to do with this question. Under that provision the Government can take control of all navigable waters, but under the general-welfare clause it can improve land or water without taking control of either.

Mr. President, one word more. Every dollar that we expend for these improvements probably stimulates twenty dollars from private capital and thus increases the wealth and the revenues of the nation. Besides, there are many other reasons why individual States cannot so well make these improvements as the General Government. It is a little extraordinary, I know, that one State deriving no direct advantage should be taxed for an improvement in another State; thus, for instance, the State of New Jersey has little or no beneficial interest in this bill; she does not receive a fourth as much as she will contribute to the amount expended; but then, sir, we are one people, one nation; we all have a common interest, and I rejoice in any legislation which brings practically and vividly to the people of different sections the beneficent influences of this one great nation. Mr. President, we are rich enough, our history is sufficiently glorious, the prospects of the future are bright enough; there is but one thing we want, and that is for every section and every party to determine that the great provision of the Constitution enacting that all persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof shall be citizens thereof and of the State in which they reside, shall everywhere be enforced so that every citizen, white and black, at the North and South, shall fully and freely enjoy full American citizenship, with the inalienable right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. If only that could be vouchsafed, this nation would this year enter upon a career most grand and glorious.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the motion made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to report a bill not exceeding in amount the total of $4,000,000.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KEY, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska who sits farthest from me, [Mr. HITCHCOCK.] If he were here he would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

Mr. STEVENSON, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. GORDON.] If he were here he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea," on this motion.

Mr. RANSOM, (when Mr. THURMAN's name was called.) The Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] is paired on this question with the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. CAPERTON.] The Senator from Ohio would vote "yea," and the Senator from West Virginia would vote "nay."

Mr. DAVIS. They are both unwell.

Mr. RANSOM. They are very sick.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. STEVENSON. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. MCCREERY] is still detained at home by the dangerous illness of a member of his family.

The result was announced—yeas 9, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Booth, Boutwell, Dawes, Hamlin, Ingalls, Kernan, Logan, Oglesby, and Saulsbury—9.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Barnum, Bogy, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Cockrell, Conover, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Hamilton, Howe, Kelly, McMillan, Maxey, Merrimon, Mitchell, Morrill, Norwood, Paddock, Ransom, Spencer, Windom, Withers, and Wright—28.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Caperton, Clayton, Conkling, Cragin, Dorsey, Eaton, Edmunds, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Harvey, Hitchcock, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Key, McCreery, McDonald, Morton, Patterson, Randolph, Robertson, Sargent, Sharon, Sherman, Stevenson, Thurman, Wadleigh, Wallace, West, and Whyte—35.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the substitute offered by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.]

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert:

That the sum of $4,000,000 is hereby appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, to be expended for the repair, extension, preservation, and completion of works for the improvement of rivers and harbors under the direction of the Secretary of War: Provided, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to cause such expenditures to be made so as best to subserve the interests of commerce; and he is required to report to Congress, at the opening of its December session, all expenditures made under the provisions of this act up to that time in detail.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, now after much wandering, as the children of Israel had, we have got back to this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will remind the Senator that the five-minute rule is in operation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not know that there is any special need for the Chair taking a minute out of my time to tell me so in advance. I have got time, I think I have, and like the rest of the American freemen that the poets have talked about, I know my rights, and "knowing, dare maintain."

If we have got back to this bill in serious interest out of the discursive region where we have been wandering, I have this to say: In the year 1869, when the revenues of the Government in a comparative sense were overflowing, both Houses of Congress agreed that the true and wise plan, having before them a bill that was filled up with items many of which could not stand constitutional or practical tests, was to put a gross sum in charge of the War Department, which means the Corps of Engineers, subject to the provision and veto of the Secretary of War, to be applied to the most necessary objects of public improvement already in the course of existence and progress. That bill only provided, if I remember, two millions or two millions and a half. I propose now, in this state of public exigency, of diminished revennes, and therefore of an increased necessity for small appropriations, to double the sum of 1869 and to require the Secretary of War to take $4,000,000 only of public money and appropriate it to the most necessary objects of national improvement already provided for by law. That is the proposition, and I appeal to Senators on all sides and from all States and all localities whether this is not in the present condition of the country the wise and the right thing to do.

I have not risen, Mr. President, to take up time, to make speeches, but only to state the precise point on which my amendment rests.

Mr. HOWE. I move to amend the substitute by striking out "four" and inserting "six," so that the appropriation shall be $6,000,000 instead of $4,000,000. So far as the works in the State of Wisconsin are concerned I do not object for one moment for allowing the disbursements to be made under the direction of the Engineer Corps. I do not want a dollar expended in that State that is not recommended upon the judgment and the responsibility of those officers; but I insist upon it that $4,000,000 is not a fair and business-like appropriation to make for these purposes. On that subject I only wish to refer the Senate to the very excellent speeches made this afternoon by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. BOUTWELL] and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] who took his seat a few minutes ago.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered to the substitute by the Senator from Wisconsin to strike out "four" and insert "six;" so as to make the total $6,000,000.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOWE. I move to insert "five" in place of "four;" so as to make it $5,000,000.

Mr. COOPER. I move to lay on the table both the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin and the substitute of the Senator from Vermont.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That motion carries the bill with it.

Mr. COOPER. No, it does not, I understand.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It does. This is not a general appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This is not a general appropriation within the meaning of the rule. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin to the substitute.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the substitute offered by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to offer an amendment to the substitute, if it is in order. I am not quite certain that it is.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is in order. There is no doubt about its being in order, I think.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. An amendment to the substitute is in order.

Mr. ALLISON. I propose what I send to the Clerk's desk as an amendment to the substitute, striking out all after the first word "that."

Several SENATORS. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be reported.

Mr. SPENCER. It has been printed and laid on our tables. Its reading can be dispensed with.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say one word.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us have it read before it is debated, in order to see what it is. I do not understand it myself.

Mr. SPENCER. It is long, and has been printed.

Mr. LOGAN. Before it is read I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator from Iowa. Suppose his amendment should be adopted as an amendment to the substitute, then what effect would that have? The substitute provides for $4,000,000. Would his amendment be a distribution of that sum?

Mr. ALLISON. My proposition strikes out everything after the first word of the substitute, and inserts what I send to the Clerk's desk instead of the substitute.

Mr. LOGAN. What is its effect upon the original bill?

Mr. ALLISON. It is an amendment to the substitute proposed by the Senator from Vermont. It strikes out all that the Senator from Vermont proposes to insert, and also all that is in the original bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment to the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the word "that" in the first line of the amendment and insert——

Mr. RANSOM. I hope the Senator from Iowa will withdraw his amendment, and let us vote upon the substitute of the Senator from Vermont. That seems to be the shortest way to get through this matter.

Mr. SPENCER. And then afterward the Senator from Iowa can offer his amendment to the bill.

Mr. HAMLIN, (to Mr. ALLISON.) Stick to your amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I should be very glad of course to save time; but if the amendment of the Senator from Vermont be voted down, as I am certain it will be, then I shall offer my substitute and have a vote upon it; and if it is to be read, it may as well be read now, and we may as well act upon it now as after the amendment of the Senator from Vermont is voted down. It is only a question of the order of proceeding.

Mr. OGLESBY. May I ask the Senator from Iowa a question?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. OGLESBY. The bill as reported from the Senate Committee on Appropriations is a distinct proposition in and of itself. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont is a distinct and different proposition. We ought to vote directly upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont in order to test the sense of this body on that independent proposition, for it is based on new reasons, a new theory, and new facts. If that amendment should be voted down, as the Senator from Iowa thinks it will be, then his amendment could be read and voted upon. That course would enable us to act upon the amendment of the Senator from Vermont as an independent proposition. If the amendment of the Senator from Iowa is offered now we shall have to vote both upon the bill of the House and the amendment of the Senator from Vermont in voting upon the substitute proposed by the Senator from Iowa. A better, and simpler, and plainer way would be to vote upon the amendment of the Senator from Vermont first, and then if the substitute of the Senator from Iowa is offered it can be read and voted upon and the question considered fairly and independently. There may be Senators here disposed to vote for the amendment of the Senator from Vermont who would also vote for the substitute proposed by the Senator from Iowa if the amendment of the Senator from Vermont should fail; but those Senators might not vote for the substitute of the Senator from Iowa if that substitute is to slaughter both the original bill and the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. HOWE. I want to suggest to the Senator from Illinois that I think he is mistaken. If the amendment moved by the Senator from Iowa be adopted, the question will then be on substituting his proposition for the bill now before the Senate, will it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. OGLESBY. I misunderstood the Senator from Iowa in his reply to the Senator from Illinois, then. I understood the Senator to say that his amendment was offered as a substitute both for the bill and the pending amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa offers his amendment as a substitute for the substitute offered by the Senator from Vermont. Does the Senator from Iowa insist on his amendment at this time?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is being read.

Mr. MERRIMON. I ask as a question of order whether the first vote is not upon the substitute of the Senator from Vermont? We perfect the principal measure first.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Iowa is in order. The substitute of the Senator from Vermont is open to amendment.

Mr. FERRY. Let me understand to which proposition does the Senator from Iowa propose his substitute as an amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As an amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont, as the Chair understands.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is it. He proposes to strike out all after the word "that" in my amendment and insert what the Clerk is about to read. He has a right to do that, and you cannot prevent it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Iowa insists on the amendment, the Clerk will proceed to read it.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the amendment, and having read to line 50 was interrupted by

Mr. SPENCER. I rise to a question of order. I should like to know whether this substitute is in order? It varies very little from the bill originally reported from the Committee on Appropriations. There is very little difference between the two.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senate has voted "nay" on this same proposition repeatedly. I think there is a very large majority of the Senate opposed to this amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does that make it out of order? It is pretty strong evidence that it is in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair feels compelled to call Senators to order. The reading of the amendment will proceed.

Mr. SPENCER. I should like to appeal to the Senator from Vermont to withdraw his call for the reading of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont insist on the reading?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will hear the appeal. I want to hear the reasons for dispensing with the reading.

Mr. SPENCER. The amendment is familiar to the Senate. Every Senator has read this amendment and understands it. We have voted on it repeatedly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. HOWE. What is the question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama rose to a point of order that the substitute of the Senator from Iowa was not in order. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. SPENCER. The Chair was in too great a hurry to overrule the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will resume the reading.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the amendment at line 51; and having read to line 143, he was interrupted by

Mr. FRELINGHYUSEN. May I interrupt the reading of the amendment for the purpose of suggesting to the Senator having the bill in charge whether an arrangement may not be made to commence voting on the bill and amendments on Monday morning at a quarter after eleven o'clock, and whether it would not be agreeable, as debate has stopped, that we take the vote then?

Mr. ALLISON. It would certainly be very agreeable to me, if we could go on either to-night or on Monday morning without debate.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. If unanimous consent is given to such an arrangement, we might adjourn now.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection to that course, for my part.

Mr. FERRY and others. Let us go on.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. If there is no objection to it, I make that proposition.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection to it, but Senators about me all say "go on."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading at line 144, and having read to the end of the first section, at line 361, he was interrupted by

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the Senator from Vermont that we waive the reading of section 2, as it is precisely the bill as reported from the Committee on Appropriations with some additions, which may be read. The additions can be read, but the reading of the original print can very well be dispensed with.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think, and the Senate will bear me out in that, that I have never consented to pass upon any question in the Senate until it should be read. Therefore, for the honor of what I consider to be a most necessary rule of legislation, I want to hear the amendment read through.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont objects, and the reading will continue.

The Chief Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the amendment to the amendment, as follows:

The following sums of money be, and are hereby, appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of War, for the repair, preservation, construction, and completion of the following public works hereinafter named:

For the improvement of the harbor at Buffalo, New York, $85,000.

For the improvement of the harbor at Wilson, New York, $10,000.

For the improvement of the harbor at Oak Orchard, New York, $2,000.

For removing obstructions in the East River and Hell Gate, New York, $300,000.

For the improvement of the natural entrance to Superior Bay, Wisconsin, $3,000.

For the improvement of the harbor at Du Luth, Minnesota, $15,000. Said appropriation is made upon the express condition that it shall be without prejudice to either party in the suit now pending between the State of Wisconsin, plaintiff, and the city of Du Luth and the Northern Pacific Railroad, defendants.

For the improvement of the harbor at Ontonagon, Michigan, $15,000.

For the improvement of Eagle Harbor, Michigan, $15,000.

For the improvement of the harbor at Marquette, Michigan, $2,000.

For the improvement of the harbor at Manistee, Michigan, $14,000.

For the improvement of the harbor at Ludington, Michigan, $10,000.

For the improvement of the harbor at Muskegon, Michigan, $15,000.

For the improvement of the harbor at Grand Haven, Michigan, $15,000,

For the improvement of the harbor at Green Bay, Wisconsin, $8,000.

For the improvement of the harbor at Ahnepee, Wisconsin, $10,000.

For the improvement of the harbor at Two Rivers, Wisconsin, $5,000.

For the improvement of the Falls of Saint Anthony, Minnesota, $125,000.

For the improvement of Minnesota River, Minnesota, $10,000.

For the improvement of the harbor at Toledo, Ohio, $75,000.

For the improvement of the harbor at Sandusky City, Ohio, $25,000.

For the improvement of the harbor at Vermilion, Ohio, $5,000.

For a breakwater at Cleveland Harbor, Ohio, $50,000.

For repair of east pier at Cleveland, Ohio, $8,000.

For the improvement of Connecticut River below Hartford, Connecticut, $20,000.

For the improvement of the harbor at Fall River, Massachusetts, $10,000

For the improvement of the harbor at New Bedford, Massachusetts, $10,000.

For the improvement of Penobscot River, Maine, $10,000; $4,000 of which shall be expended at or near the "Narrows" in said river at Bucksport.

For the improvement of Cocheco River, New Hampshire, $14,000.

For the improvement of the harbor at Burlington, Vermont, $20,000.

For the improvement of the harbor at Swanton, Vermont, $2,000.

For removing obstructions from, and the improvement of, the harbor at Wilmington, Delaware, $16,000.

For the construction of piers in Delaware Bay, near Lewes, Delaware, $30,000.

For the improvement of the harbor at Chicago, Illinois, $5,000

For the improvement of the Des Moines Rapids, Mississippi River, $250,000.

For the improvement of the harbor at Baltimore, Maryland, $75,000.

For the improvement of the Rappahannock River, Virginia, $10,000.

For the improvement of James River, Virginia, $60,000.

For the improvement of Cape Fear River, North Carolina, $125,000.

For the improvement of the French Broad River between Brevard and the Buncombe County line, North Carolina, $10,000.

For the improvement of Cumberland River below the city of Nashville, Tennessee, $35,000.

For the improvement of the Great Kanawha River, West Virginia, including the purchase of sites for dams and locks, not exceeding $15,000, $250,000.

For removal of Beaver and Nailor Bend rocks, and for cleaning out snags and fallen trees in the Little Kanawha, West Virginia, $7,300.

For the improvement of the harbor at Savannah, Georgia, $62,000.

For the improvement of the harbor at Brunswick, Georgia, $10,000.

For the improvement of the Chattahoochee and Flint Rivers, Georgia, $20,000.

For the improvement at Sabine Pass, and for improvement of Blue Buck Bar and Sabine Bay, and for deepening the channel over the bar at the mouth of the Sabine River, and for deepening of the channel over the bar at the mouth of Neches River, where these rivers enter Sabine Bay, $40,000.

For the improvement of Pass Cavallo inlet to Matagorda Bay, Texas, $25,000.

For the improvement of the Coosa River, from Rome, Georgia, to the bridge of the Selma, Rome and Dalton Railroad Company in Alabama, $10,000.

For the improvement of the Ouachita River, Arkansas and Louisiana, $12,000.

For the improvement of the harbor at Cedar Keys, Florida, $10,000.

For the improvement of the Lower Willamette and Columbia Rivers from Portland, Oregon, to the sea, $25,000.

For the improvement of the Upper Willamette River, Oregon, $20,000.

For the improvement of the Upper Columbia, including Snake River, $15,000.

For the improvement of Sacramento and Feather Rivers, California, $15,000.

For the improvement of Oakland Harbor, California, to be applied to finishing training-walls and dredging between them, $75,000.

For the improvement of San Joaquin River, California, $15,000.

For the improvement of the Delaware River below Petty's Island, $50,000.

For removing raft in Red River and closing Tone's Bayou, Louisiana, $30,000.

For the improvement of the Schuylkill River, Pennsylvania, $25,000.

For the improvement of the harbor at Southport, Connecticut $5,000.

For the improvement of the harbor at Black Lake, Michigan, $15,000.

For the improvement of the harbor at Saint Joseph's, Michigan, $12,000.

For the improvement of the harbor at Manitowoc, Wisconsin, $10,000.

For the improvement of the harbor at Sheboygan, Wisconsin, $8,000.

For the improvement of the harbor at Port Washington, Wisconsin, $10,000.

For the improvement of the harbor at Oswego, New York, $10,000.

For the improvement of the Harlem River, New York, $15,000; to be expended between Ward's Island and Hudson River.

For the improvement of Hudson River, $66,000.

For the improvement of Elk River, West Virginia, $15,000.

For the improvement of the Appomattox River, Virginia, $25,000.

For the improvement of the South Branch of Elizabeth River, Virginia, $5,000.

For the improvement of Nansemond River, Virginia, $5,000.

For the improvement of the Yazoo River, Mississippi, $15,000.

For the improvement of White River at Buffalo Shoals, Arkansas, $15,000.

For the improvement of the harbor at Charleston, South Carolina, $10,000.

For the improvement of the Ocmulgee River, Georgia, between Macon and the seaboard, $15,000.

For the improvement of New River from the lead mines in Wythe County, Virginia, to the mouth of Greenbrier River, West Virginia, $15,000.

For the improvement of the harbor at Norfolk, Virginia, $39,600.

For the improvement of the Warrior and Tombigbee Rivers, Alabama, above Demopolis, $15,000.

For continuing the improvement on the outer bar at Galveston, Texas, $150,000.

For the improvement of the Missouri River above the mouth of the Yellowstone, $30,000.

For the improvement of Chester River at Kent Island Narrows, Maryland, $5,000.

For removing bowlders and snags in Big Sandy River, Kentucky and West Virginia, including Louisa Fork, Virginia, $15,000.

For the improvement of the harbor at Michigan City, Indiana, $40,000.

For the improvement of the channel of the Mississippi River opposite the city of Saint Louis, Missouri, by the construction of a low dam across the channel east of Arsenal Island, known as Cahokia Chute, and in the revetment of said island, $30,900.

For the improvement of the Rush Chute and the harbor of Burlington, Iowa, $10,000.

For the improvement of the harbor at Fort Madison, Iowa, $10,000.

For the improvement of the harbor at South Haven, Michigan, $10,000.

For the improvement of Saint Mary's River and Saint Mary's Falls Canal, Michigan, $150,000.

For the improvement of the harbor at Cheboygan, Michigan, $10,000.

For the improvement of the Saginaw River, Michigan, $11,000.

For the improvement of the harbor at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, $26,000.

For the improvement of the harbor at Kenosha, Wisconsin, $9,000.

For the improvement of the Mississippi River above the Falls of Saint Anthony, $20,000; no part of which shall be expended upon the Falls of Saint Anthony.

For the improvement of the harbor at Charlevoix, Michigan, $10,000.

For the improvement of the harbor at Thunder Bay, Michigan, $4,764.

For the improvement of the harbor at Port Clinton, Ohio, $5,000.

For repair of piers at mouth of Black River, Ohio, $6,000.

For the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, $300,000.

For the improvement of the harbor at Erie, Pennsylvania, $50,000.

For the improvement of the breakwater at Block Island, Rhode Island, $40,000.

For the improvement of the Boston Harbor, Massachusetts, $50,000.

For the improvement of the harbor at Plymouth, Massachusetts, $5,000.

For the improvement of Little Narraganset Bay, Rhode Island and Connecticut, $10,000.

For the improvement of the Kennebunk River, Maine, $5,000.

For the improvement of Belfast Harbor, Maine, $8,000.

For the improvement of the harbor at Rondout, New York, $50,000.

For the improvement of the harbor at Port Jefferson, Long Island, New York, $6,000.

For the improvement of the channel between Staten Island and New Jersey, $10,000.

For the improvement of the harbor at Provincetown, Massachusetts, $4,000.

For the construction of piers of Ice Harbor and removing obstructions at New Castle, Delaware, $12,000.

For the improvement of the harbor of refuge, Lake Huron, Michigan, including removal of the wreck of "The City of Buffalo," $75,000.

For the improvement of the Chippewa River, Wisconsin, $15,000.

For the improvement of the Wabash River, Indiana, $70,000.

For the improvement of the harbor at Calumet, Illinois, $25,000.

For the improvement of the Illinois River, Illinois, $40,000.

For the improvement of the Red River of the North, Minnesota, $10,000.

For the improvement of the Upper Mississippi River, $30,000; and $7,000 thereof may be applied in constructing the necessary machinery used in Captain Edward Bell's process for building wing-dams and applying said process in the improvement of said river.

For the improvement of Rock Island Rapids, Mississippi River, $30,000.

For the improvement of the Mississippi, Missouri, and Arkansas Rivers, $100,000: Provided, That $40,000 of the above sum shall be expended on the Missouri River.

For the improvement of the Mississippi River between the mouths of the Illinois and Ohio Rivers, ($15,000 of which are to be expended between the mouths of the Illinois and Missouri Rivers, and $30,000 of which are to be expended to prevent erosion and destruction of its banks between the foot of Dickey Island and the mouth of the Ohio River, and $5,000 of which are to be expended to prevent erosion of its banks between islands No. 14 and No. 15, near the town of Kaskaskia, Illinois,) $300,000.

For removal of a bar in the Mississippi River opposite Dubuque, Iowa, $15,000.

For the improvement of the Ohio River, $230,000.

For the annual expense of gauging the waters of the Lower Mississippi and its tributaries, and for continuing observations of the rise and fall of the same, as required by joint resolution of February 21, 1871, $5,000.

For the improvement of the Tennessee River, $300,000; $15,000 of which are to be expended above Chattanooga, and the remaining $285,000 are to be expended upon Muscle Shoals.

To ascertain in current and next fiscal years, as required by act of March 3, 1875, the depth of water and width of channel secured and maintained, from time to time, by James B. Eads, at South Pass of Mississippi River, and to enable the Secretary of War to report during the construction of the work the payments made from time to time and the probable times of other payments, and to report during the construction of the work all important facts relating to the progress of the same, materials used, and the character and permanency with which the said jettee and auxiliary works are being constructed, $15,000.

For the construction of a canal around the cascades of the Columbia River in the State of Oregon, $100,000; of which amount the Secretary of War is authorized to expend so much as in his judgment may be necessary and proper to secure title and right of way for canal and locks, not exceeding the sum of $10,000; and whenever, in the prosecution of the said work, it shall have become necessary to obtain the right of way over any lands for the said canal and locks, the Secretary of War shall take possession of and use the said lands, after having purchased the same, or, in case the said lands cannot be purchased for a reasonable price, then after having paid for the same, or secured the value thereof, which value may be ascertained in the mode provided by the laws of Oregon for the condemnation of lands for public uses in that State. The Department of Justice shall represent the interests of the United States in any legal proceedings under this act to obtain the right of way for said canal.

For the improvement of the harbor at Racine, Wisconsin, $0,000.

For the continuing of the work on the ship-channel in Galveston Bay, $75,000.

For the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi River, $100,000: Provided, That this appropriation shall cease to be available when its necessity is superseded by any other work of improvement authorized by law.

It shall be the duty of the Secretary of War to apply the moneys herein appropriated as far as may be by contract, except when specific estimates cannot be made for the particular work, or where, in the judgment of said Secretary, the work cannot be contracted at prices advantageous to the Government, and except appropriations made for examinations and surveys; and such contracts shall be made after sufficient public advertisement for proposals, in such form and manner as the Secretary of War shall prescribe; and such contract shall be made with the lowest responsible bidders therefor, accompanied by such securities as the Secretary of War shall require.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to cause examinations or surveys, or both, to be made at the following points, namely:

Kentucky River, from the Three Forks of said river to Savannah, Georgia, via Cumberland Gap.

Cumberland River above Cumberland Falls, Kentucky.

Dan River, from Clarksville, Virginia, via Danville, Virginia, to Danbury, North Carolina; and Stanton River, from Roanoke, Virginia, to Brookneal, Virginia.

New River, from the lead mines in Wythe County, Virginia, to the mouth of Wilson in Grayson County, Virginia.

Tug Fork of Big Sandy River, Kentucky, and West Virginia.

Onancock Creek, Virginia.

Hunting Creek, Virginia.

Etowah River in Georgia, from Cooper's Iron-Works to Canton; and the south branch of said river, known as Little River, from its junction with the Etowah above Cooper's Iron-Works to the mouth of Cooper's Sandy Creek.

Tonawanda Harbor, New York, on the east branch of Niagara River, at the mouth of Tonawanda Creek, and extending north and south therefrom.

Sackett's Harbor, New York.

Harbor at Whitehall, at the south end of Lake Champlain, to procure twelve feet of water.

Bayou Bartholomew, Arkansas.

Saline River, Arkansas.

Upper Arkansas River, commencing at Kansas City, in the State of Kansas, to Fort Smith, in the State of Arkansas.

Holston River, Tennessee, commencing above the mouth of French Broad River, to Union, Tennessee.

Nolachucky River, Tennessee, from its mouth to Warrensburgh.

Sunflower River, Mississippi.

Paul River, Mississippi.

Big Black River, Mississippi.

Towne Creek, Monroe County, Mississippi.

Chattahoochee River, from Columbus, Georgia, to Thompson's Bridge.

Examination and survey of the harbor at Annapolis, Maryland, and an estimate of the cost of the removal of the bars at the entrance thereto.

Western branch of the Patapsco River, from Light Street Bridge to Elk Ridge Landing.

Pocomoke River, Maryland.

Great Choptank River, between Denton and Greensborough, Maryland.

Tread Haven Creek, at or near Easton Point, Talbot County, Maryland.

Slaughter Creek, near the mouth of Little Choptank River, Maryland.

Brown's Creek and Southeast Creek, Maryland.

Corsica Creek, Maryland.

Harbor at Leonardstown, Maryland.

Duck Creek, from its mouth to Smyrna Landing, Delaware.

Dover River, or Saint Jones's Creek, Delaware.

Murderkill Creek, Delaware.

Mispillion Creek, Delaware.

Brandywine River, Delaware.

Broad Creek, emptying in Nanticoke River, from its mouth to the town of Laurel in the State of Delaware.

Laurel Creek, Kentucky.

Harbor at San Luis Obispo.

Coos Bay, Oregon.

Coquille River, Oregon.

McKenzie River, Oregon, with a view of ascertaining the most practicable steamboat channel from the mouth of said river to the mouth of Mohawk River at Yarnels.

The channel in Black River between the Kennebec at Bath, Maine, and the Sheepscott River.

Songo River, and the channel leading from Long Lake to Sebago Lake, Maine.

Manistee River, from its mouth to Sherman, Wexford County, Michigan.

Survey and examination of the rocks in the channel of the Potomac River, between Georgetown, District of Columbia, and the new outlet-locks of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal, and ascertaining cost of removing the same: Provided, The cost of such survey shall be paid by the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company.

From the Dalles of the Saint Croix River to Lake Superior in Minnesota, with a view to a water-route.

Port of Memphis, Tennessee, so as to ascertain what measures, if any, are necessary to protect the landings and wharf from further injury from the current of the Mississippi River, and the cost of the same.

Mouth of Bell River, Saint Clair County, Michigan.

Cohasset Harbor, Massachusetts.

Gloucester Harbor, Massachusetts.

Man-of-War Shoal at Boston, Massachusetts.

Breakwater at Fairweather Island, Connecticut.

Bayou Courtableau, from its mouth in the Atchafalaya River, to Washington, Louisiana, with estimates of the cost of removing obstructions in said bayou so as to give a sufficient depth of water to accommodate the steamboats traveling on the bayou.

A survey of that portion of the Monongahela and Alleghany Rivers lying within and along the boundaries of the city of Pittsburgh, which portion of said rivers is hereby placed under the direction of the engineer in charge of the Ohio River.

For continuing survey of Youghiogheny River, to continue the slack-water navigation up said river to the headwaters at the foot of the Alleghany Mountains, thence by canal to Cumberland, intersecting there the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal.

A survey to ascertain the practicability and cost of the construction of a seawall or breakwater for the protection of the city and harbor of Galveston, Texas, against storm floods from the Gulf of Mexico, to be paid for out of the appropriation for the survey of rivers and harbors.

A survey to ascertain the practicability and cost of the construction of a water-route for transportation from the mouth of Saint Mary's River on the borders of the States of Georgia and Florida through the Okefenokee Swamp, and through the State of Florida, to the most available and convenient point on the Gulf of Mexico; and that the sum of $7,500 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for that purpose out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

A survey to ascertain the practicability and cost of a water-route from head of tide-water on the Patapsco River, Maryland, to head of tide-water on the eastern branch of the Potomac River, near the town of Bladensburgh, Maryland.

To ascertain the practicability and cost of cutting a deep channel from the lower anchorage of the bay of Mobile to the city of Mobile, Alabama.

A survey to ascertain the cost and practicability of removing the obstructions in the Withlacoochee River, Florida.

An examination and survey to ascertain the cost and practicability of removing the obstructions at the entrance of the harbor of Pensacola, Florida, and of deepening the channel of Blackwater River between Pensacola and Milton, in said State.

A survey for a ship-channel through Galveston Bay, beginning at twelve feet water in the mouth of the San Jacinto River and running out of the mouth of said river east of Morgan's Point to the present channel, through Red Fish Bar; thence through the same, extending through Galveston Harbor, passing west of Half-Moon Shoals and Pelican Island, and to twelve feet water in Galveston Channel; and to cause an estimate of the cost of the same to be made, and of the comparative merits of the same, with the route to the head of Bolivar Channel; and of the effects of the completion of each of said channels on the Galveston Harbor as to shoaling or deepening the same, and report the same to Congress by the 1st day of December, 1876.

A resurvey and estimate of the cost of deepening the channel across the bar at the mouth of the Brazos River, Texas; and an estimate of the capacity of the harbor at the mouth of the Brazos, and its fitness for a harbor of refuge and naval station.

Harbors of Ashland and Bayfield in Wisconsin.

Chaumont Bay in Lake Ontario, New York.

The Missouri River, from the town of Saint Charles to the mouth of said Missouri River, with the view to protect the owners of land on the banks of said river, in Saint Charles County, Missouri, against the deflection and abrasion of the current of said river by reason of the erection of the Saint Charles bridge.

A survey and estimate of the damages, if any, done, or to be done, to riparian owners of lands, and improvements thereon, at or in front of the town of Venice, Illinois, near Saint Louis, Missouri, by reason of Government improvements made, or to be made, at or near said town of Venice.

Delaware River, near Cherry Island Flats.

Delaware River, near and between Petty's and Smith's Islands.

A survey, estimate, and report of the cost of a dike from the upper (north) end of the island known as Bloody Island, in the Mississippi River opposite the city of Saint Louis, Missouri, to the wing-dam opposite Brooklin, Illinois, and of the practicability and usefulness of such dike for improving said river and its harbors and for protecting the lands on the east bank of said river against overflow and the deflection and abrasion of the current of said river.

Survey of Red River above the raft to western boundary of the State of Arkansas.

Little River from its mouth to western boundary of Arkansas.

Survey of the Potomac River from Georgetown, District of Columbia, to the new outlet locks constructed on the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal.

Roanoke River, from Weldon, North Carolina, to Clarksville, Virginia.

Examination and survey of the Missouri River immediately above and at Nebraska City, Nebraska, with a view of determining what measures, if any, are necessary to be adopted to preserve the landing for steamboats and other vessels at said port.

And the sum of $50,000 is hereby appropriated for such examinations and surveys and for incidental repairs of harbors for which there is no special appropriation provided by law: Provided, That the Secretary of War shall make an estimate of the total cost of the examinations and surveys herein provided for; and in case the sum herein appropriated should prove insufficient to complete said examinations and surveys, only such rivers and harbors shall be examined and surveyed as, in his judgment, are most important.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] to the substitute offered by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.]

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should be glad to have the Senator from Iowa explain to us the general scope of this amendment, the amount of money that is appropriated by it, and how far it differs from the bill as amended by the Senate in Committee of the Whole; and, having done that, I should like to ask him some questions about some of the particular items that are contained in it.

Mr. ALLISON. I will endeavor briefly to comply with the request of the Senator from Vermont. The bill as it now stands in Committee of the Whole, striking out the amendments proposed by the Committee on Appropriations where those amendments reduced the amounts of the appropriation and inserting the recommendations of the committee where the amounts were increased, appropriates $6,759,014.

Mr. HOWE. Does the Senator mean the bill or the substitute?

Mr. ALLISON. I mean the bill as it stands now, without the adoption of the substitute, the Senate in Committee of the Whole having rejected all the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations in one respect and accepted their recommendations in another respect. The substitute which I propose will appropriate $5,271,664, or a reduction of the bill as it now stands of $1,487,350.

Mr. MERRIMON. How does it compare with the House bill?

Mr. ALLISON. It is a reduction of the House bill of over $600,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask the Senator, if I do not disturb him, as to one or two items in this substitute, because I have had no means of comparison with the time I have had. Taking the item on page 3, line 51, for the improvement of the harbor at Sandusky City, Ohio, which I remember was a disputed item in the Senate, how does that stand as compared with the amendment made by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. ALLISON. For the harbor at Sandusky City the Senate increased the amount recommended by the committee $5,000, making it $30,000. In my substitute I reduce the amount $5,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Just as the committee reported it?

Mr. ALLISON. Just as the committee reported it. The same is true with respect to Cleveland, Ohio; I reduce the amount there $25,000; that is, from $75,000 to $50,000. I do this on the faith of the engineer in charge, who says these sums will enable him to get on very well with these two harbors for the present yeer.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I made the inquiry for the sole purpose of information.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly; I understand it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like my honorable friend in charge of the bill to turn to page 5, line 97, &c.:

For the improvement of the Great Kanawha River, West Virginia, including the purchase of sites for dams and locks, not exceeding $15,000, $250,000.

How does that compare?

Mr. ALLISON. That is a reduction of $50,000 from the amount appropriated by the House.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then in the next paragraph:

For removal of Beaver and Nailor Bend rocks, and for cleaning out snags and fallen trees.

I think the word "fallen" ought to be stricken out so as to take the standing trees as well; but that I cannot move just now.

In the Little Kanawha, West Virginia, $7,300.

How does that compare?

Mr. ALLISON. The Committee on Appropriations recommended that amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Just that sum?

Mr. ALLISON. Just that sum; and the Senate adopted it. That is just the sum that the engineer reports is necessary to clean out the Little Kanawha River for a distance of forty-six miles and enable them to get coal, &c., down that river into the Big Kanawha. For further particulars I refer the Senator from Vermont to the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. DAVIS.]

Mr. EDMUNDS. Just as they say at the shows, "for further particulars inquire within."

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. "See small bills."

Mr. EDMUNDS. "See small bills;" that is it. It would not be necessary to look at this bill in order to see one of that character. On page 8, line 182, there is this item:

For the improvement of New River from the lead mines in Wythe County, Virginia, to the mouth of the Greenbrier River, West Virginia, $15,000.

How does that item now stand in the bill as agreed upon in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. ALLISON. I reduce it $10,000. It stands in Committee of the Whole $25,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator, if I do not trespass too much upon his knowledge of geography, to tell me if this improvement of New River goes up from the lead mines to the mouth of the Greenbrier or down from the lead mines to the mouth of the Greenbrier?

Mr. ALLISON. I infer that it must run with the course of the river, down.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You think that the appropriation runs with the stream?

Mr. ALLISON. I think it must run from the lead mines down to the mouth of the Greenbrier, as I think New River flows into the Greenbrier; but I refer to my honorable friend from Virginia.

Mr. WITHERS. I will state that these lead mines are about two hundred and fifty or three hundred miles south of where the Greenbrier runs into New River.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator from Virginia, while we are on that point, what is the present size of New River at the lead mines, in Wythe County?

Mr. WITHERS. About the size of the Potomac River at Georgetown.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is a very good river, then. I suppose that no Senator will suppose I am wasting time; but I think as this involves some millions we all have a right to know what little we can about it. On page 9, lines 195 to 197 inclusive, I see this item:

For removing bowlders and snags in Big Sandy River, Kentucky and West Virginia, including Louisa Fork, Virginia, $15,000.

Will the Senator give us what information he has on that subject as compared with the bill as it now stands in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. ALLISON. That is not changed. We had such a practical expression of opinion about the Big Sandy, particularly Louisa Fork, that I did not change it, for fear I might lose a vote for the amendment. The engineers report that that improvement will be very valuable in the Big Sandy River. It is really not a waste of money.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But how about Louisa Fork?

Mr. ALLISON. Louisa Fork is a small portion of the river. The appropriation will chiefly, of course, be expended on the Big Sandy.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why so?

Mr. ALLISON. Because the engineers so desire, and so recommend, and I have no doubt will so do.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is Louisa Fork? Will the Senator be good enough to tell us? Is it a part of the river or an affluent of it?

Mr. WITHERS. It is one of the forks of the Big Sandy River. Any information the Senator desires in regard to it I think I can furnish.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish the Sanator would tell us.

Mr. WITHERS. The Tug Fork is one of the forks of the Big Sandy and the Louisa Fork is the other fork. I will also state to the Senator as a little curious piece of history that the Louisa Fork was originally Le Visé Fork, or the "survey" fork, of the Big Sandy River, and the name has been corrupted first into Eliza Fork and now into Louisa Fork.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That of course would justify the appropriation.

Mr. WITHERS. Just as much as the fitting up of a flotilla on Lake Champlain would justify an appropriation for Otter Creek.

Mr. ALLISON. I think I misled the Senator from Vermont. I think I reduced the Big Sandy $10,000 from what it appears in the bill as it now stands.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator has reduced the appropriation and has not reduced the fork, I think the bill may be considered as safe; for the fork evidently would not bear much reduction. On page 9, lines 205 and 206, there is this item:

For the improvement of Rush Chute and the harbor of Burlington, Iowa, $10,000.

How does that stand compared with the bill?

Mr. ALLISON. It stands just as it does in the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator kindly tell us what Rush Chute is?

Mr. ALLISON. With the greatest pleasure. Rush Chute is a narrow channel of the river on the west side of the Mississippi River, a mile or two above Burlington.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is a part of the Mississippi River?

Mr. ALLISON. It is a part of the Mississippi River. The water flows in there and makes a bar by crossing over to the east shore at Burlington Harbor. The object is to close that chute and thus throw the water into a different direction.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then on pages 11 and 12:

For the improvement of the harbor of refuge, Lake Huron, Michigan, including removal of the wreck of The City of Buffalo, $75,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to indefinitely postpone this bill. Will the Chair be good enough to state the question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion made by the Senator from Vermont to indefinitely postpone the bill.

Mr. COOPER. I ask if that motion is in order?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will take my seat when a question of order is made, until it is decided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair overrules the point of order. The Senator from Vermont will proceed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I beg Senators to believe, and I think they will justify me in saying so, that as far as I have gone the inquiries I have made are fair and proper by way of explanation. If under the five-minute rule on a substitute of this kind, which covers the whole question, we are to be cut off with five minutes, then I for one feel perfectly justified in a lawful way in taking measures that will enable me to understand the proposition submitted. So much to my honorable friend from Tennessee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was compelled to call the Senator's attention to the expiration of his time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Chair was perfectly correct. I beg the Chair not to suppose I was reflecting on him in the slightest degree. I was only addressing myself to my uneasy friend from Tennessee, who does not seem desirous that this substitute shall be inquired into.

Mr. COOPER. If the motion is in order, I have no remarks to make.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Exactly; but the Senator ought to have known; and he has found out.

Mr. COOPER. I have, and therefore I have yielded.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is right. Therefore we will begin again if we are all in order. On pages 11 and 12 I was inquiring of the Senator from Iowa to explain about this wreck of the City of Buffalo, for a question of this kind was once up on the subject of a wreck in the harbor of New York which has led my attention to this item.

Mr. ALLISON. In the first place, at this point I reduce the amount $25,000. The amount as it stands now in the bill is $100,000. This provision in relation to the wreck of The City of Buffalo is now in the bill, and it is there by the recommendation of the Bureau of Engineers, for the reason that, as they understand the law, a mere appropriation for the improvement of a harbor does not authorize them to remove the wreck of a vessel. This vessel was wrecked at this precise point and is very much in the way, and must be removed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes; but what I wish to get at (and what drew my attention to the subject is an old case of this sort) is whether this wreck being removed and raised it is for the benefit of the owners of the vessel, or whether it is merely to be blotted out and destroyed as a thing that has been abandoned by the owners; whether like a snag or any other thing that obstructs commerce it is to be disposed of, or whether some private party or corporation is to have the benefit of this appropriation. That is what I want to get at.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator from Vermont that inasmuch as this came to us from the Engineer Bureau it never occurred to me that there was a private job in it. It may be possible there is, but if so I know nothing about it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Of course I should know that.

Mr. ALLISON. I made no inquiry beyond the point that the Engineer Bureau stated that it was necessary to insert these words in order to enable them to use this money for this purpose, as otherwise perhaps the law would not authorize them to do it. I do not know what will be done with this wreck when it is raised. It may be in the interest of some private parties. If so, I trust that some Senator who knows it will state the fact.

Mr. FERRY. I should like, if the Senator from Vermont will allow me, to ask the Senator from Iowa if the sum of $100,000 was not appropriated last year for this harbor of refuge aside from any wreck?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. FERRY. And does not the bill as it passed the House appropriate $100,000 for this place of refuge?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That does not touch the point of my inquiry in respect of which the committee has no information. Here is a vessel that appears to be sunk at that harbor, or at its entrance, or somewhere, that is in the way and has to be removed.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. The appropriation is both for raising it and removing it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They are to remove it, and you cannot conveniently remove it until you raise it, ordinarily. Therefore, my inquiry was devoted to ascertaining (if it is not invidious to anybody to know the just grounds upon which it rests) if this wreck be still, as many wrecks are, not abandoned by the owners but by the underwriters as mere derelict and gone, like any other obstruction that belongs to nobody, or whether this sum of money, $75,000, or so much as may be necessary, for there is no discretion as to the two items, may be appropriated under this wicked and corrupt Administration that so much has been said about, to raising a sunken vessel, a steamer I should infer from the name of it, for the benefit of the proprietors and furnish at public expense a great private advantage to them. I have no information about it, and therefore I merely ask for information.

Mr. ALLISON. I prefer to strike the clause out rather than to have any question about it. I only know what the engineer said. It did not occur to me for a single moment that there was any private interest in it. I prefer to modify my substitute by striking it out.

Mr. FERRY. I do not know anything about it, but it seems to me, if there is a wreck, it is very just and necessary to remove it in order to make that harbor available; that it is as necessary to remove it as any other obstacle. It is a wreck lying there valueless, so far as I know. I have no information particularly except that which comes in the way mentioned by the Senator from Iowa, from the engineers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is one of the misfortunes that my friend bears in company with the rest of us, because he is not of "the body of the people." If he were, he would of course know all about this work. I, not being of "the body of the people," according to his constitutional theories, do not know anything about it myself, and it was in order to get information that I put the inquiry. It may be a perfectly proper work. I have no reason to doubt it or to believe it. All I want is information.

Mr. ALLISON. I have the information now, if the Senator will hear it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us have it.

Mr. ALLISON. I will either strike out the clause or leave it in, as the Senator prefers. I ask the Clerk to read the letters which I send to the desk.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, D. C., May 3, 1876.

SIR: On the 17th of November, 1875, Major Weitzel, Corps of Engineers, reported to this office that a vessel had been wrecked during a severe storm on September 10, 1875, in the harbor of refuge at Sand Beach, on Lake Huron.

The wreck lying in such a position as to seriously obstruct navigation, the question as to whether its removal could be required of the owners was submitted to the honorable the Attorney-General of the United States, who gave the opinion that the case was not of a character to warrant the institution of proceedings against the owners.

From the inclosed copy of a communication, dated 26th of April last, from Major Weitzel, it will be seen that he desires to be informed whether, in the event of an appropriation being made at the present session of Congress for continuing the work at the harbor of refuge, any portion of it could be applied to the removal of the wreck in question, which not only seriously obstructs the navigation of the harbor, but materially interferes with the economical prosecution of the work of improving it. In order to settle the question as to the propriety of applying any portion of the appropriation to the removal of the wreck, it is respectfully suggested that the matter be brought to the attention of the Committee on Commerce of the Senate of the United States, with a view to securing such an amendment to the item in the river and harbor act containing the appropriation for the harbor of refuge on Lake Huron as will authorize an expenditure of a sufficient amount for that purpose. A sketch of the harbor, showing the position of the wreck, is inclosed.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. A. HUMPHREYS,
Brigadier-General and Chief of Engineers.

Hon. ALPHONSO TAFT,
Secretary of War.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now let us hear the report of the Attorney-General on the state of the case.

The CHIEF CLERK. There is nothing here from the Attorney-General; there is a letter from the Secretary of War:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, July 8, 1876.

SIR: I have the honor to invite the attention of your committee to the inclosed letter of the Chief of Engineers, dated May 3, 1876, in regard to the harbor of refuge at Sand Beach, on Lake Huron, and have respectfully to suggest that the item in the river and harbor act containing an appropriation for the harbor of refuge on Lake Huron be so amended as to authorize an expenditure of a sufficient amount for the purpose of removing the wreck of the City of Buffalo in that harbor, which the Chief of Engineers reports not only seriously obstructs the navigation of the harbor, but materially interferes with the economical prosecution of the work of improving it.

It was the intention to forward the inclosed letter on the day it was written. The delay is the result of an oversight, and has just been discovered.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. D. CAMERON,
Secretary of War.

Hon. ROSCOE CONKLING,
Chairman Committee on Commerce, United States Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I greatly regret that we have not the opinion of the Attorney-General stating the facts about this thing to show whether this is still a valuable stranded vessel which when removed and lifted out of the sand is going to be taken possession of by its private owners or not, and the grounds upon which it proceeds. There is certainly nothing in the paper which leads to the inference that anything improper about it exists. At the same time there are so many cases of this character occurring over the United States that I thought it due to the Senate to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to it. It may be perfectly correct. If it were perfectly correct there would be some difficulty in proving that the improvement of the harbor did not cover the removal of this wreck, which had been abandoned by its owners and which has become like a snag, or a bowlder, or a sand-bar, a mere abandoned obstruction to commerce. The mere fact of putting this clause in would seem to imply that it was doubtful whether it was to be removed for the benefit of the private owners or whether it ought to be removed at their expense, on the other hand, as something that still had a material value when taken out of that place. I have no knowledge on the subject, and calling the attention of my friend to it I of course have no observations to submit upon it.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Vermont whether it ought to be stricken out or remain in?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do say, speaking as a Senator, that I do not think we ought to provide specifically for removing a thing that if it be an abandoned thing, and a mere general obstruction, would fall within the general bill, unless we know particularly the grounds upon which the Attorney-General proceeds.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I move that the clause be stricken out.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In justice to all the parties, I want to repeat that I know of no circumstance which gives any ground for probable belief that there is any job about it. It is just to everybody to say that. I only want to call attention to it.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. If the Senator will allow me, he has all the information that any other Senator has in regard to it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have not the least doubt about it. I hope neither of my honorable friends supposes for a moment that I thought they were withholding any information; far from it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa modifies the amendment to the amendment by striking out in lines 263 and 264 the words "including removal of the wreck of The City of Buffalo.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now I ask the attention of the Senator from Iowa to page 14, line 322 to the end of the paragraph, about the locks, &c., at the cascades of the Columbia River in the State of Oregon, which so far as I know are a proper subject of public improvement. Of course I do not know that this particular sum can be wisely expended this year, but in that great river I have no reason to doubt that the improvement of those cascades is a proper object. What I wish to call the attention of the Senator in charge to is whether the phraseology that he has adopted in respect of condemning private property is one that will work in practice and stand the test of the courts of law?

Mr. ALLISON. I did not examine the subject with very great care. It is precisely the provision inserted by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] in open session. I noticed the Senator from Vermont paid particular attention to the provision and made no special objection to it. I concluded, therefore, that it was a proper provision, and I copied it and inserted it here.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have made no special objection to anything. I did not notice that it would do any particular good.

Mr. KELLY. Will the Senator from Vermont allow me to explain that provision?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

Mr. KELLY. I can by turning to the last volume of the Statutes at Large produce a clause in relation to the condemnation of property for the Fox River improvement which is nearly identical, not altogether the same, but this is merely changed so as to suit the circumstances of the case where they differ from that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I only call attention to it not because I propose any amendment or make any criticisms upon it, but as being one of the people responsible with the vast mass of us here, when this bill comes to pass—and I suppose it will some day—for this sort of legislation. I should be sorry to have anybody suppose that I believed this particular provision as it stands would be in point of law adequate to the end that is in view. That is all.

All the rest of this bill is about surveys, and I do not wish to waste the time of the Senate in going through with them. Many of them, as was pointed out before, are for objects, on the most latitudinal construction of the Constitution and the powers of Congress, obviously outside of its constitutional authority; and if it were in order, so as to bring my friend's proposition down to its real merits upon these appropriations for improvements and continuing work, I would move to strike out the second section, so as to leave us to pass upon the first section upon the real merit or want of it that the first section and the principal part of the bill may provide.

Mr. ANTHONY. Can you not divide the amendment?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not know, as my friend from Rhode Island suggests, but that we may be authorized—I rather think we may be—to divide this question, as the amendment is in two distinct sections, although I am not particularly sure about that, it being an amendment to strike out and insert.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator will take note of the last clause of the second section in line 361. I think a few moments would so modify that last clause as to cover the point made by the Senator, because there the Secretary of War is required to make an estimate of all these rivers and harbors. I think myself it would be much better to have a fund placed in the hands of the Secretary of War to make such surveys of rivers and harbors as, in his judgment, ought to be surveyed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is quite a different proposition from what is here contained.

Mr. ALLISON. I know it is.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Would not the Senator for the time being, to avoid the doubtful question of order about dividing one whole amendment, just withdraw the second section of his amendment; and when the first section is disposed of he can offer it again and we can get a vote on it in that way separately?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir; I will do that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Iowa is so modified.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I understand the Senator from Iowa withdraws the second section for the time being.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the understanding of the Chair. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. FERRY. Let us understand the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa in the first place offered the printed amendment as a whole, as a substitute for the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont. He has now modified it by withdrawing the section relating to surveys. He offers the residue of the amendment as an amendment to the substitute offered by the Senator from Vermont, and that is the pending question.

Mr. FERRY. The question is on that amendment as modified?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the question.

Mr. BOGY. On the first section. There are two sections.

Mr. FERRY. As I understand, Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa has modified his substitute by withdrawing that part of it which pertains to surveys.

Mr. ALLISON. Temporarily only, for the moment, in order to take the question separately.

Mr. FERRY. Is it the intention of the Senator from Iowa to propose the second section as part of the bill?

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. FERRY. Then why not try the whole now?

Mr. ALLISON. I wanted to accommodate my friend from Vermont, and I did not know but that I could in a few moments modify the second section so as to make it more acceptable.

Mr. FERRY. I desire to ask upon what basis or theory the Senator from Iowa has so modified his proposition as to take from Michigan some $97,000? As I see by the bill, the reduction of his proposition is $600,000, which would be 10 per cent. from the bill as reported by the committee. The amount taken from the State of Michigan is over 20 per cent., and from national works, so considered during the debate. I ask that question for information.

Mr. ALLISON. I would say in reply to the Senator that in making the deductions which I made in this substitute I looked upon a reduction of the appropriations for the Sault Ste. Marie Canal and the harbor of refuge as no detriment to the State of Michigan, the Senator from Michigan himself having stated on the floor that these were national improvements in their character and not local, and therefore should not be charged to Michigan. I regard them as national improvements in their character. The season is far spent; we are nearly up to the 1st of August. This harbor of refuge is situated in the northern portion of Michigan, and I think that $75,000 perhaps is as much as they can properly expend, comparing that with the season of last year when they had the entire summer. I can assure the Senator from Michigan that there was not the slightest idea of disturbing the harmonies of this bill with reference to the several States. I look upon these items as great national works in which the Senator from Michigan had as much interest as other Senators and no more.

Mr. FERRY. That is true, and I have so regarded them; but in the course of this debate there has been a persistent effort to attach to Michigan and place on Michigan all these amounts so as to swell the aggregate of the appropriations to that State. That has been the effect and the tendency of those who have advocated a reduction of this bill, and for that reason I felt it my duty, as it is my privilege, to ask the Senator, inasmuch as he has framed this substitute, on what basis it proceeds. As I understand the principle on which the committee's action was based it was cutting down local appropriations rather than national ones. Now I see that the only two national improvements in the broadest sense connected with the State of Michigan are cut down, one $50,000, and the other $75,000. It was for the purpose of gaining that information that I interrogated the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COOPER, (when Mr. STEVENSON'S name was called.) The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STEVENSON] desired me to announce that he is paired with the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. GORDON.] The Senator from Kentucky would vote "yea" on this question, and the Senator from Georgia "nay."

Mr. DAVIS, (when Mr. CAPERTON'S name was called.) My colleague [Mr. CAPERTON] is paired with the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN.] If present my colleague would vote "nay," and I think the Senator from Ohio would vote "yea." They are both sick.

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 17, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Booth, Boutwell, Cameron of Wisconsin, Cragin, Dawes, Frelinghuysen, Hamlin, Howe, Logan, McMillan, Morrill, Oglesby, Paddock, Windom, and Wright—17

NAYS—Messrs. Barnum, Bogy, Christiancy, Cockrell, Conover, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Ferry, Hamilton, Ingalls, Jones of Florida, Kelly, Kernan, Key, Maxey, Merrimon, Mitchell, Norwood, Ransom, Spencer, and Withers—22.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Caperton, Clayton, Conkling, Dorsey, Eaton, Edmunds, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Harvey, Hitchcock, Johnston, Jones of Nevada, McCreery, McDonald, Morton, Patterson, Randolph, Robertson, Sargent, Saulsbury, Sharon, Sherman, Stevenson, Thurman, Wadleigh, Wallace, West, and Whyte—33.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair believes the Senator from Vermont withdrew the motion to indefinitely postpone.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the substitute offered by the Senator from Vermont, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. LOGAN. I was in hopes this bill could be so arranged that I could vote for it because there are some appropriations in it for my own State, and I believe that is the reason that most people vote for bills of this character; I do not know any other. But, without committing myself, I want to call the attention of the Senate to the proposition that the Senate has just refused to strike out. There are six pages, and supposing there to be ten items to a page there are sixty new surveys provided for in this bill of different harbors, sluices, creeks, spring branches, and duck puddles I could name—I dislike to do it, however—some of these rivers and creeks that I have crossed over myself; some of them I have jumped across, and if I did not I made my horse do it. The idea of providing for sixty or seventy surveys for the purpose of laying out a large margin for the next Congress to appropriate probably two or three million dollars, or a million at least, to be expended on these streams that will be surveyed during the year merely to get them started for the purpose of large expenditure of money, I do not think is proper legislation.

Mr. SPENCER. Will the Senator from Illinois allow me to interrupt him a moment? If he will read the latter part of the section he will notice that only $50,000 is appropriated for surveys.

Mr. LOGAN. It would make no difference if it was only five cents, if that was sufficient to commence the surveys, the meaning of it would be to complete the work, which would cost millions of dollars; and there is hardly an item mentioned in these new surveys that is worth the attention of this country at all. The idea of surveying some of the little streams mentioned here in different parts of the country, that almost every one who knows anything about the country is conversant with—the idea of surveying them for navigable streams to float the commerce of this country upon, is absurd and ridiculous. It is only the entering-wedge to large appropriations. It is an outrage, and if it was not that nearly every Senator has got an appropriation in this bill for some creek or river in his own State, it could not get five votes.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. President, I recognize the Senator from Iowa as the captain of this ship to-night, and I sail under his orders. I would suggest, as we are just upon the edge of a quorum and the bill is a very important one, whether we had not better adjourn until Monday. I make the suggestion to him and shall follow his wishes.

Mr. ALLISON. If we could vote on Monday without debate, as I think we all understand this bill pretty well, I should be very glad to do it.

Several SENATORS. Finish the bill now.

Mr. ANTHONY. You cannot pass it to-night.

Mr. ALLISON. Perhaps we can go on a little while longer.

Mr. WINDOM. What is the amount named in the amendment of the Senator from Vermont?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Four million dollars.

Mr. WINDOM. I move to amend by making it $5,000,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment has already been offered and rejected by the Senate.

Mr. WINDOM. I move, then, to make it $5,200,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is in order. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont to make the amount $5,200,000.

Mr. COCKRELL. What has become of the second section of this bill? Is that out of the way?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is out of the way.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is not out of the way; it is in the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. It will be in the way again after a while.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Illinois made objection to it. I suppose we had better vote on that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont to strike out "$4,000,000" and insert "$5,200,000."

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the substitute offered by the Senator from Vermont, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KEY, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. HITCHCOCK.] If he were here he would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

Mr. NORWOOD, (when Mr. GORDON's name was called.) On this question my colleague [Mr. GORDON] is paired with the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. STEVENSON.] If present my colleague would vote "nay," and the Senator from Kentucky "yea."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 12, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Booth, Cragin, Dawes, Edmunds, Hamlin, Logan, Morrill, Paddock, Wadleigh, and Wright—12.

NAYS—Messrs. Barnum, Bogy, Boutwell, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Cockrell, Conover, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Ferry, Hamilton, Howe, Ingalls, Jones of Florida, Kelly, Kernan, McMillan, Maxey, Merrimon, Mitchell, Norwood, Ransom, Spencer, Windom, and Withers—26.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Caperton, Clayton, Conkling, Dorsey, Eaton, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Harvey, Hitchcock, Johnston, Jones of Nevada, Key, McCreery, McDonald, Morton, Oglesby, Patterson, Randolph, Robertson, Sargent, Saulsbury, Sharon, Sherman, Stevenson, Thurman, Wallace, West, and Whyte—34.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I offer the following amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert:

That the sum of $5,500,000 is hereby appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, to be expended for the repair, extension, preservation, and completion of works for the improvement of rivers and harbors under the direction of the Secretary of War: Provided, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to cause such expenditures to be made so as to best subserve the interests of commerce; and he is required to report to Congress, at the opening of its December session, all expenditures made under the provisions of this act up to that time in detail.

Mr. President, I have only to say that this amendment is the same as the Senate has just disagreed to, except that it increases the sum, in order to reach the evident wishes of those Senators who are strongest for reform and the diminution of expenses, by the amount of a million and a half of dollars, while it is still three or four hundred thousand dollars below the reformatory measure, as it may be called, that came from the House of Representatives. I hope that everybody will vote for it who has the real interest of economy and the best interest of the public service at heart, because I wish again, in all seriousness, to call the attention of Senators to the well-known fact that in the time of a republican administration—and I do not refer to it to provoke political discussion, but only to say that when both Houses were republican and things were going, as our friends on the other side would say, with a flowing hand, and there was no House of Representatives to criticise in the hostile sense, as there is now, an appropriation of two or three million dollars was made in precisely these terms when a difficulty like that now existing had arisen; and the event proved as everybody agrees—I never heard it questioned at all—that this responsible expenditure in the responsible discretion of the proper department for these public works much better subserved the public interest and in the end everybody in all the States was better satisfied than they were by this little arrangement by States, "You give me and I will give you," and all that sort of thing that these bills are made up on. Therefore I appeal to gentlemen of all parties to do this wise and proper thing, if we can go up to that sum, and it seems the Senate is determined that we shall.

Mr. WITHERS. Will the Senator please say why, if that system operated so beneficially, it was abandoned the very next year and the old system substituted for it?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will state why, with my due share of mortification and humiliation and confession and shame, it is that according to human observation and human experience it was not quite so handy for people running for members of Congress not to have in their own control in a bill a certain sum of money to be spent in their districts, and that refers as well to republicans as democrats, for human nature is just the same. Whenever, therefore, a bill that has a show of decency on its face is made up by items of congressional districts, it goes through; and when it gets so bad that nobody can stand it, then we do the other thing, and we get better public service and better satisfaction to everybody except the candidate for some office.

Mr. KERNAN. I cannot vote for this amendment of five and a half millions or four millions, because I do not think it wise or proper legislation to appropriate that amount of money to be expended according to the discretion of one man.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have a word to say upon that, if the Senate will pardon me. The discretion of one man in respect of appropriations, if you call it one man, as it is not, has been practiced from the foundation of the Government; and for many years after the Government was founded the leading appropriations were made in bulk to be expended by the Secretaries and heads of the various Departments for foreign intercourse and for the administration of the Treasury, just as now for the administration of the Treasury there is a permanent appropriation for the collections of the customs revenues that runs up I do not know how high. My friend from Massachusetts can say, probably, but one or two or three millions every year, that Congress does not have anything to do with it at all; and it is no republican idea; it has been so always; and yet, in the main, everybody agrees it is the best way of providing, instead of saying that each custom-house for each district and port shall have so many men in it, and the money shall be expended in a certain way. So my friend from New York, I think, is not just in suggesting that this is an innovation on the custom, because practice has shown the reverse to be true.

Mr. HOWE. I wish to add one word to what the Senator from Vermont has remarked. We call every year on the very Department which is to have charge of these expenditures for estimates of the amount of money they want and the localities where that money is to be expended, and they tell us year after year. They call for more money than the representatives of the people think they can afford to expend in any year. Undoubtedly the capacity of the Engineer Corps is equal to expending more money than we can afford to appropriate in any one year. So this proposition is to limit the amount which we will apply to this work this year; and I want to say, for one, that I am perfectly willing to refer to the professional and the political responsibility of the officers at the head of the Engineer Corps for the expenditure of every dollar that is to be expended in the State of Wisconsin. I am willing to abide by their judgment. Therefore I shall vote for this amendment.

Mr. LOGAN. I have not taken up much of the time of the Senate on this bill, but I desire now to call the attention of the Senate again to this proposition. I see that it is a foregone conclusion, perhaps, what disposition is to be made of this bill. Where you find one side of the Chamber voting solid, with nearly each one perhaps having some particular favorite measure that induces him to do so, irrespective perhaps of that which would be generally beneficial to the country, and the other side dividing, it is perfectly natural to suppose that the bill will pass; but, before it does, I wish to give my reasons for voting for the proposition of the Senator from Vermont, which I shall do when my name is called.

I have counted in the brief time that I have been sitting here since I was last on the floor the new surveys that are proposed by the bill. I have figured along very rapidly and perhaps have not counted accurately; but about seventy will be found to be the number of the new surveys that are to be put in operation during the present year under this bill. Precisely one-fourth of the space of the bill is occupied with provisions for new surveys. An appropriation of $50,000, which is a very small amount it is true, is in this bill for that purpose. It may be said, or is said by some, that that is a small amount; but that amount is to be expended for the purpose of ascertaining if these creeks, spring branches, and ponds can be made navigable by any expenditure of money. That is the meaning of it. I have voted for appropriation bills, but I have always deemed it proper to vote for appropriations for the repair of harbors or the improvement of rivers that were navigable, that were of such a character as would be naturally advantageous to the commerce of the country; but when we undertake to make rivers, to dig out small streams in order to make rivers, we are going beyond that which was ever contemplated by the Constitution, and certainly beyond that which is proper and good legislation.

In the State of Illinois we have not been very fortunate in having appropriations. There is an appropriation in this bill for the Mississippi River, that bounds one side of the State which I in part represent, and there is an appropriation in it for the Illinois River. Until very recently the Illinois River has been improved by appropriations of our own people, and is now being improved by appropriations by the Legislature of our State. I venture the assertion that the Illinois River bears more commerce upon its bosom than every item that is mentioned in these seventy surveys all put together; but still we never asked an appropriation from the General Government for it. There is a small amount here for the purpose of carrying out the estimates in reference to that river; because at the time the Senator from Vermont mentions, when the Secretary of War distributed the gross appropriation, a small amount was given to the Illinois River because it was for the continuation of work that had been commenced. Work had commenced on the Illinois River a number of years ago under Joseph Johnston, well known in confederate circles, or at least on a report made by him, and on that ground a small amount of money was used for that purpose. The engineers have been doing some work on it, and a small appropriation is in this bill for that river now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. LOGAN. I move to postpone the bill indefinitely.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois moves to postpone the bill indefinitely.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask the privilege of the Senate to detain them a moment longer. If I had the time, if time was given, I would go over these several items, and call the attention of Senators to them, and I would ask Senators to state as Senators on this floor what the character of these streams is that are to be surveyed. Some of them I know myself and some of them I could name, but I do not wish to do so, that I do not believe you could float a flat-boat down, drawing only eighteen inches of water, in the highest water ever produced in them; some of them only have water in a heavy rain-storm, as I said the other day, to any great extent. Some of the streams in the South mentioned here I know something about. I have crossed them myself, and they are considerable streams; but the idea that they should be surveyed now for the purpose of getting appropriations at the next session for their improvement at the hands of the very men who are talking about economy and the reduction of taxation, is very strange to me. We ought not to appropriate one dollar in this bill except for such works as have already been surveyed.

The Engineer Department recommended to this Congress that we appropriate $14,000,000—for what? Fourteen million dollars for the purpose of continuing the work on rivers and harbors already surveyed, not for new surveys. Now, we propose to give them, instead of $14,000,000, $4,000,000 or $5,000,000, merely to continue the work, and then to add some seventy-odd surveys more in order that their estimate may be a great deal larger next year. If that is economy, I do not understand it. If that is proper legislation, I do not understand it. I will vote to give into the hands of the Secretary of War this amount of money, and rely upon his judgment and the judgment of the Engineer Corps, upon whose recommendations this bill is based, that this money shall be distributed in the places where it is needed; and that where it is not needed not one dollar shall be spent. These are my reasons. I withdraw the motion to postpone indefinitely.

Mr. WINDOM. I do not know but that there is a misapprehension as to this provision for surveys. Certainly there is not so much in it as the Senator from Illinois seems to indicate.

Mr. LOGAN. There will be a good deal in it before you get through with it.

Mr. WINDOM. I have the floor. The appropriation is for $50,000 for such examinations and surveys as the Secretary of War shall deem most important. With that proviso, it did not seem very material to the committee how many surveys were named, for only those that are most important in the estimation of the Secretary of War will be surveyed. I will read the whole provision:

> And the sum of $50,000 is hereby appropriated for such examinations and surveys, and for incidental repairs of harbors for which there is no special appropriation provided for by law.

So that the whole $50,000 is not for surveys, but a portion for harbors:

> Provided, That the Secretary of War shall make an estimate of the total cost of the examinations and surveys herein provided for; and in case the sum herein appropriated shall prove insufficient to complete said examinations and surveys, only such rivers and harbors shall be examined and surveyed as, in his judgment, are most important.

Now the honorable Senator from Illinois has great confidence in the Secretary of War. If he is willing to place the whole amount of five and a half millions in his discretion, certainly he ought to be willing to trust his discretion upon $50,000 for surveys.

Mr. LOGAN. I make the same motion again for the purpose of making one remark. It is not an objection to the $50,000 that I make; that is a small amount of money; but it is to the enumeration of certain rivers and creeks and streams that are to be surveyed. Although I have great confidence in the Secretary of War, does the Senator not well know that as to every one of the streams mentioned in this new survey section the members of Congress concerned and the Senator of the State will go to the Secretary of War and ask for the distribution of that $50,000 so that each one shall have a survey? What does a survey mean? It is a mere examination of the stream. If they merely go along it and make a report on it that is the meaning of a survey under this bill. After these surveys are all made, if there was only $10,000 appropriated instead of $50,000 appropriated, it would mean $50,000,000 in the next ten years. That is the objection I have to it, not that the $50,000 is a large amount, but it is to the surveying of these streams for future appropriations.

Mr. WINDOM. I think the Senator is unnecessarily frightened. The Secretary of War is not likely to send a peregrinating company of engineers to the country to walk along the banks of these streams and make report on them. If he is, then I am certainly not in favor of placing five millions and upward in his hands to be used in his discretion. The bill provides that he shall take only those that are most important, and the Senator from Illinois knows, I think, as well as I do, that not one in ten of the streams named here can be surveyed under the appropriation made.

Mr. LOGAN. What is the use of naming them here if not one in ten can be surveyed? For the purpose of keeping them on the list of streams to be appropriated for.

Mr. WINDOM. Because the Secretary of War, informed by the Engineer Department, knows better than we do which of these streams is the more important.

Mr. LOGAN. I withdraw the motion to postpone.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the substitute offered by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.]

Mr. MORRILL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. OGLESBY. I do not propose to detain the Senate but a very few moments, perhaps not the five minutes to which I am entitled.

I am about making up my mind to vote for this amendment. I am doing it with some reluctance. It is a great power to confer upon one Department of this Government, or upon one person executing the duties of that Department, to place a large amount of money at the disposal of the Corps of Engineers, under the direction of the Secretary of War. If river and harbor improvements are constitutional and right, it does seem to me that Congress should take the responsibility of naming the harbors and the rivers upon the information furnished to Congress by the Engineer Department. Congress should take the responsibility of naming which river and which harbor will best subserve the commerce of the country. It seems to me the responsibility is upon us for proper legislation, and therefore I shall vote for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont with some reluctance, doubting very considerably the propriety of the step. It is a departure from established custom; it is a departure from fixed law; it is a departure from the custom of the country, and I think, to some extent, it is a perilous adventure; but as we ventured to trust that Department once, I believe I will take the responsibility to-night (as I see the Senate is very anxious to vote on this bill and dispose of it) of voting for the amendment and making the trial.

But, Mr. President, are we to suppose that by transferring the expenditure of five millions and a half, if the amendment shall carry, the Secretary of War is to be liberated from the influences that control Congress in appropriating money for these purposes? Is the country to understand that the Secretary of War is not to be besieged; that the Engineer Department will not be besieged in detail for the expenditure of this fund to every object mentioned in this bill? I suppose appeals will be made there directly and forcibly and continuously for scattering this money over the country just as the Congress has been in the habit of scattering it, and the Engineer Corps in the War Department may very well say, "We can dribble this sum out in every direction, because we have heretofore surveyed these works; we have heretofore made recommendations upon them, and in the interest of commerce we can distribute this amount pro rata, according to the principle fixed in the bill in Congress which failed." I suppose that the Secretary of War will be besieged precisely as the committees of this body have been, and I doubt if we shall make any great progress in getting rid of that difficulty.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. OGLESBY. Mr. President, as I do not wish to delay one moment of time, I will not ask the liberty of making the usual motion for an indefinite postponement. I hope the Senate will come to a vote as speedily as possible.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 16, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Booth, Cameron of Wisconsin, Cragin, Dawes, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Hamlin, Howe, Logan, Morrill, Oglesby, Paddock, Wadleigh, and Windom—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Barnum, Bogy, Bruce, Christiancy, Cockrell, Conover, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Ferry, Hamilton, Ingalls, Jones of Florida, Kelly, Kernan, Key, Maxey, Merrimon, Mitchell, Norwood, Ransom, Spencer, and Withers—23.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Boutwell, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Caperton, Clayton, Conkling, Dorsey, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Harvey, Hitchcock, Johnston, Jones of Nevada, McCreery, McDonald, McMillan, Morton, Patterson, Randolph, Robertson, Sargent, Saulsbury, Sharon, Sherman, Stevenson, Thurman, Wallace, West, Whyte, and Wright—33.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MORRILL, (at nine o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.) I believe we had better think on this question until Monday. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I offer the following motion:

> That the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations, with instructions to report the bill so amended as to provide for not exceeding $5,500,000 in the whole, to be expended at points of the greatest importance to public interests in the preservation, repair, and completion of the public works to be named in the bill.

Upon this motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COOPER. I move to strike out "the committee" and insert "Senate." This is the Committee of the Whole. Let it be referred to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This bill will go to the Senate if this motion shall be voted down.

Mr. COOPER. I do not insist on the amendment.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 14, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Booth, Cragin, Dawes, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Hamlin, Howe, Logan, Morrill, Oglesby, Wadleigh, and Windom—14.

NAYS—Messrs. Barnum, Bogy, Bruce, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Cockrell, Conover, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Ferry, Hamilton, Ingalls, Jones of Florida, Kelly, Kernan, Key, Maxey, Merrimon, Mitchell, Norwood, Paddock, Ransom, Spencer, and Withers—25.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Boutwell, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Caperton, Clayton, Conkling, Dorsey, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Harvey, Hitchcock, Johnston, Jones of Nevada, McCreery, McDonald, McMillan, Morton, Patterson, Randolph, Robertson, Sargent, Saulsbury, Sharon, Sherman, Stevenson, Thurman, Wallace, West, Whyte, and Wright—33.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Shall the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole be concurred in in gross?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Separately, one by one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the first amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. The first amendment made as in Committee of the Whole is in line 12 of section 1, to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "one hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For the improvement of the harbor at Buffalo, New York, $100,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. ALLISON. I want to know what has become of the amendment in lines 9 and 10.

Mr. EDMUNDS. All the strikings out are gone.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The text of the bill was not changed there. The Senator from Vermont asks for the yeas and nays on concurring in this amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 17, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Booth, Bruce, Cameron of Wisconsin, Davis, Dawes, Hamilton, Howe, Jones of Florida, Kernan, Key, Mitchell, Ransom, Spencer, Wadleigh, Windom, and Withers—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Barnum, Bogy, Christiancy, Cockrell, Conover, Cooper, Cragin, Dennis, Ferry, Harvey, Ingalls, Kelly, Logan, Maxey, Merrimon, Norwood, Oglesby, and Paddock—18.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Bayard, Boutwell, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Caperton, Clayton, Conkling, Dorsey, Eaton, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamlin, Hitchcock, Johnston, Jones of Nevada, McCreery, McDonald, McMillan, Morrill, Morton, Patterson, Randolph, Robertson, Sargent, Saulsbury, Sharon, Sherman, Stevenson, Thurman, Wallace, West, Whyte, and Wright—37.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is not a quorum voting.

Mr. HAMILTON, (at nine o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.) I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 18, nays 21.

Mr. MERRIMON. I move to direct the Sergeant-at-Arms to request the presence of absent Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is a quorum present on the last vote by the count.

Mr. MERRIMON. I withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first amendment which will be read.

Mr. ALLISON. The yeas and nays were taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. But no quorum voted. That is the question now. The Clerk will call the roll again.

Mr. HOWE. Let the amendment be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 12, strike out "seventy-five" and insert "one hundred;" so as to read:

For the improvement of the harbor at Buffalo, New York, $100,000.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 23, nays 11; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Booth, Bruce, Cameron of Wisconsin, Cragin, Davis, Dennis, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Hamlin, Jones of Florida, Kelly, Kernan, Key, McMillan, Mitchell, Morrill, Paddock, Ransom, Spencer, Windom, and Withers—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Barnum, Bogy, Christiancy, Cockrell, Conover, Cooper, Harvey, Ingalls, Maxey, Merrimon, and Oglesby—11.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Boutwell, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Caperton, Clayton, Conkling, Dawes, Dorsey, Eaton, Edmunds, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton, Hitchcock, Howe, Johnston, Jones of Nevada, Logan, McCreery, McDonald, Morton, Norwood, Patterson, Randolph, Robertson, Sargent, Saulsbury, Sharon, Sherman, Stevenson, Thurman, Wadleigh, Wallace, West, Whyte, and Wright—38.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is not a quorum voting.

Mr. FERRY. I ask for a call of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan moves a call of the Senate. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and thirty-seven Senators answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is a quorum present. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BOOTH, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Texas, [Mr. HAMILTON.] If he were here he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 10; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Boutwell, Bruce, Cameron of Wisconsin, Conover, Cragin, Davis, Dennis, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Hamlin, Howe, Jones of Florida, Kernan, Key, McMillan, Mitchell, Morrill, Norwood, Paddock, Ransom, Spencer, Windom, and Withers—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Bogy, Cockrell, Cooper, Harvey, Ingalls, Kelly, Maxey, Merrimon, Oglesby, and Wadleigh—10.

ABSENT.—Messrs. Alcorn, Barnum, Bayard, Booth, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Caperton, Christiancy, Clayton, Conkling, Dawes, Dorsey, Eaton, Edmunds, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton, Hitchcock, Johnston, Jones of Nevada, Logan, McCreery, McDonald, Morton, Patterson, Randolph, Robertson, Sargent, Saulsbury, Sharon, Sherman, Stevenson, Thurman, Wallace, West, Whyte, and Wright—37.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is not a quorum voting.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, (at nine o'clock and fifty minutes p. m.) Well, Mr. President, we have been here nearly eleven hours attending to this business, and I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 14, noes 20.

Mr. SPENCER. I move that the absent Senators be called.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I have been endeavoring to stand by this bill through all its adversities and misfortunes, and I trust the friends of the bill, as they are denominated, now will allow me to move an adjournment. We have no quorum here; I do not believe we shall have a quorum to-night unless we send for people.

Mr. WINDOM. The Senator from Iowa will allow me to make a suggestion, and I believe that we can pass a bill if he will follow it. Take an adjournment now and let the Senator from Iowa prepare an amendment to his substitute which shall make the whole sum not to exceed five and one-half millions, and I believe we can pass it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at nine o'clock and fifty-two minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, July 24, 1876.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read.

Mr. MORRILL. Is there a quorum present?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will ascertain by count. [A pause.] There is not a quorum present by actual count. The roll will be called, if the Senator from Vermont insists upon it.

Mr. MORRILL. I think we had better have a quorum.

The Secretary called the roll of the Senate, and, after some delay, thirty-seven Senators having answered to their names,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore, (at eleven o'clock and twenty minutes a. m.) There is a quorum present. The Journal will be approved.

CORRECTIONS OF RECORD.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to make a correction in my remarks on Saturday evening. I think that I made a mistake in reading from the statistical tables and said "exports" when I should have said "imports" and "imports" when I should have said "exports." In one instance I reversed the figures "1875" to "1876," and at another time said "1876" when I should have said "1875." I presume that I made the mistake myself; I know I am entirely responsible for it, because I had an opportunity of correcting the manuscript of the reporter and did not do it.

Mr. HAMLIN. I wish to state that there is a matter which ought to be considered to-day by the Senate in executive session. We are to have the impeachment trial at twelve o'clock. If we do not have an executive session this morning, I fear we shall not have it to-day at all. There is a very decided necessity for it, and I must therefore ask the Senate to go into executive session.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish the Senator would let me say one word first.

Mr. HAMLIN. Very well.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Chair, by which, of course, I mean officially the Senate, and my honorable friend from North Carolina, [Mr. MERRIMON,] to what may be called a personal explanation. That is the only head that it can come in under that I know of. I see in the RECORD of Monday, July 24, a statement of the debate on the river and harbor bill.

Mr. DAWES. On what page?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Page 27, in the left-hand column. This running conversational debate occurs:

Mr. MERRIMON. That money was not gotten from the people by taxation, nor was that taken into the account which I have read, which shows the net ordinary expenses of administering the Government every year from 1865. If any Senator can answer the point I made, let him answer it. The figures and facts cited cannot be answered by going off on the war.

Mr. WEST. Some of your figures have been answered.

Mr. MERRIMON. I do not know when it was done.

Mr. WEST. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] answered your figures.
Mr. MERRIMON. No, sir; I read exactly what was in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, no more and no less; and will you deny the record?
Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

So you will perceive, Mr. President, that I am made by this report to assert, in the presence of the Senate and, as we are fond of saying, "of the country," that I will deny the recorded report of the Secretary of the Treasury. What the honora ble Senator from North Carolina did say in that connection was in re ply to the honorable Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. WEST,] who said:

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] answered your figures.
Mr. MERRIMON. No, sir; I read exactly what was in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury.
Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

The report as it is printed, through somebody's intervention, has made me say that I deny the record, when what I did say was in response to the Senator from North Carolina when he said:

I read exactly what was in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury.

And I simply said "Certainly;" that is to say, "You have."

Mr. MERRIMON. I thought the Senator said "certainly" in derision.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should be glad to know, Mr. President, how this thing comes in this way. If the report of a conversational debate cannot be left so that the RECORD shows fairly what Senators do say and does not misrepresent them, then I think we ought to have some process or some rule by which the truth can be reported just as it takes place. I of course put myself in an unfortunate attitude too often to feel particularly sensitive on most subjects; but when by the correction of somebody's remarks by somebody and in some way I am made, instead of agreeing to what a Senator says, that he has been reading out of the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, to appear to say that I will deny that report, I think it is carrying the joke a little too far.

Mr. MERRIMON. There were so many Senators who replied to me about the time the Senator from Vermont interposed that I cannot recollect exactly what was said; but I do remember when he made that remark that I thought he was speaking in derision, as he had been repeatedly in a portion of the remarks I had made during the day. I saw the manuscript of my remarks, and I overlooked it hastily. Whether I noticed this point or not, I would not now undertake to say without seeing the manuscript. But, be that as it may, I really thought the Senator said "certainly" at the time in derision, and I think the Senate so understood him.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am a little astonished at that, because the Senator had read from the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, and he had read truly as far as he went, and I undertook to point out in respect of that very report that he had not read the whole thing, and referred to that text of Scripture which is so often referred to as making one thing mean entirely different from what it really does, by not reading the whole of it.

Mr. MERRIMON. Do I understand the Senator to say or imply that I in any way whatever changed what he said?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, sir; but I do mean to imply, because I am informed by the reporter, who is always absolutely accurate, that what was said and what appears in his notes is this:

Mr. MERRIMON. No, sir; I read exactly what was in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury.
Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

Now, then, as the Senator says, if I correctly understand him, that he has corrected his remarks, the Senator has so corrected them as to make me say this:

Mr. MERRIMON. No, sir; I read exactly what was in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, no more and no less; and will you deny the record?
Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

He makes me, therefore, by the change in his own remarks, deny the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, when taking his remarks as he stated them and as I replied to them, I simply said that he was truly reading, as far as he went, from what appeared in the report.

Mr. MERRIMON. I repeat that I thought the Senator made the remark in derision, and I still think so.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I have done all I can about it. If there is not any way now known to law and to public propriety of having the current debates of the Senate reported as they are spoken, and not corrected so as to put Senators in exactly an opposite attitude from that which they really occupy, and make them responsible for remarks that were never made at all, then I think we ought to have some rule which will do it. That is all I have to say.

Mr. MERRIMON. I am very sure that I am as far from wanting to place the Senator from Vermont in a false position as any one. Everybody who knows that Senator knows that a trifle of that sort cannot place him in that position. I have said to him that I regarded the word "certainly" as used in derision; I so regard it now; and he has not said otherwise. It seems to me a very small matter.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did not say it in derision; but that would not make any difference. What I said I said, and what the Senator said he said; and I submit he had no right to add to what he said in such a way as to make my remark appear exactly the reverse from what it would have appeared had the report been printed truly as the thing occurred.

Now, I move that the Official Reporter be directed to furnish the Congressional Printer for the full edition, or whatever it is called, with an exact report of that debate as it took place.

Mr. MERRIMON. I trust that will not be done until I see the manuscript.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is my motion, Mr. President, as a privileged motion. There are two or three other things that are just as bad, but one is a type, and it is enough for this purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Reporter furnish the Printer with the report exactly as it was made in the Senate.

Mr. MERRIMON. I think that the whole Senate is somewhat interested in this subject. I do not know how the manuscript in this particular respect reads. I shall examine it and see. We all know that almost every Senator, after he has delivered remarks in the Senate, and especially in the course of a running debate, desires to see the reporter's notes and to make such corrections as will place him exactly right upon the record. If I am to be denied that privilege, if it may be termed privilege, or courtesy, if it may be termed courtesy, I think the rule ought to apply alike to everybody. The substance of what I said on Saturday is here, and nearly every word that I said on Saturday. I might want to correct the grammar in one place; I might want to substitute one word for another in another place; and it is possible—I will not undertake to say how it is—that here I may have made the change the Senator suggests. I will not say that I did not, because I do not remember; but be that as it may, I maintain that no injustice is done the Senator by putting the construction on the word "certainly" that I put on it, and which I believe is the proper one. I know, and the Senator knows, and the Senate knows that repeatedly in the debate on Saturday the Senator was throwing out remarks, by way of reply, in derision, as in the next remark made by the Senator:

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator read it just as the man read the Bible: "If Satan entice thee to sin, consent thou," and there he stopped, leaving off the "not."

He made various remarks of that sort, apparently playful; sometimes more in earnest than play, however; and, if I misapprehended the meaning of the word "certainly," of course I shall regret very much that I did him injustice. I would not do anybody injustice.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Well, Mr. President, my friend's ideas of injustice may be somewhat different from mine; but I confess, with my small means of judging what is just and unjust, I should not have thought it just to change my own remarks so as to make the Senator say a thing exactly the opposite from what he did say.

Mr. MERRIMON. That depends on how he used the word. The Senator had been questioning all day the authenticity of the tables I had produced, and intimating to the Senate, sometimes in terms, sometimes by suggestion, that the quotations I had made were not correct.

And now let me make this further remark: If the Senator thinks that injustice is done him, I have disavowed any such purpose. I would not do him any injustice; I have no reason to do him any injustice, or anybody else; and I can see very little in the whole matter.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator thinks that to add to his remark, that he read what was in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury to which I said, "Certainly," the words, "no more and no less, and will you deny the record?" and make me say "certainly" to that inquiry that I will deny the record—if he thinks that is not doing injustice to a brother Senator, then I am sure I do not perceive exactly the standard by which he measures justice.

Mr. MERRIMON. I say it would unless you used that word in derision, as I believed you did.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did not use it in derision; and if I did it would mean exactly the same thing. I have not got so exactly lost in deriding foolishness even as to make myself far more foolish still, and to say that I deny a record which is produced unless it is a false one, as I knew that report of the Secretary of the Treasury was not

There is another case just below that where the honorable Senator has increased the stature of his remarks by multiplying them by about three, which put what I said following in an entirely different attitude; and there are some other instances; but I do not care to waste the time of the Senate about them. My object was to call attention to what appears to me to be a gross abuse of the privilege, if it be a privilege, of correcting the grammar, for that is the idea of it, the style of a gentleman's remarks; and my motion is now not directed to the Senator from North Carolina any more than it is to myself and everybody else who participated in this debate, and that simply is that the debate on that day shall be furnished for the full edition of the RECORD just as it took place. As to me undoubtedly it has so appeared because I have not seen the manuscript, or inquired for it, or heard of it, at all. That is my motion.

Mr. MERRIMON. I am perfectly willing to say to the Senator that if he feels that he is in any sense injured, the reporter shall look to exactly what was said and put it down just as it was said. I repeat what I said a while ago, that whether I changed the manuscript of my remarks in that respect or not, I do not know and will not undertake to say. I corrected it hurriedly, but if it is in any way interfered with, I am perfectly content that the reporter shall put down the words just as they were uttered by me. It will be remembered that that was a very hurried running debate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think that ought to be done in every case. I did not feel myself at liberty to even look over the notes of what I said on Saturday, because when other persons participate in a debate with me I cannot tell but that even a grammatical change may make absurd what is said immediately after by the gentleman who is conversing or talking with me. I think, therefore, in these current debates no liberties ought to be taken with them, and no changes ought to be made in grammar or anything else. But I claim the right, and I suppose the Senator from North Carolina and all of us claim the right, when we make a set speech as it is called, a formal speech, pursuing a deliberate line of argument, to correct mistakes of grammar or even to add or subtract somewhat from the body of the speech as delivered. But this kind of debate such as we had here on Saturday in my judgment ought not to be changed, but it ought to appear just as the reporters have it, "with all its imperfections on its head." I did not feel at liberty to change what I said though I see in the report of the debate some grammatical mistakes and some errors that I should like very much to correct, but I spoke in the midst of a running debate where other Senators were interposing, and therefore I would not take the liberty of changing anything that might affect the meaning of what others said.

Mr. MERRIMON. I concur in the rule as stated by the Senator from Ohio; but I know and every Senator here knows who engages in debate at all that the practice is, whenever a Senator desires, to allow him to see the report of his remarks, to correct crude expressions, to substitute one word for another, to correct grammatical errors, and to make the sense fuller occasionally by adding a word or two. I believe the practice is wise, and I think I am as much entitled to be indulged in that respect as anybody else; and I can but express my astonishment that the Senator from Vermont should make such an ado about a matter of trifling moment in any way. It manifests a spirit of unfriendly captiousness that I really did not expect from him.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is the difference between truth and falsehood; that is all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont has moved that the reporter furnish to the printer the words as they were uttered in the debate on Saturday last on the river and harbor bill.

Mr. MERRIMON. I have no objection to that.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Before the vote is taken on that question I desire to say that whatever may have been the custom, when a gentleman is making a speech and a member on the other side jumps up and interrupts him in the middle of a sentence so that he is not enabled to complete the sentence he was uttering when interrupted by another Senator proposing an interrogatory to him, there is nothing whatever unfair in the Senator in justice to himself completing the sentence he was about uttering when he was interrupted. I think that that is a privilege which every gentleman on this floor ought to have; otherwise he would frequently appear absurd in the RECORD, not by reason of his inability to express himself clearly and distinctly, but because of the interruption which has been propounded. I do not think it is required by any rule of propriety that not the slightest alteration should be made even in a cursory debate between gentlemen, because sometimes there will occur instances of the kind which I have mentioned.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have no interest in this matter save that the RECORD shall be right. I think the RECORD ought to show everything just as it occurs in the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is it.

Mr. COCKRELL. Precisely; and if a Senator is stopped in the middle of a sentence the RECORD ought to show that, because that is the way the transaction took place in the Senate. It think it is nothing but right that the reports should be made just as the debates occur; and if we make grammatical mistakes here, they are not the first ones that have ever been made; and I do not suppose that it would mar the reputation of any of the distinguished Senators in this body very much if such a thing should be discovered in any of their speeches. I do hope that hereafter the RECORD will be made just as the occurrence took place in the Senate and everything taken down just as it is said, and if a sentence is broken off in the middle by an interruption, let it show that fact.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. President, I am very glad to hear this debate, for I have been trying for more than a month to get before the Senate a resolution reported from the Committee on Printing requiring that the debates shall be taken down precisely as they are said, and printed precisely as they are taken down, and I hope that this circumstance will lead to the early consideration and the passage of that resolution.

Mr. MERRIMON. I only want to say that I hope the rule will apply to all alike.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So do I.

Mr. MERRIMON. And I add, as I said a while ago, that I have no objection in the world to the reporter taking his notes and making that matter, or any other matter indeed, just exactly as it was said here, although the Senator will remember that at the time this colloquy took place half a dozen Senators were endeavoring to interrogate me at the same time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Reporter of the Senate furnish to the Congressional Printer the report of the debate on Saturday last on the river and harbor bill just as it was uttered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. For insertion in the full edition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. For insertion in the full edition as it was uttered.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HAMLIN. I now renew my motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twelve minutes spent in executive session the doors were re-opened.

NUMBER OF CIVIL OFFICERS.

Mr. CRAGIN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the head of each Executive Department of the Government be requested to furnish the Senate with the aggregate number of civil officers in or connected with their respective Departments (not including laborers or mechanics employed by the day, or contractors) for each of the following years, namely: 1859, 1861, 1863, 1865, 1867, 1869, 1871, 1873, and 1875.

EQUALIZATION OF BOUNTIES.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask the consent of the Senate to take up the bill, House bill No. 58, not for the purpose of discussing it or passing it to-day, but for the purpose of agreeing to certain amendments that will take but a moment, so that the bill may be then printed with the amendments as agreed to by the Senate and remain where it is on the Calendar.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the bill?

Mr. LOGAN. The bounty bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What are the amendments?

Mr. LOGAN. I will mention them. I want to insert the word "enlisted" preceding the word "wagoner," so as to read "enlisted wagoner," instead of including all teamsters.

Mr. GORDON. I have some morning business.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suggest to the Senator from Illinois that the simplest and the easiest way to fix these amendments would be just to have the bill recommitted and have it reported back with the amendments.

Mr. LOGAN. It has been reported with amendments; but the action on the amendments to the bill will show the disposition of the Senate toward the bill; and it will take but a few minutes to agree or disagree to them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It will take a good while if it shows the disposition of the Senate, because, if the amendments involve any of the questions embraced in the bill, then of course it must lead to examination and debate.

Mr. LOGAN. The amendments do not involve any of the great questions in the bill. They involve only the perfecting of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There are some that are very important that I have noticed.

Mr. LOGAN. Well, I move that this bill be taken up for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill which he has named, understood to be the bounty bill.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Will an objection carry it over?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will not. It depends on the majority of the Senate.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not propose to take up the bill with a view to have a vote on it, but merely with a view of having the Senate agree or disagree to the amendments. If the Senate disagree to the amendments, then I should have the sense of the Senate on the amendments. That is the only object I have.

Mr. SAULSBURY. If the bill is taken up will it not become the regular order of business?

Mr. LOGAN. Not at all. It will not take three minutes to agree or disagree to the amendments. I will not ask the yeas and nays on any amendment. I ask for a vote on my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois moves the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. LOGAN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 22, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Boutwell, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Dawes, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Hamlin, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Key, Logan, McMillan, Mitchell, Paddock, Wadleigh, West, Windom, and Wright—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Bogy, Booth, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Eaton, Gordon, Hamilton, Kelly, Kernan, McCreery, Maxey, Merrimon, Norwood, Ransom, Robertson, Sargent, Saulsbury, Stevenson, and Withers—20.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Barnum, Bayard, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Caperton, Clayton, Cockrell, Conkling, Conover, Cragin, Dorsey, Edmunds, Goldthwaite, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, McDonald, Morrill, Morton, Oglesby, Patterson, Randolph, Sharon, Sherman, Spencer, Thurman, Wallace, and Whyte—30.

So the motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 58) to equalize the bounties of soldiers who served in the late war for the Union was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill. Having read the first section——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of twelve o'clock has arrived.

Mr. LOGAN. The managers and counsel are not here. I hope the Senate will allow a few minutes until this bill can be read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think we ought to finish this impeachment trial. The managers ought to be here, if they are not.

Mr. LOGAN. I will only say to the Senator from Vermont that the other day when it was asked for another purpose that the trial go over and the managers and counsel were all here the time was extended to accommodate him.

Mr. EDMUNDS. To accommodate me?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, on a land bill the other day.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not to accommodate me, certainly.

Mr. LOGAN. You were making a speech; I know that.

Mr. HARVEY. That business was not allowed to proceed, notwithstanding the appeal of my colleague and myself.

Mr. LOGAN. I thought it was; but if it was not, I stand corrected. I know the trial was delayed the other morning for some purpose.

Mr. HARVEY. I hope the Senator from Vermont will withdraw his objection.

Mr. LOGAN. Whenever the managers and counsel are ready to proceed, I will then of my own motion withdraw any further proceedings.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They ought to be ready to proceed now, Mr. President.

Mr. LOGAN. They are not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not know that.

Mr. LOGAN. As soon as the indication is given on either side that they are ready to proceed, I will at once ask the Senate to stop proceedings on this bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We ought to ascertain first if they are not ready to proceed, why not, and know whether this trial is going to last forever, and, if it is, what is the reason; and then if it is dropped my friend will be just as well off as he is now. I insist on the regular order.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. U. S. GRANT, jr., his Secretary, announced that the President had this day approved and signed the act (S. No. 1000) to continue the public printing; and the act (S. No. 952) to remove the political disabilities of G. T. Beauregard, of New Orleans, Louisiana.

IMPEACHMENT OF W. W. BELKNAP.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Legislative and executive business will now be suspended and the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the articles of impeachment exhibited by the House of Representatives against William W. Belknap, late Secretary of War.

The Senate then proceeded to the trial of the impeachment of William W. Belknap, late Secretary of War.

During the trial, on motion of Mr. EDMUNDS for a recess of fifteen minutes, the proceedings were suspended and the Senate resumed its

LEGISLATIVE SESSION.

Mr. ANTHONY. Is it in order to make a motion with regard to the hour of meeting of the legislative session?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not in order.

Mr. ANTHONY. Can such a motion be entertained by general consent?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It may be received by general consent.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet to-morrow at twelve o'clock.

Mr. DAVIS. I hope not. Let us have an hour for legislative session before the court meets.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think it would be more convenient to meet at twelve to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to suspending the trial and resuming legislative session in order to consider the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. WITHERS. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia objects.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask unanimous consent for a short legislative session to enable me to have an order made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia has objected to a legislative session.

Mr. MITCHELL. I wish simply to have an order made to withdraw some papers. I hope there will be no objection to it. It will take but a moment.

Mr. DAVIS. We had better go on with the trial.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. DAVIS. For that purpose only I will not object.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is all I want. I offer the following order:

Ordered, That Battelle & Evans have leave to withdraw their petition and papers from the files of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Has there been an adverse report?

Mr. MITCHELL. There has been an adverse report in this case.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then copies must be left.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Copies will be left, according to the rule.

IMPEACHMENT OF W. W. BELKNAP.

The Senate resumed its session for the trial of the impeachment of William W. Belknap.

The Senate sitting for the trial of the impeachment of William W. Belknap having adjourned then resumed its

LEGISLATIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes its legislative business.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet at twelve o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know that will excite opposition. I would rather we should go into executive session. Perhaps we can consider it there.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio declines to withdraw his motion. The question is on that motion.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were re-opened.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet to-morrow at twelve o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at four o'clock and forty-five minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, July 24, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of Friday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate was ready to proceed upon the impeachment of William W. Belknap and to receive the managers on the part of the House, and that the Senate Chamber was prepared with accommodations for the reception of the House of Representatives.

It further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, with amendments; in which concurrence was requested:

An act (H. R. No. 890) for the relief of Randall Brown, of Nashville, Tennessee;

An act (H. R. No. 516) for the relief of Floyd C. Babcock; and

An act (H. R. No. 1516) to regulate the issue of artificial limbs to disabled soldiers, seamen, and others.

And it further announced the passage of the following bills; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (S. No. 982) providing for the completion of the Washington Monument; and

An act (S. No. 992) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue a register and change the name of the schooner Captain Charles Robbins to Minnie.

AMMUNITION CONTRABAND TO HOSTILE INDIANS.

Mr. HURLBUT. I ask unanimous consent of the House to introduce a joint resolution on public business which I think will not be objected to by any member.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution will be first read for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas it is ascertained that the hostile Indians of the Northwest are largely equipped with arms which require special metallic cartridges, and that such special ammunition is in large part supplied to such hostile Indians directly or indirectly through traders and others in the Indian country:

Be it therefore resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and requested to take such measures as in his judgment may be necessary to prevent such special metallic ammunition being conveyed to such hostile Indians, and is further authorized to declare the same contraband of war in such district of country as he may designate during the continuance of hostilities.

There was no objection; and the joint resolution (H. R. No. 154) prohibiting sale of special metallic cartridges to hostile Indians was read a first and second time, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HURLBUT. I move the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs with leave to report at any time.

The motion was agreed to.

MORNING HOUR.

Mr. HALE. I now demand the regular order of business. I have never known any one recognized before the morning hour on Monday during seven years before this session of Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order of business being demanded, the morning hour now begins at twelve o'clock and fifteen minutes; and this being Monday, the first business in order is the call of the States and Territories, beginning with the State of Maine, for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions for reference to their appropriate committees, not to be brought back on motions to reconsider. Under this call memorials and resolutions of State and territorial Legislatures may be presented for reference and printing.

TERRITORIAL ELECTIONS.

Mr. HALE (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3932) to regulate elections in the Territories of the United States; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. HALE. I ask for the reading of the bill.

The bill was read in full.

Mr. HALE. I move the bill be referred to the Committee on the Territories, without printing.

The motion was agreed to.

AGNES FAIRLY.

Mr. HENDEE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3933) granting a pension to Agnes Fairly, widow of David Fairly; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

WASHINGTON CITY AND POINT LOOKOUT RAILROAD.

Mr. HENDEE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3934) supplementary to an act entitled "An act authorizing the Washington City and Point Lookout Railroad to extend a railroad into and within the District of Columbia," approved January 27, 1873; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. HOSKINS. I ask that the bill be read.

The bill was read in full, referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

CONDEMNED CANNON TO BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.

Mr. PIERCE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3935) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver condemned ordnance to the municipal authorities of Boston, Massachusetts; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. HURLBUT. I ask the bill be read.

The bill was read in full, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

REDUCTION OF INTERNAL-REVENUE TAX.

Mr. HOSKINS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3936) to reduce the internal-revenue tax, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. HOSKINS. I ask the bill be read.

The bill was read in full, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

CIRCULATION OF PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

Mr. HOSKINS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3937) to facilitate the circulation of public documents; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. HOSKINS. I ask the bill be read.

The bill was read in full, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

SOLDIERS' MONUMENT, WESTCHESTER COUNTY, NEW YORK.

Mr. COX (by request of his colleague) [Mr. ODELL] introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3938) donating condemned cannon for the soldiers' monument to be erected at Yonkers and Sing Sing, and by the Battle of White Plains Monument Association, in Westchester County, State of New York; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CUSTER'S COMMAND.

Mr. MACDOUGALL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3939) granting a special pension to the widows and orphans of the officers and men who fell in the battle with Indians on the Little Big Horn River; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I ask that the bill be read.

The bill was read in full, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

W. A. TAYLOR, M. D.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York, (by request,) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3940) for the relief of William A. Taylor, M. D., of Bastrop County, Texas; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Claims, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM P. BAGGETT.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York, also (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3941) for the relief of William P. Baggett, of Lincoln County, Mississippi; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Claims, and ordered to be printed.

NELSON POTTER.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York, also (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3942) for the relief of Nelson Potter, of Hinds County, in the State of Mississippi; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN CLEARY.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York, also (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3943) for the relief of John Cleary, a resident of Hinds County, in the State of Mississippi; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

SAMUEL W. LANCASTER.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York, also (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3944) for the relief of Samuel W. Lancaster, of Madison County, Mississippi; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

FRANK A. PAGE.

Mr. MUTCHLER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3945) for the relief of Frank A. Page; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGE PARSONS.

Mr. JOHN REILLY introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3946) granting a pension to George Parsons; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

L. L. REAMEY.

Mr. JOHN REILLY also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3947) for the relief of L. L. Reamey, United States Navy; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

EZRA M. THOMAS.

Mr. WALSH introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3948) for the relief of Ezra M. Thomas, of Frederick County, Maryland; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGE THOMAS.

Mr. WALSH also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3949) for the relief of George Thomas, of Frederick County, Maryland; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MICHAEL CULLER.

Mr. WALSH also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3950) for the relief of Michael Culler, of Frederick County, Maryland; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

RICHARD T. WEST.

Mr. WALSH also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3951) for the relief of Richard T. West, of Montgomery County, Maryland; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGE E. STONEBRAKER.

Mr. WALSH also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3952) for the relief of George E. Stonebraker, administrator of Christian Stonebraker, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

He also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3953) for the relief of George E. Stonebraker, of Washington County, Maryland; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JASPER M. JACKSON.

Mr. WALSH also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3954) for the relief of Jasper M. Jackson, of Montgomery County, Maryland; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES F. PEERCE.

Mr. WALSH also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3955) for the relief of James F. Peerce, of Montgomery County, Maryland; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN Q. LARMAN AND OTHERS.

Mr. STOWELL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3956) for the relief of John Q. Larman, Joseph L. Harley, and Thomas P. Sparks; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Claims, and ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF NAME OF SCHOONER.

Mr. WADDELL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3957) to change the name of the schooner Charlotte Ann Pigott to The Evelyn; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

LIZZIE ROGERS.

Mr. DARRALL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3958) for the relief of Lizzie Rogers, of Saint Mary Parish, Louisiana; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

CHARLES CLINTON.

Mr. DARRALL also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3959) for the relief of Charles Clinton, late assistant treasurer of the United States at New Orleans, Louisiana; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask that that bill may be read in full.

The bill was read in full; and was referred to the Committee of Claims, and ordered to be printed.

PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. FOSTER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3960) to alter and amend the act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862, and also to alter and amend the act of Congress approved July 2, 1864, in amendment of said first-named act; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. HURLBUT. I call for the reading of the bill.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. HURLBUT. I withdraw the request for the further reading.

The bill was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SAVAGE. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would state that the call of the States and Territories has not been completed, but by unanimous consent the Chair hopes it will be allowed to be done. Quite a number of gentlemen have requested the Chair for leave to introduce bills for reference only.

Mr. SAVAGE. I object; if gentlemen will filibuster in the morning hour they will have to take the consequences.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The morning hour has expired.

PARDON OF DESERTERS.

Mr. LUTTRELL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3961) for the pardon of certain deserters from the United States Army in 1848; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

LANDS SOLD FOR DIRECT TAXES.

Mr. YOUNG. I move that the rules be suspended and the joint resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk be passed.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That the Attorney-General, Secretary of the Treasury, and Commissioner of Internal Revenue be, and they are hereby, directed to suspend all further action in reference to lands sold for direct taxes under the act of August 5, 1861, and the various acts amendatory thereof, until the 1st day of February, 1877.

Mr. HALE. That is a simple suspension of the law.

Mr. YOUNG. It is the resolution I showed the gentleman.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think there ought to be some explanation of the measure.

Mr. YOUNG. I ask unanimous consent to explain the effect of the resolution.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I object to it.

Mr. YOUNG. If the House will allow me a moment, I think there will be no objection to the joint resolution; it does not change the existing law, but simply suspends it.

The question was on suspending the rules; and on a division there were—ayes 96, noes 48.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Two-thirds have voted for the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. KIMBALL. Two-thirds of a quorum have not voted in favor of the motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin is correct.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. YOUNG. I call for the yeas and nays. I want to see how many members here will vote against this resolution.

The question was on ordering the yeas and nays; and on a division there were ayes 34, noes not counted.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DUNNELL. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Tennessee be allowed to explain the bill.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I object.

Mr. YOUNG. The object of the resolution——

[Cries of "Order!"]

Mr. DUNNELL. I trust the gentleman from Indiana will withdraw his objection to a brief explanation. If the joint resolution is a proper one, we ought to pass it.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I beg to say that I will not do it.

The question was taken on Mr. YOUNG's motion; and there were—yeas 141, nays 45, not voting 98; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anderson, Atkins, Bagby, George A. Bagley, Bland, Boone, Bradford, Bradley, Bright, John Young Brown, Buckner, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Campbell, Candler, Cate, Caulfield, Chittenden, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cochrane, Collins, Cook, Davis, Davy, De Bolt, Dibrell, Dobbins, Dunnell, Durham, Eames, Eden, Ely, Evans, Felton, Finley, Forney, Fort, Foster, Franklin, Frye, Gause, Gibson, Goode, Gunter, Andrew H. Hamilton, Hardenbergh, Harrison, Hartridge, Hartzell, Haymond, Henderson, Hereford, Hill, Hooker, Hopkins, House, Hubbell, Thomas L. Jones, Kelley, Kimball, Knott, Lamar, Franklin Landers, Lane, Le Moyne, Levy, Lewis, Luttrell, Mackey, MacDougall, McDill, McFarland, Milliken, Mills, Monroe, Morrison, Mutchler, Neal, New, O'Brien, Page, Payne, Phelps, John F. Philips, Pierce, Piper, Potter, Rainey, Rea, Reagan, John Reilly, James B. Reilly, Rice, Riddle, John Robbins, William M. Robbins, Roberts, Scales, Schleicher, Sheakley, Singleton, Siemons, Smalls, William E. Smith, Springer, Stevenson, Stone, Tarbox, Teese, Terry, Thomas, Thompson, Thornburgh, Tucker, Tufts, Turney, John L. Vance, Robert B. Vance, Waddell, Charles C. B. Walker, Gilbert C. Walker, Walsh, Ward, Warren, Erastus Wells, White, Whitthorne, Wigginton, Wike, Willard, Alpheus S. Williams, James Williams, James D. Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, William B. Williams, Willis, Woodburn, and Young—141.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Ainsworth, John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Bell, Blair, William R. Brown, Horatio C. Burchard, Samuel D. Burchard, Cannon, Caswell, Conger, Crapo, Cutler, Danford, Darrall, Goodin, Hendee, Hoskins, Hunter, Hurlbut, Lawrence, Leavenworth, Magoon, Nash, Norton, O'Neill, Packer, William A. Phillips, Robinson, Sampson, Savage, Seelye, Sinnickson, Stowell, Martin I. Townsend, Washington Townsend, Van Vorhes, Wait, Whiting, Charles G. Williams, and James Wilson—45.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ashe, John H. Bagley, jr., Banning, Bass, Beebe, Blackburn, Bliss, Blount, Burleigh, Cason, Chapin, Cowan, Cox, Crounse, Culberson, Denison, Douglas, Durand, Egbert, Ellis, Faulkner, Freeman, Fuller, Garfield, Glover, Hale, Robert Hamilton, Hancock, Haralson, Benjamin W. Harris, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Hatcher, Hathorn, Hays, Henkle, Abram S. Hewitt, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hoar, Hoge, Holman, Hunton, Hurd, Hyman, Jenks, Frank Jones, Joyce, Kasson, Kehr, King, George M. Landers, Lapham, Lord, Lynch, Lynde, Maish, McCrary, McMahon, Meade, Metcalfe, Miller, Money, Morgan, Odell, Oliver, Plaisted, Platt, Poppleton, Powell, Pratt, Purman, Randall, Miles Ross, Sobieski Ross, Rusk, Sayler, Schumaker, A. Herr Smith, Southard, Sparks, Spencer, Strait, Stenger, Swann, Throckmorton, Waldron, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Walling, G. Wiley Wells, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Andrew Williams, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodworth, and Yeates—98.

So (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the joint resolution (H. R. No. 155) was passed.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. POPPLETON, is absent by leave of the House.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. ASHE, is absent on account of illness.

Mr. McDILL. My colleague, Mr. OLIVER, is necessarily absent from the House.

COINAGE OF SILVER DOLLARS.

Mr. KELLEY. I move that the rules be suspended and the bill passed which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill to provide for the coining of the standard silver dollar of the United States, and for restoring its legal-tender character.

Whereas by the omission to name the legal-tender silver dollar in the enumeration of the silver coins of the United States in the act of February 12, 1873, the authority to coin said dollar was withheld: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c., That there shall be, from time to time, struck and coined, at the several mints of the United States, silver dollars of the weight of 412½ grains, as provided for in the act of January 18, 1837, upon which shall be the devices and legends provided by said act; and that the said dollar shall be a legal tender of payment for any sums whatever.

Mr. SAVAGE and others called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SEELYE. May I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] to state——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is not in order.

Mr. SEELYE. Then may I ask the Chair to state the actual value of the silver dollar at this time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is not in order, as the gentleman very well knows.

Mr. KELLEY. This is a bill to restore the old silver dollar of 1837.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Discussion is not in order. There is nothing now in order except the call of the yeas and nays upon the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill which has been read by the Clerk.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 119, nays 68, not voting 97; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ainsworth, Anderson, Atkins, John H. Baker, Bland, Boone, Bradford, Bradley, Bright, John Young Brown, William R. Brown, Buckner, Horatio C. Burchard, Samuel D. Burchard, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Campbell, Candler, Cannon, Cason, Cate, Caulfield, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cochrane, Conger, Cook, Davis, De Bolt, Dibrell, Dobbins, Douglas, Dunnell, Durham, Eden, Egbert, Evans, Felton, Finley, Forney, Fort, Franklin, Goode, Goodin, Gunter, Andrew H. Hamilton, Hartzell, Hays, Hereford, Hill, Holman, Hopkins, House, Hunter, Hurlbut, Thomas L. Jones, Kelley, Knott, Franklin Landers, Lane, Levy, Luttrell, Lynde, Mackey, McDill, McFarland, McMahon, Milliken, Mills, Neal, New, Page, Phelps, William A. Phillips, Piper, Purman, Randall, Rea, Reagan, John Reilly, James B. Reilly, Rice, Riddle, William M. Robbins, Robinson, Rusk, Sampson, Savage, Scales, Sheakley, Singleton, Siemons, William E. Smith, Springer, Stevenson, Stone, Terry, Thornburgh, Tufts, Turney, Van Vorhes, John L. Vance, Robert B. Vance, Waddell, Erastus Wells, White, Whiting, Whitthorne, Wigginton, Willard, Charles G. Williams, James D. Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, William B. Williams, James Wilson, Woodburn, and Woodworth—119.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, George A. Bagley, William H. Baker, Ballou, Bell, Burleigh, Caswell, Chittenden, Crapo, Cutler, Danford, Darrall, Davy, Durand, Eames, Ely, Frye, Garfield, Gibson, Hale, Hancock, Hardenbergh, Benjamin W. Harris, Hendee, Frank Jones, Kehr, Kimball, Lamar, Leavenworth, Lynch, Magoon, MacDougall, Meade, Metcalfe, Miller, Monroe, Mutchler, Norton, O'Neill, Packer, Payne, Pierce, Plaisted, Potter, Rainey, John Robbins, Schleicher, Seelye, Sinnickson, Smalls, Stowell, Tarbox, Teese, Thompson, Martin I. Townsend, Washington Townsend, Tucker, Wait, Charles C. B. Walker, Ward, Warren, G. Wiley Wells, Wike, Alpheus S. Williams, James Williams, and Willis—68.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ashe, Bagby, John H. Bagley, jr., Banks, Banning, Bass, Beebe, Blackburn, Blair, Bliss, Blount, Chapin, Collins, Cowan, Cox, Crounse, Culberson, Denison, Ellis, Faulkner, Foster, Freeman, Fuller, Gause, Glover, Robert Hamilton, Haralson, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hartridge, Hatcher, Hathorn, Haymond, Henderson, Henkle, Abram S. Hewitt, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hoar, Hoge, Hooker, Hoskins, Hubbell, Hunton, Hurd, Hyman, Jenks, Joyce, Kasson, King, George M. Landers, Lapham, Lawrence, Le Moyne, Lewis, Lord, Maish, McCrary, Money, Morgan, Morrison, Nash, O'Brien, Odell, Oliver, John F. Philips, Platt, Poppleton, Powell, Pratt, Roberts, Miles Ross, Sobieski Ross, Sayler, Schumaker, A. Herr Smith, Southard, Sparks, Spencer, Strait, Stenger, Swann, Thomas, Throckmorton, Waldron, Gilbert C. Walker, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Walling, Walsh, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Andrew Williams, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Yeates, and Young—97.

So (two-thirds not voting in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended and the bill was not passed.

During the call of the roll, the following announcements were made:

Mr. SPRINGER. I have been requested to state that Mr. SPENCER, of Louisiana, is detained from the House by reason of sickness.

Mr. HOLMAN. My colleague, Mr. FULLER, is absent by leave of the House; if present he would vote "ay."

Mr. HARTZELL. My colleague, Mr. SPARKS, is absent by reason of sickness in his family.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. My colleague, Mr. POPPLETON, is absent by leave of the House; if present he would vote "ay."

Mr. FOSTER. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. WALLING; if present he would vote "ay," and I would vote "no."

Mr. HENDEE. My colleagues, Mr. JOYCE and Mr. DENISON, are both absent by reason of sickness.

Mr. DUNNELL. My colleague, Mr. STRAIT, is unavoidably absent from the House.

Mr. ELY. My colleague, Mr. HEWITT, of New York, is absent; if present he would vote "no."

Mr. BLAND. My colleague, Mr. MORGAN, is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. COCHRANE. I was not in my seat when the last name on the roll was called. I ask unanimous consent to record my vote.

No objection was made, and Mr. COCHRANE voted in the affirmative.

REDEMPTION OF LANDS HELD FOR DIRECT TAXES.

Mr. HILL. I am instructed by the Committee of Ways and Means to report back to the House, and ask for its consideration at this time, Senate bill No. 84, extending the time for the redemption of lands held by the United States under the several acts levying direct taxes, and for other purposes.

The bill was read. It extends to February 1, 1877, the time within which lands held by the United States under the several acts levying direct taxes may be redeemed, and repeals all acts or parts of acts inconsistent therewith.

In its second section it provides that the expenses already incurred in preparing for the sale of lands held by the United States under the several acts levying direct taxes may be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated by law.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill at this time?

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the second section will be reported again.

The second section was again read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust some explanation of this bill will be allowed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If without objection the House considers the bill any explanation may be allowed. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HILL] for that purpose.

Mr. HILL. This is simply a bill extending the time for the redemption of lands sold under tax laws of the United States. In 1872 a bill was passed allowing two years within which the lands sold for taxes might be redeemed. In 1874 that time was extended one year. That expired a short time since; and this bill simply provides for the extension of the time. In other words, it simply continues in force the act of 1872 one year longer, to the 1st day of February, 1877.

Mr. HALE. Does it extend the time under the same restrictions and regulations as are in the original act?

Mr. HILL. Precisely so. This is a bill which has passed the Senate. There was a provision in the original bill, as introduced in the Senate, that changed the provisions of the original law. That was stricken out, and the bill as it passed the Senate simply continues the old law with the same provisions and restrictions.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman will explain the object of the second section of the bill.

Mr. HILL. In the act of 1872 provision is made for the sale of lands and for the redemption of lands; and the same provision is made in the act of 1874. Some proceedings have been had or may have been had, after the expiration of the time allowed by those acts for the redemption of the lands, in which some expenses may have been incurred in the shape of advertisements, &c.; and this provides for the payment of such expenses.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I desire to ask the gentleman a question. Am I correct in understanding that the time for redemption under existing law has already expired?

Mr. HILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. For how long a period?

Mr. HILL. I think since June.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. What right have we then to pass an act divesting private titles, by authorizing redemption, after the expiration of the period at which by law the lands sold could be redeemed?

Mr. HILL. My opinion is that we could not pass an act which could divest titles already vested by a legal sale after the time for redemption had expired; and my opinion is that this bill does not do that.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. Will the gentleman permit me another question?

Mr. HILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. If the sale is illegal, is it at all necessary that there should be a law authorizing the redemption of the lands so sold?

Mr. HILL. This bill only extends the time for their redemption to those lands of which the title is in the United States. Of course, if the United States has already parted with the title and it has passed to others, this bill does not relate to such a case at all.

Mr. FORT. It applies only where the lands have been bid off by the United States.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. Then the bill has reference only to lands where the title is in the United States?

Mr. HILL. That is all.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to ask the gentleman from Georgia how much the appropriations out of the Treasury will probably amount to?

Mr. HILL. We do not know. But it will be a very small amount. It is only for the expenses incurred in advertisements and preparing for sale. The amount will be known to the Department, but must necessarily, from the nature of the case, be very small. It may really amount to nothing; for I do not know what steps of that nature have been taken.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I desire to ask the gentleman another question: Whether this bill protects the rights of the United States in lands that were occupied by them for cemeteries or for other purposes?

Mr. HILL. As I understand, they are protected, amply protected, by the act of 1872; and this does not change the provisions of that act.

Mr. HALE. They are excepted, are they not, by the provisions of previous acts?

Mr. HILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. HALE. And you cover nothing by this bill that is not covered by previous acts?

Mr. HILL. Nothing. This bill simply extends the time for redemption provided by former acts of Congress.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. Will the gentleman allow me to say that this is similar to two extensions that have already been made, one, I think, in 1872?

Mr. HILL. This is the second extension. The original act was in 1872.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. There are parties who desire the opportunity to redeem; and it seemed to the Committee of Ways and Means, who have considered the subject, that there should be no objection to giving the additional time asked for, as the land now belongs to the United States, has been paid for by the United States, and the title is in the United States; and, as far as I can see, this bill will give the relief that was desired by the parties who pressed the joint resolution that has just been voted upon and the bill that was reported by another committee. I therefore hope the bill will pass.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to ask the gentleman from Georgia a single question. I do not understand that this bill makes any exception in regard to that portion of lands bid off by the United States which have been appropriated to public use, such as cemeteries, forts, &c. Now if the limitation having ran upon those lands would complete the title in the United States, it may open up questions or may open questions which ought never to be opened again; especially that class of cases where the lands have been appropriated by the United States for particular purposes, such as for national cemeteries.

I have in my mind the property right across the river on which the Government depends for its title on the limitation of the time of the redemption of taxes. There are many of this class of cases scattered through the country, and if the object of this bill is to open that question again I am certainly opposed to it now and always.

Mr. HILL. This bill has no such object.

Mr. CONGER. Will it have such result?

Mr. HILL. It could not have such a result possibly. If it could have had such a result or object possibly, I am sure it would never have passed the Senate. The cemeteries and other public property to which the gentleman has referred are provided for and protected in a former act of Congress, the act of 1872, and this is simply an extension of that act.

Mr. CONGER. But without the limitations contained in that act.

Mr. HILL. No, it extends the whole act. It extends the time for exemption.

Mr. CONGER. Does it extend it with the limitations contained in that act?

Mr. HILL. Why, certainly; the act of 1872 was a permanent act except the right to redeem. The right to redeem according to the act of 1872 was a limited proposition. The property used by the United States under the act of 1872 is of course permanently in the hands of the Government. The Government could not waive it. It simply extends the time to redeem what parties were entitled to redeem under the act of 1872. It gives no new or enlarged right of redemption. It protects all the property of the United States because it simply extends the right to redeem given by the act of 1872, and the act of 1872 gives no right to redeem cemeteries or other property in the use of the United States.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. It expressly prohibits the right to redeem such lands.

Mr. CONGER. There have been several bills introduced for the express purpose of restoring this kind of property to its original owners and they are in such form as to be calculated to mislead as to their real purpose. I wish to know if this bill covers any of that class of cases?

Mr. HILL. The gentleman may be assured that his apprehension is wholly unfounded.

The question that arises on this bill, as has been stated, is only as to the extension of the right to redeem, as all the property of the United States is protected under the law of 1872.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I have the law before me of 1875, and I will, in order that it may be understood, call attention to the language of that act. This bill I think is very similar, if not in the exact language except as to dates. I read section 26 of the act of 1875:

That the time limited for the redemption of direct-tax lands by the act entitled "An act to provide for the redemption and sale of lands held by the United States under the several acts levying direct taxes, and for other purposes," approved June 8, 1872, be, and the same is hereby, extended for the period of one year from June 8, 1874, at the expiration of which time the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall proceed to sell the lands as provided by section 4 of said act.

Now the intention of this bill is to give a similar extension for another year, I believe.

Mr. HILL. That is all.

Mr. BANKS. What class of sales did it apply to?

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. Only the sales of land that have been bid off by the United States. It does not apply at all to lands which have been sold or purchased by other parties than the United States.

Mr. CONGER. But this bill seems to extend every right under the original law. Now, under the original law there were none of these Government cemeteries or things of that sort. The right of the Government to them has been acquired since that time, and therefore every right to this use of these lands vested in the Government by the act to which the gentleman referred is extended in this act. I therefore still think it safer to put in a provision that this bill shall not extend to any land appropriated by the United States for cemeteries or any other public purpose. With that limitation I have no objection to the bill.

Mr. HILL. I would certainly have no objection to the amendment but I assure the gentleman from Michigan that it is wholly unnecessary. He is entirely mistaken in his apprehension about this matter.

Now, as the bill has passed the Senate and has received the unanimous concurrence of the Committee of Ways and Means, and as we know that there is no purpose to do the wrong to the United States which the gentleman seems to apprehend, I trust the bill will pass, and I move the previous question upon it.

Mr. SMALLS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia a question, and it is whether this is the bill which was passed by the Senate in December last?

Mr. HILL. It is the same bill that passed the Senate, but I do not now remember the date of its passage. I do not think it passed in December.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that it passed the Senate on the 29th of February, 1876.

Mr. SMALLS. Then it is the same bill that I had reference to, and I would ask the gentleman from Georgia to allow me a few words, as the bill was introduced into the Senate by a Senator from my State in regard to lands in South Carolina.

He states that the object is to extend the time of redemption on those lands sold there for direct taxes. The time for redemption allowed to soldiers, sailors, and marines was six months and to former owners two years. The time expired June before last, and in last December while this bill was pending before the House the Commissioner of Internal Revenue issued orders and all of those lands were sold, and there are now no lands to be redeemed in South Carolina to-day except a few school farms, and for that I introduced a bill, which is now before the committee. If this is that bill it can do no harm, for the very object it seeks to accomplish has already passed away, the lands having been sold.

Mr. HILL. If I understand the gentleman then, he makes no objection to the bill?

Mr. SMALLS. None whatever.

Mr. HILL. It simply applies to the titles that remain in the United States. I insist on the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third, and passed.

Mr. HILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COMPULSORY PILOTAGE.

Mr. COX. I yield one moment to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PIERCE] to postpone a bill; it is the pilot bill, and the pilots are waiting here to go home.

Mr. PIERCE. I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on Commerce the bill (H. R. No. 3131) to relieve certain ships and vessels from compulsory pilot fees, and I ask for its consideration at the present time.

Mr. RANDALL. I object.

Mr. HALE. I appeal to the gentlemen opposite not to object.

Mr. PIERCE. Then I ask that the bill be made the special order for the first Wednesday after the first Monday in December after the morning hour, and from day to day thereafter until disposed of.

Mr. COX. There is no objection to its postponement.

Mr. HALE. I appeal to gentlemen on the other side to withdraw their objection to the present consideration of this bill.

Mr. COX. We insist on the objections. The gentleman from Massachusetts names a day certain for the consideration of the bill next session, and that is agreeable all around.

Mr. HALE. The bill ought to be passed this session.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts to make this bill a special order for the first Wednesday after the first Monday in December next, after the morning hour, and from day to day until disposed of?

No objection was made, and it was so ordered.

Mr. PIERCE moved to reconsider the vote by which the order was made; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF INVESTIGATING COMMITTEES.

Mr. COX. I ask unanimous consent to offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk; and if it should be objected to, I shall move to suspend the rules.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the several committees of this House may report at any time during the remainder of this session in reference to all matters under investigation by such committees.

Mr. HALE. I object.

Mr. COX. Then I move that the rules be suspended and the resolution adopted.

Mr. HALE. Let us have the resolution read again; my attention was diverted at the moment, and I do not know that I quite understand it.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. HALE. Does that give the committees the right to report at any time except under call?

Mr. COX. Yes; that is to get the reports in.

Mr. HALE. To that I object, certainly.

Mr. BANKS. I desire to know if upon the presentation of these reports they are to supersede all other business?

Mr. HALE. Certainly, if they come in.

Mr. BANKS. I desire to have an answer from the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COX. They will be reported and of course printed.

Mr. BANKS. Are they to be reported for action at the time?

Mr. SPRINGER. They may be postponed by a majority vote.

Mr. BANKS. I wish to hear from the gentleman from New York on that question.

Mr. COX. I propose to wind up the business of the House in regard to these investigations by Monday next.

Mr. HALE. In other words, after these committees have waited eight months this is to give them leave to report at any time.

Mr. COX. If gentlemen choose to vote against it, very well, let them do so.

Mr. BANKS. This would supersede all the other business of the House in order to act on these reports.

Mr. SPRINGER. We must act on them before we adjourn.

Mr. BANKS. Very well, let us have the yeas and nays on the proposition.

Mr. HALE. Let them be taken up in their order.

Mr. COX. Let the gentleman vote against it, then. I move to suspend the rules and pass the resolution.

Mr. HALE. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I have not been in the House for some time, and I wish to make an inquiry in reference to the status of this resolution. It is, whether it is in order to offer an amendment that the report should be first submitted to the minority of the committee?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment is not in order.

Mr. RANDALL. That should be allowed, that the minority should submit a report as well as the majority.

Mr. COX. There is no doubt or difficulty about that.

Mr. RANDALL. There will be no objection to the minority submitting a report with the report of the majority.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 121, nays 77, not voting 86; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ainsworth, Anderson, Atkins, Bagby, John H. Bagley, jr, Bland, Boone, Bradford, Bright, John Young Brown, Buckner, Samuel D. Burchard, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Candler, Cate, Caulfield, John B. Clarke, of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cochrane, Collins, Cook, Cox, Davis, De Bolt, Dibrell, Douglas, Durand, Durham, Eden, Egbert, Felton, Finley, Forney, Franklin, Gause, Gibson, Glover, Goode, Goodin, Gunter, Andrew H. Hamilton, Hancock, Hardenbergh, Harrison, Hartridge, Hartzell, Hereford, Hill, Holman, Hooker, Hopkins, House, Jenks, Frank Jones, Thomas L. Jones, Kehr, Knott, Lamar, Franklin Landers, Lane, Le Moyne, Levy, Lewis, Luttrell, Lynde, Mackey, McMahon, Meade, Metcalfe, Milliken, Mills, Morrison, Mutchler, Neal, New, O'Brien, Payne, Phelps, John F. Philips, Piper, Randall, Rea, Reagan, John Reilly, James B. Reilly, Rice, Riddle, John Robbins, Miles Ross, Savage, Scales, Schleicher, Sheakley, Singleton, William E. Smith, Springer, Stevenson, Stone, Tecse, Terry, Thomas, Thompson, Tucker, Turney, John L. Vance, Robert B. Vance, Gilbert C. Walker, Walsh, Ward, Erastus Wells, Whitthorne, Wike, Alpheus S. Williams, James Williams, James D. Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, Willis, and Young—121.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, George A. Bagley, John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Bell, Blair, Bradley, William R. Brown, Horatio C. Burchard, Cannon, Caswell, Chittenden, Conger, Crapo, Danford, Darrall, Davy, Dobbins, Dunnell, Eames, Evans, Fort, Frye, Garfield, Hale, Benjamin W. Harris, Hendee, Henderson, Hoskins, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurlbut, Kelley, Kimball, Lawrence, Leavenworth, Lynch, Magoon, MacDougall, McDill, Miller, Monroe, Norton, O'Neill, Packer, Page, William A. Phillips, Pierce, Plaisted, Potter, Pratt, Rainey, Robinson, Rusk, Sampson, Seelye, Sinnickson, Smalls, A. Herr Smith, Stowell, Thornburgh, Martin I. Townsend, Washington Townsend, Tufts, Van Vorhes, Wait, G. Wiley Wells, White, Whiting, Willard, Charles G. Williams, William B. Williams, James Wilson, Woodburn, and Woodworth—77.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ashe, Banning, Bass, Beebe, Blackburn, Bliss, Blount, Burleigh, Campbell, Cason, Chapin, Cowan, Crounse, Culberson, Cutler, Denison, Ellis, Ely, Faulkner, Foster, Freeman, Fuller, Robert Hamilton, Haralson, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Hatcher, Hathorn, Haymond, Hays, Henkle, Abram S. Hewitt, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hoar, Hoge, Hunton, Hurd, Hyman, Joyce, Kasson, King, George M. Landers, Lapham, Lord, Maish, McCrary, McFarland, Money, Morgan, Nash, Odell, Oliver, Platt, Poppleton, Powell, Purman, William M. Robbins, Roberts, Sobieski Ross, Sayler, Schumaker, Siemons, Southard, Sparks, Spencer, Strait, Stenger, Swann, Tarbox, Throckmorton, Waddell, Waldron, Charles C. B. Walker, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Walling, Warren, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Wigginton, Andrew Williams, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, and Yeates—86.

So (two-thirds not voting in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended and the resolution was not passed.

During the vote,

Mr. WIGGINTON said: On this and all similar questions I am paired with Mr. WALLACE, of South Carolina. If he were present he would vote in the negative, while I would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. FOSTER. On political questions I am paired with my colleague, Mr. WALLING. This assumes that phase, and I therefore announce the pair. He would vote in the affirmative, and I would vote in the negative.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

VENEZUELAN MIXED COMMISSION.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That a subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Affairs be authorized to proceed to the city of New York and take the evidence of witnesses in that city in reference to the Venezuelan mixed commission, and that such committee shall have power to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer.

Mr. PAGE. I object.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will state in a moment the purpose I have in view.

Mr. PAGE. Debate is not in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. There is no objection by my colleague on the Committee on Foreign Affairs from Ohio, [Mr. MONROE.] I hope there will be no objection in the House to suspending the rules and passing the resolution. It will be less expensive to the Government for the committee to go there and take evidence than to have witnesses brought here.

Mr. PAGE. I object to debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It appears from the sound the rules are not suspended.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then, if there is no objection, I will move to suspend the rules to consider the resolution. I can then have an opportunity to explain; and when the House understands what it is, I am sure there will be no objection.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I object.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 81, noes 55.

So (two-thirds not voting in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended and the resolution was not passed.

MEMBERS OF SPECIAL COMMITTEES.

Mr. GIBSON. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas there are no statutes nor uniform precedents fixing compensation of members of special committees and officers attending the same sitting outside the District of Columbia: Therefore,

Resolved, That a committee of five members of this House be appointed by the Speaker to consider and report how or upon what basis such compensation shall be established and determined.

Mr. GARFIELD. Let it go to the Committee of Accounts. The gentleman can authorize the Committee of Accounts to make such inquiry. That is the proper committee.

Mr. HURLBUT. That will answer the purpose.

Mr. GIBSON. Let it be referred then to that committee.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee of Accounts.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA LOAN.

Mr. HENDEE. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. No. 3962) to provide means to defray the expenses of the District of Columbia until December 1, 1876.

The bill, which was read, provides that to enable the commissioners of the District of Columbia to defray the expenses of said District to December 1, 1876, they are authorized to anticipate, by loans or otherwise, the taxes for the fiscal year ending June 20, 1877, for a sum not to exceed $418,957.96; the interest on which shall not exceed 6 per cent. per annum.

The rules were suspended (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) and the bill was passed.

FRUIT BRANDY.

Mr. HANCOCK. I again call up for consideration the motion made some time since to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. No. 3925) relating to the production of fruit brandy, and to punish frauds connected with the same, was recommitted to the Committee of Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman simply calls up his motion to reconsider, any gentleman who desires to suspend the rules can take him from the floor.

Mr. HANCOCK. Then I move to suspend the rules in order to discharge the Committee of Ways and Means and pass the bill.

The bill, which was read, in the first section provides that every distiller of brandy from grapes, upon rendering his monthly return of materials used and spirits produced by him, shall immediately pay the tax on such spirits, or shall give his bond, in duplicate, with two or more sureties satisfactory to the internal-revenue collector of the district, conditioned that the principal named in said bond shall, within three years from the date of said bond, pay, or cause to be paid, the tax on the spirits as specified in said return and in the return of the gauger who gauged the same, and before removal of said spirits from the place of production; or shall produce to said collector, within three years, a certificate of the collector of the district in which a bonded warehouse hereinafter provided for is established, showing that said brandy has been duly delivered to him and placed in such bonded warehouse according to law, upon the execution of a proper warehousing bond; and the penal sum of such bond shall not be less than double the amount of tax on such spirits. One of said bonds shall be retained in the office of the collector of the district, and one sent to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, to be filed in his office. And the tax shall be a first lien on the spirits distilled, the distillery used for distilling the same, the stills, vessels, fixtures, and tools therein, the wine-house, the vineyard, and on the lot or tract of land whereon the said distillery is situated, together with any building thereon, from the time said spirits are distilled until said tax shall be paid.

The second section provides that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, upon the execution of such bonds as he may prescribe, may designate and establish, at any port of entry in the United States, bonded warehouses for the storage of brandy distilled from grapes, to secure the payment of the internal-revenue tax thereon, or the exportation thereof, selecting suitable buildings for such purpose, to be recommended by the collector in charge of exports at such port, to be known as special bonded warehouses, and used exclusively for the storage of grape brandy in bond. Every such warehouse shall be under the control of the collector of internal revenue in charge of exports at the port where such warehouse is located, and shall be in charge of an internal-revenue store-keeper assigned thereto by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. No brandy shall be withdrawn or removed from any bonded warehouse except on permit of the collector in charge of exports at such port, which shall be issued only for the immediate transfer to a vessel by which such brandy is to be exported to a foreign country, as hereinafter provided, or after the tax has been paid thereon; and such warehouse shall be under such further regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe. Brandy distilled from grapes may be removed in bond from the distillery without payment of the tax, to be transported directly to a special bonded warehouse for the storage of such brandy, established at a port of entry as hereinbefore provided; and the deposit in, and withdrawal from, any bonded warehouse, the transportation and exportation of brandy distilled from grapes, shall be made under such rules and regulations, and after making such entries, and executing such bonds, and giving such other additional security as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. All brandy intended for storage in special bonded warehouses before being removed from the distillery shall have affixed to each package an engraved stamp, indicative of such intention, to be provided and furnished to the several collectors as in the case of other stamps, and to be charged to them and accounted for in the same manner, and for the expense attending the providing and affixing such stamps ten cents for each package shall be paid to the collector on making the entry for such transportation; but the provisions of this section shall not extend the time for grape brandy to remain in bond beyond three years from the date of the bond provided for in section 1 of this act. And the provisions of existing law relative to allowance for loss by casualty in distillery bonded warehouses are hereby made applicable to brandy stored in bond at the place of production in special bonded warehouses according to the provisions of this section. Export bonds given under the provisions of this section shall be canceled upon the production of such certificates of landing as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe, or upon proof of loss at sea satisfactory to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

The third section provides that the provisions of existing law in regard to the exportation of distilled spirits are hereby extended so as to permit the exportation of grape brandy free of tax in any original cask containing not less than twenty gallons, and for the exportation of grape brandy upon which all taxes have been paid with the privilege of drawback in quantities of not less than one hundred gallons and in the distiller's original casks containing not less than twenty wine-gallons each.

The fourth section provides that the tax-paid stamps placed upon the head of each cask of fruit brandy shall indicate the fruit from which the brandy is made, whether grape brandy, peach brandy, or apple brandy, as the case may be.

The fifth section provides that the penalty for violating any provision of this act shall not exceed three times the amount claimed to be due the United States.

The sixth section provides that any person who shall remove grape brandy from any distillery or warehouse otherwise than as provided by law, or shall knowingly aid or assist in such removal, or who shall purchase the brandy so removed knowing it to have been removed otherwise than according to law, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and on conviction shall be fined not exceeding three times the amount of the tax on the spirits so removed, and imprisoned not more than five years; and the spirits so removed shall be forfeited to the United States.

The seventh section provides that all persons other than internal-revenue officers are prohibited from marking any package of brandy; and any person who shall practice a fraud by which a purchaser of brandy shall be deceived shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and on conviction shall be fined not more than $5,000 and imprisoned not more than five years.

The eighth section provides that all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 106, noes 20; no quorum voting.

Mr. CONGER demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. CONGER and Mr. HANCOCK were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 112, noes 15.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No quorum has voted. Is a further count demanded?

Mr. CONGER. I see where brandy is concerned there is no use making a contest. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a further count demanded? The Chair hears none.

No further count being demanded, the rules were suspended, (two-thirds voting in favor thereof,) and the bill was passed.

GOLD.

Mr. RICE. I move to suspend the rules and pass the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, respectfully requested to report to this House within one week from the passage of this resolution the amount of gold coin and gold bullion, respectively, in the Treasury and actually owned by the Government, with a full detailed statement of the amount of gold certificates outstanding, gold interest due and unpaid, called bonds, and all other obligations payable in gold on demand on this date.

The House divided; and there were ayes 62, noes 16; no quorum voting.

Mr. CONGER. I demand a further count.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No quorum voting, the Chair will appoint Mr. RICE and Mr. FRYE as tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 98, noes 39.

No further count being demanded, the rules were suspended (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) and the resolution was passed.

BOUNTY LAND.

Mr. WHITE. I move to suspend the rules and pass a joint resolution to pay the soldiers and sailors who are yet entitled to bounty lands $1 per acre for those lands.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Whereas many soldiers and sailors who are entitled to "bounty lands" cannot settle thereon nor receive any benefit from the intended reward for valuable services rendered during the late war: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all soldiers and sailors of the late war yet entitled to bounty lands shall receive at their option, $1 per acre in lieu of the "bounty lands" "for the same;" and that the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay all such claims out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The House divided; and there were ayes 7, noes not counted.

So (two-thirds not voting in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended and the resolution was not passed.

CONDITION AND MANAGEMENT OF INDIANS.

Mr. SCALES. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Indian Affairs for consideration and passage at this time House joint resolution No. 142, appointing a commission to visit the Indian Territory and look into and report the condition and management of the Indians, &c.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That a committee of five, consisting of three members of the House and two of the Senate, shall be appointed for the purpose of visiting the Indian Territory, inquiring into the condition of the Indians, the necessity, if any, for a change in their form of government, the effect upon the civilization of the Indians if the Territory were set apart solely for occupation by Indians and all other tribes removed into it; also, to inquire what change can be made in the system for the management of Indian affairs and the disbursement of their funds. Said committee are authorized to sit during the recess, to appoint a clerk, to send for persons and papers, and examine the same, and to report by bill or otherwise at the next session of Congress.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SCALES] will not press that joint resolution now. We are certainly appointing an unusual number of committees to sit during the recess.

Mr. SCALES. If the gentleman objects——

Mr. HOLMAN. I certainly do object.

Mr. SCALES. Then I move to suspend the rules so that I may be able to report this joint resolution from the Committee on Indian Affairs and the House to pass it at this time.

The motion to suspend the rules and pass the joint resolution was not agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 33, noes 47.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. LAMAR. I move to suspend the rules so that I may report from the Committee on the Pacific Railroad for consideration at this time Senate bill No. 14, to extend the time for the construction and completion of the Northern Pacific Railroad. The passage of this bill is unanimously recommended by the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That eight years' additional time is hereby granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to construct and complete its main line of road, via the valley of the Columbia River, to its terminus on Puget Sound, under its charter and the acts and resolutions of Congress relating thereto.

SEC. 2. That this extension is granted upon the express condition and understanding that where pre-emption and homestead claims were initiated or private entries and locations were allowed upon lands embraced in the grant to said company prior to the receipt of the orders of withdrawal at the respective district land offices, and lands embraced in such entry shall not be held as within the grant to said company, and shall be patented to the parties lawfully entering the same, and under the provisions of this act, and in case of abandonment by them, shall be open to pre-emption and homestead entry only by actual settlers; but the company shall be entitled to indemnity therefor, as now provided by law.

SEC. 3. That entries remaining unadjusted and suspended in the General Land Office on account of an increase in price of the even sections within the limits of the grant, where the same were made or based upon settlement made prior to the receipt of the orders of withdrawal aforesaid at the respective district land offices, shall be relieved from such suspension and carried into patent; but nothing in this act shall be construed to effect existing adjustments, nor to authorize the refunding of any moneys received for such lands under existing laws.

SEC. 4. That the extension of time granted by section 1 of this act shall not apply to the branch line of said road from Lake Pend d'Oreille, across the Cascade Mountains, to Puget Sound in Washington Territory; and at the expiration of the time allowed by existing laws for the construction of said branch, the lands heretofore granted therefor and not then earned by said company by constructing said branch line of road shall be restored to the public domain, to be dealt with as other public lands under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 5. That this act shall not be construed to affect existing private rights otherwise than is hereinbefore expressly provided; and shall, as well as said charter and other acts and resolutions hereinbefore mentioned, be subject to alteration, amendment, or repeal at the pleasure of Congress.

SEC. 6. That the said Northern Pacific Railroad Company shall file with the Secretary of the Interior, within six months from the date hereof, its assent to and acceptance of the provisions of this act, or be forever debarred from taking or receiving any benefit from or under the same.

Mr. LAMAR. I would like two minutes to explain this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That can be done only by unanimous consent pending the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I object.

Mr. LAWRENCE. This bill revives a land grant of 40,000,000 acres.

Mr. LAMAR. The gentleman is mistaken; the bill revives no land grant. If the House will allow me two minutes I will explain the bill.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana, and Mr. PIPER objected.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask the yeas and nays on the motion to suspend the rules and pass this bill.

Mr. LAMAR. That is not my motion. I move to suspend the rules in order that I may report the bill to the House for consideration at this time.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is the same thing; if the bill is brought before the House for consideration a majority will be able to pass it. I call for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays, and there were 35 in the affirmative.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 42, nays 149, not voting 93; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Blair, Bradley, Samuel D. Burchard, Burleigh, Cate, Conger, Crapo, Culberson, Dobbins, Douglas, Dunnell, Egbert, Hancock, Haymond, Hendee, Hooker, Hubbell, Frank Jones, Thomas L. Jones, Kelley, Kimball, Lamar, Lane, Leavenworth, Le Moyne, Lynde, Magoon, MacDougall, O'Neill, Plaisted, John Reilly, Riddle, Sheakley, Slemons, Stowell, Thomas, Thompson, Washington Townsend, G. Wiley Wells, Wigginton, Alphens S. Williams, and Woodburn—42.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Ainsworth, Anderson, Atkins, Bagby, George A. Bagley, John H. Bagley, jr., John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Bell, Bland, Boone, Bradford, Bright, John Young Brown, William R. Brown, Horatio C. Burchard, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Candler, Cannon, Cason, Caulfield, Chittenden, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cochrane, Collins, Cook, Cox, Cutler, Danford, Darrall, Davis, Davy, De Bolt, Dibrell, Durham, Eames, Eden, Ely, Evans, Felton, Finley, Forney, Fort, Foster, Franklin, Gause, Glover, Goode, Goodin, Gunter, Hale, Andrew H. Hamilton, Hardenbergh, Benjamin W. Harris, Harrison, Hartridge, Hartzell, Hays, Henderson, Hereford, Holman, Hopkins, Hoskins, House, Hunter, Hurlbut, Jenks, Kehr, Franklin Landers, Lawrence, Levy, Lewis, Luttrell, McDill, McFarland, Metcalfe, Milliken, Mills, Monroe, Morrison, Mutchler, Nash, Neal, New, O'Brien, Packer, Page, William A. Phillips, Pierce, Piper, Potter, Purman, Rainey, Randall, Rea, Reagan, James B. Reilly, Rice, William M. Robbins, Roberts, Robinson, Miles Ross, Sampson, Savage, Scales, Schleicher, Seelye, Singleton, Smalls, A. Herr Smith, William E. Smith, Springer, Stevenson, Stone, Tarbox, Terry, Martin I. Townsend, Tucker, Tufts, Turney, Van Vorhes, John L. Vance, Robert B. Vance, Waddell, Wait, Charles C. B. Walker, Walsh, Ward, Warren, Erastus Wells, White, Whiting, Whitthorne, Wike, James Williams, James D. Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, William B. Williams, Willis, Wilshire, James Wilson, and Young—149.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ashe, Banning, Bass, Beebe, Blackburn, Bliss, Blount, Buckner, Campbell, Caswell, Chapin, Cowan, Crounse, Denison, Durand, Ellis, Faulkner, Freeman, Frye, Fuller, Garfield, Gibson, Robert Hamilton, Haralson, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Hatcher, Hathorn, Henkle, Abram S. Hewitt, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hill, Hoar, Hoge, Hunton, Hurd, Hyman, Joyce, Kasson, King, Knott, George M. Landers, Lapham, Lord, Lynch, Mackey, Maish, McCrary, McMahon, Meade, Miller, Money, Morgan, Norton, Odell, Oliver, Payne, Phelps, John F. Philips, Platt, Poppleton, Powell, Pratt, John Robbins, Sobieski Ross, Rusk, Sayler, Schumaker, Sinnickson, Southard, Sparks, Spencer, Strait, Stenger, Swann, Teese, Thornburgh, Throckmorton, Waldron, Gilbert C. Walker, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Walling, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Willard, Andrew Williams, Charles G. Williams, Benjamin Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodworth, and Yeates—93.

So (two-thirds not voting in the affirmative) the rules were not suspended.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. FRYE. I have the misfortune to be a stockholder in this road, and therefore, under the rules, decline to vote.

Mr. BLAND. My colleague from Missouri, Mr. MORGAN, is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. COCHRANE. My colleagues from Pennsylvania Mr. Ross and Mr. STENGER are absent by leave of the House.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

DUTIES OF HEADS OF DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Tennessee. I move that the rules be suspended and that the resolution which I send to the desk be adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the head of each Executive Department of the General Government is an officer of the people, receiving liberal compensation from the public Treasury for the performance of official labors which are presumed to require his entire time and undivided attention: Therefore,

Resolved, That it is the sense of the House of Representatives that the performance by such officer of the duties of chairman of a partisan committee having in charge the management and prosecution of a political campaign is inconsistent with the relations that exist between him and the whole people whose salaried servant he is, is incompatible with the faithful, impartial, and efficient discharge of the arduous duties and responsibilities that attach to the exalted position of head of an Executive Department and member of the Cabinet, is at war with every rational idea of civil-service reform, and as such challenges in the strongest terms public criticism and condemnation.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know whether it would not be in order to amend the resolution by adding "Representatives in Congress."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is no amendment in order under a motion to suspend the rules, as the gentleman from Indiana knows very well. The only question is whether the House will suspend the rules and adopt the resolution.

Mr. CONGER. I ask unanimous consent to include the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House. I suppose there would be no objection to that.

Several members called for the regular order.

Mr. FOSTER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not in order.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Is not a parliamentary inquiry in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not when the roll-call has been ordered.

Mr. CONGER. I believe it is in order to ask unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not in order to ask anything during the call of the roll. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 60, nays 86, not voting 138; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ainsworth, Atkins, Boone, Bradford, Buckner, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Cochrane, Cook, Cox, Culberson, Davis, De Bolt, Dibrell, Durham, Eden, Egbert, Finley, Forney, Glover, Goode, Andrew H. Hamilton, Hartridge, Hartzell, Hereford, Hill, Holman, House, Jenks, Frank Jones, Thomas L. Jones, Lamar, Franklin Landers, Lewis, Lynde, Mackey, Metcalfe, Morrison, Randall, Rice, Riddle, William M. Robbins, Scales, Springer, Stevenson, Thompson, Turney, John L. Vance, Robert B. Vance, Waddell, Gilbert C. Walker, Warren, Whitthorne, Wike, James D. Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, Wilshire, and Young—60.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Anderson, John H. Bagley, jr., John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Ballou, Bell, Bradley, John Young Brown, William R. Brown, Horatio C. Burchard, Samuel D. Burchard, Burleigh, Cannon, Cason, Cate, Conger, Danford, Darrall, Davy, Dobbins, Dunnell, Durand, Eames, Ely, Evans, Fort, Foster, Franklin, Frye, Garfield, Goodin, Hale, Hardenbergh, Harrison, Hendee, Henderson, Hoskins, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurlbut, Kelley, Kimball, Lawrence, Leavenworth, Levy, Lynch, Magoon, McDill, Milliken, Mills, Monroe, Nash, Neal, Norton, O'Neill, Packer, Page, William A. Phillips, Piper, Rainey, John Robbins, Robinson, Sampson, Savage, Seelye, Sinnickson, Smalls, A. Herr Smith, Stowell, Thomas, Thornburgh, Martin I. Townsend, Washington Townsend, Tufts, Van Vorhes, Wait, Charles C. B. Walker, Erastus Wells, G. Wiley Wells, Whiting, Alpheus S. Williams, James Williams, William B. Williams, James Wilson, and Woodburn—86.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ashe, Bagby, George A. Bagley, Banks, Banning, Bass, Beebe, Blackburn, Blair, Bland, Bliss, Blount, Bright, Cabell, Campbell, Candler, Caswell, Caulfield, Chapin, Chittenden, Clymer, Collins, Cowan, Crapo, Crounse, Cutler, Denison, Douglass, Ellis, Faulkner, Felton, Freeman, Fuller, Gause, Gibson, Gunter, Robert Hamilton, Hancock, Haralson, Benjamin W. Harris, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Hatcher, Hathorn, Haymond, Hays, Henkle, Abram S. Hewitt, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hoar, Hoge, Hooker, Hopkins, Hunton, Hurd, Hyman, Joyce, Kasson, Kehr, King, Knott, George M. Landers, Lane, Lapham, Le Moyne, Lord, Luttrell, Maish, MacDougall, McCrary, McFarland, McMahon, Meade, Miller, Money, Morgan, Mutchler, New, O'Brien, Odell, Oliver, Payne, Phelps, John F. Philips, Pierce, Plaisted, Platt, Poppleton, Potter, Powell, Pratt, Purman, Rea, Reagan, John Reilly, James B. Reilly, Roberts, Miles Ross, Sobieski Ross, Rusk, Sayler, Schleicher, Schumaker, Sheakley, Singleton, Slemons, William E. Smith, Southard, Sparks, Spencer, Strait, Stenger, Stone, Swann, Tarbox, Teese, Terry, Throckmorton, Tucker, Waldron, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Walling, Walsh, Ward, Wheeler, White, Whitehouse, Wigginton, Willard, Andrew Williams, Charles G. Williams, Willis, Benjamin Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodworth, and Yeates—138.

So (two-thirds not voting in the affirmative) the rules were not suspended.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COX. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. COX. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Several members called for the regular order.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I desire to report from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads a bill which it is important should be passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will be glad to recognize the gentleman from Missouri if the House will allow him.

Several members again called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A number of gentlemen to-day were prevented from introducing bills for reference in the morning hour. If there be no objection, the Chair will now receive propositions to refer bills.

Mr. CONGER. While the motion to adjourn is pending, I object.

Mr. COX. I withdraw the motion to adjourn, that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] may be recognized.

POSTAL LAWS.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I am directed by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to ask that the bill which I send to the desk be put upon its passage. I move that the rules be supended and that the bill be passed.

Mr. PAGE. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is no other regular order than the motion of the gentleman from Missouri, the motion to adjourn having been withdrawn. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to amend subsections 246 and 251 of section 12 of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes," approved June 23, 1874, and for other purposes, and also to amend section 3954 of the Revised Statutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will now report the bill.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. If the House will allow me to make a statement in regard to the bill there will be no necessity of its being read. The House has voted for it before on two different occasions, and if they will give me a moment I will explain what it is. A bill similar to this was passed by the House and came from the Senate with amendments. It was sent to the President and he vetoed it or rather he withheld his approval from it on account of a wrong reference to the Revised Statutes proposed to be amended both in the title and in the body of the bill. The bill now presented is simply an amendment of that bill so as to meet the recommendation of the Postmaster-General, Mr. Tyner.

Mr. CONGER. Is it proposed to pass the bill above the veto?

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. The bill now reported meets the recommendations of the President.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill (H. R. No. 3963) was passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COX. I renew the motion to adjourn, but will yield for a moment to the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. WHITTHORNE.] [Cries of "Regular order!"] I withdraw the motion.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Tennessee only desires to have a report printed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I submit a report from the Committee on Naval Affairs, and I ask that it be read to the House, and I move that the rules be suspended and the order proposed by the committee adopted. I think when the Clerk reads it it will meet the approbation of both sides of the House.

Mr. HALE. I rise to a point of order. There is a motion to adjourn pending.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that a motion to adjourn was made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BURCHARD] prior to the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee to suspend the rules.

Mr. COX. Will not the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee come up as the first business in order in the morning? [Cries of "O, no!"]

Mr. RANDALL. We can vote down the motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is not a question for the Chair to decide, but for the House. The Chair is bound first to put the motion to adjourn.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that it is an extraordinary proceeding to pass a bill without hearing it read. Now certainly I know nothing about the bill which was passed on motion of the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. CLARK,] and I suppose there are not a dozen men in the House who know anything about it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Did the gentleman from Iowa demand the reading of the bill?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. No; I took the representation of the gentleman who presented it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the gentleman from Iowa has no reason to complain, and the question is on the motion to adjourn.

The question was put on the motion of Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois; and on a division there were—ayes 92, noes 94.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois, called for tellers.

LETTER FROM THE VOLKRAAD OF THE REPUBLIC OF TRANSVAAL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, pending the motion to adjourn, laid before the House the following communication:

PRETORIA, May 19, 1876.

HONORED SIR: The Volkraad of our young republic has honored me with the trust of conveying to you our congratulations with the first centenary of your national independence. It was a momentous hour in history when in 1776 the treaty of peace was signed at Paris, with the warm approval of the noble French nation, between England and her late colonies.

For the second time in history the right of the people to self-government, after a glorious struggle, was nobly acknowledged by the great powers of Europe.

In 1648 the republic of the seven provinces of the Netherlands had entered the ranks of nations; at Paris, your great and prosperous Republic since then. William the Silent and Washington are the heralds of a new day of liberty for the people. With admiration we follow you on the difficult but glorious path which your Republic is following toward true material happiness.

It is a model to all young nations and an example to our state, which to some extent claims the same origin with you, and which, if it be on a smaller scale, strives with you after the same ideal.

Indeed the blessing of Providence has consecrated your banner. Accept of our humble prayer to Heaven, as a sign of our deep-felt sympathy, that God may add to the first century of your independence yet many more and grant your Republic more and more to be a noble type of a happy and powerful nation.

May Providence endow the legislation and people of America with His choicest blessings. With the assurance of my esteem, believe me to remain,

Your sincere friend and obedient servant,

C. T. BODENSHEIM,
Chairman of the honorable the Volkraad.

The CHAIRMAN of the House of Representatives of the United States of America.

The communication, together with the original, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

CLAIM OF GEORGE CONWAY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting copies of the papers in the claim of George Conway; which was referred to the Committee of Claims.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. PLAISTED, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 329) to remove the political disabilities of George Jackson, a citizen of West Virginia;

An act (H. R. No. 890) for the relief of Randall Brown, of Nashville, Tennessee; and

An act (H. R. No. 1692) to amend an act approved May 8, 1874, in regard to leave of absence of Army officers.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. SPARKS was granted leave of absence for one week on account of the illness of his wife.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina, was granted leave of absence for fourteen days.

Mr. HARALSON was granted leave of absence for ten days.

Mr. TARBOX was granted leave of absence for ten days.

Mr. HOSKINS was granted leave of absence indefinitely.

WASHINGTON MONUMENT.

Mr. FOSTER. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Appropriations Senate bill No. 982 providing for the completion of the Washington Monument.

No objection was made; and the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill for reference.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I object. I have been trying myself for a week to introduce a bill.

Many MEMBERS. "Regular order."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the motion to adjourn, upon which tellers have been called for.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BURCHARD of Illinois, and Mr. WHITTHORNE were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 63, noes 88.

Before the result of this vote was announced,

Mr. CONGER called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COX. Is this intended to prevent the report from the Naval Committee coming in? [Cries of "Regular order."]

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 71, nays 108, not voting 105; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Ainsworth, George A. Bagley, John H. Bagley, jr., John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Bradley, William R. Brown, Horatio C. Burchard, Cannon, Cason, Chittenden, Conger, Crapo, Darrall, Davy, Dunnell, Eames, Fort, Frye, Garfield, Hale, Hardenbergh, Benjamin W. Harris, Haymond, Hendee, Henderson, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurlbut, Kehr, Kelley, Kimball, Lawrence, Leavenworth, Lynch, Lynde, Magoon, McDill, Monroe, Nash, Neal, Norton, O'Neill, Packer, Page, Payne, Pierce, Plaisted, Potter, Pratt, Rainey, Robinson, Sampson, Sinnickson, Smalls, A. Herr Smith, Stowell, Thornburgh, Martin I. Townsend, Washington Townsend, Tufts, Van Vorhes, Wait, Whiting, Willard, Charles G. Williams, William B. Williams, and James Wilson—71.

NAYS—Messrs. Anderson, Atkins, Bagby, Bland, Boone, Bradford, Bright, John Young Brown, Samuel D. Burchard, Burleigh, Cabell, William P. Caldwell, Candler, Cate, Caulfield, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cochrane, Collins, Cook, Cox, Cutler, Davis, De Bolt, Dibrell, Douglas, Durham, Eden, Evans, Felton, Finley, Forney, Franklin, Gause, Glover, Goodin, Gunter, Andrew H. Hamilton, Hancock, Harrison, Hartridge, Hartzell, Hereford, Holman, Hooker, Hopkins, House, Frank Jones, Thomas L. Jones, Knott, Franklin Landers, Lane, Le Moyne, Levy, Lewis, Luttrell, Mackey, McFarland, McMahon, Metcalfe, Milliken, Mills, Morrison, Mutchler, New, John F. Philips, Powell, Randall, Rea, Reagan, John Reilly, James B. Reilly, Rice, Riddle, John Robbins, William M. Robbins, Roberts, Miles Ross, Savage, Scales, Sculye, Sheakley, Singleton, Slemons, William E. Smith, Springer, Stevenson, Teese, Terry, Thomas, Thompson, Turney, John L. Vance, Robert B. Vance, Waddell, Charles C. B. Walker, Walsh, Warren, White, Whitthorne, Wigginton, Wike, Alpheus S. Williams, James Williams, James D. Williams, Willis, and Wilshire—108.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ashe, Banning, Bass, Beebe, Bell, Blackburn, Blair, Bliss, Blount, Buckner, John H. Caldwell, Campbell, Caswell, Chapin, Cowan, Crounse, Culberson, Danford, Denison, Dobbins, Durand, Egbert, Ellis, Ely, Faulkner, Foster, Freeman, Fuller, Gibson, Goode, Robert Hamilton, Haralson, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Hatcher, Hathorn, Hays, Henkle, Abram S. Hewitt, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hill, Hoar, Hoge, Hoskins, Hunton, Hurd, Hyman, Jenks, Joyce, Kasson, King, Lamar, George M. Landers, Lapham, Lord, Maish, MacDougall, McCrary, Meade, Miller, Money, Morgan, O'Brien, Odell, Oliver, Phelps, William A. Phillips, Piper, Platt, Poppleton, Purman, Sobieski Ross, Rusk, Sayler, Schleicher, Schumaker, Southard, Sparks, Spencer, Strait, Stenger, Stone, Swann, Tarbox, Throckmorton, Tucker, Waldron, Gilbert C. Walker, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Walling, Ward, Erastus Wells, G. Wiley Wells, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Andrew Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, Benjamin Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodburn, Woodworth, Yeates, and Young—105.

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I move that the rules be suspended, so that the House may now adopt the order which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That the report of the Committee on Naval Affairs, together with that of the minority, made upon alleged abuses, errors, and frauds in the naval service, be printed, and that the consideration of said reports be made the special order for Friday next after the morning hour.

Mr. CONGER. Pending that motion I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. GARFIELD. I suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WHITTHORNE] that the report of the majority of the committee is very long, and the minority of the committee have not yet had time to present their views to the House, and the two reports ought in fairness to be presented at the same time. I hope the gentleman will postpone the presenting of his report to the House until such time as the minority will be able to present their views.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. So far as I am concerned, the Public Printer may withhold the one until the other is ready to be delivered in the House.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. Is it not my right to have the report read on which this proposed order is predicated?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has no such right. This is a motion to suspend the rules and pass the order.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. My point is this: It is not right to call upon members to vote upon anything before it is read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] that the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. WHITTHORNE,] made prior to the motion to adjourn and just voted down, was to suspend the rules and pass the order which he sent to the Clerk's desk. The Chair cannot hold that another motion to adjourn can now be made until some business has intervened.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. That is not my point of order. The point I raised is this, that I cannot be compelled to vote, even under a suspension of the rules, upon a proposition to print a report which I have never heard read; and I demand the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is compelled to decide, under the rules of the House, that a motion to suspend the rules suspends all the rules, including the one giving the right to a member to have any matter read.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. Will the Speaker hear me one moment on that? By reference to page 193 of the Digest——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has that page open before him now.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. It will be seen by that that a motion to suspend the rule is not construed to apply to the single reading of a paper or a proposition upon which the House may be called upon to give a vote.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I renew the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has already overruled the point of order.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I desire, on behalf of the minority of the Committee on Naval Affairs, to make a single statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That can be done by unanimous consent.

There was no objection.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, it is known to the House that the amount of testimony taken by the Naval Committee, upon which the report of the majority depends, covers nearly four thousand pages. The last pages were printed but a few days ago. The report of the majority of the committee was first presented to the minority on Tuesday last and took (I think I am correct in saying) seven hours to read it. The minority could not properly have the manuscript of that report, and by an agreement between the honorable chairman and the minority the report has been printed, and we have had the benefit of the slips as they came from the press. By an arrangement, made on Thursday last I think, we were to have until twenty-four hours after the last slips came into our hands and no effort was to be made to put the majority report in this House. That agreement has been complied with. On Thursday at twelve o'clock we received the first sheets of a report covering one hundred and sixty pages.

Mr. GARFIELD. Of print?

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Yes, sir; a report embracing one hundred and sixty pages of print covering transactions of the Navy Department from 1869 to this time. It is impossible, as every gentleman will see, for the minority to make an intelligent report alluding to the important matters contained in the report of the majority in the time which has been given to us.

We have been industrious, and until this day I have not been in the House at all since last Wednesday. Our report so far as it is prepared is in the hands of scriveners to copy. Some of it this morning was in the hands of the short-hand writers and not copied.

Now, while I do not propose directly to antagonize the resolution of the gentleman from Tennessee, I wish to say to this House that when it calls upon us to finish, print, and present to this body a minority report which shall be in time for this House to read it and be ready to dispose of the important resolution reported by the majority, I think every one will see it cannot be done intelligently on Thursday or Friday next. But, sir, we promise—the minority of the committee promise—with all industry to bring their report before the House. We only ask an opportunity to do what the importance of the case seems to demand.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to ask the gentleman from Tennessee to allow me to add that it is hardly just to a prominent officer of the Government to have one report go to the public unless the other that takes the other view of the case can accompany it. It is fair the public press should have both these reports delivered into their hands at the same time, and therefore we ask this action be not taken to-day, and not until reasonable time has been given to the minority to present their views at the same time with the majority. We hope that will be ground enough for asking that no action be taken to-night.

Mr. HALE. Let me make a suggestion before the gentleman from Tennessee goes on.

Mr. CONGER. Both reports should be printed together.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Now, Mr. Speaker, the evidence taken by the Committee on Naval Affairs was not the exclusive property of any one or more of the members thereof, and the views of the minority upon the evi lence were taken, and were to be formed, and most likely were formed during the progress of the investigation. Hence there ought not to be any delay. In addition to that, as the gentleman from Massachusetts has stated, for his convenience and his colleagues upon the committee who joined with him in the minority report, the printed matter of the majority report was placed in their hands as rapidly as it came from the printer; and by agreement, as he has stated, twenty-four hours was allowed to that minority before any steps should be taker by the majority to bring their report before this House. We adhered to that agreement faithfully, and I appeal to gentlemen here now in this House——

Mr. CONGER. Was not Saturday night the time when the last printed part of that report came into the hands of the minority, and in the twenty-four hours, therefore, you include Sunday?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Saturday evening at five o'clock.

Mr. Speaker, while I believe my colleagues upon the committee who are in the minority are pious gentlemen and possibly ought not to have worked on Sunday, I am hardly charitable enough to believe they did not do it.

Mr. LEWIS. They had forty-eight hours.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I appeal practically to the House that this is the only day upon which I can make the motion I do, and probably on no other day of the session will I have the power which I have to-day. It is with no view of prejudicing the minority of the committee, therefore, that I insist on my motion. I now say to them that whenever the report of the majority is printed by the Public Printer I shall say to him, and shall join the minority in saying to him, "Do not deliver one copy of the majority report until you are ready to deliver a copy of the minority report." I aim to be fair in all of this investigation.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Does the gentleman from Tennessee——

Several members called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order being called, the question is, Will the House suspend the rules and pass the order asked by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. WHITTHORNE?]

The question being taken, there were—ayes 115, noes 72.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question being taken, there were—yeas 111, nays 71, not voting 102; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ainsworth, Anderson, Atkins, Bagby, John H. Bagley jr., Bland, Boone, Bradford, John Young Brown, Samuel D. Burchard, Burleigh, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Candler, Caulfield, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, Clymer, Cochrane, Collins, Cook, Cox, Cutler, Davis, De Bolt, Dibrell, Douglas, Durham, Eden, Finley, Franklin, Gause, Glover, Goode, Goodin, Gunter, Andrew H. Hamilton, Hancock, Hardenbergh, Harrison, Hartridge, Hartzell, Haymond, Hereford, Holman, Hooker, Hopkins, House, Frank Jones, Thomas L. Jones, Kehr, Knott, Lamar, Franklin Landers, Lane, Le Moyne, Levy, Lewis, Luttrell, Lynde, Mackey, McFarland, McMahon, Metcalfe, Milliken, Mills, Morrison, Mutchler, Neal, New, John F. Philips, Piper, Powell, Randall, Rea, Reagan, John Reilly, James B. Reilly, Rice, Riddle, John Robbins, William M. Robbins, Roberts, Miles Ross, Savage, Scales, Sheakley, Singleton, Slemons, William E. Smith, Springer, Stevenson, Tesse, Terry, Thomas, Thompson, Tucker, Turney, John L. Vance, Robert B. Vance, Waddell, Gilbert C. Walker, Walsh, Warren, Whitthorne, Wigginton, Wike, Alpheus S. Williams, James Williams, James D. Williams, and Willis—111.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, George A. Bagley, John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Blair, William R. Brown, Horatio C. Burchard, Cannon, Cason, Caswell, Conger, Crapo, Danford, Darrall, Davy, Dobbins, Dunnell, Eames, Evans, Fort, Foster, Frye, Garfield, Hale, Benjamin W. Harris, Hendee, Henderson, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurlbut, Kelley, Kimball, Lawrence, Leavenworth, Lynch, Magoon, MacDougall, McDill, Monroe, Nash, Norton, O'Neill, Packer, Page, Pierce, Potter, Pratt, Rainey, Robinson, Sampson, Seelye, Sinnickson, Smalls, A. Herr Smith, Stowell, Thornburgh, Martin I. Townsend, Washington Townsend, Tufts, Van Vorhes, Walt, G. Wiley Wells, White, Whiting, Willard, Andrew Williams, Charles G. Williams, William B. Williams, and James Wilson—71.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ashe, Banning, Bass, Beebe, Bell, Blackburn, Bliss, Blount, Bradley, Bright, Buckner, Campbell, Cate, Chapin, Chittenden, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Cowan, Crounse, Culberson, Denison, Durand, Egbert, Ellis, Ely, Faulkner, Felton, Forney, Freeman, Fuller, Gibson, Robert Hamilton, Haralson, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Hatcher, Hathorn, Hays, Henkle, Abram S. Hewitt, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hill, Hoar, Hoge, Hoskins, Hunton, Hurd, Hyman, Jenks, Joyce, Kasson, King, George M. Landers, Lapham, Lord, Maish, McCrary, Meade, Miller, Money, Morgan, O'Brien, Odell, Oliver, Payne, Phelps, William A. Phillips, Plaisted, Platt, Poppleton, Purman, Sobieski Ross, Rusk, Sayler, Schleicher, Schumaker, Southard, Sparks, Spencer, Strait, Stenger, Stone, Swann, Tarbox, Throckmorton, Waldron, Charles C. B. Walker, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Walling, Ward, Erastus Wells, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Jeremiah N. Williams, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodburn, Woodworth, Yeates, and Young—102.

So (two-thirds not voting in the affirmative) the rules were not suspended.

During the roll-call,

Mr. EGBERT said: I am paired with my colleague from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WALLACE.] If he were here he would vote "no," and I would vote "ay."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

And then, on motion of Mr. LANE, (at five o'clock and forty-five minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. DUNNELL: The petition of Mrs. Elizabeth Withers, for compensation for cotton seized by United States authorities, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. GAUSE: The petition of Thomas A. Moore, of Osceola, Arkansas, for compensation for cotton seized by United States authorities, to the same committee.

By Mr. GUNTER: The petition of the Muscogee or Creek Nation of Indians, against the establishment of a territorial government of the United States over the Indian country, to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. HOUSE: The petition of T. H. Roberts, administrator of W. B. King, deceased, for compensation for supplies furnished the United States Army in Tennessee, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. KIDDER: A paper relating to the establishment of post-routes between Bismarck and Crook City to Childstown, by way of Lost Lake and Ottertown, and between Allentown and Rochester, Dakota Territory, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. LUTTRELL: The petition of citizens of California, for the establishment of a post-route between Santa Rosa and Tomales, California, via Sebastopol and Bloomfield, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of Isaac Minor and other citizens of California, for the appointment of a commission to adjust the claims of citizens of Humboldt and Klamath Counties for losses sustained by them by the depredations of hostile Indians during the Indian war in said counties, to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Also, papers relating to the claim of W. H. Dunn, for compensation for property destroyed by hostile Piute Indians, to the same committee.

Also, papers relating to the claim of Thomas J. Sherwood, postmaster of Marysville, California, for compensation for amount of clerk hire paid by him out of his private funds, to the Committee of Claims.

Also, papers relating to the claim of A. L. Downer, for compensation for services rendered as clerk of the United States court of Idaho Territory, to the same committee.

Also, concurrent resolutions of the California Legislature, against the further expansion of United States paper currency, to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Also, the petition of W. H. Culver, E. W. Burr, and others, bankers of California, relative to relieving savings-banks in California of alleged inequitable taxation, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of Hons. J. C. Ball, J. D. Fay, and H. F. Crane, State land commissioners of California, that Congress defer further action upon Senate bill No. 805 until such time as they shall have made a full and complete investigation in the matter of the alleged frauds in California indemnity school selections, to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. NORTON: Remonstrance of 130 citizens of Dunkirk, New York, against the suspension or stoppage of the fast mails, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. SAVAGE: The petition of distillers, rectifiers, and wholesale dealers in distilled spirits, of Saint Paul, Minnesota; Milwaukee, Wisconsin; Baltimore, Maryland; New York City; Shelbyville, Indiana; Peoria, Illinois; Columbus, Ohio; Cincinnati, Ohio; Portsmouth, Ohio; Saint Louis, Missouri; and in numerous towns of Kentucky, for the prevention of the use of charcoal or other material for leaching or refining distilled spirits, either upon the premises of any distillery or within six hundred feet thereof, provided that continuous distillation through closed pipes and without the use of charcoal or other material for leaching or refining shall be lawful; and also against permitting distillers to color or compound spirits upon the distillery premises, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. WARREN: The petition of Rufus M. Hodgkins, postmaster at Cambridgeport, Massachusetts, for the re-imbursement of money paid by him to the Government, being an amount stolen from the safe of the post-office at said town, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. WHITTHORNE: The petition of W. B. Chaffin, of Lawrence County, Tennessee, to be relieved from a judgment in favor of the United States, taken against him as surety on the bond of a distiller, to the Committe of Claims.

By Mr. WOODBURN: The petition of William McGarrahan, that the Attorney-General of the United States be directed to bring suit against the New Idria Mining Company for the possession and rents of the New Idria quicksilver mines in California, and that petitioner may be permitted to interplead in case said suits are brought, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. YOUNG: The petition of James G. Williams, of Memphis, Tennessee, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, the petition of Charles D. McLean, of Memphis, Tennessee, for a rehearing of his claim rejected by the southern claims commission, to the Committee on War Claims.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, July 25, 1876.

The Senate met at twelve o'clock m.

Prayer by Rev. DAVID WILLS, D. D., of Washington, District of Columbia.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested:

A bill (H. R. No. 3392) for the relief of John R. Harrington;

A bill (H. R. No. 3925) relating to the production of fruit brandy, and to punish frauds connected with the same;

A bill (H. R. No. 3962) to provide means to defray the expenses of the District of Columbia until December 1, 1876;

A bill (H. R. No. 3963) to amend subsections 246 and 251 of section 12 of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes," approved June 23, 1874, and for other purposes, and also to amend section 3954 of the Revised Statutes; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 155) directing the suspension of further proceedings under the act of 5th of August, 1861.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker pro tempore of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 329) to remove the political disabilities of George Jackson, a citizen of West Virginia;

A bill (H. R. No. 890) for the relief of Randall Brown, of Nashville, Tennessee; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1692) to amend an act approved May 8, 1874, in regard to leave of absence of Army officers.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3168) relating to partition of real estate in the District of Columbia, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2043) to improve the law in relation to dower in the District of Columbia, reported it with an amendment.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. GORDON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1002) to establish a competent and non-partisan revenue corps; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SHERMAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1003) to restore Benjamin P. Runkle to the retired list of the Army; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask that the bill just received from the House providing means to defray the expenses of the District of Columbia be laid before the Senate for reference.

The bill (H. R. No. 3962) to provide means to defray the expenses of the District of Columbia until December 1, 1876, was read twice by its title.

Mr. WINDOM. I am not particular whether it goes to the Committee on Appropriations or the Committee on the District of Columbia. I suggest the Committee on Appropriations, however, because we have had that subject before us.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, if there be no objection.

BIDS FOR CARRYING THE MAILS.

Mr. HAMLIN. I ask the Senate to take up the bill just received from the House in relation to "straw" bids in the post-office service.

The bill (H. R. No. 3963) to amend subsections 246 and 251 of section 12 of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes," approved June 23, 1874, and for other purposes, and also to amend section 3954 of the Revised Statutes, was read twice by its title.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President, the bill, the title of which has just been read, substantially received the unanimous approval of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads and passed the Senate. It also passed the House and went to the President. On examination it was ascertained that the references to the statutes were wrong in the first section, and the President vetoed the bill. The only difference in the world between this bill and the one that passed is a change in the references in the first section of the bill. I therefore hope it will be allowed to pass.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Subject to the regular order.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

IMPEACHMENT OF W. W. BELKNAP.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I call for the regular order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is called for. Legislative and executive business will be suspended, and the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the articles of impeachment exhibited by the House of Representatives against William W. Belknap, late Secretary of War.

The Senate then proceeded to the trial of the impeachment of William W. Belknap, late Secretary of War.

The Senate sitting for the trial of the impeachment of William W. Belknap having adjourned then resumed its

LEGISLATIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes its legislative session.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. President, I move——

Mr. ALLISON. I insist on the regular order, whatever it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no unfinished business. One day has transpired since the river and harbor bill was under consideration, so that it has lost its position as unfinished business.

Mr. WRIGHT. It is only a little after four o'clock. I have in my hand a bill reported from the Committee on Claims that I have been endeavoring for some time to get to the attention of the Senate. I believe we can dispose of it this afternoon, and I know of no more opportune moment to do it in than now.

Mr. CONKLING. What is the bill?

Mr. WRIGHT. It is a bill making appropriations for allowances made by the southern claims commission.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Have we not passed one such bill this session?

Mr. WRIGHT. We have passed nothing of this kind this session.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What was the bill we passed?

Mr. WRIGHT. The bill referred to by the Senator from Vermont was a bill making appropriations for allowances under the Quartermaster's and Commissary-General's Departments. This is the bill reported from our committee for this session to pay the allowances made by the southern claims commission. This report was made at the commencement of the present session, and if these persons are entitled to their money it is important that we act upon this bill. I therefore move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 3259, known as the bill making appropriations for payment of the judgments of the southern claims commission.

Mr. ALLISON. I appeal to my colleague to waive this until we have disposed of the river and harbor bill, which I think we can finish before we adjourn to-night if we take it up now.

Mr. WRIGHT. It is exceedingly unpleasant to me to antagonize my colleague, and especially having in charge that bill; but this bill has been in my hands from the Committee on Claims for some time. I have endeavored on several occasions to get it before the Senate; and, if I can have an understanding that I at least shall have an opportunity to get the bill before the Senate next after the river and harbor bill, I shall not insist on it now. I trust there will be no objection to this understanding. I ask this as a matter of self-protection for myself against gentlemen who are pressing this bill on me and on the committee. I should like to get it out of the way. I will now yield, because I have no disposition to antagonize an appropriation bill at any time.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to take up the river and harbor bill.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask if the vote taking up House bill No. 58 yesterday does not make it now the regular order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It expired at the time, being taken up in the morning hour. There is no unfinished business of the morning hour.

FUNERAL EXPENSES OF JOHN T. KING.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I ask leave to make a report. The Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom were referred a resolution to pay certain funeral expenses, have instructed me to report favorably and ask its present consideration.

The Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay out of the contingent fund of the Senate the medical and funeral expenses of John T. King, deceased, who died from injuries received by the recent explosion of gas in the Capitol: Provided, That the bills rendered shall be approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Fund of the Senate before they are paid.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suggest that the rules require that resolutions for the payment of money must be considered as in Committee of the Whole just like a bill, and read three times.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont makes the point that the rule requires the resolution voting money shall be considered as a bill. The Senator is correct. The resolution has already been read twice, and is now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I ask leave to introduce a bill, upon request, for reference.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce the bill (S. No. 1004) to amend section 731 and section 5440 of the Revised Statutes; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

BILL RECOMMITTED.

On motion of Mr. BRUCE, it was Ordered, That the bill (H. R. No. 1499) granting a pension to Mrs. Lydia Johnson, of De Witt County, Illinois, be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to say in answer to the Senator from Iowa on my right, [Mr. WRIGHT,] who asked that the bill about claims should come in after the river and harbor bill, that notice has already been given some time since that the bill of the House about the relations of the United States with the Pacific railroads would be endeavored to be pressed to the attention of the Senate as soon as the river and harbor bill should be disposed of. On the part of the Judiciary Committee I wish to have it fairly understood that so far as any efforts of ours can go the Senate will be urged to consider that question when the river and harbor bill is over.

Mr. WRIGHT. I gave notice in regard to the claims bill very early, and I shall insist on it having precedence next after the river and harbor bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] to take up for consideration the river and harbor bill.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 25, noes 7; no quorum voting.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the Senator give way till I move that when we adjourn it be to meet to-morrow at twelve o'clock?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island moves that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet at twelve o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. WITHERS called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 32, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Bayard, Bruce, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Conkling, Conover, Cooper, Cragin, Edmunds, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Logan, McCreery, McMillan, Morrill, Oglesby, Paddock, Patterson, Randolph, Robertson, Saulsbury, Stevenson, West, Windom, and Wright—32.

NAYS—Messrs. Bogy, Boutwell, Cockrell, Davis, Dennis, Eaton, Gordon, Harvey, Kelly, Kernan, Merrimon, Mitchell, Ransom, Sherman, Thurman, Wallace, and Withers—17.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Barnum, Booth, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Caperton, Clayton, Dawes, Dorsey, Goldthwaite, Hamilton, Hamlin, Johnston, Key, McDonald, Maxey, Morton, Norwood, Sargent, Sharon, Spencer, Wadleigh, and Whyte—23.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The question being put, there were on a division ayes 24, noes not counted.

Mr. WINDOM called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 26, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Bruce, Christiancy, Conkling, Conover, Cooper, Cragin, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Hitchcock, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, McCreery, McDonald, McMillan, Morrill, Patterson, Randolph, Robertson, Saulsbury, Stevenson, Thurman, Wallace, West, Withers, and Wright—26.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Bogy, Cameron of Wisconsin, Cockrell, Davis, Dennis, Eaton, Ferry, Gordon, Harvey, Howe, Ingalls, Kelly, Kernan, Merrimon, Mitchell, Norwood, Oglesby, Paddock, Ransom, Sherman, and Windom—23.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Barnum, Booth, Boutwell, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Caperton, Clayton, Dawes, Dorsey, Goldthwaite, Hamilton, Hamlin, Johnston, Key, Logan, Maxey, Morton, Sargent, Sharon, Spencer, Wadleigh, and Whyte—23.

So the motion was agreed to; and (at four o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, July 25, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

AMENDMENT OF RULES.

Mr. COX. I give notice of an amendment to the rules which I desire to have referred to the Committee on Rules. I send it to the desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Rule —. That standing and special committees of the House charged with the investigation into the official conduct of any person, while such person may have been in the discharge of public duties, may report at any time, and the House may permit the views of a minority of any such committee to be printed with such report.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I object.

Mr. COX. The gentleman cannot object to notice being given.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The proper time to do that is in the morning hour on Monday.

Mr. COX. I give notice now that the rule may be amended, and I take the responsibility.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It is not worth a cent.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I desire to state that when the vote was taken yesterday on the bill introduced by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] to provide for the coining of the standard silver dollar of the United States, and for restoring its legal-tender character, I neglected to announce the pair of Mr. SOUTHARD, of Ohio, and Mr. HAMILTON, of New Jersey.

AMMUNITION CONTRABAND TO HOSTILE INDIANS.

Mr. HURLBUT. I rise to make a privileged report. The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred on yesterday the joint resolution (H. R. No. 154) prohibiting the sale of special metallic cartridges to hostile Indians, and who were authorized to report at any time, have unanimously directed me to report back the joint resolution and recommend its passage.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas it is ascertained that the hostile Indians of the Northwest are largely equipped with arms which require special metallic cartridges, and that such special ammunition is in large part supplied to such hostile Indians directly or indirectly through traders and others in the Indian country:

Be it therefore resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and requested to take such measures as in his judgment may be necessary to prevent such special metallic ammunition being conveyed to such hostile Indians, and is further authorized to declare the same contrabrand of war in such district of country as he may designate during the continuance of hostilities.

Mr. BLAND. How does this come before the House? I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This joint resolution is a privileged report from the Committee on Military Affairs, which had leave to report at any time.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HURLBUT moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate was ready to proceed upon the impeachment of William W. Belknap and to receive the managers on the part of the House, and that the Senate Chamber was prepared with accommodations for the reception of the House of Representatives.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BROWN, of Kansas. I rise to a privileged question. I call up the report of the Committee of Elections, in the contested-election case of Platt vs. Goode, second congressional district of Virginia.

Mr. BLAND. I desire to raise the question of consideration upon that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That may be done.

Mr. BLAND. I desire that we shall have the morning hour, that the House may consider the bill pending in the morning hour reported from the Committee on Mines and Mining.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unless some matter of higher privilege intervenes, the regular order of course will be the morning hour, and the bill of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] is the pending business. The gentleman from Missouri raises the question of consideration on the report of the Committee of Elections called up by the gentleman from Kansas.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 59, noes 87.

So the House refused to consider the report of the Committee of Elections.

Mr. BROWN, of Kansas. I give notice that I shall call up the report immediately after the morning hour.

PRODUCT OF GOLD AND SILVER MINES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order being demanded, the morning hour begins at twelve o'clock and twenty-five minutes p. m., and the regular order of business is the call of committees for reports. The call rests with the Committee on Mines and Mining and the pending question is upon the bill (H. R. No. 3635) to utilize the product of gold and silver mines, and for other purposes, reported from the committee with amendments.

Mr. KASSON. There is a point of order pending on that bill that it should have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and upon that point of order I desire to be heard for a moment.

Mr. BLAND. As I understand it, the point of order was made when the bill was reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Missouri first upon the point of order.

Mr. BLAND. I have no remarks to make upon the point of order as the bill does not require an appropriation of money, and on the point that it does involve an appropriation I desire the Clerk to read the ruling of Speaker KERR on a bill of a similar nature and character when the point of order was raised by one of my colleagues from Missouri, [Mr. PHILIPS.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. PHILIPS, of Missouri. In the first place, Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order, that as this bill in its operation and execution will necessarily involve the expenditure of public money, it should be referred to the Committee of the Whole for consideration.

Now, sir, it is true that while the bill provides that the marshal and clerk of the present district and circuit courts of that district shall furnish deputies to reside at Kansas City to perform the duties of their principals, yet there are other expenditures which are the necessary concomitants of courts which must be furnished by the General Government. It is in fact a separate court, in that these deputies are to do the business of their principals, and of course are to be provided with records separate from the records kept at Jefferson City, and necessarily under this bill there will be separate grand and petit juries at each of these terms of court.

Under his bill there will be, as the law now stands, two terms of the district and two of the circuit court in each year held at Kansas City. The judiciary bill passed by this House has not yet become the law, so that the conduct of these courts will be attended with two separate grand and two separate petit juries in each year, and records will have to be furnished both for the circuit and district courts, as also for the bankrupt court. While it is true in the latter portion of the bill the duty is imposed upon the State government of Missouri or the municipal corporation of Kansas City to furnish a house in which this court is to be held, it will be optional with them whether they furnish it or not. The first portion of the bill unqualifiedly establishes this court there, and if the State government and municipal corporation of Kansas City should decline or refuse to furnish this building, the next call will be upon the General Government to furnish a building, and it is impossible without the expenditure of public money to conduct the court.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order. He thinks it goes beyond the limits of propriety on questions of this kind. It would be really difficult to imagine any legislation enacted by Congress that does not involve some expenditure. This may, but the expenditure is so clearly an incident that the Chair does not think it brings the bill within the rule. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. KASSON. Mr. Speaker, I present my views upon the point of order with the more satisfaction from my entire confidence in the desire of the Speaker to do as he always has done heretofore; demand a strict observance of the rules of the House, which are but the common protection of all the members of the House.

The point of order which I make on the bill is that it must have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole, and the rule upon which I base that point of order is Rule 112, which is as follows:

All proceedings touching appropriations of money and all bills making appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriations to be made, or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made, shall be first discussed in a Committee of the Whole House.—January 13, 1874.

There is no room, it seems to me, for doubt upon either point of the clauses of this bill.

Now, in the first place it makes a direct appropriation, if there is any force in the English language, as expressed in the bill. It provides for the purchase of an almost unlimited amount of gold and silver bullion and for payment for it. The language is:

That coin-notes of the denomination of $50, and multiples thereof up to $10,000, may, in the mode hereinafter provided, be paid by the several mints and assay offices at San Francisco, Carson City, Philadelphia, and New York for the net value of gold and silver bullion deposited thereat.

Now if this bullion is purchased by authority of this law, it cannot be paid without money, and no money can be taken or property of any kind without authority of law; so that in the very first few lines of the bill you find that there is an express appropriation either of money or property. The question rises to a serious magnitude in view of the use of language like this. We cannot get gold and silver bullion from private parties without payment therefor of either money or property; and whether it be money or property that is appropriated, it requires to be first considered in Committee of the Whole. I think, sir, there can be no mistake about this language, which involves an appropriation either of money or property for the purchase of gold and silver bullion, one or the other.

Mr. BUCKNER. Read a little further on.

Mr. KASSON. I have called the attention of the Chair to the first five lines of the bill. You are to pay for gold and silver bullion in coin-notes. Gold and silver bullion are private property to be brought to the mints to become the property of the United States by payment which this first section provides for, and I submit that you cannot acquire title to either gold or silver bullion except you pay for it either in money or property.

Mr. HEREFORD. Will the gentleman allow me one question?

Mr. KASSON. Certainly.

Mr. HEREFORD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa to point out the section or line in the bill by which any money or property is appropriated.

Mr. KASSON. I repeat that I have just called the attention of the Speaker to the language that requires coin-notes of a certain denomination of $50 or multiples thereof to be paid by the several mints and assay offices for the net value of the gold and silver bullion deposited thereat.

Mr. HEREFORD. I ask if there is one single word in this bill which says that certain property or a certain amount of money is hereby appropriated?

Mr. KASSON. There is the error. These notes are something or they are not. They are money or property or they are worthless.

Mr. HEREFORD. They are simply receipts.

Mr. KASSON. If the coin-notes are neither money nor property, then you are attempting to cheat the men of whom you buy the gold and silver.

Mr. HEREFORD. No, sir; it is simply a receipt.

Mr. KASSON. I suggest that there can be no doubt in the proper construction of a rule so plain as this is. If the coin-notes are not money and are not property, then you have got to appropriate money for the payment of this gold and silver bullion. The question is so perfectly plain under that rule that it either is an appropriation or requires an appropriation, that I despair of finding any protection in this rule against the evils which it was designed to prevent unless it be found in applying it to language like this.

I might go on and speak of the minor provisions of the bill; that it requires the preparation of these notes; that it requires the purchase of paper to print the notes; that it requires the transfer of the gold coin from the mints to the assistant treasurers' offices; all of which costs money, as we are well aware by the large amounts we have appropriated for engraving and printing and the transfer of gold and silver coin.

But I desired in the first place to get the attention of the Speaker and of the House to the first point in the bill, that either money or property is to be paid as an equivalent for the gold and silver bullion deposited at the several mints or assay offices.

When these coin-notes are paid out this property in bullion becomes ours; when these notes are issued they become the property of individuals. The money rights of the United States are involved in this bill either by an express appropriation of these coin-notes, or by the necessity of making an appropriation hereafter in order to redeem the coin-notes. These notes are not the representative of the identical bullion purchased; on the contrary, by section 4 of this bill these coin-notes are to be received as money for all dues to the United States. Under that statement of the case I think it is impossible for the Chair to decide that there is neither an appropriation nor the requirement of an appropriation in this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to make an inquiry of the Chair. The time consumed in this debate upon the point of order of course does not come out of the morning hour; otherwise gentlemen can consume the entire morning hour and entirely defeat this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot rule otherwise than that a point of order may consume the morning hour as well as anything else.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I hope by unanimous consent it will in common fairness be agreed that the time consumed by the discussion of this point of order shall not come out of the morning hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That requires unanimous consent.

Mr. ELY. I object.

Mr. KASSON. I must object to that.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman will then consume the morning hour by discussing this point of order by the courtesy of the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] need not be apprehensive that the Chair will allow the time to be unnecessarily consumed by this point of order. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS.]

Mr. KASSON. I desire to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. TOWNSEND] for a moment.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. I will be very brief. Rule 112 is as follows:

All proceedings touching appropriations of money and all bills making appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriations to be made, or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made, shall be first discussed in a Committee of the Whole House.

Now, in section 6 of this bill there is imposed a duty upon the Secretary of the Treasury that will require an appropriation to be made.

Mr. BANKS. I would like to inquire for what purpose the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. TOWNSEND] has the floor?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. I am speaking on the point of order and discussing this bill.

Mr. BANKS. Yes; but the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] cannot yield the floor to another for an argument.

Mr. KASSON. I thought that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. TOWNSEND] wanted to make a statement.

Mr. BANKS. But he is not doing that. It would appear that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] desires to occupy the morning hour for the purpose of defeating this bill.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. Am I entitled to the floor?

Mr. BANKS. I object that the gentleman is not entitled to the floor.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. I am speaking to the point of order.

Mr. BANKS. Let the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] finish his remarks.

Mr. KASSON. I desire to keep within the rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] cannot under the circumstances parcel out the floor to other gentlemen. The Chair supposed the gentleman from Iowa had yielded the floor, and therefore recognized the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS.]

Mr. KASSON. I will conclude in a moment. No such purpose as that intimated by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] entered into my mind at all.

The first section of this bill requires coin-notes to be paid out, and consequently it involves the absolute necessity of redeeming those coin-notes; or else they are already money by force of this bill, and paying them out would be an appropriation from the funds of the Treasury. You cannot buy gold and silver bullion in this way and transfer it from mints to assistant treasurers without requiring money to be appropriated for the purpose, and thereby involving the identical question that this rule designed to give the House the right to consider in Committee of the Whole.

I appeal to the Speaker to guard well the force and construction to be put on this bill. It involves indebtedness of the United States; it involves considerations which are important to the people of this country. No bill was ever presented to this House upon which this point has been made, to which it can in principle more directly attach, than to the bill now before the House. The operations of this bill will run indefinitely through years. Creating an indefinite liability on the part of the United States, creating a new species of liability called coin-notes, it certainly ought to be considered with the freedom and facility for amendment that can be found in Committee of the Whole and nowhere else.

Mr. BANKS. The answer to the objection of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] is perfectly simple and perfectly conclusive. The statement that he makes is that the coin-notes referred to in the first section of this bill are under certain circumstances to be paid; and that he says is an appropriation or requires an appropriation.

The fact is that these coin-notes do not exist, have no existence. Therefore they cannot be paid, and therefore this bill does not require them to be paid. If the Secretary of the Treasury, or even the President of the United States, shall draw one dollar or one dime or one cent from the Treasury of the United States for the purpose of preparing these coin-notes, which do not now exist, that officer could be and should be impeached for a high crime against the United States. The late Secretary of War, who is now under impeachment by the order of this House, has never committed any such crime, nor is there as against him any proof of any such crime as there would be against the President of the United States or the Secretary of the Treasury if either of them, without an appropriation of money by this House, should order or permit the preparation of these coin-notes.

Sir, this bill is just like a thousand other bills that are passed by the House of Representatives. They declare a fact. They declare a purpose. And if afterward that declaration requires an appropriation of money, that appropriation must be made in terms and in figures. There must be such a specification of an appropriation, of the application of money, as will justify some officer of the Government in taking that money out of the Treasury. And no man can point here to any such use of words or collocation of words as this.

Mr. Speaker, there was a precedent upon this subject which bears directly upon it, and which, notwithstanding the appeal that has been made to the impartiality of the Speaker by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON,] in which I fully concur, will, I think, satisfy the Speaker as to the proper status of this bill before the House at the present time. A hundred years ago the Congress of the United States declared that the relations between the American colonies and Great Britain should be dissolved. And I have no doubt that some person said, "Well, if they are dissolved, it will require armies and navies to defend us against Great Britain, and the Congress of the United States cannot consider this question; it must go to a committee that shall provide the appropriation." I have no doubt, sir, that the President of the Congress at that time said that this Declaration of Independence is the declaration of a purpose; it is the declaration of a fact; and if one dollar or one dime is to be required hereafter to defend that dissolution which was provided by the Declaration, the Congress will have the authority and it will be its duty at the proper time to make the appropriation. But it cannot be possible that the Declaration of Independence was ruled out of order by the Congress of the American colonies upon the theory that it might require an appropriation of money.

Mr. KASSON. May I remind the gentleman that this rule on which we are making the point of order was adopted on the 13th of January, 1874, only ninety-eight years after the Declaration of Independence?

Mr. BANKS. I am perfectly aware of it. And I am aware of another fact, that the principle of this rule has been in existence and in operation from the very foundation of parliamentary assemblies. There never was a time and there never will be a time when a Congress or a deliberative assembly will be deprived of the right to declare an opinion, or a purpose, or pass an act, upon the ground that the purpose, or opinion, or act may require an appropriation of money hereafter.

Now, sir, I recur to the fact that the coin-notes, which the gentleman from Iowa says shall be paid, do not exist.

Mr. KASSON. That is the language of the bill.

Mr. BANKS. And they cannot, therefore, be required to be paid.

Mr. KASSON. But the bill says they shall be.

Mr. BANKS. They do not exist. I do not speak to satisfy or convince the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON;] I speak to you, Mr. Speaker. These coin-notes that the gentleman says must be paid do not exist, and therefore they cannot be paid. And therefore the bill does not require them to be paid. And moreover, here is the Constitution, which says that:

No money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law.

And you know, Mr. Speaker, that there is no human being who can take one dollar out of the Treasury of the United States for any purpose specified in this bill until authority is given him by a specific act.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask to be heard just for a moment on this question. We are passing a class of bills every session of Congress which very well illustrate the character of this bill and the extent to which it ought to be regarded as an appropriation bill. I refer, sir, to the bills authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to erect public buildings in the various cities of the country. The language of those bills is that the Secretary of the Treasury shall erect a building for a custom-house or post-office in a given city, and a limit is put on the cost of the building. Now, there is a much more direct appropriation of money than this bill possibly admits of being interpreted to be. It is provided that the Secretary shall build in a given city a post-office, a custom-house, or other public edifice, and the cost is limited to so much.

Now, the reason why that is not an appropriation bill within this rule is that there is no appropriation of money. Here the direction is to issue the coin certificates, but there is no appropriation of money for the purpose. And yet I will venture to say that neither the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] nor any other member on the floor ever dreamed that the bills of the class to which I refer were appropriation bills.

Mr. KASSON. Will the gentleman from Indiana before he sits down allow me in connection with that point to direct his attention to section 6 of this bill?

That the coin-notes authorized by this act to be issued shall be prepared under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, and shall be transferred to the mints and assay offices named in this act as a part of the bullion fund, and from which fund deposits shall be paid for in coin or coin-notes, at the option of the depositor.

Now, there is the express appropriation of money from the bullion fund in the mints. There seems no possible escape from it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Ah, the gentleman is clearly mistaken there.

That the coin-notes authorized by this act to be issued shall be prepared under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, and shall be transferred to the mints and assay offices named in this act as a part of the bullion fund.

Here is the direction and authority to prepare these notes, but there is no appropriation for that purpose.

Mr. KASSON. But appropriation will be required under the language.

Mr. HOLMAN. It proceeds:

And from which fund deposits shall be paid for in coin or coin-notes, at the option of the depositor.

That is to say, the coin-notes shall be paid.

Mr. KASSON. You make an appropriation from the bullion fund.

Mr. BANKS. That is the bullion fund created by this bill. It does not exist at all. Let the gentleman go to the Secretary of the Treasury with this bill, and the Secretary will say, "When Congress shall have made an appropriation to execute the law I will execute it."

Mr. HOLMAN. This is in fact not an appropriation of money, but an exchange of commodities, without any provision in the act appropriating money for the issue of coin-notes. These coin-notes are not money, but mediums of exchange.

Mr. Speaker, I had the honor to submit to the House the rule adopted in 1874, and I can state what the object was. It was to meet that class of cases which involved appropriations of money, which create offices for which no appropriation is made, but for the salaries of which the holders of the office may go into the Federal courts and obtain judgments, and these judgments must be paid; and for the same reason it applies for instance to references to the Court of Claims, which have always been held to be subject to the point of order, because you must meet the judgments of that court and the judgments must be paid out of money not already appropriated for that purpose.

Mr. KASSON. Does the gentleman remember the rule so often applied by the last Speaker of this House, that where a bill made no appropriation, but was susceptible of an amendment requiring an appropriation, it came under this rule?

Mr. HOLMAN. I remember that decision very well, but it was clear, and I presume that if the gentleman who was then Speaker were present he would now say so, that that was not a well-considered opinion in parliamentary law, for you can scarcely bring a bill into the House that is not subject to germane amendments that would involve the appropriation and expenditure of money.

I wish to say further that it is exceedingly desirable that the rules of the House should be well understood and that the interpretations upon them shall be uniform. There is great force in the precedent which has been read in the hearing of the Chair touching the expenditure of money necessarily involved in the establishment of a Federal court in the State of Missouri, which precedent was exactly in point, involving the very question raised in this point of order, and I submit that in the absence of very strong motives that precedent should still govern us as the best and most authentic interpretation which the House has yet given—for that opinion was concurred in by the House—of the rule now under consideration.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to state a new point of order.

Mr. BLAND. As I understand it, this discussion comes out of the morning hour, and half of the morning hour has already expired.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to hear the gentleman from Ohio before deciding the question.

Mr. GARFIELD. I shall take but a moment of time.

Mr. HOLMAN. After the gentleman from Ohio shall have been heard I shall insist that the question be decided.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to read in the hearing of the House a rule which I believe has not been read in this discussion, and that is Rule 110, which is as follows:

110. No motion or proposition for a tax or charge upon the people shall be discussed the day on which it is made or offered, and every such proposition shall receive its first discussion in a Committee of the Whole House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what is a charge or taxes upon the people? First, a tariff or internal-revenue duty; second, a loan in the form of a bond or note payable by the United States, whether it be a coin-note or a common greenback. These have always been regarded just as much a charge upon the Treasury as a direct internal revenue or customs tax.

Now, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] says that these coin-notes do not exist, but I call the attention of the House to the fact that the first section provides "that coin-notes of the denomination of $50, and multiples thereof up to $10,000, may, in the mode hereinafter provided, be paid by the several mints," &c.

Now, what is the mode "hereinafter provided?" Why, in the first place a bullion fund is provided in this section, namely, the gold and silver bullion deposited in the several mints and branches of the United States is declared to be a bullion fund, and these notes hereinafter provided for are to be paid out of the fund herein denominated and created. Now turn to section 4; it begins in these words: "The coin-notes issued under the provisions of this act," &c. It appears, then, that this act is to authorize the issue of coin-notes.

Read again the first line of section 5: "That gold-coin notes issued under this act shall be redeemed," &c. Then there are to be coin-notes issued under the provisions of this act.

But go on to section 6; there you have direct authority for the issue. How? "That the coin-notes authorized by this act to be issued shall be prepared under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury."

First, they have been authorized, and now it is declared that they shall be prepared under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, "and shall be transferred to the mints and assay offices named in this act as a part of the bullion fund," the fund created by the first section.

Now we have the circle complete. In the first place, we create a bullion fund consisting of all the gold and silver bars now in the Mint. Then we authorize the issue of notes, which are United States promises to pay, and every one of those notes when issued becomes a part of the national debt which we hereby create. Then this bill provides that 75 per cent. of the bullion now lying in the Mint as a part of this bullion fund shall be reserved for the redemption of the notes herein authorized to be issued; we lock up in the Treasury 75 per cent. of our bullion for this purpose.

This bill does two things; first it creates a public debt, it lays a charge upon the people just as really as though it were in direct words a tax, because a note, a United States promise to pay, when issued is a tax. Then the Secretary of the Treasury is required to prepare these notes for issue under this act. Now, under Rule 110, which provides that any proposition for a tax or charge upon the people shall receive its first discussion in the Committee of the Whole, this bill involving a charge upon the people must have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole.

One word more in further enforcement of this position. Gentlemen say there is no appropriation in this bill. I would call their attention to Rule 112, which requires that all proceedings touching appropriations of money and making appropriations of money or property, "or requiring such appropriation to be made," shall be first considered in the Committee of the Whole. That rule does not require that there be an actual appropriation in order to be liable to the point of order, for the rule says expressly "requiring such appropriations to be made." If the authority to issue coin-notes, the creation of a bullion fund, and the requirement that 75 per cent. of that fund shall be locked up in the Treasury to redeem the gold-notes herein authorized to be issued—if all that does not require an appropriation, then I cannot understand the meaning of language.

But more, it makes an appropriation. Gentlemen may say that it makes no appropriation of money. I answer that it makes an appropriation of property, of the gold and silver bars in the mints which are the property of the United States. Rule 112 says that "all bills making appropriations of money or property." This bill appropriates property; it appropriates 75 per cent. of the whole mass of gold and silver bars which are by this act created a bullion fund.

It creates a debt in the form of notes or bonds; it creates a bullion fund; it sets apart 75 per cent. of that fund for the redemption of the bonds or notes thus issued, and it requires the Secretary of the Treasury to prepare those notes for issue. Therefore, under both rules, as requiring an appropriation of money and as making an appropriation of property, and also as creating a charge upon the people, this bill is liable to the point of order. If there ever has been a bill before the House that could be sent to the Committee of the Whole on a point of order, this is eminently such a bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is not this more in the nature of a mere exchange of commodities, making the Government the agency of that exchange, rather than an appropriation in the meaning of the term "appropriation of money;" for an appropriation of money must be made directly from the Treasury for a given object? The coin-notes here provided for are simply representatives of the bullion, the one being issued in exchange for the other.

Mr. GARFIELD. If I should accept the hypothesis of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] I could give a perfect answer to it by stating that 25 per cent. of this bullion fund is an actual appropriation. Who dare say if this be an exchange of commodities it is also not an appropriation of commodities? And an appropriation of commodities or property brings the bill within the rule.

Mr. HOLMAN. Can the gentleman say that the bullion or coin taken from assay offices to pay for these certificates is an appropriation?

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly. The words of the last section of this bill are these: "The Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe the necessary regulations for carrying into effect the provisions of this act." That is a mandatory order upon the Secretary of the Treasury.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair must insist upon this discussion coming to an end.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire a moment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I do not want to go over the ground that has been gone over so well by others. I want to raise a new point that has not yet been touched upon, and I would like the attention of my friend from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.] The latest amendment to this Rule 112 was reported from our Committee on War Claims, of which we were both members for the purpose of having every proposition involving or requiring an appropriation of money or property considered first in the Committee of the Whole.

The real question now before the House is this: Is it wise to have a proposition of this kind, one that involves a comprehensive change in the character of our public debt, considered in the House under the operation of the previous question; or should it be first considered in the Committee of the Whole, where elaborate discussion can be had and amendments can be proposed, where the interests of the people who pay taxes can be considered both as regards paying money and the form of the charge upon them?

Now, Mr. Speaker, whether this point lies against the bill or not, we will have to consider that in coining the silver dollar there is involved and contemplated an appropriation of money to buy the silver out of which to make the legal-tender dollar that was a legal tender when we contracted much of our war debt. Is it wise then that so comprehensive a change of our public debt as this involves should be considered in the morning hour in the House under the operation of the previous question, instead of its being, as the rule undoubtedly contemplates, in Committee of the Whole where the widest latitude of discussion and amendment is allowed, and no bill can be reported to the House till every amendment is voted on and all have spoken who may desire to speak?

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I desire to suggest another reason why this bill should be considered in Committee of the Whole, and is liable to the point of order made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] under Rule 110, and also Rule 111 taken in connection with Rule 110.

My recollection is that a similar point was decided by a former Speaker: that a change of law in respect to the mode in which taxes should be paid required under Rule 110 a reference of the bill to the Committee of the Whole House. This bill provides in section 4—

That the coin-notes issued under the provisions of this act shall be receivable without limit for all dues to the United States.

Now, everything that relates to taxation, the manner in which taxes shall be paid, the time when and the kind and material of money in which they shall be paid, is a matter relating to "a tax or charge upon the people."

And when an amendment was offered to a bill that the law should be changed so that legal-tender notes should be receivable in payment of customs dues, my recollection is, and I presume other gentlemen will bear me out in it, that the Speaker ruled that it was not admissible without being first considered in Committee of the Whole. Hence, I call attention to that part of this section which permits this kind of money, or of paper rather, to be receivable in the payment of taxes or dues to the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is prepared to decide the question. The point of order having been raised on Thursday last prior to the expiration of the morning hour, he has had opportunity to examine the rule and the decisions under it. In the light of these decisions and the discussions connected with them, there is not very much difficulty in understanding the meaning of the rule; and there seems to be but little difference in the discussion this morning on the part of different gentlemen as to what the rule itself means. The difficulty is as to its application to particular cases.

The Chair is convinced that there is a growing evil in the fact that we do not consider bills of importance in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to the extent that was formerly done. But that is a matter for the House, and not for the Chair. The Chair has carefully examined this bill. He is unable to regard it as a bill in any sense making appropriations of money or property, or in any sense requiring such appropriations to be made. He certainly cannot see in what possible sense it can be regarded as a proposition for "a tax or charge upon the people," or how it can possibly come under the one hundred and eleventh rule, which simply provides that no increase of the sum or quantum of tax or duty voted by a Committee of the Whole House shall be made in the House without being first discussed and voted on in Committee of the Whole House. The mere fact that this bill may involve expense does not bring it within the rule. Gentlemen will notice that the word used in the rule is "requiring," not "involving." And the mere fact that the bill may in some incidental or remote way involve expense, or that in some form or other to carry out its provisions expense may be incurred and even necessarily incurred by additional legislation, cannot bring it within the rule. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. KASSON. Then I most respectfully ask the opinion of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will be very glad to have that done.

Mr. SAVAGE. I move to lay the appeal of the gentleman from Iowa on the table.

Mr. KASSON. And I ask for tellers on that motion.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SAVAGE] will consent to have the vote taken directly on the appeal of the gentleman from Iowa, instead of on the motion to lay that appeal on the table.

Mr. SAVAGE. I withdraw the motion to lay on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is obliged to the gentleman from Ohio for withdrawing the motion to lay on the table. He prefers to have the vote taken directly on the appeal from his decision. The Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. KASSON, and the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. HOLMAN.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Will the Chair have the kindness to state what is the precise question on which the House is to vote?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House? Those voting in the affirmative vote to sustain the decision of the Chair, and the negative vote is against sustaining the decision of the Chair.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 120, noes 29.

Mr. KASSON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 158, nays 24, not voting 102; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ainsworth, Anderson, Ashe, Atkins, Bagby, John H. Bagley, jr., John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Banks, Banning, Beebe, Bell, Blackburn, Bland, Boone, Bradford, Bradley, Bright, William R. Brown, Buckner, Samuel D. Burchard, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Campbell, Candler, Cannon, Cason, Cate, Caulfield, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cochrane, Collins, Conger, Cook, Crapo, Cutler, Davis, Davy, De Bolt, Dibrell, Douglas, Dunnell, Durand, Durham, Eden, Egbert, Ely, Evans, Felton, Finley, Forney, Fort, Frye, Gause, Goode, Goodin, Gunter, Andrew H. Hamilton, Hardenbergh, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hartridge, Hartzell, Hathorn, Haymond, Henderson, Hereford, Hill, Holman, Hopkins, House, Hunter, Hurd, Jenks, Frank Jones, Thomas L. Jones, Kimball, Franklin Landers, Lane, Lawrence, Levy, Lewis, Luttrell, Lynch, Lynde, Mackey, Maish, McFarland, Metcalfe, Milliken, Mills, Morgan, Mutchler, Neal, New, Odell, O'Neill, Packer, Page, Payne, Phelps, John F. Philips, Piper, Poppleton, Potter, Rainey, Randall, Rea, Reagan, John Reilly, James B. Reilly, Rice, Riddle, John Robbins, William M. Robbins, Roberts, Robinson, Miles Ross, Sampson, Savage, Scales, Schleicher, Seelye, Sheakley, Singleton, Sinnickson, Siemons, Smalls, Southard, Spencer, Springer, Stevenson, Stone, Swann, Thompson, Thornburgh, Throckmorton, Tufts, Turney, Van Vorhes, John L. Vance, Waddell, Charles C. B. Walker, Walsh, Warren, Erastus Wells, Whiting, Whitthorne, Wigginton, Wike, Alpheus S. Williams, James D. Williams, William B. Williams, Woodburn, and Woodworth—158.

NAYS—Messrs. Ballou, Blair, Horatio C. Burchard, Burleigh, Darrall, Eames, Foster, Garfield, Abram S. Hewitt, Hurlbut, Joyce, Kasson, Magoon, Monroe, Nash, Norton, Pierce, Plaisted, Powell, Stowell, Martin I. Townsend, Washington Townsend, Wait, and Willis—24.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, George A. Bagley, Bass, Bliss, Blount, John Young Brown, Caswell, Chapin, Chittenden, Cowan, Cox, Crounse, Culberson, Danford, Denison, Dobbins, Ellis, Faulkner, Franklin, Freeman, Fuller, Gibson, Glover, Hale, Robert Hamilton, Hancock, Haralson, Benjamin W. Harris, Henry R. Harris, Hatcher, Hays, Hendee, Henkle, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hoar, Hoge, Hooker, Hoskins, Hubbell, Hunton, Hyman, Kehr, Kelley, King, Knott, Lamar, George M. Landers, Lapham, Leavenworth, Le Moyne, Lord, MacDougall, McCrary, McDill, McMahon, Meade, Miller, Money, Morrison, O'Brien, Oliver, William A. Phillips, Platt, Pratt, Purman, Sobieski Ross, Rusk, Sayler, Schumaker, A. Herr Smith, William E. Smith, Sparks, Strait, Stenger, Tarbox, Teese, Terry, Thomas, Tucker, Robert B. Vance, Waldron, Gilbert C. Walker, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Walling, Ward, G. Wiley Wells, Wheeler, White, Whitehouse, Willard, Andrew Williams, Charles G. Williams, James Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, James Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Yeates, and Young—102.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained as the judgment of the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLAND. I renew the demand for the previous question.

Mr. KASSON. Has not the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. BLAND. I raise the question of consideration between this bill and other business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That cannot be done. The Chair will state to the gentleman that the bill is in the morning hour and will come up to-morrow morning necessarily and hold its position indefinitely until disposed of, but it cannot interfere with the orders of the day, because it is not taken out of the morning hour which is a protection to the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Cannot the House by refusing to proceed with other business go on with this bill?

Mr. BLAND. I suppose the House can control the business it will take up.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is constrained to recognize the gentleman from Kansas, [Mr. BROWN,] who rises to a question of the highest privilege.

Mr. CONGER. In reference to the order of business I desire to inquire if the Committee on Mines and Mining will have the next morning hour, having had already two morning hours?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. They will not have the next morning hour for the introduction of business; but if the gentleman from Michigan will examine the rule he will find that the pending business must first be disposed of before any other committee can be called, if it takes a month to dispose of it.

Mr. BUCKNER. I desire to ask whether a report of a committee having privilege to report at any time is not of higher privilege than the report of the gentleman from Kansas?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair must hold that the question of the right of a member to his seat is of the highest privilege, but the question of consideration may be raised on the report of the gentleman from Kansas if the House desires to do so; otherwise the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Kansas as having the floor.

Mr. BROWN, of Kansas. Before proceeding with the election case I yield for a moment to the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. WELLS.]

Mr. GARFIELD. I suggest that by unanimous consent, and not to be taken out of the time of the gentleman from Kansas, [Mr. BROWN,] gentlemen may now have an opportunity to introduce bills for reference only. There are many who did not get an opportunity to do so.

Mr. BROWN, of Kansas. I will first yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WELLS] who desires to introduce a bill for action at this time.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the following title:

A bill (H. R. No. 3963) to amend subsections 246 and 251 of section 12 of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes," approved June 23, 1874, and for other purposes, and also to amend section 3954 of the Revised Statutes.

ANNIE GIBSON YEATES.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. I hold in my hand a bill granting a pension to Mrs. Annie Gibson Yeates, widow of George W. Yeates, late a captain in the United States Army, killed at the battle of the Little Big Horn.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Annie Gibson Yeates, widow of George W. Yeates, late a captain in the United States Army, killed at the battle of the Little Big Horn, June 25, 1876, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $30 a month from and after the passage of the act.

Mr. SAMPSON. I think the families of all the soldiers who fell in that battle should be placed on the same footing, and I must object to the bill. It is not right to provide for one and not for the whole.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. I would state that a bill was introduced yesterday and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions providing for the families of all those who fell in the battle of the Little Big Horn. But I understand the Committee on Invalid Pensions have refused to consider that bill, because they believe that individual bills should be introduced in cases of this character. This lady, I believe, has three children, the eldest of whom is only five or six years old, and is in destitute circumstances.

Mr. SAMPSON. I have no doubt there are many others in equally destitute circumstances.

Mr. EDEN. Is this a report from a committee?

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. It is not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. SAMPSON and Mr. MAGOON objected.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

Mr. SAMPSON. I am satisfied that all should be placed on an equal footing.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. The Committee on Invalid Pensions will not report a general bill.

Mr. CONGER. I objected to this bill when it was presented on a former occasion. Upon inquiry I find that the Committee on Invalid Pensions have not all the necessary information in regard to the widows and children of other soldiers who fell in this fight. Therefore I will not object to this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will again ask if there is objection to the consideration of this bill at this time?

Mr. EDEN. I object to it, because it is not reported from any committee.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. Then I ask that the bill may be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, with leave to report at any time.

There was no objection; and accordingly the bill (H. R. No. 3964) was received, read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, with leave to report at any time.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The request was made a few moments ago by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] and seemed to be generally assented to, that gentlemen shall now have an opportunity to present bills for reference only, as during the morning hour of Monday. If there be no objection, the Chair will recognize gentlemen for that purpose at this time.

There was no objection.

B. K. REYNOLDS & CO.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3965) to relieve B. K. Reynolds & Co., of registered distillery No. 7, Covington Kentucky, from the payment of $765.85 improperly assessed against them for the 31st day of July, 1875;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN HAINES.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3966) to direct the Secretary of War to remove the charge of desertion now standing against John Haines, late a private in Company C, One hundred and seventy-second Regiment Pennsylvania Drafted Militia, and to grant him an honorable discharge; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

TELEGRAPH BETWEEN AMERICA AND ASIA.

Mr. PAGE. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table at this time and referred to the Committee on Commerce Senate bill No. 892, to encourage and promote telegraphic communication between America and Asia.

Mr. RANDALL. I object; that does not come within the order unanimously adopted by the House for the introduction of bills.

DINAH BROWN.

Mr. SAMPSON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3967) granting a pension to Mrs. Dinah Brown; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

CHARLES DAVIDSON.

Mr. EVANS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3968) for the relief of Charles Davidson, late a private of Company I, Forty-sixth Indiana Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ALTA B. SHERWOOD.

Mr. DUNNELL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3969) granting a pension to Alta B. Sherwood, widow of Lyman A. Sherwood, first lieutenant Company C, Ninth Minnesota Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

J. R. [OR D.] HUTCHINSON.

Mr. RIDDLE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3970) for the relief of J. R. [or D.] Hutchinson, of Sumner County, Tennessee; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Claims, and ordered to be printed.

SILVER COINS AND LEGAL TENDER.

Mr. RIDDLE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3971) to establish the legal-tender quality of the silver coins of the United States as it existed previous to the enactment of section 3586 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and for the repeal of said section; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

CATHARINE BRENNAN.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3972) granting a pension to Catharine Brennan; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

RUTH FORNSHELL.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3973) for the relief of Ruth Fornshell; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN CUTLER.

Mr. WIGGINTON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3974) releasing and conveying the title of the United States in and to a certain parcel of land to the assignees of John Cutler; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

JURISDICTION OF KENTUCKY COURTS.

Mr. DURHAM introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3975) giving the courts of Kentucky concurrent jurisdiction with the United States courts in the trial of offenses committed on the Government grounds near Harrodsburgh, Kentucky; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

WILEY SALIERS.

Mr. WHITE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3976) to remove the charge of desertion against Wiley Saliers, and to grant him an honorable discharge; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

HENRY FREEMAN.

Mr. WHITE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3977) for the relief of Henry Freeman, late a veteran soldier; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

SILVER TWENTY-CENT PIECE.

Mr. LE MOYNE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3978) to repeal an act authorizing the coinage of a twenty-cent piece of silver; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

GOVERNMENT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BUCKNER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3979) to repeal part of an act of Congress approved on the 12th day of July, 1876, entitled "An act for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

CATHARINE A. TALBURT.

Mr. BUCKNER also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3980) for the relief of Catharine A. Talburt, administratrix of George W. Talburt, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

REBECCA SEARS.

Mr. BUCKNER also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3981) for the relief of Rebecca Sears, administratrix of James W. Sears, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN HOFFMAN SMITH.

Mr. BUCKNER also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3982) for the relief of John Hoffman Smith; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

G. R. WILFRED MARSHALL.

Mr. BUCKNER also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3983) for the relief of G. R. Wilfred Marshall; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JOSEPH TRIMBLE.

Mr. BUCKNER also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3984) for the relief of Joseph Trimble; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

LUCINDA TRIMBLE.

Mr. BUCKNER also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3985) for the relief of Lucinda Trimble, administratrix of William Trimble, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES A. DAWSON.

Mr. MILLIKEN introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3986) for the relief of James A. Dawson; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

STATUE OF GENERAL GEORGE A. CUSTER.

Mr. A. S. WILLIAMS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3987) to donate bronze cannon for an equestrian statue of Brevet Major-General George A. Custer; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

HEIRS OF ALECK VANCE.

Mr. BOONE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3988) for the relief of the heirs of Aleck Vance, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

RECONSIDERATION.

Mr. CONGER. I move to reconsider all these references, and also move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That was the understanding when the order was made; that the same rule should apply as in the morning hour on Monday; that the bills should not be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

LIEUTENANT CHARLES B. SMITH.

On motion of Mr. EDEN, by unanimous consent, the Committee on War Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3819) to settle the accounts of Lieutenant Charles B. Smith, late of the Fifth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Cavalry; and the same was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

MILITARY ACADEMY BILL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair appoints the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. WELLS, in place of the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. HAMILTON, who is absent from the city, as one of the managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes between the two Houses on the Military Academy bill.

COMMITTEE ON TERRITORIES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. At the request of the Speaker of the House, the present occupant of the chair appoints the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. STEVENSON, as a member of the Committee on Territories, in place of the gentleman from South Carolina, Mr. Mackey, who has ceased to be a member of the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BROWN, of Kansas. I now call up the report of the Committee of Elections in the case of Platt vs. Goode, from the second congressional district of Virginia. But I yield for a moment to the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. STONE.]

PRINTING OF TESTIMONY.

Mr. STONE. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following resolution for present consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Post-Office Department be authorized to have printed the testimony taken before the committee.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Is there any hearsay evidence in this?

Mr. STONE. There is no hearsay evidence.

There being no objection, the resolution was adopted.

Mr. STONE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INVESTIGATION BY COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I ask the House to make the order which I send to the desk. And I desire to state, in asking the consent of the House to it, that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] and myself, so to speak representing both sides of the House, have agreed upon the terms of the order. I trust it will meet with no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That the reports of the majority and minority from the House Naval Committee giving the result of their investigation shall be presented to-morrow, and both shall be printed; and Friday, after the reading of the Journal, is hereby assigned for the consideration of the same, to the exclusion of all other business; six hours shall be given to debate, to be equally divided.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. CONGER. I object.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest that a minority report is unknown to the rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It can only be made by courtesy; but it always has been so made..

Mr. HALE. I think there will be no objection upon this side of the House to the proposition of the gentleman from Tennessee, if I am allowed to say a word. This order is presented by an arrangement and understanding with the members of the Naval Committee and the minority who are now at work on their report. They instructed me to say that they will be able to present their report to-morrow. They do not desire and nobody interested in the investigation desires delay. The time fixed is the same as that which was assigned yesterday in the resolution of the gentleman from Tennessee which was voted down, and the members of the committee will be ready at that time to participate in the debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the majority of the committee reporting at this time, and of the minority presenting their views, and that the report be made a special order for Friday?

Mr. CONGER. I object to one report being printed before the other.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest that the resolution be modified by inserting "the views of the minority" in place of "minority report."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is correct; the majority make the report and the minority present their views.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I have no objection to that modification.

Mr. BRIGHT. I desire to give notice that the question of consideration may be raised on Friday on this matter. I do not say it will be, but it may be.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hold that the question of consideration may be raised if the gentleman desires to move to go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar; that is the standing rule of the House.

Mr. RUSK. Let the order be read again.

The order, as modified, was again read; and no objection being made, the order was agreed to.

Mr. HALE moved to reconsider the vote by which the order was made; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. FOSTER. I rise to a question of personal privilege. I desire to state that some two or three weeks ago when the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. FRANKLIN, was about leaving for home, I agreed to pair with him on political questions. Through inadvertence or forgetfulness when these questions were being considered and voted on in the House I forgot the pair and neglected to announce it at the time.

Mr. BROWN of Kansas. I now yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. SEELYE.]

CATHERINE AND SOPHIE GERMAIN.

Mr. SEELYE, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3989) for the relief of Catherine and Sophie Germain.

Mr. SEELYE. I will state that this is a bill which ought to have been incorporated in the Indian appropriation bill, and which through inadvertence was omitted. It has the approval of the Committee on Indian Affairs and of the Committee on Appropriations, and will I know receive the unanimous approval of the House and ought to be passed at once.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to reserve from that portion of the annuities due or that are to become due to the Cheyenne Indians the sum of $2,500 for Catherine Germain, aged eighteen years, and $2,500 for Sophie Germain, aged thirteen years, two white children who were captured in Kansas by said Cheyenne Indians while en route from Georgia to Colorado; these sums to be placed to the credit of said Catherine and Sophie Germain on the books of the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States to bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum; and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized from time to time to use the interest on the same in such manner as he may deem expedient for their maintenance, education, and support until they attain the age of twenty-one years, when the principal and all the unexpended interest shall be paid to them.

It also provides that if either Catherine Germain or Sophie Germain shall die without issue the sum due the decedent shall revert to the survivor, and if both should die without issue the whole sum shall revert to the United States; but if either Catherine Germain or Sophie Germain or both have lawful issue, then at the death of either parent the amount due to her in her own right or which she may have inherited shall become the inheritance of her own issue.

Mr. SEELYE. Mr. Speaker, in May, 1874, the parents of these children, with three other members of the family, were massacred by the Cheyenne Indians, and four of the children, these two girls and two others, were taken into captivity. Two of them were recovered two years ago and a provision similar to this was incorporated in the Indian appropriation bill last year for the benefit of those two. During the present year the other two children who had been captured were recovered from the Cheyennes, and this bill is in the exact terms of the provision in the Indian appropriation bill of one year ago in relation to the other two children.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I did not hear the reading of the bill, but I would ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if this money is to come out of the appropriation made for the Cheyennes?

Mr. SEELYE. It is to be taken out of that fund.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SEELYE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN, of Kansas. I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LAWRENCE.]

PACIFIC RAILROAD LANDS.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I ask the House to adopt the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and are hereby, instructed to ascertain and report what legislation, if any, is necessary to secure to actual settlers the right to purchase, as under the pre-emption laws, at the price of $1.25 per acre and according to the terms of the proviso to section 3 of the act of Congress of July 1, 1862, lands granted in aid of the construction of the so-called Pacific Railroad, and that said committee report, by bill or otherwise, at as early a day as practicable.

Mr. GOODIN. It seems to me that that resolution would more properly go to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I will make no objection to that, and will modify the resolution by striking out the word "Judiciary," and inserting in lieu thereof "Public Lands."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I want the resolution adopted.

No objection being made, the resolution, as modified, was agreed to.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. REAGAN. I rise to a question of personal privilege. A few days ago I agreed with Mr. KASSON, of Iowa, to pair with him on the silver bill. That bill came up yesterday, and I forgot the fact that I had paired, and voted. I desire to make this statement in justice to the gentleman from Iowa.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BROWN, of Kansas. I will now yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. COCHRANE,] who desires to report some bills for reference to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

THOMAS A. NICHOLSON.

Mr. COCHRANE, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Claims, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 437) for the relief of Thomas A. Nicholson, of North Carolina; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

VIRGINIA E. WHITE.

Mr. COCHRANE also, by unanimous consent, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 1016) for the relief of Virginia E. White, of Ohio County, West Virginia; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BROWN, of Kansas. I now yield to the gentleman——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair must insist upon this method of conducting business being stopped. If the gentleman from Kansas yields the floor, it is the duty of the Chair to assign it to others. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. MORGAN.]

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to report from the Committee on Indian Affairs a bill for reference to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I object, and insist upon the regular order.

ELECTION CONTEST—PLATT VS. GOODE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the report of the Committee of Elections in the contested-election case of James H. Platt, jr., vs. John Goode, jr., from the second congressional district of Virginia. The Clerk will report the resolutions of the majority of the committee.

The Clerk read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That John Goode, jr., was not elected, and is not entitled, to a seat in the House of Representatives in the Forty-fourth Congress from the second congressional district of Virginia.

Resolved, That James H. Platt, jr., was elected, and is entitled, to a seat in the Forty-fourth Congress as Representative from the second district of Virginia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BROWN] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. LAMAR. Will the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BROWN] yield to me to make a motion to postpone this case until——

Mr. BROWN, of Kansas. I must decline to yield any further, for any purpose whatever.

Mr. BROWN, of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I regret that the Committee of Elections, in this last case which it will probably report at this session, has again failed to agree, and comes before the House with a divided report. I had hoped that one case could be decided without any reference to politics and that we could come together in our conclusions. But we have failed, and without bitterness or unkindness I must say that we have failed in a case where the law and the facts are so plain that the failure itself is a complete refutation of all charges of partisanship made against the republican minority of the committee and stands as patent proof against those members of the democratic majority who have signed the minority report in this case. I have studied the case carefully in all its bearings and have been forced to the conclusion that there has been an organized effort, commencing with the politicians of the second district of Virginia and extending up through the county officials to the State board of canvassers, to seat upon this floor a man who was not elected and who has no more right here than any other defeated candidate.

By a series of frauds so astounding that even the minority of the committee virtually confess that a great wrong was committed, Mr. Goode received a certificate of election, and has during this entire session sat here elected not by the voters, but by the refusal of the county board of Nansemond County to count 206 legal votes for Mr. Platt, by the neglect of the county clerk of Prince George County to attest the returns of that county, and by the partisanship and disobedience to law of the highest officials of the State of Virginia. I expect to speak plainly, and if called upon to characterize this case I should call it a conspiracy against the elective franchise, and as being another evidence of the existence in the South of a determination on the part of the dominant race to override the colored voters and deprive them of the boon granted by the Constitution of the United States, the right to exercise the elective franchise and choose, if they are in the majority, their own officers, including Representatives in Congress.

The history of the case fully justifies these statements, and I shall endeavor to give that history plainly and concisely. In July, 1874, a mass-meeting of negroes in Yorktown nominated a colored man named Norton for Congress. The regular convention of republicans afterward nominated Mr. Platt, and the conservatives Mr. Goode, making a triangular contest, two republicans and one democrat. The colored man, Norton, soon became tired of the, to him, hopeless contest, and would have withdrawn, had not the conservatives furnished him with money and whisky to keep him on the track, and so, if possible, effect the defeat of Mr. Platt. On this point William F. Allen, city superintendent of the conservative party in Norfolk, testifies:

Question 16. Was there not in the city of Norfolk, during the congressional campaign, a political organization known by general reputation as the "Norton campaign club?"

Answer. Yes, sir, there was.

Q. 17. Did you, then, have any correspondence or verbal communications with the "Norton campaign club," its officers or members?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. 18. State the substance and effect, the purpose and political objects sought to be attained and accomplished by your intercourse with the "Norton campaign club."

A. My object was to defeat Mr. Platt and elect Mr. Goode.

Q. 19. To the best of your information, knowledge, and belief, did you or your political associates, or Norton and his political associates, or any sane man in this congressional district believe, for one moment, after Mr. Goode's nomination, that Robert Norton stood any chance whatever of being elected Representative in Congress from the second congressional district of Virginia?

A. I do not think so, to the best of my knowledge, information, and belief.

Q. 20. Do you not know and verily believe that said Norton campaign club was kept up and maintained for the sole purpose of promoting Mr. Goode's election?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. 26. State to the best of your knowledge, information, and belief how much money was furnished to the Norton campaign club of Norfolk and to the officers and members thereof during the campaign by the conservative party in Norfolk City, including the official organizations and members of the party.

A. Between four and five hundred dollars.

Q. 29. Was there not in the county of York a political organization, ostensibly in the interest of Robert Norton and known by general reputation as the Lone Star Society?

A. There was such an organization, but I did not know it by that name.

Q. 30. By what name did you know it?

A. I knew it as the Norton party.

Q. 31. State to the best of your knowledge, information, and belief how much money was sent from Norfolk City by the conservative party and its members to the county of York or for the use of Robert Norton or the Norton party aforesaid, or the members thereof.

A. Nine hundred and fifty dollars. I know the amount, because I sent it myself; all sent by my direction.

Q. 32. Does the $950 include the one-hundred-dollar check referred to in Mr. Platt's notice of contest as having been sent by you—I mean your check?—A. It does.

Q. 33. Does it also include Mr. William M. Chaplain's check for $100 referred to in the notice of contest?—A. It does, to the best of my knowledge.

Q. 34. To whom or through whom did you send the moneys above referred to?—A. Dr. William H. Shields, of York County.

Q. 35. How much whisky or other liquors was sent from Norfolk City to York County by the like parties and to the like parties and for the like purposes as were the $950 aforesaid?—A. One barrel of whisky was sent by me.

Q. 41. Did you, during the campaign, see and converse with Robert Norton on political subjects?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. 42. More than once. How often?

A. Twice.

Q. 43. Please state said conversations as well as you can remember them. State their substance, tenor, and effect.

A. The conversation was, he stated to me that he had already expended $800 or $1,000—all the money he had—and without some assistance he could not conduct the campaign—without some assistance. I then asked him how much money it would require. He stated $2,500. I told him there was no money in the treasury of the conservative party of Norfolk, but that I would furnish him with $1,000 during the campaign, should he require that amount. This was the substance of the first conversation. In the second conversation I wanted to know how he was getting along, and if he still thought that he could carry 1,500 votes for him on the peninsula. His answer was, "Yes, and as many more."

The sitting member admits these facts in his brief, and makes the statement that it was done "for the legitimate purpose of enabling Norton to carry on his campaign and thus dividing the republican vote," and in his answer to the notice of contest Mr. Goode says:

If any of my friends contributed pecuniary aid to Norton in the progress of the campaign it was done without any knowledge or suggestion on my part, upon their individual responsibility as citizens, for the legitimate purpose of creating division in the ranks of your party, and accomplishing your defeat by all fair and honorable means.

Legitimate, fair, and honorable means. Here are strange definitions. Bribery, false pretenses, legitimate. Deception, fraud, fair and honorable. Under what code of morals was the gentleman raised? Is this the political honesty taught in the old Commonwealth which proudly claims to be the mother of Presidents?

Election day came and the election seemed to be very close. In spite of all the navy-yard frauds, of which the minority of the committee in their report endeavor to make so much, Portsmouth for the first time since reconstruction had gone conservative and the democrats were in high hopes that they had been successful.

A little leverage and they would be sure. So twelve votes which had got into the wrong ballot-box at Norfolk were destroyed. Conservative judges of election, two days after the election, go to the clerk's office in Nansemond County, and in utter violation of law get possession of the returns which they had duly made and sealed two days before, and mutiliate, forge, and alter them by writing on them statements of fact, and thereby caused the rejection by the county board of 206 legal votes duly cast and duly returned for Mr. Platt. The sole pretext for this rejection was that either printed on the same ticket or folded within it were votes against the constitutional amendments.

The whole committee agree that these votes were legal, and hence we shall not further allude to them except as showing the total disregard to justice and right manifested by the petty officials and as one of the facts proving the conspiracy against the elective franchise existing in Virginia.

These votes excluded, it was hoped that Mr. Goode was elected, but soon by mail and telegraph came the news that they were mistaken, and Mr. Platt was still ahead. Something must be done. A messenger was dispatched to Richmond to approach and interview the State board of canvassers to see whether amended returns from the several counties would not be counted instead of those duly made as required by law, and from the attorney-general, the law officer of the Commonwealth, a favorable answer was received, "that in all probability the State board of canvassers would feel it to be their duty to receive amended or supplemental returns."

A meeting of Mr. Goode's friends was held at Norfolk, and as he himself testifies:

We determined to send messengers to Southampton, Sussex, Prince George, James City, and York, for the purpose of convening the judges and commissioners of election, in order that the irregularities and informalities might be corrected and amended returns forwarded to the city of Richmond.

The commissioners of these counties had acted; they were functus officio; their duty was done. Their returns had been forwarded; but Mr. Goode and his friends were not satisfied, the summing up did not suit. They had a theory, and that theory appears throughout Mr. Goode's brief, and that was that any informality or one illegal vote tainted a poll, and was sufficient to justify its rejection; and with such a theory how easy it was to find grounds on which to reject townships which had given republican majorities. And so from these counties amended returns were sent in. The State board of canvassers met, and after a long discussion, in spite of the statement of the attorney-general, the amended returns were rightfully rejected.

Then was committed by that board the greatest outrage shown in this record. Prince George County had given Mr. Platt 425 majority, and with it counted he was elected by 294 majority, without it, after throwing out the 206 votes in Nansemond, which the committee all agree should be counted for him, Mr. Goode had 131 majority. The returns were substantially in form, and merely lacked the words, "Attest, Robert Gilliam, clerk." They were duly signed by the commissioners and duly certified by Robert Gilliam, clerk; but because he did not virtually repeat the same thing twice, because he did not both attest and certify, the returns were informal, and were rejected by the State board.

We have no words fully to express our opinion of this outrage, committed not by ignorant men but by the highest officers in the State. Did not these men know that a mere attestation is matter of form and not of substance? Did they not know the rule "that the errors of a returning officer shall not prejudice the rights of innocent parties;" that those provisions of statute "touching the recording and return of legal votes received and the mode and manner of conducting the mere details of the election are directory?" Did not the attorney-general, a member of the board of canvassers, know that these returns were in substantial compliance with the statute and that the mere failure of the clerk to attest them did not make them invalid? The mere rejection of them is bad enough, but there are other circumstances which make it much worse. The statute of Virginia provides that in cases where proper returns are not received by the secretary of the Commonwealth from any county within twelve days after any election, he shall dispatch a messenger to obtain such returns. This he failed to do, pleading the pitiable excuse that it was for the board and not for him to determine whether returns were in form. Mr. Platt presented before the board at the same time a return duly certified and attested by Robert Gilliam, clerk, and though there was no doubt of its genuineness, this, too, was rejected. Though the county seat of Prince George County is within three hours' ride of Richmond, the board could not allow time to get proper returns although the evidence was conclusive that it was a mere clerical omission, and the returns were rejected.

By such means Mr. Goode obtained his certificate and became prima facie entitled to represent the second district of Virginia in this House. He sits here not because the people wanted him, but because the party machinery was in the hands of his partisans and they were determined to give him the seat regardless of any of those principles of justice and honor which are usually supposed to control sworn officials, and especially such as have by the suffrages of the people been called upon to occupy the highest positions in a great Commonwealth.

It was the duty of the State board of canvassers to have allowed Mr. Platt Prince George County, as the vote was shown to them by the two abstracts, the one not attested on file with the secretary of the Commonwealth, and the one duly attested presented to them by Mr. Platt. By their wrong in refusing to do this Mr. Goode obtained the certificate, and by that wrong he to-day, instead of being contestant, occupies the enviable position of contestee.

The two reports of the committee agree in this, to allow Mr. Platt 206 votes in Nansemond County and 17 majority in Prince George, and while we differ in reference to 12 votes in Norfolk and the disposition of a few votes claimed to be illegal in different precincts, the aggregate is so small that whether we count the ninety as illegal, as claimed, or any less number, you cannot by any fair division so far bring the case to a close point as to make it turn on them, and we shall therefore wholly pass them in our discussion and give our attention to more vital questions, which are Rives and Bland townships in Prince George County and the navy-yard vote in Norfolk.

The minority report claims the rejection of 441 majority in three precincts where the navy-yard employés voted, and refuses to count the 408 majority received by Mr. Platt in Bland and Rives Townships, Prince George County. This makes it plain that the case turns on these two townships, for Mr. Goode's majority is but 131, while we propose to count 223 votes for Mr. Platt, which would leave him 92 votes ahead. Now counting the two townships for him, 408 would give him 500 majority, from which subtract the navy-yard vote, 441, still leaves Mr. Platt 59 votes ahead, a majority which cannot be overcome by any fair division of the illegal vote at whatever figure you put it. We hope the House will bear this in mind, that the case turns on these two townships; reject their vote and you elect Mr. Goode, count it and you seat Mr. Platt. The evidence shows in these two townships that the whole of the election board in one and two of the three in the other were conservatives; that the election was fair and honest, and Mr. Goode in his brief makes no claim to the contrary, as he states his case thus:

We maintain that the entire vote cast at the precincts in Rives and Bland Townships, in the county of Prince George, should be rejected as illegal because the poll-books and ballots at said precincts were not sealed and returned to the clerk's office according to law and also because the votes of several colored persons from other counties were illegally received upon transfers on the day of election.

If the only charge to prove the election was unfair was that several illegal votes were cast, and the evidence showed but 2 out of a total of 600, as in this case, it seems to us the charge refutes itself, and the most Mr. Goode claims is that several colored men voted illegally. This might be occasion for the purging but not for the exclusion of the polls, and we have in our report purged them of every illegal vote, charging them all to Mr. Platt.

Every witness swears it was a fair election honestly conducted. Robert B. Batte, a democratic judge of election in Bland Township, testifies to this, although shown to be such an extreme partisan of Mr. Goode that he testifies "that he would rejoice if the omission of the judges in Bland and Rives Township to put under cover and seal one of the poll-books and ballots of each of those townships should cause James H. Platt to lose a majority of three or four hundred votes in Prince George County, and thereby cause John Goode, jr., to be entitled to a seat in the Fourty-fourth Congress." C. T. Robinson, a democratic judge in Rives Township, testifies that the election there was "fairly, faithfully, and honestly conducted." We have attached to our report the whole of the testimony in reference to these townships, and it completely refutes every claim that the election was unfair, and merely establishes one fact in reference to them which this House must squarely meet, and that is that the poll-books and ballots from each township were returned to the county clerk unsealed. Is this fatal? Mr. McCrary discusses the question at length, and from him we quote:

The language of the statute to be construed must be consulted and followed. If the statute expressly declares any particular act to be essential to the validity of the election, or that its omission shall render the election void, all courts whose duty it is to enforce such statute must so hold, whether the particular act in question goes to the merits or affects the result of the election or not. Such a statute is imperative, and all considerations touching its policy or impolicy must be addressed to the Legislature. But if, as in most cases, the statute simply provides that certain acts or things shall be done within a particular time or in a particular manner, and does not declare that their performance is essential to the validity of the election, then they will be regarded as mandatory if they do, and directory if they do not, affect the actual merits of the election. Those provisions which affect the time and place of an election and the legal qualifications of the electors are generally of the substance of the election, while those touching the recording and return of the legal votes received and the mode and manner of conducting the mere details of the election are directory. The principle is that irregularities which do not tend to affect results are not to defeat the will of the majority; the will of the majority is to be respected even when irregularly expressed. The officers of election may be liable to punishment for violation of the directory provisions of a statute, yet the people are not to suffer on account of the default of their agents.

And at section 166, page 120, the same author says:

In accordance with the rule that the errors of a returning officer shall not prejudice the rights of innocent parties, it has been held that where it was the duty of the presiding officer to return the votes sealed up a return of them unsealed, in the absence of any proof or suspicion of fraud, is good.

(See also Merrill vs. Mallary, Clark and Hall Election Cases, page 329.) The syllabus is as follows:

Where the presiding officer at an election whose duty it was by law to return the votes sealed up made his return of them unsealed, they were in the absence of any proof or suspicion of fraud allowed to be received.

In the body of their report the committee say:

But the presiding officer of the election in Fairhaven did not, as the law directs, seal up the certificate of votes after it had been recorded in the clerk's office, but sent it unsealed to the canvassing committee. For this cause it was by them rejected. No fraud is alleged, nor has the mistake done any injury to the sitting member. The town clerk's record is doubtless designed to guard against fraud. And it has not been the practice of the House of Representatives to allow votes legally given to be defeated by the mistake or negligence of a returning officer, especially in mere matter of form. The committee are of opinion that the votes of this town ought to be allowed the petitioner.

The soundness of the law above quoted can admit of no question. Exact technical correctness cannot be expected of judges of election and men who are not versed in the law. Substantial compliance is all we can demand, and when we can by any means ascertain the expression of the will of the voters we must respect that will and not seek technical grounds upon which to thwart it. Now in this case, it being admitted there was a fair and free election, what does the law of Virginia require?

After canvassing the votes in the manner aforesaid, the judges, before they adjourn, shall put under cover one of the poll-books, seal the same, and direct it to the county or corporation court clerk of the county or corporation in which the election is held, and the poll-book thus sealed and directed (together with the ballots strung as aforesaid inclosed and sealed) shall be conveyed by one of the judges, to be determined by lot, (if they cannot otherwise agree,) to the clerk to whom they are directed on the day following the election.

Mr. Goode in his brief calls this law mandatory, but it will be seen that it is wholly of form and not of substance. It is essential that returns be made, but it is not essential how they be made, provided they are reliable and free from any taint. The authority we have quoted says: "Provisions touching the recording and return of the legal votes received are directory," and that in the absence of any proof or suspicion of fraud a "return of votes unsealed," where the statute requires them to be sealed, is good.

If this statute is mandatory, there can be no positive requirement of the statute which is not mandatory. All statutes prescribing the mode of conducting elections, the manner of procedure, the time of opening and closing the polls, become mandatory, and every departure is fatal. The committees of this House have again and again reported, even at this session, that the time of opening and closing polls, the election of officers of election, &c., are not matters of substance, unless in some way it tends to defeat the will of the electors to have them disregarded. This is both law and common sense.

In discussing the case of Le Moyne vs. Farwell, the gentleman from Kentucky who wrote the report of the minority in this case made an earnest and labored effort to convince this House that because the judges of the election in the first precinct of the twentieth ward were partisans of Mr. Farwell, all illegal votes cast at that precinct must be presumed to have been cast for him; and the gentleman from Virginia, chairman of the committee, used the following language in the same case:

Now the law lays it down that fraud must be always construed against the party who perpetrates it. The doctrine is laid down that no man can take advantage of his own wrong. I send up to the Clerk authorities on this question and ask that they be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

"An irregularity in an election may be overlooked 'if it cast no uncertainty on the result and has not been occasioned by the party seeking to derive a benefit from it.'" (Platt vs. People, 29 Illinois, page 72.)

"It is undoubtedly the rule that if the canvassing court can separate the legal from the illegal votes and reject the illegal ones, they are bound to do so; and * * * fraud on the part of the officers will not vitiate, unless it be of so gross a character as to destroy all means of ascertaining the true result." (Cass County, Illinois, Brightly's Election Cases, pages 495, 496.)

That is good law in a case where a republican is to be ousted and a democrat seated. "No man can take advantage of his own wrong," says the honorable gentleman, and because the judges of the election were in favor of Mr. Farwell, it is a fair presumption that all illegal votes were in his interest. Here the question is in a different shape. A democrat is in danger of losing his seat, and a republican may receive it. An honest, fair election was held, at which the republicans had nothing to do except deposit their ballots, which on leaving their hands went under democratic control. Any wrong committed, any fraud perpetrated, must be charged to the democrats; they were in power. Out of the six judges at the two precincts five voted for Mr. Goode and but one for Mr. Platt. Democrats carried in the returns to a democratic county clerk. Any wrong done was committed by democrats. The failure to seal the returns was the failure of democratic judges, and yet the gentlemen who in the Farwell case so eloquently told us that "no man can take advantage of his own wrong," and brought authorities to prove it, now, when it is their ox that is gored, change front, and because democrats failed to do their duty, propose to seat a democrat upon this floor and deprive Mr. Platt of a legal majority of 408. No one suspects that these men were in Mr. Platt's interest. Men who boast they were conservatives, and admit that they would rejoice if by their wrong Mr. Goode can retain his seat, are not the men to do anything for Mr. Platt. I believe the men were honest and did not change the ballots and returns, but if they did, they certainly did not do it in favor of their opponent.

The sole, the only object of having ballots and poll-books sealed is to prevent tampering with them, and in some cases where ballots and poll-books were not sealed, where they were in the hands of friends of the party benefited by them, suspicion might arise that there had been tampering and evidence required to clear the taint. But this cannot be in a case where the returns are in the hands of the friends of the man who is injured by them. If democrats hold returns from republican precincts and the republican candidates are not complaining, can the democrats, with any reason, claim their rejection? Would such a decision be anything but a premium for fraud? Take this very State of Virginia; the county judge appoints election boards and the Legislature elects the county judges; the State being democratic, the election boards, even in the strongest republican precincts, are democrats. Now, let this House decide that every informality in these boards vitiates an election, how long will it be before the republican party is wiped out in the State? With the machinery all against it, it exists only in sections to-day; and let this House now make this monstrous precedent, and no matter if a district has ten thousand majority, it will be in the power of the democrats by failing to sign or seal returns or by committing other informalities to disfranchise the majority and give power to the minority.

Under the code which this record shows to exist among conservatives in that State various "legitimate and fair and honorable means" will be found to defeat republicans and elect democrats. Examples are not lacking. In these very two townships we are considering, Bland and Rives, in Prince George County, the conservatives, emboldened by their success in this case, at the very next election stole the poll-books and ballots and returned democrats, where republicans were elected; and when the contest came before the Legislature of Virginia, the man elected by the theft was kept in his seat. In Portsmouth, at the next election after the one over which this contest is waged, we have another instance.

The law of Virginia provides that in cases where more ballots are found in the ballot-box than there are names on the poll-books it shall be the duty of the judges of election to draw out the excess. The conservatives of Portsmouth, taking advantage of this law, had printed tickets of the smallest possible size, on the thinnest paper, and by folding several in a large ticket and presenting it as their vote they succeeded in filling the ballot-boxes with over a thousand of these small tickets—sugar-kiss tickets as they are called. The democratic judges in drawing out of course drew out the larger tickets, and the result was nine hundred of these tickets were counted for Mr. Gale, democratic candidate for State senator, and he thereby elected by a majority of less than one hundred and fifty over Mr. Brady, his competitor. A contest of course was had over the seat. The committee of elections of the senate, though having upon it but one republican, decided by a vote of 6 to 2 that Mr. Brady was elected. But the senate overruled the report and held that the polls had been purged of the fraud according to law, and by a decisive majority retained Mr. Gale in his seat. The same was also done in Petersburgh, and I hold in my hand one of the sugar-kiss tickets used in this election in Petersburgh, just one inch long and three-quarters wide. Such are the means resorted to to insure the success of the democratic party in Virginia.

To return to the manner in which the judges of election are appointed. The law requires that they be divided between the two parties; but the judges claim the right to determine who are republicans and who are democrats.

We append a correspondence between the judge of the hustings court of Petersburgh and a republican committee of only four months ago, taken from the Virginia Citizen:

PETERSBURGH, VIRGINIA, March 15, 1876.

DEAR SIR: In view of the importance of the elections for the ensuing year, municipal and Federal, and in view of the fact that you are required to make your appointments of judges of election at the April term of the court, the republican party, through its organization, as represented by the republican city central committee, of which I have the honor to be chairman, most respectfully ask of your honor the privilege of presenting to your consideration the names of two republicans from each voting-precinct, in whom the party have entire confidence as exponents of its principles, and beg that it will be your pleasure to select and appoint at least one of these gentlemen as judge of election at each voting-precinct in the city.

I hope you will not deem it amiss for me to say that the republicans feel that they have not a single recognized representative on the present board of election judges in any precinct in the city, and they do now most respectfully ask that under and by authority conferred on you by section 8, chapter 8 of the code of 1873, you take under advisement the "practicability" of making such appointments in accordance with the above request. Should it be your pleasure to entertain this, our petition, we shall feel a pride in recommending to you the names of gentlemen whom we believe to be above reproach and in whom men of both parties will have entire confidence. Hoping it may be your pleasure to send me a favorable response at your earliest convenience, I am, yours, very respectfully,

J. H. VAN AUKEN,
Chairman City Central Committee.

Hon. E. M. MANN,
Judge of the Hustings Court of the City of Petersburgh.

The following curt answer was received in return:

PETERSBURGH, March 20, 1876.

SIR: In reply to your communication of the 15th instant, I have to state that in the appointment of judges of election I shall, as I do in all matters connected with my office, exercise my own discretion.

Respectfully,

EDWIN M. MANN.

J. H. VAN AUKEN, Esq., Chairman, &c.,
Petersburgh, Virginia.

It was then determined that it was a duty we owed to ourselves and to the organization we represented to take all further legitimate means to secure the appointment of a republican judge at each precinct, as is provided by law. The ward clubs therefore each recommended two or more names of republicans, which were approved by the republican city central committee, who designated five of their number to present the following petition and names:

Hon. E. M. MANN,
Judge of the Hustings Court of the City of Petersburgh:

Your petitioners, the specially selected representatives of the republican voters of this city to draught and present this petition to your honor, humbly ask that, in pursuance of the requirements of section 8, chapter 8, page 155, Code of Virginia, edition of 1873, at least one from each ward of this city of the following-named republicans be appointed to act as judges of election in each of said voting-places for the ensuing year:

First Ward—B. S. Burch, Dr. William G. Pearse, Michael Rahily.
Second Ward—C. P. Ramsdell, John H. Bell, C. M. Hamlin, J. H. Van Auken.
Third Ward—John W. Booth, James H. Bailey, George S. Richards, Farrel Gallagher, M. W. Corey, David Smith.
Fourth Ward—John W. Farrell, Elisha Armstrong.
Fifth Ward—Erastus C. Hyde, D. Blandford, jr.
Sixth Ward—Andrew Burgess, Peter T. Young.

Very respectfully, &c.,

ROBT. BOLLING,
JOS. JORGENSEN,
R. A. YOUNG,
T. J. MCCALEB,
DANIEL DYSON.

He at first refused the petition, but finally, on being reminded that it was the privilege of the humblest citizen to petition the highest official in the land, he reluctantly received it, but evidently has failed to pay to it the least attention or notice. These plain facts are presented to the public for their serious thought and reflection.

Now, what was the result? The city election came on in May. The republicans, having no hope from the boards of election appointed by this judge, inaugurated the plan of placing two or three of the members of their party at each of the polling-places with tickets arranged somewhat in the form of bank-check books. When a voter obtained a ticket from one of these men and voted it, his name and residence were put down on the stub; so that it would be an easy matter, as will be seen, to prove by a multitude of witnesses, in the event of an effort to deprive them of their rights, just how many republican ballots were cast and who deposited them; and this was called the tally system. But the democrats did not allow it to work. I append an account from a letter from Petersburgh, dated May 26, and which appeared in the National Republican of May 29, showing how these tally-keepers were served.

Threats are being freely uttered against the author of the tally system. You will see that even by the varnished account of the Index-Appeal, in which they tacitly approve the violence of the roughs, what an unexampled outrage has been perpetrated on the republicans. It is enough to sicken a graven image. In the fifth ward the roughs had been organized into a regular company, and, after marching about the republican headquarters for a while, made a regular charge on the building, shouting and firing pistols, two men being shot at the first fire. They then demanded the tally-books, which were refused; but after a determined resistance the few colored men having charge of them were overpowered and the books seized, and I suppose have ere this been destroyed. Afterward the mayor made his appearance with some police, and the person accused of shooting one of the victims was arrested and soon after released on $300 bail. (He was afterward discharged.—ED.) The same company above referred to were formed into line in the very court-room and marched down the street amid the quiet, though, I believe, general approval of the people; for I heard one of the first and apparently most amiable of their party say that "any means were pardonable that would protect them from negro or radical rule." Isn't it ku-kluxism with a vengeance? Poor Marble, one of the most inoffensive, amiable, and quietly-disposed men in the community, was arrested for "inciting riot." He was confined in jail until twelve o'clock, when he was released on bail, no one appearing against him. What a travesty on justice!

In the first ward there was a company organized the same as in the fifth. They first demanded the tally-books, and, when refused, advanced, broke down the doors of the house where the books had been concealed, beat a poor paralytic colored man nearly to death, and marched off with a part of the book. As you will see by the democratic paper I send you, there is no disapproval of these unexampled outrages, that are of the same character as the lawlessness of the Ku-Klux; but, on the other hand, they receive at least a tacit approval from what is regarded as the better class of the democrats in the community. These roughs feel that they are protected in whatever they do. If they get into difficulty, the best counsel in the community is provided for them, and they are sure to be cleared. In my opinion, no republican's life is safe who takes an active interest in the politics of his party. We have taken the names of 1,856 men who voted the straight republican ticket, besides many others who voted without giving their names, certainly 2,000 in all. We are, however, reported as casting only 1,434 votes, so, to say the least, we have been swindled out of 500 votes, which would have given us the election. Besides, in the first ward, the roughs, in the latter part of the afternoon, aided by some of the police, drove off colored voters, while in the fifth ward many republicans feared to go to the polls after the émeute and in face of the threatening looks of the roughs congregated there. Is it not possible to have some sort of protection from the General Government?

I do not desire to multiply words. But if facts prove anything, am I not justified in saying that there is a conspiracy in that State to deprive the republicans of the elective franchise. When State officials prostitute their high positions to partisan purposes; when judges whose high calling ought to make them sensitive to their honor trail their ermine in the dust to subserve party ends; when State Legislatures are so dishonest as to seat in their bodies men elected as was Mann Page in 1875 by the theft of ballot-boxes in Prince George County and coolly turn from their doors the man elected by the legal electors; when a State senate justifies ballot-box stuffing and seats a man elected by sugar-kiss tickets never polled by the voters but stuffed in by dishonest men; when election boards rejoice if by their crimes of omission or commission republicans can be defeated and democrats elected; when county clerks forget to attest returns; when judges of elections tamper with returns after being sent in to the county clerks; when tally-keepers are murdered and bands of roughs, as in Portsmouth, march from poll to poll beating and driving away republican challengers, does it not show dishonor deep and damnable, and prove that southern chivalry is but a pretense and southern honor a mere fiction?

I do not believe this House will tolerate such conduct. Partisanship is strong, but I hope not strong enough to lead honorable members to become accessaries after the fact to such glaring crimes. The gentleman from Kentucky in the Le Moyne-Farwell case talked about decisions in election cases and said:

I leave it to any gentleman upon that side of the House who is bold enough to tell the country the dwarfed and shriveled percentage of the cases in which you have dared to decide against your partisans.

We have no doubt during the hot days of reconstruction many cases were decided on grounds that to-day might be untenable, that unrepentant rebels were excluded who to-day would be admitted; but we have examined the cases decided during the past two Congresses, in which the republicans were in the ascendency, and find that during these four years the "dwarfed and shriveled percentage the republicans dared to decide against their own friends" amounted to over 50 per cent.; and in the Forty-second Congress, out of seventeen cases, eleven were decided in favor of democrats, five in favor of republicans, and in one case the seat was declared vacant. Against this record we willingly place that of the democrats at this session, and leave the record of at least two democrats seated by them to one republican for them to explain; and the question whether in cases where the republicans and democrats have disagreed as to which was right, I willingly leave to the lawyers who may sit in future Congresses.

But to return to the case under discussion. It wholly turns on the question we have stated, whether the failure of democratic judges to seal returns in republican precincts is fatal. We place the question on that point, and if you propose to take advantage of your own wrong, and because democrats failed to do their duty deprive republican voters of their rights and a republican of the right to sit in this House, upon you will rest the responsibility, and for it you must account. No favors are asked, none are expected; but you are sworn to do your duty, and we have the right to demand that you do justice. And we do not expect you will so outrage all principles of fairness as to refuse to count the votes of republicans in precincts where democrats controlled the polls and republicans were in no position to do wrong even if they had such a desire.

The minority of the committee in their report answer our argument as follows:

The statute of Virginia requires that one of the poll-books of election shall be put under cover and seal and sent to the county or corporation court clerk, together with the ballots, inclosed and sealed. There can be no question as to the mandatory character of this statute. Its object is to prevent fraud in tampering with the ballots or alteration of returns. In these two precincts the law in this regard was wholly ignored and violated. The rule laid down and supported by a number of adjudicated cases and applied in several instances by this House does not require that positive proof shall be adduced showing that the ballots have been tampered with. It is sufficient to show that opportunity for such tampering has been afforded. The burden of proving that this has not been done devolves upon the party insisting upon the count. We cannot but conclude, in the light of the test-mony, under the application of the law, as stated, that the vote of Bland and Rives Townships, in the county of Prince George, should be rejected.

Such argument amazes us. The law is properly laid down "that positive proof is not required to show that ballots have been tampered with. It is sufficient to show that opportunity for such tampering has been afforded. The burden of proof that this has not been done devolves on the party insisting upon the count." We do not deny the law and have insisted on it in all cases, but how far does the rule go? How much do gentlemen want? Is it not enough to prove that it was a fair election; that the officers failed to do their duty because they had not the means; that they did their best, in one case inclosing the ballots in a tin box and in the other in a paper bag, and returning the poll-books tied up? Is it not enough to prove that a duplicate of the poll-book and returns was returned to the township clerk; that the judges were democrats, while the republicans had the majority in both precincts; that these democratic judges against their interest swear that the returns were not tampered with? The evidence is strong as Holy Writ, and to talk about burden of proof and our duty, when the evidence establishes beyond a reasonable doubt by unfriendly witnesses that there had been no tampering, is certainly cool and refreshing during these sultry summer days.

I scarcely care to enter into the navy-yard question, as I cannot believe it can be necessary; but there are a few matters I desire to speak of before my hour closes. The evidence shows an assessment of the employés in the navy-yard, but it shows that a large proportion did not pay. It shows that it was not compulsory, that many paid and many did not, and that no one was discharged because he did not pay.

In reference to this matter I desire to say that there is no evidence that Mr. Platt had any interest in the matter or instigated the assessment.

Forced assessments are wrong, and we have no word to say in their favor; voluntary contributions are customary and not wrong. The former should be discountenanced, and those who make them should be punished; but unless the money is corruptly used we know of no legal ground upon which an election can be set aside, even if we believe such assessments to be wrong, as we certainly do. There is no evidence to show how the funds raised were used, whether for legitimate or illegitimate purposes, and without such evidence we can consider all the testimony in reference to assessments as mere make-weight thrown in to injure the contestant. But we cannot puncture this bubble easier than by quoting from a democratic witness in this case, William F. Allen, who paid the money to Norton to keep him on the track for the "legitimate" purpose of dividing the republican vote, who says that collections were made to raise money to elect Mr. Goode; that no assessments were made on officers; that they were requested to contribute the same as anybody else; and that his "understanding was that a man was not worthy to hold office under the conservative party who was not willing to contribute money to help the conservative cause."

Mr. Goode's friends collected money, and did not believe a man worthy to hold office under the conservative party who was not willing to contribute money to help the conservative cause. They collected money, used it for legitimate purposes, as for example in the bribery of Robert Norton, and then come here with lugubrious complaints that the republicans collected money from their supporters. Let him who would receive equity do equity. Let them come before us with clean hands. But the employés voted the republican ticket! Some did. Some did not; a great many did not. But suppose they did, what does it prove? Who was the author of the famous political principle, "to the victors belong the spoils?" Who were the advocates of "rotation in office?" Was it republicans or was it democrats? The evidence shows that the republicans had labor to give. The officials were republicans. A new sloop was being built. There was a demand for men. Do politicians assist their friends or their enemies? And is it bribery to give preference to friends rather than to adversaries. Democrats certainly cannot claim that it is. Where is there a democratic city in the whole country where labor to be done is not in the hands of democrats? Are republicans placed on the police force? Are they employed on the public works while democrats are walking about doing nothing? We make no claims that republicans are more generous in such matters than are their opponents. The party having work to give has an advantage and it tends to swell their vote. Electors are not immaculate; they work from motives, sometimes very low ones, and unless there is positive evidence of undue influence being used, I know of no reason or common sense in saying that a party has a right to the advantages which come to it by being in power and having work to supply.

Now, the evidence in this case shows that the republican executive committee recommended men to work, and if fit persons they were employed, preference in employment being given to republicans. Several witnesses testify that employment was given only on promises, express or implied, that the persons employed should vote the republican ticket; but it is very noticeable that no witness employed says he made such a promise, and several of them voted for Mr. Goode. The chairman of the republican committee testifies that no such promise was required; that the only time politics were spoken of was when men volunteered the information that they were republicans.

James H. Clements, chairman of the republican executive committee for Portsmouth for two years prior to March 29, 1875, testified as follows:

Question. 4. State to the best of your knowledge and belief whether moral force was employed during the late congressional canvass, by or through the republican organizations of the locality, to control the votes of men taken in the employment of the Government just prior to the election of November 3, 1874.

Answer. I know of no moral force. The matter was left to me, to a great extent, by the committee, and my course was as follows: I never called on any individual to ascertain his views or intentions. Persons would frequently call on me and ask for recommendations for work, and they would almost invariably state that it was their intention to vote the republican ticket at the coming election. I always told them that it was nothing to me how they voted, and I did not desire to know from them their intentions; but as I was chairman of the executive committee of the republican party, it was my duty to help the members of that party all I could. I would take their names, and when there was a chance for employment I would recommend those who had the best moral character according to my information, the largest families, and who were best qualified to perform the duties required of them.

The same witness, in reference to the charge of filling the yard with employés, testifies as follows:

Q. 5. Mr. Goode has charged that immediately after his nomination for Congress, September 1, 1874, thirteen or fourteen hundred voters were taken into the navy-yard, but that they could not obtain the said employment without a promise, expressed or implied, that they would vote for Mr. Platt; that a night or two previous to the election they were regularly drilled and instructed as to the manner in which they should exercise the elective franchise; that men were placed at the ballot-boxes to watch the voters and check off their names, so that large numbers of employés in the yard were thus intimidated and prevented from voting for Mr. Goode; and he charges that all this was done directly through the agency of Mr. Platt and that of his recognized committee-men. Please state, to the best of your knowledge, information, and belief, what authority there was in fact for such allegation by Mr. Goode.

A. According to my knowledge, Mr. Goode had no authority for making that allegation. There were men taken into the yard after the 1st of September, and I am sure no such number as he mentions; the force was being increased at that time, regardless of politics. Mr. Hanscom, the chief of the Bureau, informed me, I think in the month of August, that he intended to largely increase the force in the yard, as he intended to launch the new sloop in November. As far as men being drilled, I know the republican party had meetings and took all usual steps to get their friends out to vote; and I, as chairman of the executive committee, desired to know how parties voted before the polls closed. I desired to be posted at all stages of the election as to how it was going, as to what were the prospects. * * * I took no more steps to be informed as to how individuals voted than I would have done had there been no navy-yard in this section of the country.

The evidence also shows that less men were employed during the fall months of 1874 than of 1873, that there was work to be done, and finally, strange to say, that, in spite of the fact there were about 900 registered colored voters in Portsmouth, the republican vote amounted to but 1,042, and for the first time for years the city gave 53 democratic majority. The evidence shows that in Norfolk County the division was not on the color line generally, though the colored men voted for Mr. Platt, the whites being divided. Now, suppose there were 15 per cent. of the colored men failed to vote, or 135, Mr. Platt must have received 765 colored votes in Portsmouth. Adding 25 as the number of white votes outside the navy-yard, and he had without question 790 legal votes, leaving but 252 navy-yard employés voting for him. I mean white employés, and certainly the colored employés were not bribed. At Hall's Corner different witnesses estimate that from two hundred to four hundred navy-yard hands voted, of whom at least three-fourths were colored. That in the third ward of Portsmouth some three hundred voted, of whom three-fourths were black. Now what is proposed to be done, to deprive Mr. Platt of 198 majority at Hall's Corner, where at the outside not more than seventy-five white employés of the navy-yard voted as well as the two wards in Portsmouth?

But why discuss absurdities? We have no right to surmise or guess; we must act on evidence; and acting on evidence how can we reject any votes? Shall we say the black employés were bribed? Shall we say the white ones who had steady employment were, and of whom several hundred are still in the yard? Shall we say the men whom the Government needed to build the new sloop and were discharged after it was launched were bribed? We certainly shall not. Did the record prove that a single democrat got employment under the promise to change his politics; that employment was given to influence an election when the Government did not need the help, and the men were virtually hired to vote, we should say purge the polls of all such votes. But without a scintilla of evidence of this kind; without proof that brings matters within any means we may have of measuring the fraud on indefinite and uncertain evidence, without proof even showing who were put on in September and October, and whether black or white republicans or democrats, we would dismiss the navy-yard as indeed a pons asinorum.

Perhaps in closing this branch of the case I cannot do better than to read the argument of Ex-Governor Wise on this point, which is certainly unique and shows the absurdity of our consideration of this whole matter.

This charge and the testimony under it is so comprehensive and voluminous, so indefinite and confused as to the amount and degree of influence, as to whose influence it was, and by whom exerted, that it is hard to handle it in argument.

Government influence? How far may legitimate patronage of an Administration go?

Organized party influence? Who can forbid private political associations to proselyte and woo and win votes, and to preserve their power? Both parties resort to all arts to get "kissing for favors!" Both, in this case, were alike vigilant and active in raising funds by contributions; not assessments in any sense. Conservatives as well as republicans were employed, and republicans as well as conservatives were discharged, at and about the same time, in and from the navy-yard.

Certain it is that Mr. Goode was indulged in full latitude of inquiry. If not inquisitorial, it was intrusive, and went to the extreme limits of fair and just proof; and in some cases beyond legitimate investigation. Did a contested election before ever question the right of Government as to the time of employing or discharging hands? Into the skill of its mechanics? As to whether too many were employed or any were discharged? As to the cost of a vessel on the stocks at Norfolk compared with vessels built at Pensacola, Florida? As to who employed the workmen? As to who recommended them? If any from expediency or policy contributed money against their principles and party, under the constraint of losing or retaining their employment, it was at most but the assent of men to do a truckling and base part instead of sternly abiding by their faith and honor. There is no instance proved where any man who refused to contribute was discharged. On the contrary, many who refused were retained. But the test of the case is, whether any who contributed lost the vote of his preference thereby; and the test of that is, that Mr. Goode's success in Portsmouth was so decisive that he and his "C. P. C.'s," in spite of navy-yard and Lookins combined, changed a previous majority for the republicans into a majority for John Goode, jr.—350 republicans to 53 conservatives, page 143. A clear gain of 403 votes for Goode.

But we have to meet not only assessments and discharges, but pop-guns and three billies, and the loan of one tug, and a pocketful of punchings, at Government cost.

The truth is that the navy-yard at Gosport has been a "bridge of sighs" and pons asinorum of elections ever since the first of my political life, for forty-three years, from the days of Newton and Loyall down to the days of Goode and Platt. All I can say of it is that it is a noli me tangere; a curse to the country and its ship-building interest on the whole Chesapeake Bay. Mr. Goode headed off its patronage, used by every Administration in what has been called the "legitimate" way, more successfully and triumphantly than any opposition candidate I have ever known. His C. P. C.'s must have been more efficient "plug-uglies" than I have ever known before.

And now, in closing, I again would state that, even if you reject all that Mr. Goode asks in the navy-yard, Mr. Platt's majority of 442, you still cannot defeat Mr. Platt unless you reject Bland and Rives Townships. On them the case turns, and should the great party which at Saint Louis emblazoned on its banners, as its talismanic word, "reform," determine here to take advantage of such technicalities and seat Mr. Goode because his own friends failed to do their duty, I fear the world will say that the talisman is a mere catch-word, and that democratic "reform" means only that "reform" which would reform out republicans and reform in democrats by all "legitimate, fair, and honorable means," as these terms are understood in the State of Virginia.

GOLD AND SILVER COIN.

Mr. BLAND. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the bill (H. R. No. 3635) to utilize the product of gold and silver mines, and for other purposes, with the amendments thereto reported from the Committee on Mines and Mining. A great many members have not a copy of that bill and cannot get it.

There was no objection.

The bill, with the proposed amendments, is as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 3635) to utilize the product of gold and silver mines, and for other purposes.

[Part inserted in italics, part stricken out in brackets.]

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That coin-notes of the denomination of $50, and multiples thereof up to $10,000, may, in the mode hereinafter provided, be paid by the several mints and assay offices at San Francisco, Carson City, Philadelphia, and New York, for the net value of gold and silver bullion deposited thereat; and of the bullion thus received not less than 75 per cent. in coin or fine bars shall at all times be kept on hand for redemption of the coin-notes, gold for gold, and silver for silver. The gold deposited shall be computed at its coining value, and silver at the rate of 412.8 grains standard silver to the dollar, less the lawful mint charges, and such charge for transportation from the several assay offices to the mints for coinage, and from the latter to the assistant treasuries respectively at which the coin-notes shall be payable; and there shall be coined at the mints of the United States the silver dollar hereinbefore mentioned.

SEC. 2. That for bullion deposited at the mints of San Francisco and Carson, the coin-notes issued shall be redeemable on demand at the assistant treasury at San Francisco; and for bullion deposited at the Philadelphia mint and assay office at New York, the notes shall be redeemed at the assistant treasury at New York.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall, from time to time, cause coin and fine mint-bars (stamped) to be transferred from the mint to the assistant treasuries at San Francisco and New York in such amounts as may be necessary for the redemption of the coin-notes.

SEC. 4. That the coin-notes issued under the provisions of this act shall be receivable without limit for all dues to the United States; and the coin mentioned in this act shall be a legal tender for all debts, [of the United States,] public and private, not specified to be paid in gold coin.

SEC. 5. That the gold-coin notes issued under this act shall be redeemed, on presentation, in gold coin or fine bars, and silver in silver dollars or fine bars.

SEC. 6. That the coin-notes authorized by this act to be issued shall be prepared under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, and shall be transferred to the mints and assay offices named in this act as a part of the bullion fund, and from which fund deposits shall be paid for in coin or coin-notes at the option of the depositor.

SEC. 7. That the fine gold and silver bars by this act authorized to be issued shall bear the mint stamp of fineness, weight, and value, and the value of the gold bars shall be computed according to their coining rate, and the silver bars at their coining value in dollars.

SEC. 8. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe the necessary regulations for carrying into effect the provisions of this act.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to have printed an amendment which I propose to offer to the bill.

Mr. KASSON. Let the amendment be read.

The Clerk read the proposed amendment, as follows:

That so much of the act entitled "An act to provide for the resumption of specie payments," approved January 14, 1875, as authorizes or requires the Secretary of the Treasury to redeem in coin on and after the 1st day of January, 1879, the United States notes then outstanding, and to issue and sell United States bonds for that purpose, is hereby repealed.

Mr. KASSON. I must object to the printing of that; it has already been printed very often.

Mr. HOLMAN. It will go into the RECORD, having been read.

Mr. KASSON. I have no objection to its being printed in the RECORD.

FAST-MAIL TRAINS.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I ask unanimous consent to present and have read at this time some resolutions adopted by the Board of Trade of Chicago.

The Clerk read as follows:

Preamble and resolutions adopted by the Board of Trade of Chicago and ordered transmitted to the House of Representatives of the United States.

Whereas it is reported from Washington that by reason of inadequate appropriations by Congress the Post-Office Department is contemplating the early discontinuance of the recently established fast-mail trains between the eastern and western cities; and whereas the commercial interests of the chief cities of the country as well as all points that receive their mails by distribution from those cities would be greatly inconvenienced by the discontinuance of this service, which has come to be regarded as almost indispensable to the necessities of the country, both commercial and social: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Board of Trade of Chicago, That Congress be urgently requested by the necessary supplemental legislation to at once provide for the continuance of this branch of postal service at least on all lines where it is at present in operation.

Resolved, That these resolutions be forwarded to the House of Representatives of the United States through our Representative, and that a copy be communicated to the Postmaster-General.

A copy from the records of the board.

Attest: CHAS. RANDOLPH, Secretary.

CHICAGO, July 19, 1876.

Mr. HOLMAN. In view of the introduction of this paper I desire to submit a single remark. The gentlemen who framed and adopted that resolution misapprehended the subject of the discontinuance of the fast-mail trains. That discontinuance did not result and does not result from the inadequacy of the appropriation for that branch of the postal service. On the contrary, the appropriations are ample for the transportations of mails by railroads, and there is no possible ground to deny that statement.

Mr. KASSON. The gentleman will remember that when the post-office bill was up I told him that this would come.

Mr. HOLMAN. These fast-mail trains were never provided for by law. They were simply brought about last fall, I believe, in the month of September, on certain routes, by concentrating a large amount of business on a particular line; mainly on the line of routes extending by way of the New York Central from New York to Chicago, and to a less extent from New York by way of Philadelphia and Saint Louis. Those were the particular lines, coupled also with the extension from New York directly to Boston. Thus was inaugurated a system of concentrating a large amount of business on those particular roads, increasing the number of postal cars, for which they were entitled to compensation, and greatly increasing the amount of the weight of the mails, and thereby running up the compensation from say $700 per mile per annum to rising a thousand dollars per mile per annum and diminishing the amount of business on the other railroad lines.

Mr. KASSON. Was there anything unfair in that?

Mr. HOLMAN. I am not making any point against it. I am merely stating how the system was inaugurated. It was not inaugurated under any law providing an increased compensation, but by making it a motive on the part of certain railroads to increase their speed in consideration of receiving a larger amount of business, and of course of compensation, as the compensation depended on the amount of postal cars they furnished and the amount of weight of their mails.

Now I have but a single word more to say. The act making appropriations for the postal service this year makes no change whatever in the law in that respect; not in the slightest degree.

Mr. KASSON. The gentleman should recollect——

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend will excuse me. I cannot yield to him just at this moment. When we put on a limit of $500 per mile per annum, I will concede that that would have been a direct interference with the fast-mail train. But that was omitted by the conference committee. So that all the provision there is in the postal law affecting the subject of fast mails is simply the general reduction of the cost of transportation by railroads of 10 per cent. of the rates fixed in March, 1873. And that was done upon this ground: All persons admit that the compensation allowed by the act of 3d of March, 1873, both as to the weight of mails and as to the payment—on the basis of the weight of mails as well as on the basis of the postal cars furnished—was ample. And I never heard any person question it.

It was assumed by the committee of conference that the general shrinkage of values in every field of industry in this country had decreased the cost of carrying the mails 10 per cent. or more; that it cost more than 10 per cent. less for the railroad companies of this country to carry on their business in 1873 than it did in September last. The amount they paid their employés had been reduced more than 10 per cent. The amount they were paying for iron and all other materials had shrunk more than 10 per cent. Therefore it was thought proper by the committee of conference to reduce the allowance made to them on the basis of weight of mails 10 per cent.; and that is the only change made in the postal law by the post-office appropriation act which passed during the present session of Congress. It is simply that reduction of 10 per cent. from the rates fixed on the 3d of March, 1873.

Now, if those rates were fair and reasonable at the time—and they were certainly more than fair and reasonable, for the compensation of railroads was raised from a maximum of $375 to a maximum of $705, almost doubled—if that was high enough, certainly a reduction of 10 per cent. was very reasonable; and this attempt to withdraw the fast mails under these circumstances is simply an attempt to levy black-mail off this Government by the railroads; an attempt to compel the Government to give to the railroads exorbitant and extortionate rates for the transportation of the mails.

Mr. KASSON. I desire to say a single word on this matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. COCHRANE in the chair.) The Chair must state that this discussion is proceeding only by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOLMAN. Allow me just one word more. Of course this is by general consent.

Since the 3d of March, 1873, when the rates were fixed for the transportation of the mails by railroad, the contracts made by the Government with the star routes and the steamboat routes have been reduced I think at least 30 per cent. The contracts are at least 30 per cent. more favorable this present year than they were in 1873 for the transportation of the mails by the star routes and by the steamboat routes, which are so much more numerous than the railroad routes, and I do think that under these circumstances a reduction of barely 10 per cent. from the compensation allowed to railroad companies in 1873 furnishes no possible excuse for any one of these railroad companies attempting to embarrass the Post-Office Department by taking off their fast trains.

Mr. KASSON. A single word. When the post-office appropriation bill was up I interrupted the gentleman with his leave, I believe, to remark to him that the ngures he had given were likely to deprive the country and about fifteen or eighteen millions of people of the West of their mails by these fast-mail trains. The gentleman said no, it would do no such thing, and I was obliged to submit, and of course submitted to that declaration. But, Mr. Speaker, the fact now comes, admitted by the business interests of the country, notified to the Post-Office Department, that the railroads cannot accommodate the public with this mail in the manner provided for in the bill, which the gentleman said would produce no such effect. I allude to this as one instance in which in his eagerness to carry out a theory he has struck directly at one of the great postal interests of the country and practically destroyed it.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman does me great injustice, and he also does himself injustice.

Mr. KASSON. I believe you declined to be interrupted when you were speaking.

Mr. HOLMAN. I want to show the gentleman how unjust he is toward himself as well as toward me.

Mr. KASSON. O, that is a serious question. I will hear what the gentleman has to say on that point.

Mr. HOLMAN. The whole theory of the bill to which the gentleman refers, as well as the rates of compensation and the amount appropriated, was entirely abandoned by common consent by the committee of conference of the two Houses. The Senate struck it out and the House acquiesced.

Mr. KASSON. It had to.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then we increased the amount for railroad mail service from $8,800,000 up to $9,100,000, and we simply provided for a reduction of 10 per cent. of the rates fixed March 3, 1873. I trust, therefore, that the gentleman will see that the measure which was pending in the House had nothing at all to do with the discontinuance of this service. The rates fixed on the 3d of March, 1873, are merely reduced by this bill 10 per cent. That is the only change made in the law in reference to transportation of mails by railroads.

Mr. KASSON. I do not see that the gentleman has done more than restate what he stated before.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Will the gentleman from Iowa allow me to interrupt him with a single remark?

Mr. KASSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. The difficulty about this fast-mail service I will state is this, that up to the first five thousand pounds under the law as it was before the amendment taking off 10 per cent. from the compensation of all railroads the companies could get $200 a mile, besides extra pay for cars. The gentleman is right when he says that the bill takes off 10 per cent. from all railroad companies, but still he is wrong in claiming that there is any great saving. On the contrary, I think it very likely there will be a positive loss for the reason that under the fast-mail service on the New York Central Railroad you aggregate nearly all the mails on the line or a great portion of the through mails that went west. Now they get $200 a mile for the first five thousand pounds, and for every ton of mail matter after the first five thousand pounds they get only $25 a mile, which you will see was a great reduction.

As it is now with the fast-mail service discontinued, the mails are divided between the New York Central, the Erie, the Pennsylvania Central, the Baltimore and Ohio, and the Atlantic and Great Western; and instead of paying $25 a ton, it is distributed among those roads at $20 a ton a mile, with the fast mail cut off, and thereby the extra cost, owing to the greater compensation for weight transported over these lines, will more than exceed the saving of 10 per cent. under the recent reduction.

Mr. KASSON. And to that in a single word I have only to add that the reduction attempted in a service like this, by a committee not specially informed of or charged with the subject, is embarrassing the entire postal service of the western country. All the representatives of the growing States of the West are finding perpetual embarrassment in their attempts to get new service put on.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend need not come here to defend the railroad companies; they are quite capable of taking care of themselves.

Mr. KASSON. The gentleman will excuse me; he did not allow me to interrupt him and I hope he will not interrupt me. I desire to say that this policy was adopted and carried out, and it resulted in serious injury to the western people. Our people are clamoring for improved mail service, and we are continually met by the limit which the committee put on the postal system of the country. In the West it strikes down the policy adopted for our benefit.

I hope this proposition will be referred to some committee. I think the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads is the proper one, and that some proper bill may be presented to restore the rates, so that the western people may get their mail matter promptly and efficiently.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does the gentleman think that the cost of transporting the mails might not have been reasonably reduced 10 per cent. from the rates of March 3, 1873?

Mr. KASSON. That depends on the contract prices, which change from year to year. You cannot cut down by any arbitrary standard. Carry out the great principle, and the most just principle ever adopted, which is that railroad companies shall be paid according to the amount of mail matter carried. But this plan of the committee makes no allowance for increased mail matter nor increased speed.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman does himself injustice again.

Mr. KASSON. O! Do not allow me to do that.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does not the gentleman know that speed has never been taken into account by law as to the transportation of mails?

Mr. KASSON. I know that the increased speed of service has been practically allowed to the great convenience of 15,000,000 of people, and hence this complaint comes from the Board of Trade of Chicago.

Mr. HOLMAN. We have not cut it off; that is a misapprehension of the subject. The fast mails, as I attempted to explain, were not provided for by law. Speed was never taken into account.

Mr. KASSON. It was provided for according to law.

Mr. HOLMAN. Never by law. I simply wish to say that neither the gentleman from Iowa nor any other gentleman upon this floor can sustain the proposition that with the present rates of wages throughout the country it is not fair and reasonable to reduce the allowances for railroad companies from the amount fixed on the 3d of March, 1873, 10 per cent., and that is all that was done by the committee.

Mr. KASSON. I answer, for that was stated by the gentleman before, that I tried years ago to get legislation through Congress to give the Government a certain control over the railroads of the country as to carrying the mails, but that has never been done, and it is attempting here to legislate in the interest of one contractor—the Government being one—over the interest of the other, because the railroads have the right to refuse to perform this service until adequate and proper compensation is given them, and they have refused to do it.

Mr. HOLMAN. The country has got to meet this question sooner or later, for the great monopoly that has been created in this country and which necessarily controls all our transportation of the mails shall come here and say what they will transport the mails for, no matter how exorbitant, and if the Government refuses to give them that pay, they will not carry the mails. Sir, it places the Government at the mercy of the railroad companies.

Mr. KASSON. Change the law, then, before you authorize either one side or the other to change the contract made on both sides.

Mr. HOLMAN. I insist that the Government has a right to fix the rates, and they are fixed amply high.

Mr. KASSON. If the rates are fixed so as to compensate the roads will they draw off? I say it is because the rates now allowed do not pay expenses that they draw off.

Mr. HOLMAN. They draw off because they know that the great cities and towns will come to Congress and demand increased compensation.

Mr. EDEN. I call for the regular order.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I offered this resolution coming from the Board of Trade of Chicago as worthy of consideration by the House. I did not expect, however, that it would lead to the discussion that has followed it. I hope that this communication will be referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Will the gentleman allow me a word?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Discussion is out of order except by unanimous consent.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. We have unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the Chair hear objection?

[Loud cries of "Object!"]

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman from Iowa will be allowed to make a statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman can only proceed by unanimous consent, and objection is made.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I will get an opportunity of saying it at some other time.

The communication was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move to reconsider the vote by which the communication was referred; and I do it for the purpose of saying that the root of this evil is this: If this House, instead of investigating every little officer of the Government, had set about to find how much we could possibly pay as a fair and reasonable rate to the railroads, not only for carrying the mails but for carrying the merchandise of this country, then the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] might talk intelligently. But when the railroads refuse to carry this fast mail, that brought the West one day nearer the East, that change deprives 20,000,000 people in the Mississippi Valley from having the benefit of the improvements of the age in this regard, the result of the intelligent administration of progressive men. The loss of this quick communication we owe to a refusal to inquire into the policy of railroads, although nothing has been asked for by the people as earnestly as an inquiry into the reasonableness of the charges for transportation. There is nothing in the statutes of the American Government regulating in any way the transportation of anything upon 75,000 miles of railroad; nor is the congressional literature treating on the subject; and this reform Congress, that the people expected, as members are pleased to assert, would come here and inquire into these great grievances that hindered prosperity, has inaugurated a system of petty inquiries that in some instances may detect irregularities but will result in no benefit to the country, after wasting valuable time that should have been devoted to the inquiry into their industrial interests, straining at the gnats and swallowing the camels, tithing the mint and cumin and neglecting the weightier matters, making party capital and forgetting the legislation of the country.

I withdraw the motion to reconsider.

Mr. HOLMAN here made a remark that was inaudible to the reporters. [Loud cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. SPRINGER. I object to the withdrawal and move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I have got the floor for one hour and I am going to say what I have to say. [Cries of "Regular order."] My friend from Ind——

Mr. CLYMER. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] is certainly entitled to the floor.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I have made a motion to reconsider, and upon that motion I am entitled to the floor if objection is made to withdrawal; but while objection cannot be made if the Chair has not recognized my withdrawal, I still hold the floor.

Mr. CLYMER. The gentleman said that he withdrew the motion to reconsider, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] objected to the withdrawal and moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table. My point of order is that the gentleman from Iowa is not entitled to the floor.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The gentleman from Pennsylvania should know that I can withdraw without objection; but if I cannot withdraw, then I have the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I was not recognized for the purpose of withdrawing my motion.

Mr. CLYMER. The gentleman said clearly that he withdrew it.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I said I would withdraw it, but I was not recognized to do it, and merely desired to say a word in reply to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I hope the gentleman from Iowa will withdraw his motion.

Mr. CLYMER. The regular order is the motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I do not think if I withdrew there is any motion to table. If I did not succeed in that, then I have the floor.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I appeal to the gentleman from Iowa to withdraw his motion.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I will as soon as I have made one observation.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I occupy the floor simply by the courtesy of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BLACKBURN.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] moves to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. He had not the floor to make that motion. I proposed to withdraw my motion, but Mr. HOLMAN got the floor to continue debate on the substance of my remarks, to which I desired to reply, on the theory that the Chair had not announced the motion to withdraw; for if he had, then the gentleman from Indiana could not have addressed the House on the subject, as nothing of that nature would be before the House. I have said, however, what I insisted on saying and will not contend further.

The question was taken on Mr. SPRINGER's motion, and it was agreed to.

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House will now resume the consideration of the contested election-case of Platt vs. Goode, upon which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. LAMAR. Will the gentleman yield to me for a few minutes to make a personal explanation?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will do so if it does not come out of my time.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. LAMAR. I do not consider any man of sufficient importance to consume a moment's time of this House in regard to his own personal matters. But when a blow is struck at the people he represents through his own character, it may become necessary to do so.

In a paper published in this city yesterday morning there is an article written by a correspondent signing himself "A Mississippian" which charges me distinctly with having lent my influence in favor of organized violence in the State of Mississippi, and of an attempt to array upon the basis of a race issue the white people of that State against the black race for the political supremacy of the former through intimidation and fraud. He gives two instances where he says he was himself present, when I made inflammatory speeches entirely different from the speeches which I make here and from the speech made by me at Jackson. The two places specified are Aberdeen and Scooba.

It is very difficult to prove a negative; but it happens that there is a gentleman present in this House who heard my speech at Scooba. I desire him to state what the impression on his mind was as to the character of that speech, and if it swerved in any particular from the position which I took at Jackson where I opposed the formation of parties on any color line or any race issue, and pronounced it a scheme which if successful would be fatal to both races. I refer to my colleague, Mr. SINGLETON, as to my speech at Scooba.

Mr. SINGLETON. With the permission of the House, I will respond to my friend and colleague, [Mr. LAMAR.] It was my pleasure and good fortune to hear Colonel LAMAR make a speech at the city of Jackson last summer, on the day the democratic State convention assembled. His speech was a lengthy one, about three hours long. I remember that I stood upon my feet during the whole of that speech and listened to it intently; I do not think I lost a word.

I will state that so far from Colonel LAMAR undertaking to advocate or to countenance in any sense the color line, as it was termed, the whole of his argument was directed against any such proposition. There were some few men in that convention and some others assembled there who were not members of the convention who were what was termed "white-liners;" in other words, they took the position that as the colored people under the lead of a few white men were arrayed all on one side and antagonized the whites, the only course left was to organize the white people on the other side. We all looked forward to the speech of Colonel LAMAR with great interest, for we believed it would have a tendency to settle the question in that contest. On that occasion he deprecated in terms which I cannot now undertake to repeat anything like arraying parties upon race distinction. So convincing and unanswerable were his arguments, so logical and conclusive his speech, that it seemed to give satisfaction to all; everybody went home satisfied that the positions he assumed were incontrovertible.

I heard his speech at Scooba, one of the speeches alluded to in the communication to which my friend has referred. The barbecue at which he spoke was in my congressional district. Thousands of people were assembled, and Colonel LAMAR was invited to speak and was the chief speaker on that occasion. He spoke for two and a half or three hours. There were present a great many white people and many colored. His speech was entirely upon the same line of his speech at Jackson. There may have been a little change in the phraseology, because a man seldom makes the same speech twice, unless it is written and memorized, so as to employ precisely the same language. But the argument he made there was in form and substance the same argument that he made at Jackson.

There was nothing in that speech that any man could for a single moment suppose would tend to favor the white-liners or to encourage or promote anything like hatred of race between the white and colored people. I remember distinctly that he took the ground that any party which succeeded temporarily upon that line of action and obtained supremacy would find in the end that it must prove fatal to both the happiness and prosperity of the country.

There was mention made as to the words the white republicans used in drilling the colored voters. Some man had published a speech or had given out something that was semi-official in its character, to the effect that the colored people ought to wade through blood and through hell to vote the republican ticket. Colonel LAMAR denounced the sentiment in unmeasured terms, and argued with the colored people that their true policy was to be friendly with the whites; that we were compelled to live together, and our interests could not be separated the one from the other; and he made use of the expression attributed to him simply for the purpose of denouncing that sort of training for the colored people, tending as it did to bloodshed and crime.

I state that the article, in my opinion, does gross injustice to Colonel LAMAR. I heard him deliver three or four speeches after the canvass was over. One was to a large collection of people in Yazoo County, white and colored. And he congratulated them that the vote electing members to Congress and other officers was a vote of colored and white people alike. And never in all the speeches which I heard him make—and I listened to him with great interest as we all do—never have I heard him utter a single word or expression that contradicted the tone of the speech made at Jackson.

Mr. LAMAR. I am much obliged to my colleague.

With reference to the speech at Aberdeen, when that report first got out at Washington, the leading men of that city, republicans, some of them colored, as well as democrats, sent me a communication in which they made a denial of the report, positive and unqualified, and said that my speech was an elaborate argument against any attempt on the part of either race to establish its political supremacy over the other in the State, and that my policy was the co-ordination of the two races as against the supremacy or subordination of either.

I showed that communication to my distinguished friend General BANKS at the time it came; but I have not it now in my hand. I send however to the desk to be read a telegram which was sent to me by one of the representatives of that county who was present and heard my speech.

The Clerk read as follows:

[Telegram.]

JACKSON, MISS., January 20, 1876—2.26 P. M.

To Hon. L. Q. C. LAMAR:

Was present and heard your speech at Aberdeen last fall. Paid strict attention. You did not advocate White-Line policy, but very plainly opposed it; remember on that point you quoted Aristotle, saying that it was dangerous for any class to gain entire ascendency. Prominent colored politicians present also and expressed themselves delighted with the speech.

W. W. TROOP,
Representative from Monroe.

Mr. LAMAR. I also send to the desk a letter from Hon. Reuben Davis, a gentleman who represented the State of Mississippi in the House of Representatives before the war, and who is well known to some gentlemen here and to many gentlemen in the United States Senate. No one knows him who does not respect his talents and have entire confidence in his character.

The Clerk read as follows:

ABERDEEN, February 19, 1876.

MY DEAR SIR: I am just informed that at Washington City it is being charged that you were a white-liner in our late election. This astonished me. I arrived in Pontotoc the evening of the day on which you addressed the people at that place, and in a few minutes after you had left the public square, and was told by every one with whom I conversed that at the end of your speech you read and had adopted a resolution denouncing the white-line policy. Again I was at Boons-ville a few days after you had made an address, and was informed by many who heard you that you had read at the conclusion of your address your resolution condemnatory of the White Line, and had it adopted without a dissenting voice. While I was at Boonsville you addressed the people at Corinth, having your resolution adopted again.

It was universally admitted and understood throughout the State that you were uncompromisingly opposed to any race issue.

Very truly, your friend,

REUBEN DAVIS.

Hon. L. Q. C. LAMAR.

Mr. LAMAR. There is one other charge insinuated in the article; and that is that the night after my election to the United States Senate I apologized for the eulogy that I delivered upon Mr. Sumner. That speech was an extemporaneous speech, delivered without notes. I have never been able to reproduce it, as the act of writing is painful to me. But it so happens that the republican editor, the organ of the republican administration in Mississippi, was present, and, in the Jackson Pilot, gives an account of the impression that speech made upon his mind; and it was republished in the National Republican of this city a short time afterward. Of course, it does not pretend to give my language. Nor does it begin to say exactly what I did say upon that occasion. I will therefore have to here asseverate that never in the slightest instance nor in the slightest particular did I swerve from the sentiments which I have uttered here. I reiterated them with emphasis. And I would have been glad, sir, if the whole people of the North could have witnessed a southern audience applauding the sentiments of Charles Sumner which I read to them on that occasion. I will send to the desk an account given by that republican editor in the organ of the Ames administration, as republished in the Republican of this city, showing what he thought I said upon that occasion.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Senator explained his eulogy on the death of Hon. Charles Sumner. He said that when he first took his seat in Congress he saw that his situation as a southern representative was a delicate and difficult one. The people of the North suspected the motives of the South, and no southern man could reach the northern ear. Just at this time a brilliant northern man, one dear to the northern people, departed this life, and it occurred to him that while the northern heart was shaded and softened with sorrow he might deliver a message of sympathy from the South and at the same time establish her in the affection of the North. He meant every word he spoke on that occasion. Charles Sumner imagined he was acting in the cause of humanity and freedom when he advocated universal suffrage. He knew his Sumner speech might be misconstrued, but he took his reputation in his own hands for the good of his country; meant every word he said, and believed every word perfectly true.

Mr. LAMAR. That is enough. What follows is editorial comment.

I made quite an extended canvass during that last campaign in Mississippi. I spoke in the districts of other gentlemen, republican and democratic. I spoke in the district of my republican colleague, Mr. WELLS. I am under the impression that he heard me on one or two occasions, and I am perfectly willing for him to testify to this House if he ever heard a syllable fall from my lips that tended to array the white race against the black race or to interfere with the black race in any position it chose to assume in the elections. I refer to my colleague, Mr. WELLS.

Mr. WELLS, of Mississippi. I am every ready to do justice to political opponents. I did hear Colonel LAMAR at Holly Springs. It was the only time I heard him during the canvass. I went to the meeting for the purpose of taking notes, in order to reply to him. There were some of the democrats in the State who were urging the organization of a White-Line party, and I was anxious to hear Colonel LAMAR, and to hear him on that subject. I did take notes upon that occasion; and I have in my mind now very nearly the language that he used. And it gives me pleasure to do him the justice to state that he then and there invoked the white people to throw aside all prejudices of race and to jointly grasp the government of the State and administer it in the interest of good government, for the benefit of both races, without regard to previous condition of race or of politics. He denounced the organization of White-Line leagues, and stated that it could only act disastrously to the country, to the State, and to the people.

Mr. LAMAR. I would call upon my colleague from the sixth district, [Mr. LYNCH,] but I was not in his district, and I am aware of the fact that he heard no speech of mine. But for that, I would invoke his testimony, for I have respect for him and confidence in him.

I owe an apology to the House, and assure my associates here that I would never have brought this matter to their attention on my own account. It was simply with reference to the interests which were struck at through me.

Mr. HALE. Will the gentleman allow me a question before he sits down?

Mr. LAMAR. Well, sir; yes.

Mr. HALE. In common with many other gentlemen, I have listened to sentiments from the gentleman that have awakened wide assent and applause in the North. If the gentleman will allow me, I will say that I think there has been in the minds of some gentlemen a suspicion, in which I am free to say that I have somewhat shared, that those sentiments uttered by the gentleman were safer to be uttered here than elsewhere without in any way impeaching his sincerity.

Now I hold in my hand a report in the Vicksburgh Herald of a speech made by the gentleman at Aberdeen.

Mr. LAMAR. I was replying to that report in what I said to-day.

Mr. HALE. Yes, I understand that. I am informed that the editor of that paper making the report spoke with Colonel LAMAR at Aberdeen upon the same day, and that apart from that speech and that listening he made this report.

The Vicksburgh Herald (democratic) reports a speech of L. Q. C. LAMAR at Aberdeen, Mississippi, thus:

"In his speech at Aberdeen, last Saturday, Colonel LAMAR made an eloquent speech. A better democratic speech we do not care to listen to, and in manly and ringing tones he declared that the contest involved 'the supremacy of the unconquered and unconquerable Saxon race.' We were glad to hear this bold and manly avowal, and it was greeted with deafening plaudits.

"We have never seen men more terribly in earnest, and the democratic White-Line speech made to them by Colonel LAMAR aroused them to white heat."

Now, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has denied in terms making any such speech, and I for one am not disposed to countervail that statement. But I would be very glad if the gentleman from Mississippi would state if the editor of this paper was there participating in that meeting; and, if so, what must be the condition, what must be the demand of the public, when the editor of that paper, fresh from that speech, dared to put in his column the characterization of it and description of it for his readers that I have just read?

Mr. LAMAR. Mr. Speaker, I have only this to say, that the words "supremacy of the unconquered and unconquerable Anglo-Saxon race" were used in that speech in this connection: 'I was arguing to the colored race and showing that supremacy upon their part, or upon the part of either, would be fatal, and that if, simply by their numerical power, they should get supremacy, they could never maintain their "supremacy of the unconquered and unconquerable Anglo-Saxon race of the South." Those words fell upon Colonel McArdle's ear, and he no doubt thought at the time that I took that position as to the White-Line supremacy. But, sir, in that he wholly misunderstood my position, as is testified to by others present.

As to the other questions which the gentleman has presented, the House will fully appreciate them and the motive which prompted them. I will say there is nothing in his person, nothing in his character, and nothing in my character or his relations to me to justify his interposition in this affair. [Applause.]

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE OF PLATT VS. GOODE.

The House resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee of Elections on the election contest from the second congressional district of Virginia—Platt vs. Goode.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Speaker, I am very safe in assuring the House that I have no purpose of inflicting a speech upon them, for it would be superfluous in this contested-election case. It is probably meet that as a member of the Committee of Elections and chairman of the subcommittee to whom was intrusted the decision of this question, I should say something. And I shall content myself in presenting to the consideration of the House the facts as developed in the record. I will not seek to apply the law to those facts in detail. I will not even endeavor to indulge in an argument looking to the inducing of conclusions on the part of any member of this House. I shall feel my obligation to have been met and that my duty has been discharged if I shall furnish to the House in the most concise and tersest manner the facts as developed in the proof upon which this committee stand divided.

If I ever indulged the hope of seeing a contested-election case discussed, considered, and disposed of by this House without the introduction of partisan feeling, I certainly have long since abandoned it. I do not know, nor will I claim, that I am able to divest myself of every prejudice that party affiliation is apt to impose when I come to the consideration of such a question. I am sure that to-day's performances demonstrate to a certainty that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BROWN] who has preceded me is equally subject to those influences. I was utterly amazed that he, representing the majority report of a committee, should have felt it necessary in order to bolster up a case which he must feel to be weak to have leveled his attacks not only at the Committee of Elections of the House, but at the organization of one of the proudest and oldest Commonwealths of the country, and sought to involve the State officers of Virginia, and the county officers of the several counties composing the second district of that State, and the honored incumbent, the contestee in this case, in a conspiracy to cheat and defraud. I am disposed to believe that the gentleman from Kansas does not know the use of language as he employed it.

When he undertakes to say that the present occupant of this contested seat was backed and supported by the county officials of the several counties of his district, their efforts all supplemented by the machinations of the State board of canvassers in Virginia, and piled on top of this, like Pelion upon Ossa, an insincere and dishonest and defrauding Committee of Elections, he gives utterance to that which, as the record stands and as the proof will certainly show, is not warranted in fact and is destitute of truth.

Who is it on this board of canvassers in Virginia that the recently known gentleman from Kansas, [Mr. BROWN,] whose advent into political life scarcely produced a ripple upon the surface of American politics, would seek to denounce? He tells us that such men as Kemper, as R. M. T. Hunter, who for many years was one of the leading spirits in the other wing of your national Capitol, and Daniels, the gifted and universally respected attorney-general of that State, and McDonald, and all of those men have gone to work in a conspiracy to defraud not only the contestant of his seat, but the sovereigns of Virginia of their right of representation.

Had I not had an opportunity of watching for seven long months the course of the gentleman from Kansas in this House and in the room of the Committee of Elections, I would have been utterly amazed at the temerity that possessed him when he undertook to charge us with the practice of partisan dealings. I cannot remember or now recall but a single instance from the organization of this Committee of Elections until now—and, if my memory is at fault, I will be obliged to any gentleman who will supplement it—I can recall but a single instance in, I believe, nineteen cases of contest that have been before us in which one single, solitary republican member of that committee has ever given a vote save for the republican party to the contest. In that one instance the honor is due to the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. WELLS,] and not to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Will the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] allow me to ask if the republican members of the Committee of Elections did not join unanimously in the report in favor of Mr. FENN, the democratic contestant from Idaho?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will answer the gentleman. Drowning men catch at straws, and I am not surprised he should seek to hinge his salvation on that issue.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. My salvation is hinged on a different source, in which there is no Mr. BLACKBURN.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I did not quite understand the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I said that I hinge my salvation on a different source, and that I would not have to depend upon Mr. BLACKBURN for salvation. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLACKBURN. It is well for the gentleman from New York that he has a well-grounded hope of salvation either in this life or in the other, for if he was to be judged by his conduct as a member of the Committee of Elections in the Forty-fourth Congress, when he reaches that final bar, unless it was republican in its constitution, I am willing to be sworn that he never would gain an entrance. [Laughter.]

I will answer the gentleman's question, and I thank him for the suggestion. There was a unanimous report made in the case of Fenn vs. Bennett from Idaho. Now if he claims Bennett as the republican contestee and assigns us Mr. FENN as the democratic contestant, then I cite the gentleman to the utterance of his own representative, Mr. Bennett, before that committee, when he stated in his argument that there was not a scintilla of politics in the contest; that he was neither democrat nor republican in that contest nor was Mr. FENN; that the one was Mormon and the other was Gentile, and that was the only issue involved. The gentleman from New York himself, I believe, drew the report of the subcommittee, upon which there was only one other member. It was in proof, according to the statement of Mr. Bennett, that he, Bennett, was the Gentile and FENN was the Mormon. And the gentleman from New York voted for the Mormon without regard to politics at all. Those are the facts.

Now I re-assert, and I defy contradiction, that there never yet has been a contest before the Committee of Elections in which any republican member of that committee ever failed to vote for the republican party to the contest, unless it was in the case of the honorable gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. WELLS,] who did vote with the democratic side in one contested-election case.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I would call the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] to the statement made by Mr. Bennett in his own account of his election, in which he declares that he was "elected to the Forty-fourth Congress as the independent candidate by a majority of 139 votes over S. S. FENN, democrat." I have always heard Mr. FENN called a democrat.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I believe the sitting member is always credited with the writing of these biographies. Against this one I plead the statement of Mr. Bennett when arguing his case before the Committee of Elections, in which statement I believe every member of that committee, I am sure the gentleman from New York himself included, will bear me out.

But, sir, this is not my purpose. I do not intend to indulge in any invective. I do not intend to give way to any partisan feeling. I intend to content myself with the closest, plainest, fairest, most unvarnished collocation of the facts that I can make, leaving them with the House so far as I am concerned, without the application of the law in detail and without any argument, satisfied and convinced that they will do justice and equity between these parties.

It is claimed by the contestant, Mr. Platt, that he has been elected here though the certificate was given to Mr. Goode, because, he says, the vote of Prince George County was improperly excluded; because, he says, 206 votes received by him in the county of Nansemond should have been counted although they were cast in violation of the provisions of the statute of Virginia; because, he says, there were 33 votes in the county of Norfolk, 12 of which ballots were not received because they were found in a box provided for votes upon the constitutional amendments instead of in the congressional ballot-box, and the remainder of which 33 he contends were rejected or refused to be received or counted.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire this House to know the facts. In the preparation of the report which I had the honor to submit to the House, which stands signed by five of the members of the committee—while the report offered by the gentleman from Kansas is signed by six—in the preparation of this report technicalities are not insisted upon. The 206 votes in Nansemond County were not cast in accordance with the provisions of law; nobody will so contend. The statute law of Virginia, as well as the law of the country at large, provides that Congressmen shall be voted for by ballot, that each ballot shall be single and separate, that there shall be nothing printed or written upon the ballot except the name of the office and the name of the candidate for whom the vote is cast. It is an admitted fact that 193 of these 206 ballots, as they were found in the ballot-box, had printed upon them the additional words "Against the constitutional amendments." It is not denied and it is proved in the record that 13 of the remaining ballots had other ballots folded inside of them. Here were 13 ballots with the name of James H. Platt for Congress, and folded inside of each of them was another ballot with the words printed or written, "Against the amendments to the constitution." The law of Virginia expressly declares that neither of these ballots should be counted. But does the minority report seek to rest upon such technical exclusions of suffrage? We took those 206 votes and counted them for Mr. Platt. We held that the board of county canvassers did right in rejecting them, because in the exercise of their ministerial functions they had no discretion. But we hold that this House in the exercise of its discretion is competent to go behind the action of the board of State canvassers, to go behind the action of the board of county canvassers, to go behind the returns themselves and count the ballots upon the poll-book as they had been given. In the exercise of that discretion, seeking to arrive at an equitable adjustment of the case, we gave to Mr. Platt every vote that he claims within the county of Nansemond. We did more than that; we took the county of Prince George, whose vote was rejected by the board of State canvassers because it was fatally defective in law, and we counted its vote for him. It gave him a majority. The minority report includes the county of Prince George in its count, except the townships of Rives and Bland.

Let it be borne in mind that in the State of Virginia there is no such law as prevails in the State of Illinois, from which the case of Farwell and Le Moyne came, to which the gentleman from Kansas alluded. There is no law in the State of Virginia requiring each man's ballot to be numbered. There is a registration law; and there is a statute requiring that the officers conducting an election shall keep two poll-books, one of which shall be put under cover and seal and sent in connection with the ballots themselves, which shall be strung and sealed, either to the county clerk or the corporation court clerk for the county or corporation in which such election is held. This law was utterly disregarded in the townships of Rives and Bland. Neither poll-book was put under cover or seal; no ballot was ever strung or sealed. The law was ignored. It is a mandatory statute. If any man on this floor doubts its mandatory character, let him take the record and read for himself the utterances of the counsel of the contestant when taking the testimony of these officers. It will there be found that Mr. Platt's counsel submitted the question to these officers: "When you failed to put that poll-book under cover and seal; when you failed to string and seal those ballots after making the return, did you not know that you were thereby invalidating the election in those two precincts and necessitating their rejection?"

Mr. PLATT, (the contestant.) Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I believe the gentleman has the right to follow me; and, if so, I am disposed to insist upon my right now to go on.

But, sir, it is not necessary that the report of the minority of this committee upon the question of the Rives and Bland Townships should be supported. There are three several propositions, distinct and separate, upon which you may rest this case, all three equally defensible and maintainable at law, and either of them inevitably brings you to the conclusion that the gentleman who now holds this seat holds it by a right indefeasible and firm.

I will not stop to discuss the demand of the contestant for the rejection of the vote of York County. The majority of the republican members of the committee do not themselves insist upon that, although the gentleman from Kansas did allude to it and term it "bribery." In that regard the contestant in this case demands that the whole vote of the county of York shall be rejected—for what reason? Because a colored individual by the name of Norton dared to come out and assert before the people of his own race his right to appeal to them for their suffrages. Norton was nominated for Congress by a republican assemblage in that district upon the 4th day of July. The contestant, I believe, was nominated upon the 13th day of July. The sitting member was nominated by a democratic-conservative convention upon the 1st day of September. And because this colored man Norton had the effrontery to present himself as a proper object for the reception of his people's votes; because he was not willing to admit that the contestant, Mr. Platt, since his recent advent into the State of Virginia had become sole owner and proprietor of every colored individual within the limits of the district and the State; because this colored man dared to assert his right to present himself as a competitor for the people's suffrage, we find that in argument and brief it is seriously demanded that the vote of the county of York should be rejected. Norton may not have had a right to run; it may have been improper for him to present himself as a candidate; but if all that be true, it hardly lies in the mouth of the contestant to proclaim it. It is not demonstrated by this testimony that Norton was not as well entitled to the suffrage of his people as was this stranger who had recently found a home among them.

But leave that question out of view, (for it does not admit of serious consideration,) refuse to allow the unusual demand of counting for the contestant votes in the county of Norfolk which were never polled for him and could not be because the voters did not get there until it was too late to vote according to their own testimony in the record; then we have Mr. Platt standing before us demanding that the vote of Prince George County shall be counted, that the 206 rejected votes in Nansemond County shall be given to him. Grant him all that; grant him everything he demands; grant him everything for which the gentleman from Kansas has ventured to contend upon this floor; grant him everything that his distinguished and able counsel whom I see before me ever dared to contend for before the bar of this committee; and you have him standing here with a majority of 500.

Now it is in proof in this record (and no man will deny it) that the registration law requires that every man before he shall become a legal voter shall be registered, and that the registration shall be performed ten days before the election, unless it be in one excepted case, where the voter is moving from one precinct of a county into another precinct of the same county, in which excepted case he may be registered and become qualified to vote at any time up to the day of the election. Under that registration law it cannot be denied in the face of this record and the proof that in five precincts of that district illegal votes were polled, because voters had been illegally registered. They had registered within the ten days precluded by the provisions of the registration law. They had in many instances registered upon the very day of the election. In five of these precincts these illegal votes had been counted. If you will reject the votes of those five precints—which you cannot affirm to be legal votes, and which you cannot eliminate, because there is no way to tell for whom the votes were cast—the assumed majority of Mr. Platt is overcome, even counting all the navy-yard employés among his supporters.

At Court-house precinct and at Stony Creek precinct, in the county of Sussex; at Bruton Township, York County; at Jamestown precinct, in James City County; and at Guilford Township precinct, in the county of Surry—in each and all of these illegal votes under fraudulent registration are incontestably demonstrated; and there is no way in which you can purge those precincts of fraud.

Then if that law of universal application is to prevail and you are to reject the vote of a whole precinct where fraud is proven and cannot be eliminated, then I say you can give Mr. Platt his fourteen hundred true and loyal navy-yard employés, and still he is not entitled to a seat upon this floor, granting him everything that he claims in this contest.

But, sir, if that proposition does not accord with the ideas of any member of this House, I will offer another. You may take Rives and Bland precincts of Prince George County, where the law had been openly defied, where the counsel for Mr. Platt said to the officers of election, in conducting the examinations of witnesses, that they must have known it vitiated the election—you may take those two precincts and reject them and then reject the three precincts at which the navy-yard employés voted, and Mr. Platt is beaten in his contest.

Bear in mind that two of the gentlemen who signed that majority report assert in their foot-note that they do not concur with the conclusions formed by the four republican members of the committee in the matter of these three navy-yard precincts. Six out of eleven of this committee stand in favor of rejecting the vote from the third and fourth wards of the city of Portsmouth, and Hall's Corner precinct in Norfolk, because of the vote polled at those three precincts by the employés of the navy-yard.

Now then, that being conceded, that these three precincts should be rejected, if you will supplement that by the rejection of the two precincts that disregarded the law, as stated, in Prince George County, Mr. Goode is seated. If that does not comport with your ideas of equity, then take the other proposition, upon which there scarcely seems room for dispute. Reject the precincts that were reeking with fraud perpetrated by these navy-yard employés; then take Rives and Bland Townships and count them for Mr. Platt, and take the 91 illegal votes proven to have been recorded in that district, admitted and not denied by anybody, and reject them, and Mr. Goode remains in his seat, and Mr. Platt's case is lost.

I want the House to distinctly remember that you may grant to Mr. Platt everything that he claims; give him his 206 votes in Nansemond County as we do; give him the whole of Prince George County, law or no law, Rives and Bland Townships included; give him all that he claims in both; and then reject the three precincts at which the navy-yard employés voted, and charge him, as you are bound to do under the law, with these 91 illegal votes, and his claim disappears, and the title of the contestant stands out as indisputable as that by which the honorable present occupant of the chair or any member upon this floor holds the seat that he occupies.

Now, as to this navy-yard vote, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BROWN] tells us the proof in this case is not as strong as it was in the Abbott vs. Frost case; the Boston navy-yard case. Well, I think the gentleman from Kansas voted to admit those frauds. Neither this case, nor that case, nor any other case that ever has had an existence in fact or can dwell within the broad scope of human imagination shall be fraudulent enough in the management of Government workshops, it seems, to warrant the gentleman from Kansas in withholding his support.

But look at the record. As a matter of fact, in the Abbott vs. Frost case it was asserted on this floor, and asserted with truth, that there was no positive proof of contract between the navy-yard employé and anybody that they should vote for this or that ticket. The House acted upon the Abbott vs. Frost case upon an inference. It was a warrantable inference, an inevitable inference upon which this House acted and acted properly when it held the republican sitting member in that case responsible for the votes of those employés in the navy-yard. But in this case you come down to a positive certainty; in this case you come out of the realms of conjecture; in this case you come down to absolute proof; proof as irrefutable as Holy Writ; proof that comes from the mouths of the supporters of Mr. Platt; proof that comes from the mouths of those men who themselves swore that they took the employment in the navy-yard and took it upon the condition that they would vote for Mr. Platt at the polls. Where do you want any more irrefragable proof than that? We do not rest on the testimony in this regard of a single man that voted for Mr. Goode; we do not rest upon the testimony even of a man who voted for Mr. Platt, unless he were an employé in that navy-yard. They swear that they did special service in that yard; that they accepted it upon the general understanding that they were to vote the republican ticket, upon which Mr. Platt's name appeared; and they did it.

Mr. BROWN, of Kansas. Will the gentleman state where is the proof of what he is now asserting?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will read it or have it read to the gentleman. He shall be answered before I sit down.

Nor is that all; nor is it the half. Probably the short memory of the gentleman from Kansas has failed him in another regard: that one of these very employés of the navy-yard who voted for the republican contestant in this case swears that in the city of Portsmouth alone, leaving out Hall's Corner precinct, in Norfolk County—in the third and fourth wards of Portsmouth alone—Mr. Platt received 567 votes from the white employés of this navy-yard. Give Mr. Platt everything he claims; all Prince George county, including Bland and Rives Townships; all the votes he claims in Nansemond County; everything that his modest attorneys and modest self have been able to demand, and you only make up a majority of 500 at the best. Here comes Mr. Crismond, one of his supporters, one of his navy-yard supporters, and he swears that in the city of Portsmouth alone Mr. Platt got 567 votes from the white employés in the navy-yard. That leaves out of count altogether the 91 illegal votes cast in other precincts of the district. I do not believe, Mr. Speaker, that there is a member of this House who will undertake dispassionately and fairly to read the testimony in this regard who will find himself possessed of a single doubt, not only as to his right, but as to his bounden obligated duty to refuse to count the votes from those three precincts.

They are absolutely indefensible. The force in that navy-yard was increased from nine hundred to fourteen hundred immediately preceding the election. The testimony shows that the employés got their employment either on the solicitation of Mr. Platt or at the instance of the executive committee of the republican party. As soon as that election was over discharges began, and they never ceased until the force was reduced to its normal standard. Doubtless it will be suggested by the contestant himself or by some of his friends that in the year preceding the force in the navy-yard was larger than it was at this election. If so, let some member of the House ask the reason why. At this election the force was raised from nine hundred to fourteen hundred. But the year before a more important election was going on, of more consequence than even Mr. Platt's election; there was a gubernatorial election, a general State election was going on, and there was more villainy, fraud, and corruption, there was more false voting and false registration in this and in every other district in the State than there was in the fall of 1874, if that be possible.

Now, sir, if Mr. Platt's own witnesses can be believed, let this House grant him everything that he claims; let us surrender every proposition asserted in reference to Rives and Bland Counties; let us give him all he wants in Prince George County and in Nansemond County; and then if his own witnesses can be believed, if the testimony of his own supporters can be trusted, in two of the three precincts in which the navy-yard employés voted he received 67 more fraudulent votes than he claims as his whole majority in the district. And yet we have got 90 illegal and fraudulent votes cast at the several precincts throughout the district, proved indisputably, admitted by Mr. Platt; we have got these 90 illegal votes still to act upon. What are you going to do with them? Will you undertake to say that these 90 votes shall be divided equally or proportionately between the candidate in accordance with the aggregate vote received by each in the several precincts in which they were cast? We say that such a course would not be fair, and we say it while standing on the law. The gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. MCCRARY,] now a member of the House, in his admirable treatise upon the law governing contested cases has declared that where fraudulent and illegal votes have been proved, and one party has it in his power to show for whom these votes were cast, and fails or refuses to do it, that party is justly liable with the charge of all these fraudulent votes, and that they should be taken from his count. I now assert, and there will be no controvertion of that, I apprehend, that it was impossible for Mr. Goode to have proved for whom the illegal votes were cast. They were not known to be illegal and on the poll-books until his testimony was taken. Mr. Platt had employed his forty days in taking testimony, and Mr. Goode followed for his forty days, in which 90 fraudulent votes were proved to be on the polls. He had no opportunity, no earthly chance to show for whom they were given.

But under the law Mr. Platt had ten days in which to close the case by way of rebuttal testimony. It was competent for him within those ten days to have proven how many of these fraudulent votes were cast for him and how many for his opponent. It was competent for him to have brought these fraudulent voters before the proper officer, and under oath taken the testimony of each one. He did not do it. He never made the effort. He stands before the House to-day without having lifted a finger to enlighten the House or the Committee of Elections upon the question as to who received the support of these 90 illegal voters.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is the case. If you reject the five precincts at which false registration and illegal votes are proven and admitted to have been cast, it leaves Mr. Goode in possession of his seat without touching the navy-yard or the 90 illegal votes. It leaves him elected by a large majority. If you refuse to do that, then the rejection of the three precincts of the navy-yard and the votes of the townships of Rives and Bland leaves Mr. Goode entitled to the seat without regard to the 90 illegal votes. If you refuse to do one or the other, then let Mr. Platt have all he claims, taking everything in Prince George and Nansemond, and reject the three precincts in which the navy-yard employés voted and charge him, as he must be charged, with the 90 votes, and you leave Mr. Goode entitled to the seat.

There is one other fact in relation to these illegal votes which I did not suggest in the report, because I did not consider it proper that the question should be taken into consideration. When you come to examine into the complexion of these 90 illegal voters you find that seventy-odd of them were of a color among which the contestee in this case cannot find probably a single supporter; you find that probably 13 illegal voters were white while the remainder were of the colored class that in Virginia, as in the whole of the South generally, vote en masse for the candidates of contestant's party. I did not suggest that a color line should be adopted on which to parcel out the votes in the committee-room, and I will not do it on the floor any more than I did it there. But I say that if you undertake to divide the illegal votes equally between both the parties you are deducting from Mr. Goode illegal colored votes received by Mr. Platt, for every colored vote can be traced. There is no difficulty about proof, because the registration-books show every man colored and every man white.

If you will reject the navy-yard vote, after giving Mr. Platt all he claims in the whole district, and then deduct from Mr. Platt's vote the number of colored voters thus proven fraudulent and from Mr. Goode's poll every white vote proven fraudulent, Mr. Goode holds the seat.

Now, these are the facts, and I am sure no one will controvert them. I am willing to leave them to the House, invoking no party prejudice, for I address myself to republicans as well as democrats.

I do not desire to close, however, without noticing the fact that the gentleman from Kansas referred to a speech made by me some time ago in which I left it to some member upon the republican side of the House to tell the percentage of cases in which they had decided against themselves and in favor of their opponents since their advent to power. The gentleman from Kansas sought to interject a piece of special pleading when he undertook to tell us what percentage of cases they had decided against their party friends within the last two years. Now, I do not want the answer by sections; I want it as a whole.

I now re-affirm the statement that I formerly made. From the organization of this Government down to 1861 there never had been but sixty-five contested-election cases before the American Congress. From that time until now we have had within a fraction of two hundred contested-election cases; and I again throw out the challenge, and I defy any man who sits upon the other side of the House to meet it and tell this House and the country in how many of those cases, or rather in how few of them, they ever dared to award the seat to a man who was opposed to them politically.

Would the gentleman from Kansas say that they had done so in 50 per cent. of the cases? He dare not say so, for the record will not warrant it. He dare not say it has been done in one case in five. He dare not say it has been done in one case in nine. In not more than one case in ten can I find that his party awarded the seat to a party opposed in politics to them.

I am perfectly willing to rest this case upon this presentation of facts. I simply ask gentlemen to remember that they cannot unseat Mr. Goode unless they refuse to throw out precincts where fraudulent votes are proved and admitted, and cannot be eliminated from the poll, unless they go further, and refuse to throw out two precincts where the law is admitted to have been violated, and a law mandatory in its character at that. And further, they cannot unseat Mr. Goode unless they count for Mr. Platt the fraudulent votes that were cast for him, and upon which he has refused to throw any light.

It is not for me to appeal to this House because of the record which the sitting member has made or to enter upon a vindication of him from the charges and aspersions which have been cast upon him by the gentleman from Kansas, who asked in what school of morals this man had been reared. Let the record he has made for himself here answer for him. Let the record that has been made by the distinguished and prominent statesmen of the old Commonwealth of Virginia answer for them. These records will stand as fairer, bolder, more potent refutations of slander and aspersion than any feeble words of mine.

To history I commit the attacks the gentleman has made. Either he must substantiate them; he must prove that the representative officers, State and county, of the old Commonwealth of Virginia, are unworthy of public trust; he must prove that the sitting member here is worse than any of his co-conspirators, or else he must himself stand convicted before the House and the country as one who, to say the least of it, deals in reckless charges without stopping to determine whether they are in accordance with the testimony or supported by the facts.

If, in the face of the law and the facts, Mr. Goode is entitled to the seat, award it to him. If it be not so, take it from him. No doubt of his right lingers in my mind, nor do I believe that a majority of this House will doubt.

Mr. GOODE. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BROWN] has demanded the proof of the charge made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] that the employés of the navy-yard at Norfolk accepted employment in that Government workshop upon the condition expressed or implied that they were to cast their suffrages for my competitor. I do not desire now to enter upon a discussion of this case. I pledge myself to meet the gentleman from Kansas before this discussion shall have terminated.

I wish, however, now to meet his demand for the proof, to meet it here upon the threshold. I desire to call his attention to one or two extracts from this record which in his partisan zeal and bigotry he seems to have strangely overlooked. He demands to know the proof of the allegations made by my friend from Kentucky. He shall have it. I invite his attention and the attention of every gentleman upon this floor to this proof, for I desire that all the members of this House shall understand this case.

If I know myself, as Heaven is my judge, I would scorn to stoop to the meanness of occupying a seat upon this floor if I did not feel in my heart of hearts that I was entitled to it and that I had been fairly and legally elected by a majority of the legal votes cast in that district. That is my position. I will address myself to the remarks of the gentleman, and tell him at the proper time in what school of morals I have been reared.

I rise now to meet simply his demand for proof of the allegation as made by my friend. I invite the gentleman's attention (if he has not read the record before this, he ought to have done so) to page 233 of this record, the testimony of W. W. Bain:

Question 44. Was it not generally understood among the men employed in the navy-yard that they were expected to vote for Mr. Platt, and that if they failed to do so they would incur the opposition of leading republicans who controlled the patronage of the navy-yard?

Answer. They were all supposed to vote for Mr. Platt, and were expected to do so, all that were employed in the yard; if they did not vote for him they would be the first struck off the rolls, the first discharged.

Q. 45. Do you know any men who, according to general rumor in the navy-yard and in this community, have been discharged from the navy-yard on account of their votes in the last congressional election?

A. I know one particular one. His name is Stokes. I don't know what his other name is. I think his name is —— Stokes. He told me that his foreman told him that he would have to discharge him because he voted for Mr. Goode. I heard several others say that was the reason they were discharged.

Q. 46. Explain the process usually adopted during the campaign by persons desiring employment in the navy-yard. Did they first make application to the officials in the yard, or to the republican executive committee or some member thereof for indorsement?

A. As a general thing, they went to the executive committee for recommendation for work in the yard.

Q. 47. Were those recommendations generally respected?

A. They were, as a general thing.

That man is a republican; an employé in the navy-yard, and was a member of the republican executive committee at the election which occurred November 3, 1874.

I also invite the gentleman's attention to the testimony of Jesse Mahoney, to be found on page 254 of this record. I cannot read it all:

Question. 10. State whether or not you voted with the republican party in the spring election of 1873, and if so, what induced you to do it.

Answer. I did vote with them—for my bread and meat, and not from principle.

Q. 11. Could you have procured employment in the navy-yard in 1873 or 1874 without a promise, either expressed or implied, that you would support the candidates of the republican party?

A. I could not.

Q. 12. How were the men generally employed in the navy-yard—upon whose recommendation?

A. By the republican committee, so far as I know.

Q. 13. Did the officials in the navy-yard, as a general thing, employ any workmen without the indorsement of the republican executive committee?

A. They had to be indorsed by the republican executive committee.

Again I ask the gentleman's attention to the testimony of George W. Glover, on page 256:

Question 18. Did you attend the republican meeting in the fourth ward shortly before the election, at which instructions were given to the ticket-holder?

Answer. I attended a meeting at Temperance Hall, on County street, where the ticket-holders were instructed as to their duties.

Q. 19. Please state fully and in detail what instructions were given to the ticket-holders.

A. They were instructed to watch every man and see that he did not place his hand in his pockets before he gave to the judge of election the ballot received from the ticket-holder.

Q. 20. Were the ticket-holders instructed to see that the men voted the tickets which were given to them, or anything of that sort?

A. They were instructed to see, as far as possible, that they voted what they received from the ticket-holder.

Q. 21. Where did you vote on the day of election?

A. In the fourth ward.

Q. 22. Were you watched by anybody on that occasion to see how you voted?

A. I believe that I was, sir.

Q. 23. How far from the ballot-box did the ticket-holders stand, and in what position?

A. About nine or ten feet, facing the ballot-box.

Q. 24. Who were the republican ticket-holders in the fourth ward?

A. Barney Rutter and John Moody on the part of the whites. I don't know the colored man's name.

Q. 25. What position did Barney Rutter and John Moody hold in the navy-yard at that time?

A. Barney Rutter was a shipwright; Moody a blacksmith.

Q. 26. After giving the tickets to the navy-yard men as they came up, did they or not watch them until the tickets were placed in the hands of the judges?

A. I believe they endeavored to do so as far as they possibly could.

I refer also to the testimony of Joseph Broughton, on page 283:

Question 3. Did you witness any intimidation of voters at that precinct, or did you see or hear anything from navy-yard officials calculated to influence the voters improperly in that election?

Answer. On the day of election, between six and seven a. m., I went over to the fourth ward. When I arrived there at the polls I saw the men strung out in a string, with Barney Rutter on one side of the door and a colored man, whose name I do not know, standing on the other side. All the men had to pass between the two before getting to the ballot-box. All of the republicans had to take their tickets from Barney Rutter; saw Doctor Kenny standing inside the polls, three or four feet from the box, with a newspaper in his hands tallying off the men as they voted, and all supposed republicans who refused to get a ticket from Rutter, he put their names down on the inside margin of the paper. I remarked to M. J. Pyles, one of the republican vigilance committee, "This is a great job you fellows have got up." His reply was, "There are a great many talk about voting for Goode, and we intend to find them out and make them suffer for it."

I refer also to the testimony of Francis Russ, on page 309. I beg every gentleman to pay attention to the testimony of this old man, aged seventy-one, as respectable a citizen as lives in the Commonwealth of Virginia:

Question 1. State your age, residence, and occupation.

Answer. Age, seventy-one years old; residence, second ward, Portsmouth; occupation, mast-maker.

Q. 2. Were you employed in the navy-yard during the last congressional campaign and on the day of election which occurred November 3, 1874?

A. I was.

Q. 3. Was any pecuniary assessment made upon you as an employé in the navy-yard during the congressional campaign for Mr. Platt's election purposes? If so, state by whom the assessment was made how much money you paid, and to whom you paid it.

A. There was an assessment made; it was presented to me by Mr. George Thompson, and I paid to him $3.26, with the understanding that if I refused to pay the $3.26 I should place opposite my name the cause for refusing.

Q. 4. Did you pay that money to Mr. Thompson willingly or not?

A. I did not pay it willingly.

Q. 5. What, then, induced you to pay it?

A. Believing that it would be to my advantage to do so.

Q. 6. Please explain fully why you believed it would be to your advantage to pay that money. You are an aged man; how could the payment of an election-tax benefit you?

A. I believed it would be the means of my keeping in employ.

Q. 7. Was it, or not, generally understood among the men employed in the navy-yard during the congressional campaign that if they failed to pay that election-tax they would suffer for it?

A. It was with those with whom I conversed.

Q. 8. Was that assessment generally made upon the men employed in the yard, so far as you know?

A. As far as I know, it was in the department where I worked.

* * * * * * *

Q. 11. Have you ever been challenged or questioned by navy-yard officials or by the authorities of the republican party, or any of them, on account of your vote? If so, please state all about it.

A. I have, sir. Previous to the last congressional election some parties in Portsmouth preferred charges against Mr. William H. Lyons. In those charges it was said he had in his employ two ex-rebels that had never voted for Mr. Platt. Mr. Lyons came to me and asked me if I had any objection to give him a letter to contradict that statement which had been made about him. I told him I would. I wrote a few lines to Mr. Platt, stating that I plead guilty to the first charge. After writing this letter, Mr. Thompson, foreman of the shop, who is a magistrate, he swore me that these statements were true which I had wrote. The letter was sent to Mr. Platt, I presume, and I heard no more of it since.

Q. 12. You say you stated in the few lines you wrote to Mr. Platt, you plead guilty to the first charge. Explain what you mean by that answer.

A. First charge was that I was an ex-rebel; therefore I plead guilty, if there was any guilt in it.

Q. 13. What was the second charge brought against you?

A. That I had never voted for Mr. Platt.

Q. 14. What did you say in your letter to Mr. Platt about that charge?

A. I told Mr. Platt, in this letter, that I had voted for him twice, and had given my money as liberal as my means would admit, and if that didn't constitute a good republican, that I didn't know what would.

Q. 15. And is that the statement you were required to swear to before an official in the navy-yard?

A. It was, sir.

Now, I let the House rest upon that proof (which the gentleman has demanded) until I shall have opportunity, as I pledge myself before the House and the country to do, to follow his extraordinary speech step by step. When I can get the ear of this House I will demonstrate that the gentleman has not only aspersed the character of five eminent citizens of my State, but has distorted and perverted the testimony. Animated by partisan zeal, he has gone beyond the record in assuming a prerogative which did not belong to him, and demands to know in what school of morals I have been reared. I tell the gentleman that from my earliest infancy, at my mother's knee, I was reared in that school which taught me to obey the ninth commandment, which is, "Thou shall not bear false witness against thy neighbor." [Applause.]

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York obtained the floor.

Mr. POPPLETON. Will the gentleman from New York yield for a motion to adjourn?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Yes, sir.

Mr. POPPLETON. I move that the House adjourn.

INVESTMENT OF INDIAN TRUST FUNDS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a statement of the investment of certain Indian trust funds; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

SURVEY ON PACIFIC RAILROAD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of the Chief of Engineers, in regard to a survey in the line of the Pacific Railroad; which was referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroads.

GIFT OF GROUND AT FORT ELLIOTT, TEXAS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relating to a gift of ground at Fort Elliott, Texas, to the United States Government; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. OLIVER for ten days on account of important business.

PREVENTION OF DESERTIONS.

Mr. WELLS, of Mississippi, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3990) to prevent desertions from the Army; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

H. B. WHITFIELD AND DELBITT STEARNS.

Mr. WELLS, of Mississippi, also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3991) for the relief of Henry B. Whitfield and Delbitt Stearns for services rendered as acting district attorneys for the United States district court for the northern district of Mississippi; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

TALLAHASSEE LAND OFFICE.

Mr. PURMAN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3992) to authorize the President of the United States to re-establish the Tallahassee land office and district, in the State of Florida; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

DRY-DOCK AT KEY WEST.

Mr. PURMAN also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3993) appropriating $250,000 for the construction of a dry-dock at Key West, in Florida; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT KEY WEST.

Mr. PURMAN also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3994) for the construction of a public building for the use of the post-office, custom-house, United States court, and internal-revenue office at Key West, in Florida; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MONTANA VOLUNTEERS FOR INDIAN WARFARE.

Mr. MAGINNIS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3995) to authorize the President of the United States to accept the services of Montana volunteers for the suppression of Indian hostilities; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

The motion of Mr. POPPLETON was then agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock and ten minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. DUNNELL: A paper relating to the land claim of A. S. Nesmith, to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

By Mr. LUTTRELL: Resolutions of Bodego Grange, of Sonoma County, California, that the duty on grain-sacks should be reduced, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. RAINEY: The petition of Martha Riordan, of Washington, District of Columbia, for compensation for damages done to lot 12, square 222, by the occupant of an adjacent lot after the attention of the Superintendent of Public Buildings was called to the action of said occupant, to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

By Mr. WHITE: The petition of Henry Freeman, that he be paid the bounty paid to veteran soldiers of the late war, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, July 26, 1876.

The Senate met at twelve o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read.

Mr. WRIGHT. I wish to call attention to the Journal. By the reading of the Journal it appears that I made two reports yesterday from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. That must be a mistake. I made the reports from the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That correction will be made.

The Journal was approved.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills and joint resolution from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

The bill (H. R. No. 3392) for the relief of John R. Harrington—to the Committee on Patents.

The bill (H. R. No. 3925) relating to the production of fruit brandy and to punish frauds connected with the same—to the Committee on Finance.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 155) directing the suspension of further proceedings under the act of 5th of August, 1861—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

IMPEACHMENT OF W. W. BELKNAP.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to receiving morning legislative business?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Legislative and executive business will be suspended and the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the articles of impeachment exhibited by the House of Representatives against William W. Belknap, late Secretary of War.

The Senate then proceeded to the trial of the impeachment of William W. Belknap, late Secretary of War.

The Senate sitting for the trial of the impeachment of William W. Belknap having adjourned then resumed its

LEGISLATIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes its legislative session.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF EDUCATION.

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask permission to make a report. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to report the following resolution:

Resolved, That 1,200 additional copies of the report of the Commissioner of Education, or so many as can be printed at a cost of $500, be printed for the use of the Senate.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to ask the Senator from Rhode Island if that is to be in addition to the number ordered by joint resolution to be printed, or whether it is to be deducted from that number?

Mr. ANTHONY. There were 10,000 copies ordered to be printed for the use of the Commissioner by an act of Congress. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS] introduced a resolution that two thousand copies of the report should be taken from the Commissioner of Education and given to the Senate; but the order having been made by act of Congress it is not competent for the Senate to take them by resolution; and there seems to be a desire on the part of many Senators that a few copies of the report should be distributed among Senators, we have made this report. The Senator from Delaware will recollect that I consulted him on the subject.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Yes, sir.

Mr. ANTHONY. The reason why the limitation is put in is that the copy has not yet been given to the Government Printer, and it is impossible to tell the exact cost of it, and we are only authorized to print to the extent of $500.

The resolution was agreed to.

MISSISSIPPI INVESTIGATION.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am also instructed by the Committee on Printing to report the following resolution:

Resolved, That 1,200 additional copies of the report of the committee to inquire into the election of Mississippi, or so much thereof as may be printed at the cost of $500, be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. STEVENSON. I should like to ask my friend from Rhode Island whether this report has been made yet?

Mr. ANTHONY. It has not been made, but we have an estimate of the probable number of pages; we cannot tell precisely the number, and therefore we put in the limitation of $500. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] is familiar with the matter and desires to have it printed as well as the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. BOUTWELL.]

Mr. McDONALD. I desire to know if the resolution embraces the testimony and the views of the minority?

Mr. ANTHONY. Certainly. We never printed reports otherwise. The Senator can have those words put in if he desires; but they are not necessary.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I merely wish to suggest that as the resolution reads, if the report has not been made, it will be open to considerable question in my mind as a matter of law on the statute whether the resolution could be made to apply to a report not now in existence. If there is no such report on the files of the Senate, the resolution would be perfectly inofficious, or whatever you may say, and it would not furnish an authority to print a report hereafter to be made.

Mr. ANTHONY. The testimony is in the hands of the Printer, but the report itself has not yet been made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It would be better to say "when made."

Mr. ANTHONY. Very well; let that amendment be made.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Is that an additional number to the 4,000 already ordered by a joint resolution passed by the Senate?

Mr. ANTHONY. The Senate have passed a concurrent resolution to print 4,000 copies, but it has not been concurred in by the House.

Mr. SAULSBURY. It seems to me we ought to wait. I have no objection to this report being published by the Senate, provided the joint resolution is not concurred in by the House; but it strikes me we ought not to anticipate that it will not be passed by the House and go to work and provide an additional number. Four thousand I thought at the time was a very liberal number.

Mr. ANTHONY. When the resolution comes from the House it can be amended and this amount deducted.

Mr. BAYARD. I presume that this resolution looks to the printing not only of the report, but of the testimony and the views of the minority.

Mr. ANTHONY. It does.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the resolution.

Mr. WHYTE. Is the resolution before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There being no objection, the Senator from Rhode Island reported the resolution. The Chair heard no objection, and the question is on present consideration. Does the Senator object?

Mr. WHYTE. I do object.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am sure the Senator will not object to printing a report of a committee of this body, a report which is desired by his friends on that side as much as by ours.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will state to the Senater from Maryland that the regular number is printed as a matter of course, and while the type is standing it would be much more economical to print any extra numbers that may be desired.

Mr. WHYTE. I object because there is no such report yet made to the Senate. That is the reason of my objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is done every day. Very often resolutions of this kind are presented before the reports are actually made.

Mr. ANTHONY. I have offered the resolution just as we pass such resolutions every session. The Smithsonian Institute report is ordered to be printed before it is completed. I give notice that I will call it up to-morrow.

Mr. BAYARD. I hope the Senator from Maryland will withdraw his objection.

Mr. WHYTE. At the request of the Senator from Delaware I withdraw the objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is before the Senate.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no regular order.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. U. S. GRANT, jr., his Secretary, announced that the President had yesterday approved and signed the act (S. No. 333) for the relief of Major Foster A. Hixon, late a paymaster in the Army, and the act (S. No. 928) for the relief of Albert W. Preston.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LOGAN presented resolutions adopted at a meeting of a number of soldiers at Jacksonville, Pennsylvania, signed by William B. Keller, president, and Marshall Shields, secretary, praying the passage of a law for the equalization of bounties; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and a petition of citizens of Marlborough, Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of a law for the equalization of bounties; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HOWE presented a memorial of the mayor and common council of Racine, Wisconsin, praying an appropriation for the improvement of the harbor at that city; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. ROBERTSON presented a memorial of citizens of Charleston, South Carolina, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 3189) to amend the Revised Statutes in relation to merchant seamen; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MERRIMON. I present the petition of John H. Brooks and many other citizens of the District of Columbia, praying the Senate to consider and act upon House bill No. 3435, by which it is intended to provide a commission to pass upon many claims against the District of Columbia. That bill, I beg to say, was before the Committee on the District of Columbia; it was reported back to the Senate and then referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. It is a bill in which a large number of citizens of the District and elsewhere have a warm interest, and they are very anxious that Congress should take action before the session closes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to say in that connection that the Committee on the Judiciary have not yet been able to consider the subject, but are, among other things, waiting for information from the government of the District as to the nature and character of these transactions, so that we may know exactly what we are about. In the next place, I am not prepared to say nor authorized to say whether the Committee on the Judiciary will believe that it falls within their proper jurisdiction; but at present we are waiting for information.

Mr. MERRIMON. The Committee on the District of Columbia thought it was especially within the jurisdiction of the Judiciary Committee because it provides a court and defines the jurisdiction of that court.

The petition was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. OGLESBY, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1984) to provide for the sale of certain lands in Kansas, reported it without amendment.

Mr. OGLESBY. The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 629) for the relief of Jonathan White, have had the same under consideration, and have instructed me to report it back without amendment. It will only take one minute to pass the bill. If it goes on the docket now, it will be a great injustice to the man. It appropriates $59.40 out of the Treasury, money accidentally and unintentionally paid into the Treasury by Mr. White more than he owed. The officers of the Government have passed on it and recommended that it be passed. They cannot pay him the money without this bill. It is his money in the Treasury. The bill is only eight or ten lines long and there is a report with it. I should like to have it considered now.

Mr. ALLISON. I must insist on the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no order except the Calendar.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the bill and report.

The bill was read.

Mr. ALLISON. I object to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. OGLESBY. It will only take a moment.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Vermont asks that the report be read. I desire to call up the river and harbor bill and dispose of it in some way or attempt to do so.

Mr. OGLESBY. Will not the Senator from Iowa allow me to appeal to him. This man cannot afford to come here a second time for this sum of money. The report can be read in two minutes. It was simply a mistake; and the register and receiver and the Commissioner of the Land Office all recommended that the payment be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa objects. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. KERNAN, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2894) for the relief of J. E. Pankey, of Fulton County, Kentucky, reported it without amendment.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1503) for the relief of Sarah F. Albertson, of Boonville, Missouri, reported it without amendment.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of B. D. Carpenter, asking that his claims against the United States for property taken and appropriated by United States troops be referred to the Court of Claims for adjudication, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WRIGHT. The same committee, to whom was recommitted the bill (H. R. No. 3182) for the relief of Albert Grant, have had this bill and the papers again under consideration, and after duly considering the claim again, recommend that the bill be postponed indefinitely.

The bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. BRUCE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2311) granting a pension to Daniel Willhoit, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Rev. H. V. Brown, pastor and trustee of the St. Peter and St. Paul's Church, at Chattanooga, Tennessee, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1005) for the relief of the Roman Catholic church of St. Peter and St. Paul, at Chattanooga, Tennessee.

The bill was read and passed to the second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. WRIGHT. I desire to say in that connection that while there is no minority report, I want it understood that the report is not the unanimous report of the committee.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. Perhaps I ought to have mentioned that.

BILL RECOMMITTED.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask unanimous consent that the vote of the Senate by which the bill (H. R. No. 183) granting an increase of pension to John E. Wunderlin, late a private in the Thirty-third Regiment of New York Volunteer Infantry, was indefinitely postponed, may be reconsidered and the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, that order will be made. The Chair hears no objection.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3022) making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. ROBERTSON, (at four o'clock and eight minutes p. m.) I move that the Senate adjourn.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 26, noes 17.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is agreed to; and the Senate stands adjourned until to-morrow at——

Several SENATORS. Eleven o'clock.

Other SENATORS. Twelve o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the order and the Chair will be able to determine. The sessions for this day and yesterday have been at twelve o'clock.

Mr. WITHERS and others. By a special vote.

Mr. HAMLIN. The standing order is eleven o'clock.

Mr. CONKLING. I rise to a question of order. Did not the Senate on a division vote to adjourn, and did not the Chair so declare?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Certainly.

Mr. CONKLING. I object to any business. The Chair did announce so many in the affirmative and so many in the negative, and that the Senate was adjourned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not declare to what hour; and the Chair is determining that by a reference to the order.

Mr. CONKLING. That may be; but I object to any business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would like to hear the general order as to the hour of meeting.

Mr. HAMLIN. I made the motion myself, and I remember the precise words in which I made it a permanent order. Twice since then we have specifically adjourned to another hour, but the special order now stands eleven o'clock.

Mr. CONKLING. That is true.

Mr. WITHERS. That is the standing order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the last order.

The CHIEF CLERK. The order of July 25, yesterday, was—

On motion of Mr. ANTHONY that when the Senate adjourn it be to twelve o'clock to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the statement of the Senator from Maine, the Chair rules that the Senate stands adjourned until to-morrow at eleven o'clock.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, July 26, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate was ready to proceed upon the impeachment of William W. Belknap and to receive the managers on the part of the House, and that the Senate Chamber was prepared with accommodations for the reception of the House of Representatives.

SOLDIERS' HOMES.

Mr. TERRY, by unanimous consent, submitted a report of the Committee on Military Affairs in relation to soldiers' homes; which was ordered to be printed and recommitted.

INDIAN TRUST FUNDS.

Mr. MORRISON. I am directed by the Committee of Ways and Means to report back and recommend the House to pass, with an amendment, the bill (S. No. 614) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to deposit certain funds in the United States Treasury in lieu of investment.

The bill was read. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to deposit in the Treasury of the United States any and all sums now held by him, or which may hereafter be received by him, as Secretary of the Interior and trustee of various Indian tribes on account of the redemption of United States bonds or other stocks and securities belonging to the Indian trust fund, whenever he is of the opinion that the best interests of the Indians will be promoted by such deposits, in lieu of investments, and the United States shall pay interest semi-annually, at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum from the date of deposit of any and all such sums in the United States Treasury.

The amendment reported by the committee to strike out the word "five" and insert "four and a half," so as to make the rate of interest payable by the United States 4½ per cent., was read.

Mr. MORRISON. As there was no treaty or other obligation requiring the United States to pay 5 per cent. interest, the committee were of opinion that the Government ought not to pay more than 4½. Hence the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MORRISON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PAYMENT OF DISCHARGED HOUSE EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. SCALES. I introduced yesterday a resolution for the payment of certain discharged employés of this House, which was referred to the Committee of Accounts. It does not appear in the RECORD, which I ask may be corrected by its insertion.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The statement omitted in yesterday's RECORD is as follows:

Mr. SCALES, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee of Accounts:

Resolved, That all employés of this House discharged on June 30, and not paid off on account of the non-passage of the sundry civil appropriation bill, be, and are hereby, allowed payment until date of settlement.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. EAMES, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD remarks upon the bill (H. R. No. 3910) in addition to an act entitled "An act to provide for the resumption of specie payments," approved January 14, 1875.

Mr. EDEN, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD remarks on the bill (H. R. No. 3635) to utilize the product of gold and silver mines, and for other purposes.

SAINT PAUL, MINNESOTA, AS A PORT OF APPRAISAL.

Mr. DUNNELL. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Commerce for passage at the present time the bill (S. No. 413) establishing the port of Saint Paul, Minnesota, as a port of appraisal.

Mr. RANDALL. That bill was presented once before, and was objected to by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] who is not now in his seat.

Mr. DUNNELL. That gentleman has withdrawn his objection.

The bill was read. It provides that the provisions contained in and the privileges accorded by sections 2990, 2991, 2992, 2993, 2994, 2995, 2996, and 2997 of the Revised Statutes be extended to and held to include the port of Saint Paul, in the collection district of Minnesota.

The second section provides that the appraiser at the port of Saint Paul shall receive the same amount of salary that the deputy collector of that port now receives.

Mr. RANDALL. Does this bill increase any pay?

Mr. DUNNELL. The compensation of the deputy collector under the statute is $2,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I shall have to object to this bill. This is an increase of pay.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLAND. I ask that to-night be set apart for debate only on the bill (H. R. No. 3635) to utilize the product of gold and silver mines, and for other purposes, no other business to be transacted. A great many members desire to speak upon that bill, and may have no other opportunity.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest to the gentleman that we proceed on that bill in the morning hour.

Mr. BLAND. If we are to have a morning hour upon that bill I will withdraw my request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The unfinished business of yesterday, the contested-election case, on which the gentleman from New York [Mr. TOWNSEND] is entitled to the floor, takes precedence of the morning hour.

Mr. RANDALL. As the previous question is not operating upon that matter, does it not come up after the morning hour?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is a question of privilege, and was the unfinished business at the adjournment yesterday.

Mr. RANDALL. But it does not of necessity cut off the morning hour if the House by a majority vote declares its wish to have the morning hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair, after consulting largely with gentlemen who have long been intimate with the practice and rules of the House, must hold that the regular order this morning is the continuation of the unfinished business, and that the morning hour cannot be called until that business is disposed of.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. Speaker, there is a matter which is specially assigned for this morning, a bill (H. R. No. 1337) for the relief of Nelson Tiffany, vetoed by the President. It will take but a few minutes to dispose of it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman from New York yields for that purpose, as he is in a parliamentary sense now upon the floor, the Chair will gladly recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. I understand this is the special order for this time. It will take but a minute or two.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That will not take the gentleman from New York [Mr. TOWNSEND] off his feet.

Mr. HENDEE. I demand the regular order of business.

Mr. BLAND. I move that there be a session this evening for debate only—no business whatever to be transacted—on the bill (H. R. No. 3635) to utilize the product of gold and silver mines, and for other purposes. There are several gentlemen who desire to be heard, and I hope there will be no objection, as my proposition will not interfere with the business of the House.

Mr. KASSON. What bill is it that the gentleman wishes to have a night session on?

Mr. BLAND. It is the bill which you killed yesterday morning.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The proposition of the gentleman from Missouri is that there shall be a session this evening for debate only, no business whatever to be transacted, on the bill to utilize the product of gold and silver mines.

Mr. KASSON. I object.

Mr. BLAND. I hope my bullionist friend will not object, but will let this debate go on. Does he object because he cannot stand debate on it?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I wish to ask unanimous consent to introduce a pension bill for reference merely.

Mr. HOLMAN. Cannot the question of the consideration of the unfinished business pending at the adjournment last evening be raised at this time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not while the gentleman from New York occupies the floor. It may be raised when the floor is not occupied. If the gentleman from Indiana will look at the RECORD containing the proceedings of yesterday, he will notice that the gentleman from New York [Mr. TOWNSEND] took the floor and yielded simply to a motion to adjourn. The Chair cannot take him off the floor by allowing the question of consideration to be raised at this time.

Mr. HENDEE. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. When the gentleman from New York has concluded the question of consideration may then be raised.

Mr. BUCKNER. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order of business having been demanded, the question before the House for consideration is the report of the Committee of Elections on the contested case from the second congressional district of Virginia—Platt vs. Goode—on which the gentleman from New York [Mr. TOWNSEND] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HOAR. I understand the gentleman from New York is willing to yield to me for the purpose of calling up the veto message of the President on the bill for the relief of Nelson Tiffany.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chairman would be glad to recognize the gentleman, but the regular order of business is called for on all hands.

Mr. RANDALL. Has not the House control over its proceedings?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has; but the gentleman from New York has the floor on the unfinished business.

Mr. RANDALL. But the gentleman from New York I learn is willing to yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of order. The bill which was vetoed by the President comes up under the Constitution requiring it should be submitted again to the House. The pending question is, Will the House on reconsideration pass the bill? It was set down for consideration this morning, and takes precedence of everything under the vote of the House. It is as much entitled to its place as the reading of the Journal was entitled to its place, and matters coming over from yesterday come over after it. In addition to that claim of right the gentleman from New York consents, if he does not lose his place after this is disposed of, that it may be taken up, as it will only take a few minutes. I hope the Chair will not interpose any objection if no one else does.

Mr. BLAND. As I understand it, the bill to which the gentleman from Massachusetts refers was made the special order after the morning hour, and it does not come up until we have had a morning hour.

Mr. HOAR. No; it was made the special order after the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It was made the special order after the reading of the Journal, and the Chair recognizes it as a privileged question; but the unfinished business of yesterday, on which the gentleman from New York holds the floor, takes precedence. The only ruling the Chair has made in conflict with the special order to which the gentleman from Massachusetts has referred is that the gentleman from New York [Mr. TOWNSEND] holds the floor. If, however, the gentleman from New York yields the floor, it is of course in order for the gentleman to call up his bill.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I yield the floor for that purpose only.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman from New York yields the floor, he yields it.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Then I do not yield it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts can be recognized when the gentleman from New York is off the floor.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a parliamentary question on the order of business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. HOAR. My proposition is that the gentleman from New York [Mr. TOWNSEND] does not take the floor by right until this matter is disposed of, because it was ordered by the House it should be dealt with at this time.

Mr. BANKS. Mr. Speaker, the question before the House which comes up as the unfinished business relates to the right of a member to his seat and is of the very highest privilege, overridlng any special order. The question is whether the gentleman from Virginia shall hold his seat to vote on this veto of the President.

Mr. HOAR. My colleague does not fail to see that the special order set down for a particular time necessarily overrides all other questions at that particular time.

Mr. BANKS. It overrides everything except a question of the right of a member to hold his seat upon this floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will have the rule read in regard to unfinished business, and as the gentleman from Massachusetts has stated, this contested-election case is unfinished business of the highest privilege.

The Clerk read as follows:

The consideration of the unfinished business in which the House may be engaged at an adjournment shall be resumed as soon as the Journal of the next day is read, and at the same time each day thereafter until disposed of.

Mr. HOGE. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill for reference to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. BLAND. I object. I want the morning hour to-day if it can be had.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE OF PLATT VS. GOODE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House resumes the consideration of the report of the Committee of Elections on the contested-election case from the second congressional district of Virginia, Platt vs. Goode, on which the gentleman from New York [Mr. TOWNSEND] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I desire, if I may have it, the attention of all the members of this House upon the question now under discussion. Whatever other gentlemen may think desirable to do or to say in this case, I do not propose myself to say a word that ought to pain or offend any gentleman. When the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] took the floor yesterday I soon found him making a statement in regard to what occurred in the committee-room of such a character that I felt it my duty to myself to recall the attention of that gentleman to the real occurrences there. I think the House will bear me out in the statement that I made the inquiry in the kindest spirit and without offense in my manner. Whatever may have occurred sometimes in the history of the world, my manner to the gentleman from Kentucky was that of perfect kindness and conciliation.

Now I want to say this morning that it is not my purpose to bandy words with the gentleman from Kentucky or to say any unkind thing. I do not need any personal vindication for what has happened in this House, but I shall vindicate myself in regard to what has happened in the committee-room.

The charge of the gentleman from Kentucky in regard to the republican members of the committee was calculated to prejudice democratic members of the House against me, to the extent perhaps of rendering the ear of the democratic members difficult of access, and in so far it becomes necessary for me to speak of the course of events in the Committee of Elections since I have had the honor to be a member of it. I asked the gentleman from Kentucky yesterday whether Mr. FENN, the democratic Delegate from Idaho, was not seated by unanimous consent of the House, and of course by unanimous consent of the republican members of the committee, over Mr. Bennett, who was an out-and-out republican. I asked whether such was not the fact. I understood the gentleman to be of the opinion that such was not the fact—that Mr. FENN was not a democrat. I read yesterday in the hearing of the House the statement of Mr. Bennett in the Congressional Directory that Mr. FENN was a democrat. I always supposed that he was a democrat. The newspapers of the day, when the election occurred, announced that Mr. FENN was a democrat. I have asked Mr. FENN, now upon this floor, or at least he was a moment since and I presume he is now, whether he did not run in Idaho as a democratic candidate, and Mr. FENN assured me that he did.

Mr. FENN. Will the gentleman from New York yield to me for one moment?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. With pleasure.

Mr. FENN. Mr. Speaker, I observe in the RECORD what has been referred to by the gentleman from New York. On yesterday I was absent at the time the argument took place upon this floor in the Virginia contested-election case. I will state now that I received the unanimous democratic nomination by the democratic convention of the Territory for Delegate, and afterward I canvassed a large portion of the Territory—as much as I could in the intervening time before the election—as the democratic candidate for Delegate. Mr. T. W. Bennett, who had been appointed governor of that Territory by President Grant, and who had served in that office between two and three years, who is looked upon as an able and rather unscrupulous republican politician, after the meeting of the republican territorial convention announced himself as an independent candidate for Delegate to Congress, and within forty-eight hours thereafter the republican convention indorsed him and placed him before the people as their candidate.

The county of Oneida in our Territory has quite a large Mormon population, but I was never in that county until several months after the election. I will state further, that I sent no man to that county to work in my interest; that Governor Bennett did send men to work in his interest, and tried to secure the Mormon vote in that county. I am proud to say that I received four-fifths of the legal vote cast in that county at that election, and I will say that Mr. Hailey, my democratic predecessor as Delegate upon this floor from Idaho, received five-sixths of the entire vote in Oneida County at the preceding election.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Now the House has had an ocular demonstration that Mr. FENN is a democrat, [laughter;] so that I am vindicated in that respect.

Mr. FENN. I desire just one moment more. I will say further that the county of Oneida was not represented in the democratic convention from which I received the nomination as candidate for Delegate from Idaho Territory. There were no delegates present in that convention from that county.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the gentleman from New York allow me a moment?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I simply desire to say that on yesterday, as the gentleman from New York will remember and the House will remember, I did not undertake to express any opinion as to the politics of the parties to that contest. I simply stated that Mr. Bennett in his argument before the committee said—and in that, I am sure, the gentleman from New York will concur with me—that there were no politics involved in the race between himself and his competitor; that it was not a race between a democrat and a republican; but that it was a contest between gentlemen representing the Gentile and the Mormon elements of that district. That is all. And in addition I will ask the gentleman from New York in treating this case to state to the House that neither Mr. FENN nor Mr. Bennett when admitted to a seat would ever be entitled to give a vote, whatever their politics might be, as they came from a Territory.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. That was not what I was talking about. I do not propose to be withdrawn from the thread of my argument. My argument was to show this House that I had favored the seating of a person here who was a democrat in opposition to one who was a confessed republican. And the gentleman from Kentucky will bear me out in this: he will remember that he told me that if I undertook to hang my hope of salvation upon having sustained a democrat in the Idaho case I should fail, because of the fact that FENN was a Mormon; because Bennett said he was a Mormon. Now what Mr. Bennett said was this: he said, in the absence of Mr. FENN, that FENN was a kind of a Jack Mormon; that he always did what the Mormons wanted him to do, and that he really in point of fact was neither a republican nor a democrat, but a Jack Mormon. But he said it in the absence of FENN, and when FENN had no opportunity to answer. And I knew that Mr. FENN was a democrat as well then as now.

I want to state further that I was on the subcommittee that investigated that case. The subcommittee consisted of Mr. HOUSE of Tennessee, Mr. THOMPSON of Massachusetts, and Mr. TOWNSEND of New York. In our discussions we never had any difficulty at all, but all of us held the returns gave Mr. FENN his seat; and I should have despised myself if I could have sat in that committee, with the oaths of God upon me, and refused to do justice even to a full Mormon, little as I like Mormonism, or to a democrat, as much as I am politically opposed to democracy.

But that is not all. Sir, I hate to talk about myself, but when attacked I have to do so. We had a case before us involving the rights of Mr. Mackey, the gentleman from Charleston, South Carolina, to a seat. The sitting member was a republican. Every vote he had cast in the House was a republican vote. The contestant was a republican. The subcommittee in that case were Mr. THOMPSON, of Massachusetts, and myself—one and one. The chairman of the committee had seen enough of me and seen enough of Mr. THOMPSON to put us fairly pitted one against one in the subcommittee. And Mr. THOMPSON said in the House when this question was before the House that I was the man that first said that Mr. Mackey was not entitled to the seat, thus disposing of one republican, and held further that the contestant, Mr. Buttz, was not entitled to his seat because there were so many votes that had to be thrown out, because of the proof of fraud and irregularity in Charleston, that it would be a farce to undertake to award even a republican his seat on this floor. Now, gentlemen, I believe you will not think, whatever else you may think of me, that I am the most prejudiced man that ever rose in his place to discuss a question before the Congress of the United States.

There is another thing I ought to say. We have had a great many controverted matters before our committee; but in most of the matters we have agreed. In a very large proportion of cases there could be no question about them. But Mr. Platt is the only man of republican politics who has had the hardihood to come to this House and ask for a democratic sitting member's seat. I say "hardihood." I do not mean by that to say that it is a thing impossible; because I tell you, gentlemen, there are a great many as honest men sitting over there as I would claim to be before God myself. And I do not believe that any harangues that I could make to gentlemen upon that side of the House could induce those valuable and conscientious men to swerve from the convictions of their own consciences. And in every election case that has been carried here where the republican has been unseated there has been a man here and a man there, and five men here and five men there, among the majority who have thought that their duty called upon them to vote as I did.

Mr. POPPLETON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Yes, sir.

Mr. POPPLETON. Has there been an instance in which a solitary republican member voted for a report seating a democrat?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. O, yes. In the case of Walls, the very first case we brought in, Mr. WELLS, of Mississippi, voted with the democrats and signed their report. O, we are not nearly as bad as my friend would have the House believe we are.

Mr. POPPLETON. Allow me to correct the gentleman. Mr. WELLS did not vote at all.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. He joined the report, did he not? I do not know whether he was here when the vote was taken.

Now, Mr. Speaker, having tried to show that we republican members of the committee are not entirely outside barbarians without consciences, so that we cannot be listened to, I pass to the consideration of some of the questions that are presented in this case; and let me say, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, that there never has been a case before the House that was so close shaved down as this case. The number of controverted facts are very few. The number of places where you have got to consider what ought to be done are very few, and the questions of law and fact are exceedingly few, and if we can ever get at them without excitement I do not believe that there can be any great deal of doubt what the result ought to be.

Now, in the first place, there is a navy-yard in the case. Mr. Platt will be found to be entitled to his seat if you throw out every vote which was cast in the election district where the navy-yard was situated, and so Messrs. HOUSE and THOMPSON, belonging to the majority of this House, have reported. They have thrown out the navy-yard vote, and yet they find themselves under their sense of duty compelled to award the seat to the contestant.

Now, gentlemen, I know that a party not in power is always suspicious of the influences that surround any post and where employment is given, and I find not only this report, but I find the report in the Frost case, and I find the speeches made in the Frost case all indicate that the suspicions which hang around these navy-yards are such that the democrats think may on their consciences and think they ought in the discharge of their duty utterly disregard the returns in those precincts and throw the votes all out.

Now, I do not ask the majority of this House to believe as I do on these matters, but I ought for a moment to vindicate my own course before a majority of the House. If I understand the minority of this committee, they lay down this proposition: that if a man on Saturday night in a voting district accepts employment at the navy-yard, and he himself (although nothing is said about it at the time of his employment) understands that if he accepts that employment he is expected to vote the republican ticket on Tuesday, this House has a right to infer that he voted on Tuesday and infer also that he voted for the republican candidate.

Now, a great majority of this House on both sides, republicans and democrats, are lawyers, and I address myself to the lawyers on the democratic side of the House, and I say to you, gentlemen, do you condemn me in your inner souls very much if I do not think that I have the right or you have the right to draw such an inference—to draw the inference not only that a man voted without there being any proof that he voted, but that he voted in a particular manner? I do not believe that it is right to draw that inference; but I do not quarrel with you if you do. I am simply vindicating myself, and I shall not argue the question further here.

I do not ask in my argument in this case that any gentleman forming a conclusion as to who has a right to the seat in this case shall agree with me that the votes from the navy-yard precincts should be counted. Throw them out, if you please, and then there will be but two questions in the case. Mr. Platt is elected unless you throw out Rives and Bland Townships, in Prince George County, and unless you deduct from Platt's vote the entire number of sporadic, illegal votes cast in the district without knowing for whom these votes were cast. But Bland and Rives Townships are what Frenchmen call at dinner the piece de resistance. They are the important question. What ought to be done with the votes of Bland and Rives Townships? Are the votes to be counted or are the votes to be thrown out? The first question that arises in regard to Rives and Bland Townships is, Was there any actual fraud perpetrated there? Because fraud will eat everything out. It will sap every foundation; it will destroy every return; it will render proof unworthy of consideration. There can hardly be any pretext of fraud there. There were in each of these townships four officers sworn to discharge that duty under the law, with the oaths of God upon them, and every one of the four in each township was a democrat, a friend of Mr. Goode, and every man of them, excepting one, voted for Mr. Goode and wished his election, and wish it now.

Then aside from the proof that appears in the case you would not suspect an intention to perpetrate fraud. But more than that, these democratic officers are called and sworn and they testify that they did their duty as they understood it, faithfully, honestly, loyally; true to the constitution and to the laws of the State of Virginia. It was said yesterday that an attack was made on Virginia. God save me from making an attack on Virginia. I have professed my faith in this House before. I learned my politics from Virginia and my whole hope for Virginia is that her politics will be as pure and her politicians as honest now and for the time to come as they were in the olden times.

Now we have a democratic board, a Goode board, and by that I mean a board in favor of Mr. Goode, who handled these votes, received the votes, and when the voting was done made the returns. There are here in this report the certificates, signed by every one of these men, four in each instance, that the election was so held and the vote was so and so. What is to be done with them? These officers certified what is otherwise proved to be true. If there be a doubt whether the return has been tampered with after it was made, if it be erased, if it be interlined, if there be any touch or appearance of fraudulent treatment of the return, then it may be disregarded. But there is not a word of that in the proof in this case.

These returns are not only signed by the officers of the law, all of whom were sworn men and democrats and the friends of the sitting member, but in each case two of these men, still under oath, carried these certificates to the county clerk and put them in the hands of another friend of Mr. Goode, and another democrat. Now all these things will not be disputed. The returns are to-day in the county clerk's office of Prince George County. The proof of them is in the case and before this House. We look as directly at these certificates of these returns as if we stood face to face with them in the county clerk's office of Prince George County, in the State of Virginia. Are we to reject them? Not only are the returns there, but they are proved in this case to be true.

But it is said the statute of Virginia requires that these returns shall be carried to the county clerk's office "in a sealed envelope." We agree as to what the law is. Instead of carrying these returns to the county clerk's office in a sealed envelope, these returns, being all the while in the hands of the officers who signed them, were put, one of them in a bag and sewed up, and the other in a tin box and the box locked, and in that manner they were taken to the county clerk and handed to him by the inspectors who had made and signed them, in each case by two of the sworn officers of election. Now it is contended that because on the sewed-up bag a seal was not placed and because in the other case the return was carried in a tin box, instead of being put in a sealed envelope of paper, they are thereby not only rendered unfit for evidence, but when afterward you have proved that the contents of the returns are true, the election for these precincts may be declared to be void. I think I am not mistaken in the law of this case; I think I have not mistaken the claim made.

Now, in heaven's name, can that be so; can that be the law? Here is a fair election held by honest officers who make and sign a perfect return. That return is carried to the county clerk's office, in the one case in a sewed-up bag by the officers who made the return, and in the other case in a tin box locked and carried by the officer who made and signed the return, and by them handed to the county clerk. Yet it is claimed that the election itself is vitiated, that the return is vitiated, that the certificate is vitiated, because of the failure to apply wax or turpentine, or tar, or something on which you can make an impression and call it a seal.

Let me suppose a case and submit it to the majority of this House and to the minority also. Suppose that in the providence of God these certificates had been made out, signed, perfected, and laid upon a table, and at that moment a stroke of lightning from the heavens had annihilated the life of every one of these inspectors. The certificates thus made out are left. Is there any doubt about the record of that election? Is there any doubt about the fact that those certificates would be evidence, notwithstanding they had not yet been sent to the county clerk's office?

The history of this House this year and in former years will show that whenever and however and under whatever circumstances we or our predecessors have been able to find a certificate signed by honest men of the result of an election, that certificate unless impeached has been regarded as conclusive.

Take the very case of Mr. FENN, of Idaho, now sitting in this House. In that case the certificate of election was given by the territorial officers to Mr. Bennett. Why? In the first instance the return of votes was carried to the county clerk's office. The law of Idaho requires that the votes shall be canvassed in the county clerk's office by certain officers, and that the return of that canvass shall be made to the central office of the Territory. Now the officers who canvassed these votes in the county were unauthorized persons. There had been a change in the law, and the men who canvassed the votes under that changed law had no right to canvass them. They sent up a certificate that was nugatory, and the territorial officers gave the certificate of election to Mr. Bennett.

When that case came before our committee we said that we did not care what informalities there had been, that we would go down to the bottom and find the certificates made by the men who presided over the election in that Territory, and that by those certificates that case should be decided. We did so, and came into this House and asked this House to indorse our conclusion. This House as one man did indorse it. Every member of our committee, every member of this House without respect to politics, decided that the original certificate of the men who conducted that election being proved in the case, that was conclusive unless the certificate was impeached; and it was not impeached.

Now I say to you without hesitation that the offices of civilized life cannot be carried on unless faith be given to certificates made under such circumstances. Everybody has given faith to them from the beginning down to this day. I have never yet heard nor seen any public body or officer that has had any hesitation in regard to giving full force and effect to such certificates until the minority of this committee made their report in this case; [after a pause,] I am wrong, the canvassing officers of the State of Virginia rejected these certificates because of the lack of turpentine, or tar, or wax, or something on which an impression could be made so as to call it a seal. Therefore that was the first instance in which such a doctrine was held.

Now, I have no hesitation in saying that I cannot believe the officers at the seat of government in the State of Virginia knew they were perpetrating a great wrong; I make no such charge; but I am satisfied that they committed a very great mistake. I have no hesitation in saying this here, and if I met those gentlemen face to face I should not hesitate to say it to them. I believe they made a grave, a palpable mistake; that is all. Other men have made mistakes. A man who never made a mistake should be removed to some other sphere; he is unfitted for the operations in this world.

But again, there were nearly 900 more votes given against Mr. Goode in the congressional district than were given for him. If the vote in Norfolk be counted, (and there is no doubt that the vote in Norfolk was cast, all agree that it was cast, and that the returns were not meddled with, were not fraudulent,) there was a majority of 441 votes for Mr. Platt over Mr. Goode. Then there was a man named Norton running who received some 410 votes. So that, although Mr. Goode may be as valuable a man as his friends believe, (and I am not going to say one word against him,) he was not the choice of that election district any more than Colonel Luttrell, the opponent of John Wilkes, was the choice of the electors of Middlesex. We sit here to give effect to the wishes of the congressional district. I grant you that the votes cast for Norton count nothing for Mr. Platt; but if you reject in Norfolk the votes cast in the custom-house precincts you still leave Mr. Platt with a majority of more than 100, unless you throw out the townships of Rives and Bland in Prince George County.

I have said all about Rives and Bland Townships that I propose to say; for I do not intend to weary the House; I do not intend to solicit the House. I propose simply to do my duty as a Representative upon this floor (having been placed upon the Committee of Elections) in presenting the case for consideration.

But there is another difficulty. If Mr. Goode be found to be something more than one hundred votes behind in the district, those who think he ought to be seated are compelled to make a minute search over the district to find the means of seating him. I do not say that any gentleman does this with a wrong intention. I say that gentlemen who have adopted the conviction that Mr. Goode ought to be seated are compelled to look about the district for some other mode of continuing Mr. Goode in his seat and preventing the contestant from reaching the same place. In one district there were, I think, 13 voters who were registered before the election by a transfer from one district to another. Now I have great anxiety to be understood by the majority of this House upon the question of registration. There are two modes of registration under the laws of Virginia, and I concede, as is contended on the other side, that if a man be not registered he has no right to vote. If a vote be received without the voter being registered, the vote should be counted out. But there are two modes of registration. One is where a man has lived in a neighborhood for more than a year. He goes to the officers of registration, who consider his case and he is put upon the registry. The other is where a man has been a citizen of the State for more than a year, has been registered in one precinct but removes into another precinct more than three months before the election. Such a man up to the day before the election (and I do not know but on the day of the election) may obtain from the precinct where he has been registered a certificate to that effect from the registering officers, and if the officers in the precinct to which he has removed are satisfied that he has resided there for three months, it is their duty to register him.

In this case there were, I think, 13 votes cast by persons registered or certificates of registration brought from the places of their former residence. A witness is put upon the stand who proves this fact. This witness was an officer of registration himself, and he swears that the officers were satisfied that these men had lived in the neighborhood for a period of three months, and accordingly put the men upon the registry.

Now, the minority of this committee concede that when men are registered in the ordinary way—that is, registered upon a year's residence—the presumption is that they are rightfully registered; but they contend that if they are registered on certificates there is no such presumption. I believe I state the ground rightly. I know that this position was contended for in committee; and I understand that it is argued here. I believe that this argument is not contained in the report; but it was urged yesterday by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BLACKBURN.] Can that position be true? Is the presumption wanting in the one case while it arises in the other? In the view of the law, does a case where a man is registered and a whole year's residence passed upon by the registering officer differ from the case where a certificate is brought that the man has been registered before and the register knows that he has resided in the district three months? It is utterly impossible. These presumptions affect every judicial and every ministerial act of our lives. Why, I have in my own congressional district some fifty voting precincts. In thirteen of them registration is required. In Heaven's name, gentlemen, do not I come with the presumption that the registration was right? When a sworn officer is charged with doing an act and does it, does not the presumption attach he did it rightly, that it was lawful for him to do it, that he did it honestly? There is no question about it. Gentlemen cannot be mistaken about it. The presumption is that these men were rightfully registered.

True, Mr. Goode was at liberty if he could have done so to show that these men were after all not voters; that the certificate was a fraud; that they had not resided in the precinct three months; but he did not do any such thing; he never proved a word on the subject. He simply proved that they had been registered elsewhere and they then were registered here. Mr. Platt examined his witnesses for that purpose. This case was tried—there have been plenty of cases before the committee which were not tried. But this case was tried, and on cross-examination the witness swore these men who were registered had resided there three months, and therefore they put them on the register. So, sir, this question of registration is not in the case. My friends must consider I am treating them respectfully when I say to them—not offensively—that as a legal question there is nothing of it, nothing whatever.

But, sir, there is one question more and only one. Mr. Goode charges in his answer to the notice of contest that illegal votes—and I am particularly desirous now to reach the ears of gentlemen on this subject—Mr. Goode charges in his answer to notice of contest that there were sporadic, illegal votes cast in that district, that those illegal votes were cast for Platt and should be deducted from him. Remember the charge with the view to see how near the proof comes to the charge. When he comes to his proof he proves what? Goode proves that there were 90 illegal votes cast in the district; that is, there were 90 persons voted in the district that did not properly reside where their votes were cast. So far Mr. Goode gives proof. But where is the rest of the proof? You charge these men voted for Platt and you have not proved one word of it. You have not a hint, you have not a declaration that one of these 90 men voted for him, not one. And yet it is asked that these votes be all deducted from Platt.

Why, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] gravely told this House that Mr. Goode could not tell who they voted for, but that Mr. Platt could. I see my friend from Ohio [Mr. POPPLETON] over here, a gentleman for whom I have the very highest regard, and I want him to tell this House, if he can, how it happens that Mr. Goode, who proved a vote was cast illegally, could not as well prove who it was cast for as Mr. Platt?

Mr. POPPLETON. Does the gentleman want me to answer in his time?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. No, I want it afterward. I know what the gentleman from Kentucky said. He said that Mr. Goode was using up all of his forty days, and it was the duty of Mr Platt to supplement anything that he did not prove against him by proving it himself. My friend from Ohio will bear me out that I have stated that proposition exactly as the gentleman from Kentucky did, that because Mr. Goode in his forty days could not prove it, it became the duty of Mr. Platt to prove it. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the gentleman allow me one moment?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Certainly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I did not put it in that way.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. That is the way in which I understood it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I stated that these fraudulent votes did not appear and were not known either to the contestant or the contestee until they were developed in the taking of the proof of the contestee after Mr. Platt's forty days had expired and toward the conclusion of Mr. Goode's forty days. It was during the contestee's proof that either party to the contest became aware of the fact that they were on the poll-books. That was it.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I must make confession, and confession is good for the soul. I acknowledge that my intellect is of so low a grade that I cannot see the difference of the statements between the gentlemen from Kentucky and my own. Mr. Goode had not the opportunity to prove it. Mr. Goode could not prove it, and therefore Mr. Platt must prove it or take the consequence! That presumption must be taken instead of proof, to wit, Mr. Goode charged that illegal votes were cast and they were cast for Platt. He proves illegal votes were cast, but does not prove they were cast for Mr. Platt, and, therefore, Platt ought to prove how it is. Where are the lawyers in this House? I will not say lawyers, where are the common-sense men, the men out of swaddling-clothes, in this House? He charges that illegal votes were cast for Platt. The proof is that illegal votes were cast. The party that makes an assertion, the party that depends upon an allegation, must prove it or fail.

But I shall not discuss that any more. It is a proposition that to be scouted needs but to be stated. There cannot be any such thing; and whatever votes gentlemen may cast, many gentlemen, a hundred gentlemen or more, may vote against my views on this case, but they will not so vote on that proposition. Of that I am entirely satisfied.

But, further, the majority of the committee adopted the rule of deducting out of the 90 voters from each candidate the proportion of the 90 which 90 bore to the relative votes of the candidates. So did the republicans; so did the democrats that constituted the majority.

And I am now further under the necessity of referring to the action of the committee. I refer in this instance to the action of our committee in a case that came before the House, and it is printed in the report. It was our first case, Mr. Speaker, the case of Finley vs. Walls. The committee unanimously after consultation agreed that, where there were illegal votes and we had no proof for whom the illegal votes were cast, they should be deducted from the votes of the respective parties in the precinct in proportion to the number of votes which each man had. And, sir, that is the law. We acted according to law. So that we stand here in regard to the question as to what shall be done with the illegal votes backed up with the action of this House and with the precedents of the country; and there is no precedent to the contrary in any honest House that was ever organized, democratic or republican, here or elsewhere. I ask the Clerk to read the two hundred and ninety-eighth section of McCrary's Law of Elections.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 298. If an illegal voter, when called as a witness, swears that he does not know for whom he voted, and it is impossible to determine from any evidence in the case for whom he voted, his vote is not to be taken from the majority. But it does not follow that such illegal votes must necessarily be counted in making up the true result, because it cannot be ascertained for whom they were cast. In purging the polls of illegal votes, the general rule is, that unless it be shown for which candidate they were cast, they are to be deducted from the whole vote of the election division, and not from the candidate having the largest number. (Shepherd vs. Gibbons, 2 Brewster, 128; McDaniel's Case, 3 Penn., L. F., 310; Cushing's Election Cases, 583.) Of course, in the application of this rule such illegal votes would be deducted proportionately from both candidates, according to the entire vote returned for each. Thus we will suppose that John Doe and Richard Roe are competing candidates for an office and that the official canvass shows:

	Votes.
For John Doe	625
For Richard Roe	575
Total vote	1,200
Majority for Doe	50

But there is proof that 120 illegal votes were cast and no proof as to the person for whom they were cast. The illegal vote is 10 per cent. of the returned vote, and hence each candidate loses 10 per cent. of the vote certified to him. By this rule John Doe will lose 62½ votes and Richard Roe 57½ votes; and the result as thus reached is as follows:

Doe's certified vote	625
Deduct illegal votes	62½
Total vote	562½
Roe's certified vote	575
Deduct illegal votes	57½
Total vote	517½
Majority for Doe	45

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Therefore we have, as I said, the action of our committee, we have the action of this House in the Walls case, and we have the law of the land. And there is but one thing more that could be in our favor—and I have no doubt we will have that—and that is the judgment of heaven, because the action of this House, I have no doubt, will accord with it.

Now there is but a single question more. It is not proposed exactly to divide this vote on the color line, because the illegal voters out of the 90 were about 13 whites and the rest were colored. It is not quite proposed, as I understand it, to adopt the color line in regard to these votes. The gentleman from Kentucky advances toward it in his argument, but does not exactly propose it. Now I have got to look the facts in the face and to argue this case according to my conscience. Can we divide the vote upon the color line?

Why, sir, the gentleman from Kentucky tells us that there was a colored man running there by the name of Norton; and he tells us—I am giving his words—that "it is a great deal more probable that these colored men voted for the man of their own color than that they voted for the stranger who had been there for but a short time." And yet he asks this House, after making that statement, to infer that the colored vote was not for Norton, but was for Platt, and to take the whole illegal vote from Platt upon that inference. Now this House is not going to do that. We discarded the color line yesterday. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR] kicked the color line out of this House; and I hope it is not going to be brought back to-day. For although it may be very easy to say we utterly discard the color line and yet act on it, still I am satisfied we shall not act on it here. The majority of this House will not act on it. The majority of the House cannot afford to do so. The majority of the House have to keep faith with their own consciences; and as respectable gentlemen, as honorable gentlemen, they have to keep faith with their constituents. And I conceive they are as anxious, the great body of them, to do what is right as the gentlemen on this side are. These gentlemen of the minority of the committee were not willing to blacken their own souls by adopting the color line in their report, and they will not seriously ask this House to do it. The minority of this committee consists of a good many very honorable and honest men; men as tender and delicate in their sensibilities as to what is right as anybody in the world. Therefore they will not urge a proposition so preposterous and so monstrous.

Now, I am thankful to the House for having given me so much attention. I believe I have done my duty. I may have done it well; I may have done it ill. But I have said all I suppose I ought to say in justice to my position. I never saw Mr. Platt until I came here. I never saw Mr. Goode until I came here.

I know nothing in favor of the one more than the other except that the one happens to agree with me in politics and the other does not, and most of the House will think that Mr. Goode has the best of it in that respect. It will do the republicans no good to seat Mr. Platt; it will do the democrats no good to seat Mr. Goode. They have a majority large enough for all reasonable purposes and our minority is small enough. There is no question concerned except that we shall do our duty in view of the facts of the case.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GOODE obtained the floor.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I have nothing more that I particularly wish to say, but I should like to yield for a moment to the gentleman from Kansas, [Mr. BROWN.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That could only be done by unanimous consent.

PAY OF A SHORT-HAND REPORTER.

Mr. GOODE. I yield for a moment to the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. GLOVER.]

Mr. GLOVER. I hold in my hand the account of the short-hand reporter who took down the case of Hallet Kilbourn before the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and I am requested by the Committee on the Real Estate Pool to lay it before the House and ask its reference to the Committee of Accounts. It is the report of the proceedings in the matter of the application of Hallet Kilbourn for habeas corpus before Chief Justice David K. Cartter, of the District supreme court, for the settlement of an account.

Mr. REAGAN. What have we to do with the report of a trial in one of the courts of this District?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that the report is to be referred in connection with an account of the short-hand reporter employed by the committee, and that they propose a settlement of that account.

There being no objection, the report, with the accompanying account, was referred to the Committee of Accounts.

Mr. GOODE resumed the floor.

WASHINGTON MONUMENT.

Mr. FOSTER. I would ask the gentleman to give way to allow me to report from the Committee on Appropriations the Senate bill for the completion of the Washington Monument.

Mr. BLAND. I object; I want the morning hour.

Mr. FOSTER. This is a bill for the completion of the Washington Monument, and it is important that it should be passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is it for reference only?

Mr. FOSTER. No, sir; for action.

Mr. BLAND. I object, and I give notice that I shall object to everything until we shall get the morning hour.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE OF PLATT VS. GOODE.

The House resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee of Elections on the election contest from the second congressional district of Virginia.—Platt vs. Goode.

Mr. GOODE. Mr. Speaker, I do not feel that any apology is necessary for my appearance in this debate. I do not stand here as a champion of my individual pretensions to a seat upon this floor, but claiming as I do to be the legally elected representative of the people in the second congressional district of Virginia, I feel that it is not only my right but my representative duty to be heard briefly in their name and on their behalf.

It is a well-settled principle in the trial of all contested-election cases that the burden of proof is thrown upon the contestant. As the sitting member in this case I hold the certificate of election under the broad seal of the Commonwealth of Virginia, and it is incumbent upon my competitor to prove to the satisfaction of this House that I am not entitled to hold it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I claim to hold that certificate properly. It has been awarded to me in strict accordance with the laws of Virginia and by the unanimous decision of the board of State canvassers, consisting of James L. Kemper, her governor: Robert M. T. Hunter, her treasurer; Raleigh T. Daniels, her attorney-general; James McDonald, her secretary of state; William F. Taylor, her auditor of public accounts. Four gentlemen who have signed the report of the Committee of Elections have thought proper to characterize that action as an outrage by these high officials, committed in total disregard of the rights of the electors. I desire, sir, to argue this case calmly and dispassionately; but I take leave to say, I feel bound to say under a full sense of the responsibility which rests upon me as a man and as a citizen, that the report signed by the four gentlemen in this particular is an unwarranted attack upon four eminent citizens of my State, distinguished alike for their public service and for their private virtues.

Now, sir, there are many points presented in the notice of contest, in the answer, in the proof, which I do not deem it necessary to refer to in this discussion. They have been eliminated by the committee. I shall confine my discussion to the matters in dispute between the members of this committee. If I can get the attention of the House I pledge myself to demonstrate to every fair-minded man who will hear me that the report signed by five members of the committee should be adopted. There are two reports here, one signed by six and the other signed by five members of the committee. Four of the gentlemen who signed the majority report claim that Mr. Platt was elected by 487 majority; two of them claim that he was elected by a majority of 24. The five gentlemen who signed what is called the minority report find that the sitting member was elected by a majority of 349.

Now, sir, the entire vote of the district as ascertained by the State board of canvassers was for the sitting member 13,521 and for the contestant 13,390, making for the sitting member a majority of 131 votes. It is claimed by the majority report of the committee, and in that the minority concur and I concur and everybody concurs, that to the votes so declared by the State board of canvassers the vote of Prince George County, including the townships of Rives and Bland, should be added, giving 987 votes for Mr. Platt and 562 votes for me. They claim that 206 votes should be added in the county of Nansemond and 12 additional votes in the city of Norfolk. Now let us concede for the purpose of this argument that the vote of Prince George County, 987 for the gentleman and 562 for myself, making a majority for him of 425, shall be counted. I say concede that notwithstanding the law of my State provides that the commissioners of election shall certify the result to be true, and notwithstanding it requires that they shall determine the result in writing and certify their determination to be correct, and that this determination shall be attested by the clerk under his official seal; notwithstanding the law provides distinctly that on the fourth Monday after the election the board of State canvassers shall meet at the capitol and open the certified returns and proceed to examine the votes and ascertain the result, we find that this certificate lacked these requirements. It was not certified by the commissioners; it was not attested by the clerk; it lacked the official seal of the clerk; it was not authenticated as the law requires; it was entitled to no more consideration and possessed no more validity as a legal paper than any private memorandum which might have been sent up by any respectable private gentleman from the county; but I say count the votes, concede the count of Prince George County and so as to Nansemond.

The law says the voting shall be by ballot; that every voter shall vote upon a single ballot. There was another law submitting certain constitutional amendments to the vote of the people, which required that the vote should be by ballot. The testimony shows that 193 of the votes cast in this county for Mr. Platt had upon them a vote against the amendments to the constitution and that 13 of them were inclosed in other ballots. Now, we have a peremptory and mandatory provision of our statute laws which says that whenever ballots are found, upon the canvass made by the judges, within other ballots inclosed in them they shall be rejected and destroyed; but I say count the 206 additional votes in Nansemond and count the 12 additional votes in the city of Norfolk, notwithstanding they were not found in the boxes provided by law, notwithstanding they were found in another box, and are no more entitled to be counted than if they were found upon a table or lying upon the floor or lying anywhere loose around—count all these, and then you have 425 additional votes in Prince George County, 206 additional votes in Nansemond County, and 12 additional votes in the city of Norfolk, making a majority to the contestant, conceding all that he claims and all that the committee claim for him, of 512. How then stands the case? I beg members to look at this record. I want every gentleman on this floor without regard to politics to understand this case.

Sir, the testimony in this record proves that in the congressional canvass of 1874 the navy-yard at Norfolk was practically surrendered to my competitor for his election purposes in the campaign; it proves that a large number of employés were taken on just before the election: it proves that many more were employed than was necessary to do the work required; it proves that many worthless and incompetent men were employed; it proves that the Government was subjected to an unnecessary expenditure, which is corroborated by the report of Secretary Robeson in answer to an inquiry which I submitted here in the first week of the session in regard to the cost of a steamer built there. The testimony shows that these men so employed were subjected to heavy pecuniary assessments; that they paid them unwillingly; that they paid them, as they say, to save the bread and meat for themselves, their wives, and their children. Every foreman was assessed $20; every assistant foreman $10; every first-class machinist $3.26; every second-class machinist $1.26; and every poor little water-boy, whose mother perhaps was dependent upon him, was required to pay $1.02; they would not even relieve him of the two cents.

The testimony shows that these men were regularly drilled and instructed the night before the election as to the manner in which they should vote the next day; how they should receive their ballots; how they should advance to the ballot-box; how they should hold the ballots, and how they should deposit them. It shows that they could not get a ticket until they were put in line. It shows that they were told beforehand from whom to get their tickets. They were put into line and marched up to the polls and made to vote under duress, intimidation, and constraint. It shows that they were required to hold up their hands; that they got their tickets from a man within six feet of the ballot-box; that right at the ballot-box was another official of the navy-yard under whom they worked, and that from the time the ballot was put in the hand of the voter until he deposited it in the ballot-box he was under the eye of a navy-yard official. He got his ticket under the eye of a navy-yard official and he deposited it in the ballot-box under the eye of another navy-yard official, who had a pencil and book in his hand to record each voter. And in addition to that, while they advanced toward the ballot-box they were told that they must keep their hands from their pockets, and when they asked why they were required to do so, they were told that, "We have reason to fear that some of you intend to vote for Mr. Goode."

Mr. LUTTRELL. The same thing occurred in my district at the Mare Island navy-yard.

Mr. GOODE. The gentleman from California says it is the same in his district. And, by the by, the committee tell us that this is all very true; this is very wrong; it was a high crime and misdemeanor that the Government patronage was thus abused. But they tell us, and the report has gone down to posterity signed by four members of the Committee of Elections, that the patronage at this navy-yard was used just as much and no more than the patronage of all such institutions generally is:

> Altogether, the evidence shows that the navy-yard was run just as much in the interest of the party in power and no more than all such institutions usually are.

"Such institutions;" your institutions: the navy-yard at Mare Island, California, the Boston navy-yard, the Kittery navy-yard, the Brooklyn navy-yard, the Philadelphia navy-yard; "no more than all such institutions usually are." Why, sir, they have got the idea that this property there belongs to the party, just as they suppose the custom-house at Norfolk belongs to the party. I have here a photograph, which was put in my hand this morning by a friend, showing that to-day the custom-house at Norfolk has nailed upon its gable end a banner upon which are inscribed the names of the republican nominees for the Presidency and Vice-presidency, Hayes and Wheeler. The banner is nailed to the gable end of that custom-house, the property of the people, built for and paid by taxes drawn from the people of this country. They had no more right to nail it there than they had to nail it on the Treasury or on the Dome of this Capitol. But it only illustrates what I have said, that the impression prevails at Norfolk that the navy-yard belongs to the party.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. And all the employés there who are voters.

Mr. GOODE. Yes, and all the employés who are voters. The testimony in the case proves that the impression there universally prevails that Mr. Platt was the grand mogul that controlled this whole thing, that he was the ring-master of that navy-yard. Everybody understood it; he knows it. I want the House now to hear for one moment the testimony of an old man fifty-eight years of age on that subject. It is the testimony of Winfield Scott Tymes. I wish I had time to read more of it, but I have not time now.

> Question. Please state whether at any time previous to the last congressional election in this district, or since that time, you have made application to any official in the navy-yard for employment there; if so, when and to whom was the application made, and state all that occurred.
>
> Answer. About last August I went and asked the commodore, Stevens, for the watchman's situation in the navy-yard; his reply was to go to some of the politicians. I told him I came to headquarters; he observed to me that he couldn't, and he would not interfere with the committee.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> Q. Did you ever have any conversation with the Hon. James H. Platt, jr., about procuring employment in the navy-yard? If so, state when and where it was, and where it occurred, and all that occurred.—A. A few days after the election I went over to Norfolk and saw Mr. Platt at the custom-house; I asked him for the watchman's situation in the custom-house; he asked me who I voted for; I told him John Goode; he told me that was what they were trying to do; my remark was, what? he said to find out those that voted against me; I asked him what would be the result; his reply to me, that those who voted against me (Platt) should not work in that yard, and that was all.

That was the universal impression among the men employed in that yard, that they owed their employment to Mr. Platt and his committee-men; and on the day of election they marched up to the polls and voted accordingly. Now I say, give Mr. Platt Nansemond County; give him Prince George County; give him Norfolk City, and deduct from him this navy-yard vote carried by intimidation and by wrong. The testimony of his own witness, George E. Crismond, testifies that Mr. Platt could not have received less than 567 votes of white men employed in the navy-yard in the city of Portsmouth alone. That is the testimony of George E Crismond, a member of the republican executive committee, and called upon to testify by Mr. Platt himself. Taking the testimony as correct, then you have 567 navy-yard votes to put against his majority of 512.

Two members who signed the majority report and the five members who signed the minority report, seven in all, throw out the entire vote of the third and fourth wards in Portsmouth, and Hall's Corner precinct in Norfolk County, thereby depriving me of my vote as well as Mr. Platt of his, when it is not pretended that any man voted for me by intimidation. But throw out that entire vote, and it will leave the majority for Mr. Platt in the district but 59. I beg gentlemen to pay attention to this, because here is the only point of difference between the two members of the majority and the five members of the minority. I repeat, throw out the third and fourth wards in Portsmouth, throw out the Hall's Corner precinct in Norfolk County, although you thereby deprive me of every honest vote I got in those places, and charge me with wrong as much as the man who has had the benefit of it, and who has wielded the power of this great Government shop for his own purpose. But discard these votes as tainted with intimidation and wrong; and what is the evidence?

Thomas S. Morgan (page 428) proves that at Sussex Court House Township there were 13 illegally-registered votes; 7 white and 6 colored.

V. N. Baugh proves that at Stony Creek precinct, in Sussex County, there were 17 illegal votes; 15 colored and 2 white. (Page 432.)

Parke Jones (page 425) proves that at Jamestown Township, in James City County, there were 16 illegal votes; 15 colored and 1 white.

R. W. W. Taylor (page 387) proves that at Nelson Township, in York County, there were 15 illegal votes; 13 colored and 2 white.

J. W. Johnston (page 372) proves that at Benton Township, in York County, there were several illegal votes. L. U. Evans proves 2 or more; color not given.

James H. Elensworth (page 412) proves that at Guilford Township, Surry County, there were 20 illegal votes, principally colored; 18 colored, 2 white.

F. W. Simmons (page 396) proves that at Rives Township, Prince George County, there were several illegal votes. Specifies one particularly, colored.

William Taylor (page 397) proves 1 illegal vote, colored, at Bland Township, Prince George County. Ro. G. Batte proves 2 colored at same place in addition.

James R. Young (page 401) proves 2 illegal votes, colored, at Templeton and Rives Townships, in Prince George County.

W. E. Belscher (page 402) proves 1 illegal vote, colored, at Blackwater Township, in Prince George County.

W. D. Temple (page 402) proves 1 illegal vote, colored, at Sherman's Cross Roads, Prince George County.

Mann Page (page 409) proves 1 illegal vote, colored, at Brandon Township, Prince George County.

A. W. Eley and E. B. Beitt prove 1 illegal vote, colored, at Suffolk, Nansemond County. W. I. Kilby proves another colored vote at same precinct.

At all the places named there were 78 colored votes and 14 white votes which were illegal.

I have given chapter and verse from the whole record, showing that there was an illegal vote of 92, 78 of which were given by colored men and 14 by white men. I ask the House in all fairness what ought to be done with them? The burden of proof is upon my competitor; he has the affirmative proposition. These illegal votes are shown by the record, and it is incumbent upon him to prove that they were not given for him or that they were given for me.

I want now to call the attention of the House to an authority that was read by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. TOWNSEND.] He has read but a portion of that authority. What else does Mr. McCrary say? He says, with regard to the rule contended for by the gentleman from New York:

> But it is manifest that it may sometimes work a great hardship, inasmuch as the truth might be, if it could be shown, that all the illegal votes were on one side, while it is scarcely to be presumed that they would ever be divided between the candidates in exact proportion to their whole vote. But the rule which in the absence of proof as to how illegal votes were cast would deduct them all from the majority candidate is much more unreasonable and dangerous. Of the two evils the least should be chosen. We see here, however, how important it is that it should, if possible, be made to appear either by direct or circumstantial evidence for whom each illegal vote was cast.

I read further from section 300:

> It would seem, therefore, that in a case where the number of bad votes proven is sufficient to affect the result, and in the absence of any evidence to enable the court to determine for whom they were cast, the court must decide upon one of the three following alternatives, namely:
>
> 1. Declare the election void.
> 2. Divide the illegal votes between the candidates in proportion to the whole vote of each.
> 3. Deduct the illegal vote from the candidate having the highest vote.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> If in any given case it be shown that the proof was within the reach of the party whose duty it was to produce it, and that he neglected to produce it, then he may well be held answerable for his own neglect; and because it was his duty to show for whom the illegal votes were cast, and because he might by the use of reasonable diligence have made this showing, it may properly be said that he should himself suffer the loss occasioned by deducting them from his own vote.

This is the principle involved in the case of Duffey, (4 Brewster, 531,) where the court laid down the following rules:

> It is the right of petitioners contesting an election, and also the right of the respondent, to examine the election papers on file in the proper office, and if it be apparent from them that persons have voted in any district whose names were not on the "registry-list" without being vouched according to law, then prima facie all such votes are illegal.
>
> When a contest has been inaugurated and complaint been made and notice given that such votes have been received, the burden of proof falls upon the candidate advantaged by the general count in such district to show either that the persons so voting possessed severally every qualification, or, if this be not so, that they voted for his opponent; he must lift the curse which the law imposes upon such ballots; otherwise it will be presumed that they were polled and counted for him; and thereupon the poll will be purged by striking the whole number of such votes from his count.

Now, two gentlemen of the committee have undertaken to divide those votes between my competitor and myself, to guess that Mr. Platt got so many and that I got so many. Now I demand to know by what authority this House can seat a person as a member on this floor by the process of guessing. You are here under the Constitution to judge of the "elections, returns, and qualifications of members." You have no right to guess; you have no right to say, where 100 illegal votes are proved, "We guess that Mr. Platt got so many and that the sitting member got so many." There is no warrant in the Constitution for such a proceeding; there is no such power lodged in any member of this House. You must adopt some rule. And, by the by, the gentleman is mistaken in saying that the committee in the rule they have adopted are following the case of Finley vs. Walls. In that case the committee were divided; the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BLACKBURN,] the gentleman from New York, [Mr. BEEBE,] the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. POPPLETON,] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE BOLT] joined in appending to the report of the committee in that case a foot-note in which they protest against any such exercise of power by this House as undertaking, where a given number of illegal votes has been proved, to say, "We guess that Mr. Finley got so many and Mr. Walls so many."

But in that case there was no evidence to show what the color of the voters was. The gentleman says it will not do to draw the color line. It is not fair to sacrifice me upon a technicality; it is not fair to sacrifice me upon a sentiment; and I propose to prove from this record that Mr. Platt, and not myself, got every solitary vote of those 78 colored votes. This very author says that you must prove, if you can, either by direct or by circumstantial testimony, for whom the votes were cast. I will prove it by this record. I will prove to the satisfaction of any fair-minded jury that out of the 92 illegal votes cast my competitor received the 78 colored votes and I received the 14 white votes. But if you do not charge them all to him and divide them upon the color line, I am still elected after discarding every solitary vote that I received in the navy-yard at the same time that you discard my competitor's votes there.

Now, did not Mr. Platt get those colored votes? It is a historical fact that the colored people in that locality voted for the republican nominee. I should be willing to put the gentleman on his voir dire, and let him stand before this House and the country with his hand upon his heart and say whether he does not believe that of those 78 illegal colored votes he received all and I did not receive any. Why, sir, Mr. George E. Crismond says, on page 143, that as a general thing the colored people voted for my competitor. The deposition of Thomas Cloyd shows that every appliance was brought to bear upon the colored people to make them vote for my competitor. They were told that if I should be elected they would be remanded to slavery; that their children would be bound out until twenty-one years of age. They were influenced by intimidation. The testimony of A. W. Eley and E. B. Britt, of Nansemond County, proves that a man named Moses Reed was seized bodily, taken ri et armis by four colored men, and that with one in front, one behind, and one on either side he was marched up and made to deposit his ballot for Mr. Platt; and he was heard to say then and there that he desired to vote for me but dare not do it because he knew that if he did so his life would be imperiled, that the leading republican committeemen and politicians in the county of Nansemond had threatened his life if he did not vote for my competitor.

Again, I refer to the testimony of Mr. Mann Page, of Prince George County, who shows what appliances were brought to bear to influence these colored voters. On page 410 he says:

> About a week or two weeks, I don't recollect which, before the election, John Smith, the colored preacher, living, I believe, in Hampton or thereabouts, paid a special visit, not being his regular Sunday appointment which he has at the Brandon chapel, and held his special services. I understand from colored attendants, the truth of which I do not know personally, he preached from the text, "Sinners, look upon your minister and obey his commandments!" And in that sermon he told them it was their duty to vote for Mr. Platt or leave the church.

"Vote for Mr. Platt or leave the church!" Does any man doubt after such a message as that, coming from such an oracle to such a congregation, how they voted? I cannot follow the testimony through. Here is the evidence of Cloyd, Eley, Britt, Page, and numberless others showing that the colored vote in that district was carried by the appliances and influences to which I have adverted, and that as a general thing it was cast for my competitor and not for myself.

I want the House to make this calculation: Charge me with the loss of every vote at the third and fourth wards in Portsmouth and at Hall's Corner precinct, Norfolk County, and you elect Mr. Platt by 59 majority.

Here are 92 illegal votes. Deduct 59 from 92, and I am elected by a majority of 33. I say that ought to be the rule, because the burden of proof is upon him. He holds the affirmative. He had the opportunity within the ten days left him after my proof had been taken to establish how these men had voted. He failed to do it. He did not exercise the reasonable diligence which the law required of him. I say the burden of proof is thrown upon him to sustain that view, because of this moral, equitable consideration which must come home to the minds, hearts, and consciences of every man who hears me that in the face of this record no man can doubt these 78 illegal colored votes were cast for him and not for myself.

Talk about guessing how men voted in the face of a record such as that, when his own testimony shows this colored vote was carried for him. Why, the committee recognized that. Look at their report. They have denounced the candidacy of Robert Norton as a conspiracy—against whom? Against Mr. Platt. A conspiracy, why? Because they say it was intended to divide the negro vote. To divide the negro vote! And yet the gentleman from New York, [Mr. TOWNSEND,] after signing that report, comes here and lifts his hands in holy horror at the bare idea of making a division by the color line when he himself has recognized the fact in this very report that his candidate relied upon the colored vote, and the colored vote throughout the district was cast for him.

Now, my own view is that we ought not to guess at all. I believe it can be demonstrated before any judge in this land that wherever a poll is tainted with illegality, instead of guess-work you ought to reject the entire poll. That is so upon reason it is so upon principle, it is so upon authority; and such has been the action of this House.

I can refer the House to numberless cases on that subject. McCrary is the pet author here, it seems, on elections. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MCCRARY] is recognized as the pet authority. What does he say?

He says:

It necessarily follows that the election held in violation of the registration laws of the State would be null and void unless it can be shown for whom the persons illegally registered voted.

For what?

So that the poll may be purged.

Unless it can be shown for whom they voted so that the poll may be purged. That is to be found in the American Law of Elections, page 12.

The fourth section of chapter 7 of the code of 1873 provides—

That each registrar shall register all male citizens of his election district who shall apply to be registered, and who shall be of the age of twenty-one years at the first election to be held after the registration, and who are citizens of the United States, and shall have resided in the State twelve months, and in the county, city, or town in which they propose to register three months next preceding any election at which they may offer to vote.

The ninth section provides that—

Ten days previous to the November elections the registrar shall sit one day for the purpose of amending and correcting the list, at which time any qualified voter applying and not previously registered may be added.

The first section of chapter 7 of the code of 1873 provides that—

Every male citizen of the United States twenty-one years old, who shall have been a resident of this State for twelve months and of the county, city, or town in which he shall offer to vote three months next preceding any election, and who is a registered voter in and a resident of the election district in which he offers to vote, shall be entitled to vote.

The fourth section of the third article of the constitution provides that—

The General Assembly shall at its first session under this constitution enact a general registration law.

The law of Virginia requiring persons to register in order to entitle them to vote is mandatory. The power of the State to require registration as a prerequisite to voting will not, we presume, be questioned. Among the absolute, unqualified rights of the States is that of regulating the elective franchise. In Capen vs. Foster, Brightly's Leading Cases, 51, the supreme court of Massachusetts held that—

A statute requiring that previous to an election the qualifications of voters shall be proved, and their names placed in a register, is not to be regarded as prescribing a qualification in addition to those which by the constitution entitle a citizen to vote, but only as a reasonable regulation of the mode of exercising the right of suffrage, which it is competent for the Legislature to make.

It necessarily follows that an election held in violation of the registration laws of the State will be null and void unless it can be shown for whom the persons illegally registered voted so that the poll may be purged. (American Law of Elections, page 12; Ensworth vs. Albin et al., 44 Missouri, page 347.)

Matters of substance in the holding of an election, it would seem, may be resolved into such as affect the time and place of election, the due qualification of the officers by whom it is holden, and those affecting the legal qualifications of the electors. (Brightly's Leading Cases, page 448.)

In Howard vs. Cooper, Contested Election Cases, page 275, it was held that—

Gross irregularities and palpable violations of law in conducting an election in a ward should cause the exclusion of the entire poll.

In Myers vs. Moffitt, Contested Election Cases, page 564, the House of Representatives decided that—

Where the poll was so tainted with frauds and irregularities that the result could not be clearly ascertained, the poll was thrown out. Where the State law required the inspectors to ascertain certain facts of voters and they neglected their duty, thus allowing a large number of unqualified persons to vote, the poll shall be excluded.

In Reid vs. Julian, Contested Election Cases, page 822, it was held that an entire poll may be rejected for such frauds and irregularities as render the result uncertain. All the mandatory provisions of the law must be observed, or the election cannot and should not be sustained. In that case the committee, in making their report, say:

We are aware of the fact that it is often argued in defense of irregularities, bad faith, and even fraud in conducting elections, that it is hard to disfranchise the honest voter by reason of the mistakes or misconduct of election officers. This view has been so completely answered by the judges in the opinions already cited that little more need be said on this point. It might be well, however, to add that no legal voter is disfranchised by throwing out a fraudulent poll. The only effect of such action by the proper tribunal is to destroy the prima facie character of the return and to deny the official acts of such officers the legal presumption of correctness usually accorded to the conduct of faithful agents. The way is always open to every candidate upon the trial of any contested-election case to come forward and prove the vote which he received at any and every assailed precinct.

In Borleau's case, 2 Parsons, page 503, the court say that—

In a case in which it is shown that in making the preparatory arrangements for holding an election a reckless disregard of, or a criminal carelessness as to, the directions of the law has been manifested, we should hold such an election undue and illegal.

And again, in the same case, the court say:

This court would not hesitate in setting aside an election where they are convinced that in conducting it the laws of the Commonwealth have been infracted.

In view of the foregoing principles and authorities, we insist that the entire vote cast at the Court House and Stony Creek precincts in Sussex County, at Bruton Township precinct in York County, at Jamestown Township precinct in James City County, and at Guilford Township precinct in Surry County should be rejected as illegal and not counted, for the reason that a large number of persons were allowed to vote at said precincts who had been illegally and improperly registered on the day of election and within ten days immediately preceding the election.

It being impossible to ascertain from the returns for whom the said persons voted, the whole poll at the said precincts is tainted with illegality, the true state of the same cannot be known, and uncertainty is thus cast upon the result. In adopting this view, no injustice will be done the contestant. The intention of the contestee to assail the precincts in question was clearly made known and notice thereof given to his adversary. He has been represented throughout by able and skillful counsel. They knew the importance and necessity of sustaining the polls thus assailed, and that it was entirely competent for them to prove by other testimony the actual vote received by the contestant at said precincts.

I lay down this proposition, and I challenge contradiction, that wherever a poll bears upon its face the taint of illegality, where you prove it has a certain number of illegal votes and there is nothing to show for whom they voted and uncertainty is thus cast upon the result, the only alternative, properly and legally, is to reject the entire poll or to prove aliunde or from other sources how the men voted. That is legal and it is sensible, and if you depart from it you set out upon a broad sea of conjecture.

McCrary says if you can determine by any testimony, direct or circumstantial, how the vote was cast, it must be taken. The circumstantial testimony in this record proves these illegal votes were cast for my competitor and not for myself. If that be true, then deducting those 92 illegal votes, on that principle my majority is 33. If the entire poll is excluded at those precincts, after giving him Prince George, Nansemond, and Norfolk City, and everything he claims, then my majority is 112.

I have been amused at the course of the discussion here both on yesterday and to-day. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BROWN] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. TOWNSEND] are trying to make it appear to this House that all our hope is upon Rives and Bland. Sir, I discard Rives and Bland. I have from the beginning of the discussion until now conceded to the gentleman every solitary vote he got in Prince George, counting Rives and Bland with the rest.

I do not rest my case upon the rejection of Rives and Bland. I wish the gentleman from New York to hear me and I wish the gentleman from Kansas to understand I do not intend my ground of fight in this matter shall be selected by them. I choose to select my own ground, and I do not intend they shall select their position as well as my own. I do not rely upon the exclusion of Rives and Bland. I repeat, I want every man in this House to understand I want to give him Prince George, I want to give him Nansemond, I want to give him the 12 votes claimed in Norfolk City, making his majority 512. Then, I say, if you deduct these votes in the Norfolk navy-yard in his favor, carried by intimidation and fraud according to the decision of seven members of this committee, the vote will stand so as to give me a majority of 55. If you do not choose to do that, and you charge me with my portion of those illegal navy-yard votes, and instead of deducting the 567 which the proof shows were cast for him in Portsmouth, you reject the entire poll at the third and fourth wards in Portsmouth and at Hall's Corner, in Norfolk County, what will be the result? His majority in the district will be 59, without taking into consideration the 92 illegal votes which have been shown at the other precincts. Deduct these 92 illegal votes from his poll for the reasons which have been urged, and my majority in the district will be 33. Divide them upon the color line by charging him with the colored vote and me with the white vote, and my majority in the district will be reduced to 5. No man who examines this record, it seems to me, can entertain a rational doubt that Mr. Platt is properly chargeable with those 78 illegal colored votes.

What did he do in Yorktown? Did he not organize an expedition at Yorktown and attempt to drive Robert Norton as a candidate from the field? Norton was a colored man, a respectable colored man. He had the temerity to be a candidate for the votes of his own race. He was nominated by a mass-meeting on the historic plains of Yorktown on the 4th of July, 1874. Mr. Platt was nominated on the 13th of July, and I was nominated on the 1st day of September. This record proves that on the 30th of October, my competitor, Mr. Platt, organized an expedition to Yorktown for the avowed purpose of driving Robert Norton as a candidate from the field; that he went in a Government vessel, armed and manned by a Government crew; that he carried with him a cannon manufactured in the navy-yard by Government employés; that he went with cannon and ammunition; that he went with pistols and bowie-knives and bludgeons; that between four hundred and five hundred employés of the navy-yard attended him on that expedition; that when they got to Yorktown and landed, Mr. Platt marched at the head of the column through the streets; that when the line of march passed by a crowd of people who had assembled to listen to Robert Norton, they jeered and shouted and undertook to break up that meeting by all sorts of menacing gestures. And again, that his followers left him, and came down to the stand where I was attempting to speak, and undertook to interrupt me, and afterward at the conclusion of my address, when Robert Norton took the stand, this was the signal for the most disgraceful riot which ever occurred in the Commonwealth of Virginia, a riot which lasted for one hour, in which pistols, bludgeons, and bowie-knives were used, and in which twenty-five or thirty colored people were so dangerously wounded that on account of their wounds and bruises some of them could not go to the polls on the following Tuesday. The proof shows that he organized that expedition and headed the column. It shows that he controlled these navy-yard employés and that they went with the avowed purpose of intimidating and overawing the followers of Robert Norton and driving him as a candidate from the field.

What becomes of Hamburgh? Where sleeps the eloquent denunciation of the gentlemen from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] and the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. HALE?] If they can pour out the vials of their wrath and indignation on those people at Hamburgh who were involved in that unfortunate disturbance, I ask you how can they bestow their smiles on the instigator and fomenter of this Yorktown riot? Pour out your vials of wrath upon South Carolina, take to your embrace my competitor, to your fond embrace, and gather around him and join in the chorus on that side of the House—

> Come rest on this bosom, my own stricken deer;
> Tho' the herd hath fled from thee, thy home is still here.

[Laughter and applause.]

So much for the Yorktown riot and so much for the negro vote and the appliances which were brought to bear in that district. But my time is passing away.

I would like to occupy a day upon this question. I wish every man on this floor could understand the case as I do. If this record could be read at the Clerk's desk, every line and every syllable in this testimony, I would be willing to submit the case to the House, democrats and republicans, without argument, so confident am I in the justice of the case which I am here to represent.

Now, I repeat, give Mr. Platt Prince George, give him Nansemond, give him the 12 additional votes in the city of Norfolk, give him everything, and then take from him the votes which according to seven members of the committee were carried in the Norfolk navy-yard by intimidation and wrong; deduct those 567 votes; that will give me a majority of 55. Or, if you do not do that, deduct my vote in the navy-yard as well, giving him a majority of 59; and then there are 92 illegal votes to offset that, 78 of which were colored, with the moral certainty that not one man of those colored people voted for me.

I want to rest this case upon its substantial merits. I want to feel and know that I am the accredited representative of the honest freemen of my district. I would scorn, I say, to occupy this seat upon a technicality. I would not imitate the example of the contestant, who has been here before. I have tracked him. I have studied his record. I have searched it. And I find, notwithstanding that he will follow me presently and talk about technicalities—I find this record, to which I beg the attention of the House: The gentleman was a member of the Forty-first Congress. At the third session of the Forty-first Congress Hon. R. T. W. Duke, coming here from the district which contains the ashes of Thomas Jefferson, presented himself on this floor and sent to the Clerk's desk a certificate from the Commonwealth of Virginia which recited that he, Hon. R. T. W. Duke, had received the majority of the votes, and that he was elected. Now would you believe that my competitor got up here and objected to his being sworn in? That he rose in his place and objected to his being sworn in; and upon what ground? Would you believe it? Upon the ground that the certificate did not say he was "duly" elected. The certificate, signed by the law officers of the Commonwealth of Virginia, signed by the secretary under the broad seal of the Commonwealth, recited that Mr. Duke had received a majority of the legal votes cast in the district, and had been elected. And yet Mr. Platt stood up here, claiming to represent the Commonwealth of Virginia, and demanded that his colleague should be sent back because by inadvertence the technical word "duly" had been omitted.

Now, the gentleman comes here to-day and demands that this House shall shut their eyes to everything like technicalities; and to talk about Rives and Bland, when there is a positive, peremptory law upon our statute-book which says that the poll-books shall be inclosed and sealed, and that the ballots shall be sealed and carried to the clerk's office. This law was violated. But I claim nothing on that score. Give him Bland; give him Rives; give him Prince George; give him Nansemond; give him the 12 additional votes in the city of Norfolk. Give him, in Heaven's name, everything he has claimed or the committee has claimed, and then I ask this House if they agree with the majority of seven members as against four that the navy-yard vote was carried by intimidation and wrong. I ask the House to deduct from his poll 567 votes which his own witness, George E. Chrismond, a member of the republican vigilance committee of Portsmouth, says he got at the very lowest calculation. Or, if you will not do that, if you deduct my vote as well, then I say in the name of common fairness, in the name of my people, in the name of common justice do not sacrifice me. I will not say that, for I am nothing in this matter; but I say do not sacrifice them on a mere guess, by which you divide 92 illegal votes, 78 colored and 14 white, and charge them to me, when the moral certainty and absolute truth of the case is, as I believe, that not one solitary colored vote in that district of the 78 illegal votes was cast for me. And I would be willing to put the gentleman himself on his word of honor to stand up here and say whether he believes I got one of those votes or not.

Well now, Mr. Speaker, if I have been betrayed into any excitement, I must express my regret. Notwithstanding the flings made at me by the gentleman from Kansas, [Mr. BROWN,] I wish to say that I came here to-day with the deliberate purpose to argue this case calmly and dispassionately. The House will bear me witness that I have not sought to discuss the case from a partisan stand-point. I am now ready to submit it.

I submit it to the decision of this House. So far as my competitor and myself are concerned it is a matter of little moment, but it rises to a question of the highest dignity and gravest magnitude when you come to consider the important principles involved. The House of Representatives are now called upon to determine whether the navy-yards of the country shall hereafter be converted into workshops for the manufacture of political votes, whether the patronage of the Government shall be prostituted for corrupt party purposes, whether the purity and freedom of the elective franchise shall be vindicated and preserved, or whether free-born American citizens shall hereafter be required to march like sheep to the ballot-box and made to deposit their votes as these men did under intimidation, under duress, under constraint. Sir, I say under the full sense of the responsibility which rests upon me in making the utterance, I declare to you that to count or receive votes given under such circumstances is not only a gross wrong, not only a solemn mockery, but a flagrant violation of all the laws, both State and Federal, which regulate the conduct of elections. The House of Representatives, these representatives of free-born American people, are called upon to decide whether they will give their countenance and their support to a system of party tactics by which the attempt has been made in my district to array against the white man all the most violent and vindictive passions of the black man, by which discord and strife have been engendered at a time when the earnest aspirations of good men everywhere are and ought to be for the establishment of a lasting peace, not only between sections but between races.

My time has expired. I thank the House for the patience with which they have heard me, and so far as I am concerned I submit the matter for their decision.

Mr. PLATT (the contestant) obtained the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would inquire of the chairman of the Committee of Elections what is the understanding as to the continuation of the debate.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. There may be a misapprehension with regard to the time. My understanding is that the agreement between the chairman of the subcommittee who reported this case, and into whose hands it has partly passed as far as the majority is concerned, and the gentleman representing the minority, was that the debate should be limited to six hours, three hours on each side. I understand now that two hours on each side have been consumed, and one hour remains on each side. If that is the case, why the gentleman who now occupies the floor may either occupy his time now or after the previous question is seconded. He cannot have his hour now and then another hour.

Mr. POPPLETON. Perhaps I can enlighten the House a little as to the arrangement. The arrangement was that there were to be three hours on each side and two hours of the time have now been occupied on each side. Two hours of time now remain, and of the hour remaining before the calling of the previous question the majority are to have a quarter of an hour, to be assigned to whoever may be designated, and the minority three quarters of an hour, which will be occupied by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. TUCKER.] The previous question is then to be moved, and in the hour after the previous question is seconded the majority are to have three quarters of an hour and the minority a quarter of an hour.

Mr. PLATT, (the contestant.) If I am permitted by the courtesy of the House to say a word on this subject, I desire to state that I feel a deep anxiety to be allowed to respond to the remarks of the gentleman whose seat I contest on this floor. I had understood that the arrangement made between the gentlemen who presented the report of the majority of the committee and the gentlemen presenting the minority report was that each side was to have three hours for debate. An effort was made that it should be confined to two hours before, but it was insisted on the part of the minority that it should be three hours, and that the three hours' debate on each side was to come before the motion for the previous question, and that after the previous question was called, in accordance to the universal custom of the House, the gentleman moving the previous question had at his disposal one hour for further debate, and that he had agreed to yield fifteen minutes of that hour to gentlemen representing the other side of the question. I find now that the understanding seems to have been that each side was to have but three hours, including the hour after the call for the previous question. If that is the understanding, it leaves but fifteen minutes, unless I crowd out the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. THOMPSON,] one of the gentlemen who signed the majority report; and that being the case, unless the courtesy of the House shall be extended to me so that I may have an hour without crowding out that gentleman, I must decline to say anything on this subject and leave it to other gentlemen to present the case to the House. I ask, however, that the usual course be pursued. I do not wish to deprive gentlemen on the other side of one minute of any time they may desire, but I do ask that I may have an hour, and that gentlemen who wish to speak in behalf of the majority report may not be deprived of an opportunity of doing so on my account.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can take no cognizance of private arrangements. The gentleman who made the report under the rules of the House is entitled of course to the hour in which to close the discussion. The House, however, may by unanimous consent or by a majority allow that time may be given to the gentleman from Virginia (the contestant) if the House sees fit to do so.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I simply desire to say that I am sure that the gentleman who first addressed the House [Mr. BROWN, of Kansas] and submitted the majority report and myself agree as to the understanding, which was that each side should be allowed three hours for discussion; two hours and a quarter to those supporting the majority report and two hours and three quarters to those supporting the minority report, the previous question then to be asked; and in the hour subsequent to its order the gentlemen of the majority were to have three quarters of an hour and those of the minority a quarter of an hour. That was the understanding. For myself and those with me I say that that is satisfactory to us now.

But if it is desired by the contestant in this case, or by gentlemen who wish to be heard in his behalf, I certainly have no objection to the arrangement between the gentleman making the majority report and myself being set aside, and leaving the House at its pleasure to fix the limit of debate. Should that arrangement be adhered to, there will be three quarters of an hour left to those advocating the minority report and one quarter of an hour to those advocating the majority report before the previous question will be called.

The SPEAKER pro tempore.. Without objection the arrangement agreed upon by the Committee of Elections will be regarded as the order of the House.

Mr. BROWN, of Kansas. If the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] has no objection, I would suggest that the contestant in this case can take an hour, of which one-fourth of an hour would be due to the majority of the committee in this case, and three-fourths of an hour can be added to the time originally proposed for the minority in this case.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Very well.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the contestant will be recognized as entitled to the floor for an hour.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, (contestant.) Mr. Speaker, I thank the House for the privilege of occupying for a short time the position upon this floor which is mine by the right of having been elected by a majority of the legal voters in the second congressional district of Virginia to represent them here. I thank the House for this courtesy, and will endeavor to use it in as becoming a manner as possible.

I am here to appeal to each member upon this floor to act in this matter as my judge, as he is. I have the right to ask, as I do ask, of every member that if he is convinced on the testimony and the evidence that I was legally elected to the seat on this floor which I now claim, he will discard all partisan considerations and all personal solicitations and will vote the same way that he would vote were I his political friend and on the same side of the House with himself.

There are questions involved in this contest to which I do not intend to allude, except in so far as it is necessary to explain my personal connection with them.

In regard to the navy-yard at Norfolk and the Yorktown matter, I shall confine my remarks to an attempt to prove and to convince the House that whatever occurred in those places I at least am not responsible. The gentleman who holds the seat which I am contesting and the gentleman who represents the minority report in this case in their remarks yesterday charged that there was proof conclusive that the men employed in the Norfolk navy-yard were drilled and schooled the day before the election; that they were never employed in that yard except upon the condition-precedent and agreed to by them that if they were so employed they should vote for me in the coming election. Now I challenge either of those gentlemen to take this printed record of five hundred and twelve pages and name one witness who testifies that he was employed in that navy-yard on the promise, express or implied, that he would vote the republican ticket. I ask them to name one witness among them all who certifies or charges that the men employed in that navy-yard were drilled on the day before election or at any other time as to how they should act and vote on the day of election.

The gentleman whose seat I am contesting, when asked by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BROWN] to show any such testimony, read in reply the testimony of a man by the name of Bain. Now I wish to show the House how much reliance is to be placed upon the testimony of such a man as he is. That man Bain, who had an alias at the place where he lived, was a professed republican, a man who professed devotion to the republican party, and claimed that he voted the republican ticket, in his testimony swears that he never voted any but the conservative ticket. The testimony shows conclusively that he professed openly to be a member of the republican party, endeavored to be placed on the republican vigilance committee, and found so much fault when it was organized without him that he was placed there in response to his request.

The reliability of the testimony of Bain may be shown by himself and others. On page 235 Bain testifies as follows:

Question 23. Was any pecuniary assessment made upon you as an employé in the navy-yard, or did you pay without assessment any money for Mr. Platt's election purposes during the last campaign?

Answer. I did, sir—one day's work—$3.26.

Q. 24. Did you pay that money willingly or under constraint?

A. I paid it because I knew I would be discharged if I didn't; it was against my will.

Q. 25. To whom did you pay it?

A. Mr. John Callahan, master workman in iron-platers' department.

On page 482 John Callahan testifies as follows:

Question 10. Do you know William Bain, of Portsmouth?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Q. 11. Was he engaged in your department during the fall of 1874?

A. He was.

Q. 12. He has stated in his testimony that he paid you $3.26 for Mr. Platt's election purposes during the last congressional campaign. Did he pay you that sum or any other amount for the purpose named?

A. He never paid me a solitary cent.

I also want to call attention to the testimony of Mr. J. Rose, on page 486, in regard to Mr. Bain. Mr. Bain, having professed to be a member of the republican party, after I had given notice of my contest, being out of work, not by reason of being discharged from the navy-yard, but by his own act in voluntarily absenting himself, went first to the gentleman who now occupies the seat I claim, and from him to my friends, trying to sell his testimony to the highest bidder. Mr. Rose testifies:

Question 4. State the substance of any conversation had with Mr. Bain in regard to his, Mr. Bain's, visit to Mr. Goode.

Answer. The statement given in my first testimony is the truth, and is as correct as information can be given of conversation between individuals.

Q. 4. Mr. Bain says he did not tell you that Mr. Goode sent for him; is that true?

A. Mr. Bain told me that he was sent for by Mr. Goode.

Q. 5. Was it a voluntary statement, or did you ask him?

A. It was a voluntary statement.

Q. 6. Did he tell you that Mr. Goode asked him if he knew anything that would be useful as testimony in this case?

A. He did.

Q. 7. Did he tell you his reply was that he did not know anything that would do Mr. Goode any good?

A. He did; that was the substance of the statement. I don't know that it was the exact language.

James H. Clements, on pages 501 and 502, testifies as follows:

Question 10. State the substance of any conversation you ever had with William W. Bain in relation to his visit to Mr. Goode, some time after the election last fall, and whether you sent for him or not.

Answer. Mr. Rose came to me one day, and said that I ought to see Mr. Bain; I being chairman of the republican committee, that Mr. Bain could give me some information, he thought, which I ought to possess, in relation to this contest, or words to that effect. I sent for Mr. Bain and had some conversation with him. He stated that he would like to see Mr. Platt, or that if he could see Mr. Platt, I am not certain about the language, he could give him some information which he thought he ought to have, in relation to the contest. I told him that Mr. Platt was in Washington, and that it would cost something to go there, and that I did not feel disposed or did not have the money to pay his way, but I would try and arrange for him to go to Washington. I told him that the United States court would meet in Alexandria shortly, and that there would be jurors summoned from all parts of the State. I would suggest his being summoned as a juror, which would enable him to visit Washington without expense, when he could see Mr. Platt, and, also, other friends; and that he might, by calling on the chief of the Bureau, be put to work in the yard. I did write and make the suggestion to the United States marshal, and also to Mr. Platt, stating to Mr. Platt that Mr. Bain desired to see him. Mr. Bain, however, was not summoned on the jury. At that interview I said to Mr. Bain that I would not ask him what his information was, for if he gave it to me he might give it to others, and I thought if it was of any importance he ought to retain it until he saw Mr. Platt. He said those were his views; and we parted. I afterward saw Mr. Platt in Washington, and told him of my interview with Mr. Bain, and spoke of my effort to have Mr. Bain summoned on the jury. Mr. Platt informed me that he was sorry that he had not seen him, adding, "Of course you know I could not undertake to influence Ramsdell in the selection of his jury."

Of course I declined to accede to the request that I should ask that he be summoned upon the jury so as to get here without expense to see me.

Such is the witness upon whom the gentleman relied to prove the allegation so earnestly made by the gentleman from Kentucky and by himself. And let me say that while I cannot, and no other gentleman can, in the limited time allowed here, meet the statements made in regard to the testimony of these witnesses, yet any gentleman who will take the time and trouble to examine this voluminous record of 512 pages will find that in almost every case when a witness called by the sitting member gives testimony which would appear to damage my case, it is overwhelmingly met and refuted by witnesses summoned in rebuttal by my counsel.

In regard to the charge of intimidation in the Norfolk navy-yard, (and I ask the House to remember that I am not asking now to have the navy-yard vote counted,) the majority of the committee have given Mr. Goode everything he asked; they have thrown out every vote that Mr. Goode asked to have thrown out. After this is done, unless they also refuse to count the votes given for me in the townships of Rives and Bland, Prince George County, where I had a majority of 408, I am still elected. Now, I say, let the illegal vote be divided in any way in which you may choose to divide it; let any fair division be made of the illegal votes cast by men registered after the time prescribed by law; and bear in mind that every one of the officers of election who registered these men was a democrat, a friend of my competitor. Divide the illegal vote as it was divided in the case of Finley vs. Walls, in which case, I believe, the entire committee united except as to one or two townships which the gentlemen referred to as dissenting from the report were in favor of rejecting entirely; divide those illegal votes upon the color line, and unless you take from me votes cast for Robert Norton in the county of York, himself a colored man, I am still elected by a majority of 7 or 8. Gentlemen cannot figure it out differently. Taking those illegal votes, black and white, as reported in the testimony, no different result can be reached.

But, sir, it is charged that men in the navy-yard were intimidated and assessed. I dwell on this subject to show that the testimony has been much perverted; that the facts in the case do not warrant the conclusions which have been drawn from them by the minority of the committee. In regard to the assessment in the navy-yard the testimony can be condensed into a very short space. Although I have not been charged with any connection with that assessment I wish to state, in order that my position on the subject may be known and the course pursued by me understood by the House, that the first intimation I ever received that such assessment had been attempted or made was when, while engaged in the campaign with my competitor, I reached the city of Richmond September 29, 1874. I there received a Norfolk paper containing the statement that the committee having charge of the campaign in my district had issued a circular to the navy-yard employés. Immediately upon seeing that announcement I wrote to H. B. Nichols, chairman of the republican executive committee, the letter which I hold in my hand. I informed my counsel of the existence of this letter while they were taking testimony; but as they were obliged to crowd so much into a few days, and as they considered the matter of so little importance that the House would give little attention to it, they failed to have it appear in the evidence. But there is no question about the fact of the genuineness of the letter or my having sent it, or of its reception and the result. It was read before the Committee of Elections by the consent of the sitting member. I ask to have it read from the Clerk's desk in connection with the newspaper article which it brought out. I ask the attention of the House to the reading, in order that members may understand my position in regard to this question and the course I took in this matter of assessments.

The Clerk read as follows:

RICHMOND, September 29, 1874.

MY DEAR NICHOLS: I see by a Norfolk paper, which somebody gave me today, that you are charged with issuing a circular making an assessment upon the men employed in the navy-yard, containing language which would induce them to consider the matter compulsory. I have not seen the circular, and if you have issued one am sorry for it. If you have done so, however, it must be understood plainly that it is only a request for contributions on the part of the committee, and that it is entirely a voluntary act on the part of any one choosing to give, and that the navy-yard employés are on precisely the same footing as all other men.

I will be no party to anything that has the appearance even of forced or compulsory assessments, and if there is anything in your circular capable of such a construction it must be at once withdrawn and explained.

We had a fine meeting at Providence Forge on Saturday and at Prince George yesterday. I go from here to Sussex to meet Goode in joint discussion, and shall be in Norfolk Friday evening if I can get there.

Hastily, but sincerely, your friend,

JAMES H. PLATT, JR.

NORFOLK, VIRGINIA, May 3, 1876.

I certify that the above letter from Hon. James H. Platt, jr., was received by me at Norfolk, Virginia, on the 30th day of September, 1874, and that I immediately prepared and had published in the daily Day Book the following card:

TO THE PUBLIC.

ROOMS REPUBLICAN EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE,
SECOND CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT, VIRGINIA,
Norfolk, Virginia, October 1, 1874.

The statement that any one working in the navy-yard or in any other position under the Government in this district has been threatened with discharge unless they contributed to the campaign fund of this committee is utterly false. The subscription is entirely voluntary, and no compulsion of any sort has been used or attempted.

The congressional committee simply request all republicans who are able and willing to give anything to meet the necessary campaign expenses to subscribe such sums as they can afford. This is a plain statement of facts. Colonel Platt is a candidate, and is in no way consulted in the matter, pays his own expenses and also contributes liberally to the expenses of the campaign.

The congressional committee are alone responsible for collections given to carry on the campaign and control the canvass as they deem meet for the interests of the party.

H. B. NICHOLS, Chairman.

And that the copies of the papers containing it were extensively circulated among the navy-yard employés and in other parts of the district.

H. B. NICHOLS,
Chairman Republican Executive Committee.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, (the contestant.) I now desire to call attention to the testimony upon these sweeping charges that have been made that men in the navy-yard were compelled to pay money for carrying on the campaign in my behalf, or were discharged from the navy-yard for not supporting me. I refer to the testimony of witnesses brought forward by my competitor for the purpose of proving this point.

R. H. Anderson (page 306) refused to pay anything.

James Meads (page 316) paid $3.26 willingly; the men did not respond generally to the assessment made.

William R. Webb (page 349) paid a day's pay unwillingly.

Richard H. McClean paid $20; not more than one-third of the men in his department paid anything.

V. O. Cherry (page 367) refused to pay.

Let me now refer to the testimony of witnesses summoned by myself upon this point. First is the evidence of William Smith. He testifies on page 99 that he paid $2 of his own will; never saw circular and no assessment was made on him.

William Teemer, (pages 106 and 107:) No assessment put on him; paid from a sense of duty; never saw circular; heard of it and then heard it contradicted.

Now I wish to call the attention of gentlemen on the other side to the testimony of William F. Allen, who was a conservative superintendent, managing the campaign for the sitting member. I refer to this testimony on pages 114 and 115.

Money was collected from conservative corporation and State officers. His understanding was that a man was not worthy to hold office under the conservative party unless he was willing to contribute money to help the conservative cause.

Mr. Speaker, I charge here in this campaign, while it is charged that republicans collected money from republicans as far as they could, that there was not a single officer holding an office under the party of which my competitor was the candidate who was not compelled to pay an assessment on his salary and the emoluments of his office to this gentleman who managed that party in the district during that campaign. Allen himself, the conservative superintendent, states in this testimony that his understanding was that a man was not worthy to hold office under the conservative party unless he was willing to contribute money to help the conservative cause.

George E. Crismond, a witness of whom I shall have more to say hereafter, and who was quoted so often by my competitor, certifies on page 141, question 24, on cross-examination, that he did not pay anything, because he was short of funds.

John Callahan, pages 177 and 178, says:

Paid $20 voluntarily, and when he received the circular showed it to workmen and said whatever they felt like paying on that list to pay it. Some paid and some did not, and that was the end of it.

I undertake to say, Mr. Speaker, that assessment was not compulsory in any sense, way, or manner; that it was simply understood by the men if they chose to pay it would be cheerfully accepted by the committee, but no man was in any shape or manner intimidated or threatened that if he did not pay he would be discharged from the yard.

I come now to the testimony in regard to intimidation of men employed in the navy-yard at Norfolk, in reference to whom it has been charged that they were compelled to promise to vote for me, and that if they did not vote for me they would not be able to obtain employment in the navy-yard or would not be retained there if they were already employed. I call attention, first, to the testimony, and I will go through it as briefly as I can, of some witnesses summoned by the sitting member.

William J. Richardson, the foreman of the joiners in the ship-yard department, page 299, conversation with William F. Smith. He (Smith) did not say but I supposed he meant, you must come recommended from the republican executive committee; and, question 2, cross-examination: Was employed by William F. Smith, foreman of shipwrights. Questions 5 and 7: Never conversed with any one about his politics, and never asked committee for recommendation. Does not say he ever obtained recommendation of any committee, or ever promised or was asked to promise to vote the republican ticket.

Dale B. Luke, a witness summoned by the sitting member, under cross-examination, certifies, page 271, question 4:

Applied to William F. Smith in May, 1874, for work. Afterward met Edward Lookins, who told him the committee had very little influence in the yard, and he had better go to Mr. Platt, in Norfolk, and ask him for employment. He replied, "I told him that if I never get any work in the yard until I go to seek it from Mr. Platt, I would never get in the yard; and, furthermore, I told him that I would not promise or bind myself to vote for any man in that way;" was employed about three weeks after this conversation.

I call attention to the fact that notwithstanding this statement that he was a conservative, made by the witness, he was employed after this conversation with Mr. Smith in the navy-yard.

Another witness summoned by the sitting member was B. F. Rosson.

B. F. Rosson, page 347, question 7, cross-examination: He went to see Mr. P. C. Asserson, through the advice of Laban Smith, a leading republican. "Was speaking to him about a job of work, and asked him if he thought I could get into the navy-yard, as he knew I was a conservative. He told me to go over and see Mr. Asserson, and probably I could get a job. I went over to see him, and after that heard that my name was to be called," that is, that he was employed. Does not say he made or was asked to make any promise; on the contrary, does say he told Smith he was a conservative.

I refer to other witnesses.

William R. Webb, page 350, question 6: Nobody asked him whether he was a republican or not; and, question 9, that to his knowledge no such question was asked others.

William F. Smith, page 358, question 6: Would not employ men recommended by committees unless they were good mechanics; if they were not good men would not take them. Have heard complaints of the large number of conservatives employed in the yard when good republicans were walking about doing nothing.

Richard H. McClean, foreman of boat-builders, page 360, question 13: The men in his department during the campaign were not generally employed at the request and recommendation of the republican executive committee; and, question 2, cross-examination, men were not taken on or discharged on account of their politics.

Henry L. Perkins, foreman of ship-joiners, page 361, question 3, cross-examination: No men were discharged from his department, or warned that they would be discharged, either on account of their politics or failure to contribute money for campaign purposes.

V. O. Cherry, page 366: Was out of the yard and reported as being a conservative and abusing the Administration. Mr. Clements, chairman of the republican executive committee in Portsmouth, went with him to the foreman, Smith, and he was employed. Does not say that he denied the above charge or made any promise; but in cross-examination, page 368, question 16, says he never heard any foreman or other person having authority in the navy-yard make any threats of discharging employés on account of their political sympathies.

The witnesses to whom I have called attention were all summoned by the sitting member, and the testimony of witnesses summoned by my counsel is overwhelming in the same direction.

Therefore I claim, Mr. Speaker, that there has been no proof whatever connecting me with any attempt at intimidation at the Norfolk navy-yard for political purposes, and that the charge that men were made to promise how they would vote as a condition precedent to obtaining employment is conclusively disproved.

I have said as much as I have on this subject that I might personally be placed in a proper position in this connection, and not that I desire to make any argument against throwing out any votes Mr. Goode has asked to be thrown out, as it is not material to my election that they should be counted. Therefore, monstrous as is this robbery of suffrage and of my rights, and protesting against the great wrong of throwing out these votes, I pass to the consideration of other points involved.

Mr. Goode says it is my business as a contestant coming here to contest his seat to prove all the allegations I make in defense of my claim. I accept that conclusion, and I ask the House to consider the proof I have presented in support of the claim I make. Mr. Goode admits, and he must admit, the only way by which he became a sitting member in this case, the only reason given, and the only reason that exists—that he received the certificate instead of myself—was because of an informality in the certificate from Prince George when presented before the State board.

I am not attacking the members of the State board for their action. I simply ask the House to say whether in its judgment their conduct was correct. The circumstances were these: After having thrown out 206 votes from the county of Nansemond which the committee are unanimous in awarding to me, I was still upon the returns presented to the secretary of the Commonwealth 294 votes ahead in the count. The certificates filed in the office of the secretary of state after the rejection of the votes thrown out in Nansemond County showed a majority for me of 294 votes. If that majority of 294 votes had not been overcome in some way, that State board certainly would have been compelled to issue to me the certificate of election instead of to my competitor. Why did they not do it? What was the only reason assigned? I ask the attention of every gentleman in the House to this point; because it is not an improbable supposition that any man in the House may himself be placed in the position I occupied on that occasion.

My competitor claims that the entire vote of the county of Prince George, which gave me 425 majority, should be rejected because of an informality in the return from that county made by the clerk of the county court, a friend of the sitting member. What was that informality? The return was under the seal of the court, but it lacked the words across its face: "Attest: Robert Gilliam, sr., clerk." The words which appear on this certificate which I here exhibit were lacking on the certificate presented to the board of canvassers. For that reason and that reason alone, solely and entirely, that board rejected the vote of that county, thus depriving me of 425 majority and making for my competitor a majority of 131, and giving him the certificate made me the contestant and placed him in the seat he has since occupied.

Now, sir, at that meeting of the board of canvassers, when the discovery was made that these four words were lacking in the certificate, I took from my pocket this certificate which I here exhibit, which I had procured from the clerk the day after the official count by the county commissioners for another purpose, and presented it there and then to the board before they had made their decision. This certificate is attested by the clerk, and the seal of the county, which makes it legal evidence in any court of Virginia, is affixed. I presented that to those gentlemen, and whatever else it was not, it was certainly conclusive and overwhelming testimony that the clerk's failure to attest the certificate he had previously sent to the secretary of state was a mere clerical error, and that he did not certify to the truth when he said it was an exact copy of the certificate made to the commissioners, because it was proved to the satisfaction of every honest and honorable man that he had merely failed through inadvertence to attach his signature in that place to the certificate.

Now, what was the duty of the State board under these circumstances? The county seat of Prince George County was only three hours from the city of Richmond. It would only have taken three hours for a messenger to go and return. And the law of Virginia requires that if from any county, within twelve days after the day of election, no such certificate as is required by law is forwarded to the secretary of the Commonwealth, it shall be the duty of that officer to send a special messenger to the clerk's office of said county to procure such a return as is required by law. Now, that imperfect certificate had been in the office of the secretary of the Commonwealth for more than two weeks. The fact that it was an imperfect certificate was known to my competitor. He testifies that that fact was brought to his notice on the 18th or 19th of that month. Why was it so carefully concealed from me and from my counsel? We were notified to go before that board on the question of the amended returns. We did not receive the slightest intimation, not a syllable of intimation, that there was any other question involved. It was not until the sitting member at the close of his argument made on that occasion—an argument so carefully prepared that he read it from printed slips—it was not until he had finished his argument before the board on the reception of the amended returns, when, pausing for a while, he said:

If the board could not receive those amended returns, he still claimed that he was entitled to the certificate because of an informality in the return from Prince George County.

And those words from him were the first intimation I or my counsel had received that such a question would be raised before that board. Now, I ask every fair-minded gentleman on this floor to give his attention to the fact that except for the act of the board of State canvassers in rejecting that certificate I would have been seated. That board consisted entirely of democrats. There is no republican representation on it. They may be high-minded officers and honorable men. I am not attacking them. I am stating what is undisputed, what no man here can deny, that those gentlemen assembled together to perform this duty prescribed by law did reject the whole vote of Prince George County—which gave me a majority of 425—because the words "Attest: Robert S. Gilliam, sr., clerk," were not on the certificate; and that instead of giving me the certificate of election, which they would have been compelled to do but for that fact, they gave it to the sitting member; and that solely for this reason—and I defy contradiction to the statement—and no other, he is to-day enjoying the great advantage of being the sitting member in this contest.

Now, under these circumstances what was the position in which I found myself? I ask every honest, honorable gentleman on this floor acting in the capacity of a judge to let his mind dwell for a moment on this state of facts? I found myself deprived of the certificate which I believed belonged to me, deprived of 206 votes cast for me by legal voters in the county of Nansemond and of a majority of 425 of the legal votes cast in the county of Prince George; I believed that there were 631 legal votes of which I was deprived by the action of the officers of the election. I want you to bear the fact in mind that the entire machinery of this election district and of the State was in the hands of the friends of my competitor from the highest officer to be lowest, the entire control of the election, the entire control of the law, the entire control of the appointment of all the election officers and by the action of these friends of the sitting member, by their clerical errors and omissions I had been deprived of the certificate of election when I did receive a majority of over 600 legal votes.

I ask any gentleman what he would have done if he had been in my place in similar circumstances? Sir, he would have done precisely what I did. I sent a notice of contest to the gentleman who had received the certificate of election, and the allegations that I made in that notice of contest have been proved beyond a possibility of doubt or denial. I have proven that I was deprived of 206 votes in the county of Nansemond and of a majority of 425 votes in the county of Prince George, which would have given me a majority of 500 votes after subtracting the votes by which my competitor was returned by the State board. I have proved that fact beyond all possibility of doubt.

After I had presented my notice of contest, then the sitting member, to meet the case thus made, presents all these side and collateral issues which he now asks the House to consider. Now for the first time we hear of intimidation at the navy-yard; now for the first time we hear of illegal votes. I call the attention of the House to the fact that in every single instance where irregularities occur which would damage me they have occurred in precincts where I always received a majority at preceding elections, and the officers of the election were every one of them friends of my competitor, and in no instance did election officers, his friends, permit clerical errors to occur or omissions to be made in a precinct where it would damage him to have irregularities of any kind.

Now, then, we come to the action of the committee. What have they decided? They have taken this voluminous testimony, all these facts, and brought them down into a comparatively small compass. They have made the case rest entirely and solely on the question whether the votes of the townships of Rives and Bland in Prince George County should be counted for me or not. I assert here, and

I defy successful contradiction, that the whole question must be decided on that point; whether the 408 majority given me in these townships shall be counted for me or not. Now, what are the facts surrounding that vote in those two precincts? There were six judges in those two precincts, and five of them were democrats and supporters and friends of my competitor. They swear that this election was honestly, fairly, and legally conducted; that there was no fraud; that at the close of the polls at sunset they, in accordance with law, proceeded to count the votes thus legally and lawfully cast during the day; that they strung the ballots on a string; that they entered the result on the poll-books, so far complying with the terms of the law. What did they do then? They looked around for something to seal up the returns with, and they testified—and their statements are unquestionable—that the only reason why they did not put them under seal was that they could find nothing to seal them with; they had no sealing-wax. It was three miles to the nearest store and six hundred yards or more to the nearest house. The testimony shows that they tried to find something with which to seal up the returns; they applied to the occupant of the nearest house, but were unable to find anything suitable. In one precinct they put the returns in a tin box and locked it and in the other precinct in a paper bag and sewed it up. The returns were taken charge of by the democratic judges, were delivered into the custody of the democratic clerk of the county, and counted without question by the democratic commissioners of the county.

Now my competitor asks that the House shall refuse to count the votes so cast and returned simply because these judges failed to put sealing-wax on the outside.

I desire, now, Mr. Speaker, to call the attention of the House to a few cases in Virginia where questions like this arising under the laws of Virginia have been settled. I will first call the attention of the House—and I beg them to give their attention to it because it is a case where a question of this kind was adjudicated within the last few months by the senate of Virginia—and let them see what the democratic senate of Virginia considers to be a mandatory and directory law, and if an omission of this kind may be allowed to vitiate an election.

I hold in my hand a report of the majority of the committee of elections in the Virginia senate, which was adopted by the senate in the case of Knight vs. Johnson. By reference to page 17 of that report there will be found the following:

> Let it be conceded that the officers of elections did commit a fraud, and we come then to the second principle propounded, that still, if there remains any means of ascertaining the result, it should be respected and upheld.

They go further than the majority of the Committee of Elections of this House; they go further than Mr. MCCRARY in the American Law of Elections. They hold that not only where there is an omission to do some act prescribed by law, but even in case of actual fraud by the judges of elections, if there remains any means of ascertaining the correct vote cast, that vote shall not be rejected, but the result when found shall be accepted. And they cite several authorities to prove the correctness of their decision, in part as follows:

> In the case of The People vs. Bates, reported in 11 Michigan Reports, page 364, the supreme court of that State said:
> "The elector is not to be deprived of his vote, either by the mistake or fraud of the inspector in depositing it in the wrong box, if the intention of the voter can be ascertained with reasonable certainty."

That is a principle well understood and always heretofore acted upon by this House of Representatives. I venture to say here, and I challenge any gentleman in this House to show any authority against the assertion, that not one single precedent can be found in the history of the American Congress, from the first Congress that ever assembled down to the present time, where the House ever consented to reject votes under these circumstances. On the contrary, there is running through the history of contested elections before Congress one unbroken line of precedents against any such deprivation of the people of an election district of the right to vote. The committee of the Virginia senate cite the following case:

> In the contested-election case of 1868, before the supreme court of Pennsylvania, (see 65 Pennsylvania State Reports, page, 44,) Chief Justice Thompson delivered a minority opinion, in which he used language which was afterward, in Chadwick vs. Melvin, 68 Pennsylvania Reports, adopted unanimously by that tribunal as a correct principle of law. He said:
> "There is nothing which will justify the striking out of an entire division but an inability to decipher the returns or a showing that not a single legal vote was polled or that no election was legally held."
> These are principles fixing clear and wholesome rules of law for judicial guidance, and we know of no case which repudiates them as unsound. The contestant laid great stress upon the case of Littlefield vs. Green, Brightly's cases, 493. It will be seen that the facts there uttered obscured every conjecture, even as to the result; but that the court, so far from disputing, expressly approved the principle which the committee has adopted.
> There the judges of election certified that at Virginia precinct, Cass County, 2,829 votes were cast in favor of removing the county seat from Beardstown to that place. The whole population of that precinct, of all sexes, ages, and conditions, did not exceed 1,800, and among them were but about 450 legal voters. There were thus about six votes in the box for each legal voter, and two, at least, for every inhabitant. Every vote was for the Virginia precinct as the county seat. Of course this stupendous fraud—too obvious to question—caused rejection of the return; and the case is cited as an authority for rejecting the return before us now. The principle upon which the court acted, so far from leading us to the conclusion invoked, expressly denies that in all cases of fraud the return must be thrown out; for it was said:
> "It is undoubtedly the rule that, if the canvassing court can separate the legal from the illegal votes and reject the illegal ones, they are bound to do so, and that mere irregularities in the manner of conducting an election or a fraud on the part of the officers will not vitiate, unless it be of so gross a character as to destroy all means of ascertaining the true result."
> And we may add here, as an indication that public policy enjoins the enforcement of these doctrines, that in some of the States the injustice of setting aside elections by the people because their official agents have been guilty of misconduct has led their Legislatures to declare (as in California and Indiana, for instance) that even where malconduct of the election officers is shown affirmatively, still the election shall be upheld, unless it be also shown that their malconduct affected the result.

That is the principle that the committee on elections of the Virginia senate advanced and which was adopted by the Virginia senate in construing Virginia laws. Yet we are asked by a citizen of Virginia to reject the vote and disfranchise the people of a county in our State because the judges of election failed, through their inability to do otherwise, to put sealing-wax on the outside of the returns when they were sent from the precinct to the court-house; that is the whole reason for asking for their rejection.

I wish now to call the attention of every member of this House who ever expects again to be a candidate before the people to the effect of such a decision as this if made here. No gentleman can say that he may not himself be placed in some future Congress in the position I am now occupying. If you had gone into the last Congress of the United States and tried to select among its members the man who had the least chance of appearing before this Congress as a contestant, I should have stood as good a chance to be so selected as any man in that Congress.

Any one of you may be found hereafter in the position I now occupy, and it becomes you all to judge this case as you would yourself be judged if placed where I am now. Suppose that Congress should make now the rule that the mere act of omission on the part of an officer or judge of election should vitiate the entire vote of the county or precinct; where is there one of you who in your district has not hostile election officers, more or less of them? Make a law and precedent that this thing asked to be done here now shall be done by Congress, and you make it a question not of how many votes you may receive in your district, but as to which party has the most election officers who will commit acts that they cannot be punished for, acts of omission or commission, which party can commit the most of these; and in that way you may destroy the entire majority in any congressional district in the United States and make the holding of an election a mere farce.

That is the reason why no precedent for any such decision can be found, because no Congress has ever assembled in the history of our country which was willing to stultify itself and endanger the entire liberties of the people by placing upon the statute-book a precedent of that kind.

I desire to quote one other Virginia case, and ask the attention of the House to it. I hold in my hand an opinion delivered by the gentleman who now represents the sixth congressional district of Virginia on this floor, and who I understand is to speak in this case. I hold in my hand an opinion given by Mr. TUCKER, of Virginia, when he was attorney-general of that State, in relation to the election case of Fulkerson vs. Stras.

The circumstances of that case were these: The two persons named were candidates for the office of judge in a judicial district composed of several counties. The law of Virginia requires that the sheriffs of the counties, after the votes have been cast, shall assemble together, count the returns, and declare who has been elected. The sheriffs in that judicial district occupy the same position that the State board of Virginia occupied in this case toward the congressional district.

Mr. TUCKER. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the sheriff occupied the same relations as the State board?

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, (the contestant.) I say that the sheriffs are the returning officers in that case and the returns are submitted to the sheriffs sitting as a board of elections. Am I not correct in that statement?

Mr. TUCKER. I will answer the gentleman in due time; I only wanted to hear what his point was.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, (the contestant.) I would simply say that the returns from one precinct in this judicial district failed to be signed I think by one of the officers. Upon this point the opinion states:

> The objection to the poll at one of the precincts is that it is not certified by the conductor, though it is by the commissioners; and to those at the others, that they are neither certified by conductors or commissioners. Upon inspecting the poll-books for these precincts I find that there were conductors and commissioners sworn for each precinct, according to law; that the polls are taken in the usual form, under a suitable caption; and that the clerk has sworn (as appears of record) that the polls were fairly and properly taken according to the lists made out.
> It is true that the law requires the conductors and commissioners to certify the correctness of the poll. This must be, as it has ever been, construed as directory, but not essential to the validity of the poll. It was never designed to defeat the popular will by a deficiency in formalities, which the law only prescribed to secure its full and free expression; and however important these may be, it would be monstrous to set aside the voice of the people because a public officer failed to do his duty. This would be to put the form before the substance, to prefer the shadow to the reality.

In concluding the opinion the following language is used:

> I believe the views I have expressed will be found best to preserve inviolate the provisions of the Constitution, the substantial requirements of which should never be made to yield to forms devised by the law as means to the attainment of constitutional ends. To surrender in this case any of these requirements to the forms prescribed by law would defeat the popular will, to which the Constitution gives the supremacy.

I also call attention to the indorsement given to this opinion by the then governor of Virginia, Henry A. Wise, who says:

No mere failure of ministerial and executive officers to do their duty can either vitiate or nullify the votes of the people to elect a judge or other officer if they, being legal voters, did in fact, at the time and places and in the manner prescribed by law, declare their votes. To have their votes returned and counted is as much a right and as sacred as the right to vote according to law. Of neither right can any power in Virginia depriye them by acts of either commission or omission; and neither depends on the acts of ministerial or executive officers. That the legal voters at the precincts of Lee County, the polls of which have been rejected by four of the sheriffs, did so declare their voices, I am satisfied from the returns and certificates which have been made. The votes were legally taken of legal voters, but the polls merely were not properly certified. The officers, conductors, and commissioners at some of the precincts have incurred penalties, but the legal voters are not thereby to lose their votes actually polled.

Mr. TUCKER. That opinion was in the case of Stras.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, (the contestant.) Does the gentleman now repudiate that opinion?

Mr. TUCKER. No, sir; I do not. This House will sanction the proposition that I do not go back on my opinions when gentlemen cite them, and no gentleman gains much advantage by undertaking to cite them against me.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, (the contestant.) I am very glad that the gentleman does not go back on his opinions. I do not want him to go back on this opinion, and rejoice that he holds the sentiments he then expressed to be good law now.

Now, Mr. Speaker, one word in regard to the illegal votes cast. It is alleged by the minority of the committee and by Mr. Goode that 90 illegal votes were cast in that district. What were those illegal votes? I desire to have the House clearly understand what they were and how they came to be illegal. They were not the votes of men who are not legal voters; they were not cast by men who did not possess all the attributes of a legal voter in respect to residence in the townships where they were required to vote. These votes were cast by men who, by reason of the fault of the registration officers—every one of whom was a friend of my competitor—had been permitted to register after the time prescribed by law. The law of Virginia requires that the registration shall close ten days before the election. These illegal votes are, I believe, in nearly every instance—there may be one or two exceptions—the votes of men whose names were put upon the registration-list by the registration officers within the ten days next preceding the election.

My competitor charges these illegal votes against me; and according to the common law, (and I suppose no gentleman in this House will dispute it,) it was his business, as he has charged these illegal votes, to prove them and to prove for whom the votes were cast. Now, it is said in the minority report, and the gentleman from Kentucky repeated it in his speech yesterday, that my competitor had no time and no opportunity to prove these illegal votes, because they were not discovered until the eighty days had elapsed in which he could take testimony.

Now I hold in my hand the record of the time of taking testimony in this case, and it answers beyond the possibility of doubt the statement made by the gentleman in that respect. Mr. Goode commenced taking testimony as early as March 4. On the 4th of March he took testimony in York County; on the 30th, in Prince George County; on the 23d, in Surrey County; on April 8, in Sussex. His time for taking testimony did not expire until April 15. After taking testimony he had six full days, and in many of the cases more than twenty days, in which to prove how these illegal votes were cast and for whom. I had but ten days to rebut all the testimony he had taken in forty days; and as I charged no illegal votes my lawyers, men of eminence in their profession, (and I am sure their decisions will be concurred in by every lawyer in the House,) decided that they had no right to go into that question; that the question of illegal votes must be handled by my opponent, and it was his duty, having charged them upon me, to prove that they were cast and for whom they were cast. Consequently I did nothing about it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, (the contestant.) I ask for five minutes for a statement in regard to a personal matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. BANNING in the chair.) The gentleman's time will be extended for five minutes, if there be no objection.

There was no objection.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, (the contestant.) I desire to make a statement of the Yorktown affair, in regard to which my competitor charged me with having gone there personally and taken a large number of men to create a riot. I wish to make a truthful statement of that occurrence, and all I shall say is fully proven by the testimony. In that county there was a colored man named Norton, who, on the 4th of July announced himself as an independent candidate, and at a small meeting of a society called the Lone Star introduced a resolution giving him the indorsement of that meeting as a candidate for Congress; the Norton family, of which he is a member, having made a profession of running as independent candidates ever since reconstruction, and the brother of this man, Robert Norton, having three times run as an independent candidate before the last campaign.

Now, sir, that man only remained in the field, and felt himself compelled to so remain, from the fact that money was furnished to keep him in the field. Who furnished that money? I do not charge my competitor with having any personal knowledge of it, or with having done it himself; but he will not deny the fact that William F. Allen, superintendent of elections in Norfolk, paid $950 in cash and a barrel of whisky, which was received at a cash value of $50; that Mr. Chaplin, the partner of my competitor, sent this same man a check for $100; and that a committee of five Norton men, so called, in the city of Norfolk were paid four or five hundred dollars by the authority of this conservative organization for the purpose of keeping Norton in the field as the assistant conservative candidate.

When I went to Yorktown, on the 17th of September, I think it was, to speak, going peaceably with my friends to a stand prepared for me, and while I was speaking Norton marched up in front of the stand with more than one hundred followers and endeavored to prevent me going on with my speech. They had on that occasion a disturbance which the sheriff was unable to quell. We were not strong enough to meet it, and we had to divide the time in discussion in order to prevent being attacked and driven away. Subsequently, three or four days after, at Lackey's store, in the same county, this man, after receiving the money which was paid by my competitor's superintendent and partner, met us there and did succeed in driving us away from that place. At Warwick Court House, three weeks afterward, they were present in force with pistols, shaking them in our faces and telling us publicly if we should go to Yorktown to the meeting advertised four days before the election we would be driven out of town, over the bluffs, and into the river. And anonymous communications were sent to me before I went, saying that if I attempted to present myself in that county to speak I should only leave it as a corpse.

Under those circumstances, sir, about seventy-five of my friends accompanied me there from the city of Norfolk. We did go on the navy-yard tug. We paid for the time of the men on the tug and for the coal burned, or rather some of my friends did it. I had nothing to do with it. It was a tug frequently used for the purpose of excursions, and frequently loaned to the conservative party. It was loaned to a party of which my competitor formed one on a social occasion. It was used by both parties when occasion demanded on the same terms on which we obtained it on that occasion. It was a tug upon which two hundred men could not be crowded unless they were put on the top of the smoke-stack. We were met at Yorktown by three or four hundred of my friends and a procession was formed, and accompanied by a band we marched to a stand prepared for us. It was perhaps some six hundred yards from the stand where Mr. Goode was speaking. We could not go to our stand without passing by the place where Goode and Norton were speaking. The first attack made that day, as is proven beyond all possibility of doubt and beyond all controversy, was upon William E. Crockett, one of my friends, who was beaten so severely that he very nearly died from the effects of the wounds he then received. I assert that all we did on that occasion was to defend ourselves and maintain our right to speak there or anywhere else, and all the fighting which was done that day was done in the defense of the right of free speech and to preserve that right inviolate on that occasion.

I thank the House for its courtesy, and regret that the limited time at my disposal has required me to leave unnoticed so many points which I would otherwise have discussed, and I leave now the question as to who is entitled to the disputed seat from the second Virginia district to be decided by the House. If the decision shall be based upon law, fact, and evidence, I shall be awarded the seat of which I have so long been unjustly deprived, and justice, though tardy, will at last have been done.

NELSON TIFFANY.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. Speaker, I ask by unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. No. 1337) for the relief of Nelson Tiffany, vetoed by the President, which was made the special order for this morning after the reading of the Journal, but which had to give place to this contested-election case, may be set down for to-morrow morning after the reading of the Journal or at the close of this case.

Mr. BLAND. I object to everything which interferes with the morning hour.

Mr. HOAR. This will not take three minutes.

Mr. BLAND. I do not care if it takes but a minute. I call for the regular order of business. I want to have the morning hour.

Mr. HOAR. This will not interfere with the morning hour.

Mr. BLAND. Then let the gentleman set it after the morning hour.

Mr. HOAR. There may not be any morning hour, as was the case this morning.

Mr. BLAND. I cannot help it, I object to its interfering with the morning hour.

Mr. HOAR. I do not understand that it interferes with the morning hour. The gentleman will have the same right to have the morning hour as now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. BANNING in the chair.) The gentleman from Missouri objects.

Mr. BLAND. And I give notice that I will continue to object to everything out of order until I do get the morning hour.

Mr. HOAR. This bill relates to a charge upon the honor of a poor dying soldier who did good service to the country, and will not take five minutes.

Mr. BLAND. Let it be taken up after the morning hour. All I ask is that the morning hour shall not be interfered with. I object to this, and to everything else that interferes with the business of the morning hour.

Mr. HOAR. But supposing there does not happen to be a morning hour?

Mr. BLAND. I know the object has been to stave off the business of the morning hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This discussion is all out of order.

Mr. HOAR. Then I ask that the matter may be set down for three o'clock to-morrow afternoon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there any objection to making it the special order for three o'clock to morrow afternoon?

Mr. BLAND. I object to fixing it at any hour until we have had the morning hour.

NAVAL INVESTIGATION.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Yesterday the House made an order that the majority and minority reports of the Committee on Naval Affairs should be presented to-day for printing. I now ask by unanimous consent that we may present the reports of the majority and minority in order to comply with that order of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. HOAR. I object.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. The order to print was made yesterday, and the House also ordered that the report should be presented on this day. I only ask that the committee may comply with that order by presenting the two reports.

There was no objection, and the reports were received, laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

NELSON TIFFANY.

Mr. HOAR. I now move by unanimous consent that the veto message in the case of Nelson Tiffany be set down for consideration to-morrow after the morning hour. I understand the gentleman from Missouri will not object to that.

Mr. RICE. I object.

Mr. HOAR. I hope not. This is a poor, dying soldier, who merely wants the record in his case corrected. It was reported, Mr. Speaker, originally from the committee of which you are chairman, the Committee on Military Affairs, and I hope the gentleman will not insist on his objection.

Mr. RICE. How long will it take?

Mr. HOAR. About five minutes.

Mr. RICE. I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to making the veto message in the case of Nelson Tiffany the special order for to-morrow, after the morning hour?

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE OF PLATT VS. GOODE.

The House resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee of Elections on the election contest from the second congressional district of Virginia—Platt vs. Goode.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I should do injustice to my own feelings if I did not take part in this discussion, although I have a deep personal interest in the result of this contest, a personal interest for a cherished friend, and a strong public interest for the freedom of elections in my native Commonwealth.

I shall address myself though, sir, to the discussion of this question with all the impartiality which I can bring to it, and I think if the House will give me its attention I will establish beyond all controversy that to exclude the sitting member from the seat which he now so honorably occupies and to admit the contestant to that seat would be to violate the privileges of this House and defeat the liberty of election in the country.

Mr. Speaker, freedom of choice expressed through legal forms constitutes a vote. I say, freedom of choice, free from any interest which seduces and free from any apprehension which deters from the elective duty. The legal forms are given to prevent illegal votes, and to secure to those legal votes which have been cast their full legal effect. It is therefore better to exclude a whole poll—and I beg attention here to this proposition—it is better to exclude a whole poll where the extent of the fraud cannot be measured than to admit a false one under any circumstances; better to reject all which is doubtful than to remove doubt, as the committee have done in this case, by guessing who is elected.

Now, this House has no voice in this election. A committee of this House, and the House itself, cannot cast one vote for Mr. Goode that was not cast for him at the polls, and cannot cast one vote for Mr. Platt which was not cast for him at the polls. Guessing is excluded.

A good deal has been said, and I shall dismiss it with a word, about the action of the returning board in this case. An assault was made by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BROWN] upon the members of the returning board. I quote in substance the words of a former statesman of my own State when I say that I leave the character of the members of that board at the head of whom stands the historical name of R. M. T. Hunter, clarum et venerabile nomen—I leave it to stand like the Rock of Gibraltar, unaffected in its grandeur, and almost untouched by the pocket-pistol of the gentleman from Kansas.

We have nothing to do with the action of the returning board; our functions are different. We can look further down into the facts than the returning board had any right to do, who were guided only by the prima facie case upon the abstracts of returns. We can get down—using the cant phrase of the day, which I could hope the reporter will not put into his notes—to the bottom facts of the case; and finding who is elected upon such examination, we can so declare contrary to the prima facie case, as it appears upon the mere abstracts to the returning board.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if the House will give me its attention for a moment I will state exactly how this controversy stands. Upon the official vote as returned Mr. Goode has 131 majority. Then the committee was unanimous (and we concede) that the Nansemond vote must be added, which makes 206 additional votes for Mr. Platt. Upon the proposition of giving him 12 votes in Norfolk, 7 of the committee say nay and 4 of the committee say yea; and I say nay with the 7. The result would be that Mr. Platt's majority upon that statement would be 75. He then claims and has allowed to him by 6 yeas to 5 nays on the committee the vote of the Bland and Rives Townships. This adds 425 to his vote, which makes his whole majority 500. Taking that as our starting-point, a majority of the committee, consisting of all the democrats on it, then find that this must be reduced by throwing out the navy-yard vote, which gave Mr. Platt 441 majority. Seven democrats to 4 republicans vote to throw out the navy-yard vote because it was obtained by fraud and intimidation; because the men who voted at those precincts voted as the serfs of the Government; because they were not the free electors of Virginia, but were the slaves of power. And seven democrats, to their honor be it said, against four republicans—I do not mean to their dishonor be it said—rejected the whole poll at the navy-yard as having been illegal, because fraudulent and obtained by intimidation. Now throw that out and you have a majority of 59 for Mr. Platt still.

Then by a vote of 7 yeas to 4 nays—the five of the settled minority joined with the two gentlemen, my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. THOMPSON] and my friend from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSE]—vote that 35 more of a lot of illegal votes (from 92 to 100 in all) should be taken from Mr. Platt than are taken from Mr. Goode. And that would leave Mr. Platt with a majority of 24. Now the only questions that remain open are, with this result of a majority for Mr. Platt of 24, in the first place, whether the Rives and Bland townships were properly given to him. And that for the argument's sake I concede. Very well, then, there are two questions remaining. And I ask the House to give me their attention, for there will be a good deal of confusion as to the exact status of the case, unless this is clearly understood. One of the questions then is, what action is proper as to the illegal votes; 92, as stated by my friend, Mr. Goode, and 100, as stated by my friends the minority of the majority?

Has a proper disposition been made of these illegal votes? And lastly—and I beg the House to pay attention to this—has enough been allowed to Mr. Goode on account of frauds at Portsmouth in the navy-yard? There was no vote on that question in the committee.

If any one of these three questions were answered in the negative Mr. Goode has a majority. That is to say, if Rives and Bland townships were thrown out Mr. Goode would have a majority. If the proportion of illegal votes which Mr. Goode contends for is allowed by this House, Mr. Goode would be elected. And if what I claim in regard to the navy-yard vote be adopted he would be elected by a large majority, or at least by a considerable majority.

Now, I dismiss the question as to Bland and Rives Townships, because I do not think it necessary to make any statement of a legal proposition in reference to that, when we are willing to yield all claim as to them. But in reference to the 92 illegal votes, without going into a discussion at all of the Virginia statute upon that subject, I may say, upon such authority as my opinion would have in this House, that, having examined the election laws of Virginia, I am clearly of the opinion that the majority of the committee, that is to say, my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. THOMPSON] and my friend from Tennessee, [Mr. HOUSE,] uniting with the five democrats constituting the minority, are right in saying that no registration is lawful on the day of election, where the party comes from another county; and that the rejection of those votes on the ground of illegal registration was right. There is a difference between the republican members of the committee and the democratic members of the committee on that point. But I agree with the democratic majority of the committee as to the effect of our law upon that subject. Then, if you take the 100 votes as illegal which Mr. THOMPSON and Mr. HOUSE claim, or take the 92 as my friend Mr. Goode claims, the question is, how those illegal votes which are found in the ballot-box, without its being known for which candidate they were cast, are to be disposed of. And I would say that at these several precincts the evidence shows, in the aggregate, that Mr. Platt gets a majority of some four hundred to six hundred. I beg the House to note that Mr. Platt, at these precincts where illegal votes were cast, gets a majority of four or five or six hundred. What, then, is to be done with these illegal votes when you do not know for whom they were cast? Are they to be taken off the poll of Mr. Platt exclusively or off the poll of Mr. Goode? Or, if they are to be taken off the poll of both, how are they to be taken off? Upon what rule and in what proportion?

Mr. McCRARY, in his valuable work on the American Law of Elections, page 225, says, in respect to such cases:

Let it be understood that we are here referring to a case where it is found to be impossible, by the use of due diligence, to show for whom the illegal votes were cast. If in any given case it be shown that the proof was within the reach of the party whose duty it was to produce it and that he neglected to produce it, then he may well be held answerable for his neglect; and, because it was his duty to show for whom the illegal votes were cast and because he might, by the use of reasonable diligence, have made this showing, it may very properly be said that he should himself suffer the loss occasioned by deducting them from his own vote.

Let me apply this rule in this case. Under the law the contestant has forty days to take his testimony; then the contestee has forty days to take his testimony; and after that the contestant has ten days in which to take rebutting testimony. When, therefore, the contestee developed, in taking his testimony, the fact that 92 illegal votes had been cast at polls where Mr. Platt got 500 majority, it was incumbent on Mr. Platt to show that his majority was not made up of these illegal votes. He comes forward and says, "Count my 500 majority." This House asks, "Why count you 500 majority? Did you get them?" He replies, "Well, I do not know whether I did get exactly that majority or not." Then we say, "Why shall we count them for you?" And he replies, "It is true there were 92 illegal votes cast, but I do not know whether they were on my poll or on Mr. Goode's." We answer, "You want your 500 majority counted You cannot count it unless you prove that your 500 majority was not made up of any of the 92 illegal votes cast at the polls where you claim 500 majority." Now, you had ten days to prove that these 92 votes were not part of the majority you claim and you have not done it The presumption of law is that the reason you did not do what you had a full right and opportunity to do was because you could not do it if you tried. Whenever the law puts an onus on a man and he declines to meet it, it is the presumption of law that he does not meet it because he cannot; and the presumption becomes conclusive in this case, as the contestant has not proven that the 92 votes did not go to constitute a part of his 500 majority; that they did form a part of that majority, and ought to be deducted from his vote, and so decrease his majority to that extent. Now strike the 92 votes off of his poll, except 35 votes which have already been stricken off in the calculation already made, and you will find that Mr. Goode has been elected by 33 majority; so that, if the rule which Mr. McCrary says is the proper rule is acted on and applied, Mr. Goode was elected. And I therefore call upon democrats and I call upon republicans who are honest-minded, I call upon honest men on both sides, to retain the sitting member in his seat and to tell Mr. Platt that he takes nothing by his motion for contest.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is another way in which this matter has been attempted to be settled by the committee; and I beg my honorable friend from Massachusetts [Mr. THOMPSON] and my honorable friend from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSE] to believe me when I say with all sincerity that no man has a higher respect than I have for the honesty and integrity with which they have come to their judgment. I criticise their conclusion, but I do not censure their action or question their motives. The way in which my friends, two members of the committee, fixed the matter is this: they propose to take those 100 votes and divide them between the two candidates in the proportion of legal votes that each received at the precincts where the illegal votes were cast. Now, Mr. Speaker, I say—and herein is the pertinency of my opening remarks—I say that this is merely guessing at the vote. It is an arbitrary rule; it is a rule that has no foundation in reason; it is a rule that may be in opposition to the fact; it is a rule that may make the committee and this House elect a man that the people never elected, and the Constitution of our country declares that the House of Representatives shall be composed of members chosen every two years by the people of the States. I claim that the voice of the people of Virginia shall be heard here, and not the voice of this committee. What right has this House to assign to Mr. Goode 29 of these illegal votes which will give him 16 colored voters and while only 64 colored voters are assigned to Mr. Platt? That is to say that Mr. Platt only got three to one of the colored vote! If that had been the way all through the district, Mr. Platt would not have been here to contest; he would have been nowhere in the race, and he knows it better than I do.

Now, if you look at the examination of the witnesses in this case you will find that the counsel of Mr. Platt themselves asked questions again and again upon the postulate, and the witnesses again and again answered, to the effect that the whole mass of the colored vote in that district was cast for Mr. Platt. That was the ground on which Mr. Platt said that Norton must get off the track in order not to divide the negro vote. There is the color line! When Mr. Goode met Mr. Platt at Yorktown the proposition was made for a joint discussion, such as generally takes place in old Virginia between candidates. Mr. Goode said, "I will divide the time with Mr. Platt and Mr. Norton." Mr. Platt said, "I will not speak with Norton." The native-born Virginian did not object to speak with a competitor who was a colored man, but the carpet-bagger from Vermont was too proud to do it. [Laughter and applause.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, this mode of dividing these illegal votes is not only not founded in reason, but it is contrary to the facts of the case upon all the evidence. The only rational mode upon which this problem can be solved, (except taking the whole from the majority for the contestant, as I have already argued,) is upon the color line. If you wish to get at the probable mode in which these votes were cast, you can do so by giving the colored part of these illegal votes to Mr. Platt and the white part of these votes to Mr. Goode. On this plan you cannot be very far out of the way. Taking, then, from Mr. Platt 78 or 79 of these votes and from Mr. Goode 13 or 14 votes, according to the color line, and giving up everything else in the case except the Norfolk precincts, and Mr. Goode was elected by 6 or 7 votes; and we claim confidently that he shall hold the seat to which he was thus elected.

Now, these are matters which will probably be discussed by other gentlemen. I come now to a point to which I desire to call especial attention—the navy-yard vote. Upon this point I have the report of seven members of the Committee of Elections against four, that the evidence in this case establishes the fact that the vote at the navy-yard as a totality was so infected with the virus of fraud and intimidation by governmental officials, directed through the person of Mr. Platt, the republican candidate for election to Congress, that the entire navy-yard vote should be and must be rejected.

But if there were no report or even a unanimous adverse report from the committee, I would call upon this House to reject this navy-yard vote cast for Mr. Platt, and thus effectually condemn the mode in which it was obtained.

The fact is, these navy-yards in the different States seem to be fruitful sources of corruption, and have become the means of alarming interference in the freedom of elections to this House as well as to other offices, State and Federal. The late election case of Abbott vs. Frost was decided upon the fraudulent character of the vote at one of these yards.

I quote a letter showing this, which I find in the report of the Committee on Naval Affairs:

[Private.]

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS, October 23, 1874.

MY DEAR COMMODORE: I wish you would approve requisitions for men to be employed, as they may be made until the 1st of November.

Some fifty additional has allowed from the Chelsea district, and I suppose some more will be required from Gooch's district.

The Administration desire the success of Gooch and Frost.

Yours, respectfully,

J. HANSCOM.

Commodore E. T. NICHOLS, Commandant.

Here is an evident direction by the Administration officials of the affairs at the Massachusetts navy-yard in the interests of Administration candidates for seats in this House; thus unconstitutionally using executive patronage and the money of the Government to determine or influence the independence of the people in their choice of representatives to seats upon this floor.

It is true we have no such letter as to the desire of the Administration in reference to Mr. Platt; but I will show to the House the influence used and the efforts made on the part of the Administration for his election. I will go a little further back than the acts done at the navy-yard, for the purpose of showing the mode in which this matter has been operated. Four days before the election, what I believe the contestant calls "a pleasure excursion," in a Government boat, was taken by himself and others to Yorktown. Now I say to this House that the evidence in this case shows that the Miles Standish, a Government vessel, James H. Platt, jr., captain commanding, left the navy-yard at the ports of Norfolk and Portsmouth on the 30th of October, 1874, having on board a cannon cast in the navy-yard, (I suppose at Government expense,) for a pleasure excursion, having on board his white guards and his black guards, (and a great many of them were blackguards, I have no doubt,) variously estimated from two hundred and fifty to three hundred or four hundred—I say this party, under Mr. Platt, embarked from the port of Norfolk and went to Yorktown on that day, which was four days before the election.

The air was filled with the cheering and the hootings and the cries of those who were on the boat. The cannon boomed as the boat neared Yorktown, heralding the approach of the gallant commander with the Government squadron. Now what was the purpose of the expedition? "A pleasurable picnic," says the contestant. What was the purpose of that expedition? To stifle negro suffrage; to prevent a negro candidate running for Congress; in the language of one of these white guards, "To kill every damned nigger who would not vote for Platt;" to drag Norton and other speakers on Norton's side from the stand where they were addressing the free people of the country; to shoot fleeing negroes and unarmed men, twenty-five or thirty of whom on that day were shot; or to beat them with billets that were manufactured in the navy-yard for the purpose. All this by a Government vessel manned by boys dressed in navy-blue, (that is the testimony,) to make war upon "the wards of the nation."

Mr. GARFIELD. To whom does the gentleman allude as "the wards of the nation?"

Mr. TUCKER. You all have always said that the colored people were the "wards of the nation."

Mr. GARFIELD. O, no; they are citizens, not wards.

Mr. TUCKER. Very well; then to make war upon the citizens of the United States. [Laughter.] "I thank thee, Jew, for teaching me that word." [Continued laughter.] The gentleman cannot ward off the blow by showing that he and his associates are no longer fit guardians of the colored race. [Applause and laughter.]

The sword of the Government was drawn to put down a negro candidate for Congress and to force negroes to vote for the white man

Platt rather than for the negro Norton, and by terror to drive the negro candidate from the field and to frighten ignorant negroes from the polls. That was the purpose of the expedition. It was intended to demonstrate—I beg gentlemen to listen to this—it was intended to demonstrate, by the exhibition of governmental power at the navy-yard, that the autocrat of the quarter-deck of the Miles Standish was cock of the walk in the Gosport navy-yard; and that whatever he said was not only the law but would be backed by the naval power of the Government.

Now, if you will read the evidence of what occurred at Yorktown on that occasion it will make your blood boil. I commend it to the eloquent gentleman whose indignation was so extraordinarily excited by the affair at Hamburgh the other day. And allow me to remark that I have no hesitation in saying that I not only deplore that affair, but I unite with every right-minded man North and South in condemning every guilty man, whether white or black, who was engaged in it.

I notice that whenever there is a difficulty between white men who may be democrats and the negro people at the South, gentlemen on the other side of this Hall generally take the side of the negro. But I find that in this case where Mr. Platt, the contestant, was making war upon the negro race, the republican members of the committee address themselves to it in the following form of words; and if you never heard the cooing of a sucking dove, now hearken:

> We do not believe the evidence will warrant the rejection of the whole returns from this county. A disgraceful riot between the friends of Mr. Platt and those of Mr. Norton—

Let me say that the evidence in this case excludes the idea that either my friend, Mr. Goode, or any friend of his took any part in that transaction except to quell the riot and defend the negroes from the arms of their white assailants—

> A disgraceful riot between the friends of Mr. Platt and Mr. Norton, an independent candidate, the paying of money to Norton by friends of Mr. Goode for the purpose of keeping Mr. Norton in the field as a candidate, and so dividing the negro vote—

Ah! then you worked with the expectation and purpose that all the negro vote should go for Mr. Platt, did you?—

> while they show a bad state of affairs and the depth of the conspiracy to defeat Mr. Platt, no matter by what means, yet they fail to show such intimidation or bribery as would warrant the rejection of the vote of the county.

This reminds me of an old story which, if the House will permit, I will repeat. An old Commonwealth's attorney who had been fifty years in harness had his indictment on one occasion called in question by a young man who had just come to the bar. The old gentleman became very vehement in his indignation and broke out into some profane and objurgatory expressions upon the young man, upon which the young man asked for the protection of the court. The court went into consultation, and after some time an old German who was the presiding magistrate thus pronounced the judgment of the court to the young attorney: "Mr. Smith, the court is of opinion and does decide that if you make Mr. Brown mad again and swear, they will send you to jail." [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, can there be any solution of the mode in which the majority of the committee treat this matter except that no party is competent to reform its own abuses. "Can the Ethiopian change his skin or the leopard his spots?" The screen of partisan favoritism will be thrown over the abuses and corruptions of party to hide them from the view of an offended and indignant people.

The other day when the Hamburgh massacre was under discussion and when a proviso was offered to the effect that no troops should be taken from South Carolina, where negroes were being attacked by white men, it would have been well to have proposed an additional proviso, that all Government troops and vessels should be taken away from Norfolk and Gosport in order that the negro voter may be protected in the free and uncontrolled exercise of his electoral franchise.

I have shown how these people were frightened by the sword of the Government. I will now show how they were bribed by the purse of the Government at that navy-yard.

Read the deposition of that old man, Mr. Tymes:

> Question 2. Please state whether at any time previous to the last congressional election in this district, or since that time, you have made application to any official in the navy-yard for employment there; if so, when and to whom was the application made, and state all that occurred.—A. About last August I went and asked the commodore, Stevens, for the watchman's situation in the navy-yard; his reply was to go to some of the politicians. I told him I came to headquarters; he observed to me that he couldn't and he would not interfere with the committee.
>
> (Objected by contestant's counsel as hearsay.)
>
> Q. 3. Did you have any conversation with Mr. John Mylan, a foreman in the navy-yard, about employment there? If so, state when and what it was.
>
> (Objection repeated.)
>
> A. About a fortnight before the election, I went to Mr. Mylan and asked him could I get work in his department; he asked me who was I going to vote for; I told him my friend, Mr. Goode; his reply was, he had no use for me; I told him that I had "no more use for him than hell had for a stove."
>
> Q. 4. Did you succeed in getting employment in the yard?—A. I did not, sir.
>
> Q. 5. Did you ever have any conversation with Hon. James H. Platt, jr., about procuring employment in the navy-yard? If so, state when it was, and where it occurred, and all that occurred.
>
> A. A few days after the election I went over to Norfolk and saw Mr. Platt at the custom-house; I asked him for the watchman's situation in the custom-house; he asked me who I voted for; I told him John Goode; he told me that was what they were trying to do; my remark was, what? he said to find out those that voted against me; I asked him what would be the result; his reply to me, that those who voted against me (Platt) should not work in that yard, and that was all.

I read from the deposition of George W. Glover:

> Q. 6. Have you heard during the congressional campaign or at any time the bossmen or other officials in the navy-yard say anything about cleaning out all the employés in the yard who did not vote the republican ticket or anything of that sort?
>
> A. It was the common talk among the bosses that such should be the case if they could be pointed out.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> Q. 16. How were the men generally employed in the navy-yard; were they employed by the officials there upon their knowledge of the qualifications and mechanical skill of the men, or upon the recommendation of the republican executive committee or some members thereof?
>
> A. As a general thing they were employed by the committee as a whole or the chairman thereof.
>
> Q. 17. Was it or not generally understood, so far as you know, among the men employed in the yard that if they failed to vote for Mr. Platt they would incur the disfavor of those who controlled the employment of men in the navy-yard?
>
> A. That was the impression made upon their minds.

I now read from the deposition of William J. Richardson:

> Question 2. Were you employed in the navy-yard during the last congressional campaign, and on the day of election, November 3, 1874?
>
> Answer. I was.
>
> Q. 3. Was any assessment pecuniarily made upon you during the congressional campaign as an employé in the navy-yard for election purposes? If so, please state by whom it was made, how much money you paid for that purpose, and to whom you paid it.
>
> A. Previous to the election I was called upon by Mr. Richard Meades, quartermaan of shipwrights, who handed me a paper. I opened the paper and found that it was an assessment made upon the employés working in the navy-yard, requiring foremen to pay $10; each first-class shipwright, $3.26; second-class, $3; water-boy, $1.02. I folded the paper and handed it back to Mr. Meades; went to the pay office, drew my money, and said no more about it to him. One week afterward he approached me, and asked me if I intended to pay the assessment required of me. I told him that I disapproved very much of doing it. He said, "I would like to give you some advice." He advised me to pay the assessment, as he thought that I would be benefited by it. I told him that if it would benefit me any I would pay the amount. He said he had the authority to say that any one who refused to pay the assessment there would be a cross-mark put opposite his name and returned to the executive committee. I called on Mr. Meades the same day after this conversation and paid to him $3.25.
>
> Q. 4. Did you pay that money willingly or not?
>
> A. I did not.
>
> Q. 5. What, then, induced you to pay it?
>
> A. The fear of being discharged.
>
> Q. 6. Are you employed in the navy-yard now?
>
> A. I am not.
>
> Q. 7. Please state when you were discharged.
>
> A. I think about the last of November, 1874.
>
> Q. 8. Have you made any application since that time for employment in the navy-yard; if so, please state to whom the application was made, and all that occurred at that time?
>
> A. About the middle of December there were thirty shipwrights required to be taken in construction. I found that my name was not on the list. Next day I made an application to Mr. William F. Smith, foreman of shipwrights, for employment; he told me that the men who had been taken in the day before were not his choice, and that if he did not obey his instructions after they came to him with a recommendation that "off would come his head." He said that he would do all he could for me.
>
> Q. 9. What recommendation did you understand him as referring to?
>
> A. He did not say; but I supposed that he meant you must come recommended from the republican executive committee.
>
> Q. 10. Why did you suppose he meant the republican executive committee; was it customary to procure that before a person could get employment in the navy-yard?
>
> A. As a general thing, I think it was.
>
> Cross-examined by JOHN LYON:
>
> Q. 1. How long had you been employed in the navy-yard before the day of election?
>
> A. About five months.
>
> Q. 2. Who employed you then?
>
> A. Mr. William F. Smith, foreman of shipwrights, I suppose.
>
> Q. 3. To what political party did you and do you belong; republican or conservative?
>
> A. I don't propose to answer that question. I'll answer it now. My principles have always been conservative.
>
> Q. 4. How has your action been conservative and republican?
>
> A. My actions have been such it would be hard for any one to tell.
>
> Q. 5. Was it not your general reputation in Portsmouth and the navy-yard, among your friends and acquaintances, that you belonged to the republican party and cooperated politically with that party?
>
> A. I don't know that it was; I never conversed with any one on the subject whatever.
>
> Q. 6. Not with Mr. William F. Smith?
>
> A. No, sir.
>
> Q. 7. Did you ever make any application to the republican executive committee, or to any member of it, for recommendation for employment in the navy-yard?
>
> A. I did not.
>
> Q. 8. Then you were employed in the navy-yard without reference to your politics, were you not?
>
> A. I don't know whether I was or not.
>
> Q. 9. How many men were discharged from the navy-yard at or about the same time you were?
>
> A. To the best of my knowledge, about four hundred.

Here is a refusal to employ except through the politicians, a refusal to employ because of political opinion, and the indignation of Mr. Platt against a voter for Mr. Goode, and a refusal to employ him on that account after the election. I refer you now to page 266, which shows that before the election (no matter whether there was a contract express or implied, the ground on which Mr. Platt puts it) there was an out-giving which no man could misinterpret or misunderstand, which assured every man that the way to Government favor was to vote for Mr. Platt and the way to Government disfavor was to vote for Mr. Goode.

That is to say, the way to get employment at the navy-yard was through the chairman of a partisan committee and the way to get out of employment was to vote for Mr. Goode; and that hundreds were employed during the canvass in order to have votes controllable by Government patronage for party uses, to be discharged from work for the Government as soon as their uses for the party triumph had ceased.

Then take the case of that old man, Mr. Russ, seventy-one years old, who was made to swear himself clear of the imputation that he had voted anything but the republican ticket. This old man of threescore years and ten, whose very age was an eloquent appeal to the clemency or the justice of the Government, was called up by an official in the navy-yard to swear himself clear of an imputation that he had dared to vote the democratic ticket.

To show the mode in which this governmental influence was exerted upon the navy-yard voters on election-day, I now read the following evidence:

In Glover's testimony this appears:

Question 18. Did you attend the republican meeting in the fourth ward shortly before the election, at which instructions were given to the ticket-holder?

Answer. I attended a meeting at Temperance Hall, on County street, where the ticket-holders were instructed as to their duties.

Q. 19. Please state fully and in detail what instructions were given to the ticket-holders.

A. They were instructed to watch every man and see that he did not place his hand in his pocket before he gave to the judge of election the ballot received from the ticket-holder.

Q. 20. Were the ticket-holders instructed to see that the men voted the tickets which were given to them, or anything of that sort?

A. They were instructed to see, as far as possible, that they voted what they received from the ticket-holder.

Q. 21. Where did you vote on the day of election?

A. In the fourth ward.

Q. 22. Were you watched by anybody on that occasion to see how you voted?

A. I believe that I was, sir.

Q. 23. How far from the ballot-box did the ticket-holders stand, and in what position?

A. About nine or ten feet, facing the ballot-box.

Q. 24. Who were the republican ticket-holders in the fourth ward?

A. Barney Rutter and John Moody on the part of the whites. I don't know the colored man's name.

Q. 25. What position did Barney Rutter and John Moody hold in the navy-yard at that time?

A. Barney Rutter was a shipwright; Moody a blacksmith.

Q. 26. After giving the tickets to the navy-yard men as they came up, did they or not watch them until the tickets were placed in the hands of the judges?

A. I believe they endeavored to do so as far as they possibly could.

I now quote Broughton's testimony:

Question 2. Were you present at the fourth ward, in this city, on day of the election, November 3, 1874?

Answer. I was.

Q. 3. Did you witness any intimidation of voters at that precinct or did you see or hear anything from navy-yard officials calculated to influence the voters improperly in that election?

A. On the day of election, between six and seven a. m., I went over to the fourth ward. When I arrived there at the polls I saw the men strung out in a string, with Barney Rutter on one side of the door and a colored man, whose name I do not know, standing on the other side. All the men had to pass between the two before getting to the ballot-box. All of the republicans had to take their tickets from Barney Rutter; saw Dr. Kenny standing inside the polls, three or four feet from the box, with a newspaper in his hands tallying off the men as they voted, and all supposed republicans who refused to get a ticket from Rutter he put their names down on the inside margin of the paper. I remarked to M. J. Pyles, one of the republican vigilance committee, "This is a great job you fellows have got up." His reply was, "There are a great many talk about voting for Goode, and we intend to find them out and make them suffer for it." Then I left the polls in company with Mr. A. J. Hopkins. On the corner of Third and Lincoln streets we met several young men coming from Portsmouth. Mr. Hopkins invited all hands down to Gosport. Before going to Gosport went back to fourth-ward polls. One of the members of the crowd seeing Mr. Kenny with his paper in his hand tallying off the voters, snatched it out of his hand and tore it up; then we left there and went down to Gosport with Mr. Hopkins. On the way down Mr. Hopkins remarked, "I am sorry you tore that paper up; that if Mr. Goode was elected we intend to contest the election, and want that paper to swear to." I believe that is all I know.

Q. 4. How far was it from where Mr. Rutter stood to where Dr. Kenny stood?

A. About three feet.

Q. 5. Could Mr. Rutter observe the voter after getting the ticket until he got to the ballot-box?

A. He could; he was stationed about seven feet from the ballot-box and nothing between him and the ballot-box.

Q. 6. How far did Dr. Kenny stand from the ballot-box?

A. Dr. Kenny was about four and one-half feet from the ballot-box.

Q. 7. Was he watching, too, how the voters deposited their ballots?

A. He appeared to be paying all his attention to all the voters taking their tickets from Rutter.

Q. 8. Did all the voters whom you have described as strung out in a line get their tickets from Rutter and the colored man?

A. All that I see get them while I was there.

Q. 9. What position did Rutter and Kenny hold in the yard at that time?

A. Kenny held a clerk's place; Rutter a kind of leading man among the shipcarpenters.

I quote now from Cherry's deposition:

Question 5. Where did you vote on the day of election last fall?

Answer. Fourth ward, city of Portsmouth.

Q. 6. Did you witness any intimidation of voters there that day or see or hear anything from navy-yard officials calculated to influence the voting of the employés in the yard improperly? If so, please state all you know about it.

A. I live near the polls of the fourth ward and was at the polls. I was at the polls, I guess, about twenty minutes after the polls opened and staid until about twenty minutes of eight o'clock, time enough to get to the yard. I saw Mr. Barney Rutter—he is considered one of the leading men in the navy-yard—standing at the polls within six or eight feet of the ballot-box. He was the only one of the republican party at that time that had republican tickets. He would issue no tickets to any one unless they were in line going up to vote, and I heard him on several occasions tell the men not to put their hands in their pocket. I asked him why he done so. He told me he wanted to see how the men voted. I heard him refuse to give out tickets unless the men were in line.

Q. 7. Was he standing in a position so that he could see the voter from the time he received his ticket until it was deposited in the ballot-box?

A. He was.

Q. 8. Do you know whether any pecuniary assessment was made upon the men employed in the navy-yard for Mr. Platt's purposes in the campaign and whether it was generally paid or not?

A. I do, sir. Mr. Burroughs, a quarterman in whose gang I was working at the time, brought a circular down to us between twelve and one p. m., and made use of the remark, "I have got something here for you men to look at and see what you are going to do." He showed it to us. He was assessed $10. First-class mechanics were assessed $3.26; second-class, $3; or, according to whatever a man got, he had to pay a day's pay.

Q. 9. Did the men, as a general thing, pay this money willingly or not?

A. They did not.

Q. 10. What, then, induced them to pay it?

A. I judge from fear of being discharged.

Q. 11. Was it generally understood among them that if they did not pay it they would be discharged?

A. Yes, sir; that was the general impression. I judge by hearing men say that they would not give it; it was a damn shame; and afterward those same men paid it. I seen their names on the circular marked paid.

Q. 12. Did you pay the amount assessed upon you?

A. I did not. I told Mr. Burroughs the best place for that circular was to nail it up to the post; that I had to support my family.

Q. 13. Have you reason to believe that your failure to pay that assessment or to vote for Mr. Platt had anything to do with your discharge from the navy-yard?

A. That I wouldn't like to say. It was the general impression if they didn't pay the money and vote for Mr. Platt they would be discharged; but I couldn't say whether that was the cause of my discharge or not.

Q. 14. Have you ever heard men employed in the navy-yard say that they had to pay this money or vote the republican ticket to make bread for themselves and family, or anything of that sort?

A. I have; I have heard them speak it openly.

This is a part only of a volume of testimony of like character, with which the record is filled.

And yet the contestant, in the face of all this cloud of witnesses, has the audacity (I mean no disrespect to him) to ask here where is the evidence of corruption, intimidation, or fraud in respect to this navy-yard vote? Why, Mr. Speaker, the evidence shows that before the election, after the election, and during the election the virus of fraud and governmental intimidation so infected the whole election and the crowd of voters about the poll that every man of just perception, it seems to me, would say that no one of those navy-yard voters so seduced by the purse or deterred by the sword of the Government from expressing his will shall or ought to be counted for Mr. Platt.

Mr. Speaker, something has been said about this assessment. I do not mean to say that a mere voluntary payment by officials or employés in a navy-yard is to be treated as evidence of fraud and corruption; but I do mean to say that such payments under assessments by the Government officials are to be watched with great scrutiny, and that the voter is to be protected against even the appearance of intimidation or of fraudulent seduction from his duty; and that wherever it is found that any such influence has been used on a large scale, there is but one way in which a remedy can be applied, and that is to cut up the evil by the roots and to reject the vote of every man who voted for the Government candidate under such influences, no matter whether he would otherwise have voted for the Government candidate or not. Where the votes have been cast under these influences, the burden of proof is thrown upon the party who gets the vote to show that the man would have voted for the Government candidate irrespective of such influences before that vote can or should be counted; because when a man is acting under fraudulent impulses the law will impute the act to the fraudulent impulse rather than to any pure motive on the part of the voter. I say that is the law the world over. Omnia præsumuntur contra spoliatorem. And on like principles, every presumption is to be made against a man who seeks to be and has been elected by the destruction of the freedom of election and under the intimidation or by the purse power of the Government. The exclusion of all such votes is essential to preserve the purity of the election and its independence of the unlawful influence of power; and the candidate in whose poll such votes appear must clearly rebut the presumption by proving in each case that the vote was unaffected by the unlawful action of the Executive.

Now, Mr. Speaker, these assessments were put upon this ground: "You are one of us; you eat your bread from the Government table every day. If you expect it to continue you will have to turn in and help." The question is thus put to a man implicitly, by that kind of talk: "Are you with us or against us?" If the man says, "I will not contribute," then, as one of the witnesses said, "the bosses were required to ask the reason why." If the man said it was due to his political principles, he might be operated upon by removal. Is there any man so blind or any who will so shut his eyes to the truth that he will not see that this very operation is intended to test and does test the men of the navy-yard as to whether they are for or against the Government candidate? And when they develop they are against the Government, then they are removed. It was holding, as it were, the sword of Damocles over the head of the quivering pauper or employé, compelling him to say "I will vote for the man you indicate." Is there any man who can look at this evidence but will see the English of it? I care not for the gentleman's statement that there was no case of express contract to vote for Mr. Platt upon the consideration of being employed. I say no man can read this testimony without believing that the livelihood of the employé, of his wife and crying little ones, depended upon obeying the autocrat of the navy-yard by voting for his election.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move the time of the gentleman from Virginia be extended.

Mr. TUCKER. I will be glad if the House will extend my time fifteen minutes so I may finish what I have to say on this question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to extending the time of the gentleman from Virginia fifteen minutes.

Mr. BROWN, of Kansas. We do not object, if it is the understanding that the time on this side shall be extended fifteen minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I say, looking to the power of the sword as manifested at Yorktown and looking at the power of the purse as manifested before, during, and after the election, that the sword and the purse of the Government have so intimidated, overawed, and seduced the voters at that election that there was no free voice for Mr. Platt.

I see in the report of the republican members of the committee, in which no democrat concurs, a most remarkable comment on these extraordinary facts:

> We believe that the assessment of employés in the service of the Government is demoralizing and wrong, and ought to be made a criminal offense and severely punished. But it cannot in any way affect the result of the election, unless it is proved the money was used to corrupt voters and not in legitimate ways. Not a word of evidence appears in the record that the money so raised was corruptly used, and we can conceive of no ground on which to impeach the election that this money was collected.
>
> There were in the navy-yard a large number of hands, white and black. They were there under appointment from republican officials. The evidence shows a large force was employed during the fall months of 1874; but not so large as during the corresponding months of 1873. Work was plenty, and this naturally worked to the benefit of the party that had the work to give; but further than this the evidence is very barren that improper inducements or promises were held out. Preference was given by republican officials to republicans, but the evidence shows that some known conservatives were employed, and many voted for Mr. Goode and kept their places. Altogether the evidence shows that the navy-yard was run just as much in the interest of the party in power and no more than all such institutions usually are. There is no proof that a large number of men were put on to control the election, that conservatives were employed under promises to vote the republican ticket. There is no evidence that a single democrat voted for Mr. Platt on account of the employment he obtained in the navy-yard. The evidence in reference to drilling, &c., shows mere organization on the part of the republicans; and the intimidation and violence used were by friends of Mr. Goode, who were endeavoring to break down the republican organization, drive away its challengers, and a few conservatives whole control.
>
> The case is not nearly as strong as that of Abbott vs. Frost, in that there was work to be done. The men employed were not put on within a few days of election, but the force gradually increased for months. Mr. Platt did not recommend the employment of men; the increase was not greater than in prior years. The evidence is paltry and barren in showing undue efforts on the part of Mr. Platt's friends.
>
> The evidence is vague and indefinite. No effort was made by the sitting member to particularize. He acted in reference to this matter as in reference to others, that where illegal votes are proved, be they few or many, the effect was to vitiate the whole election, and he endeavors, both in his proof and argument, to make us determine that some illegal votes were cast, so that we may exclude the returns of entire precincts. We believe that bribery can be committed in the employment of voters in a navy-yard, but the mere fact of employment alone does not prove bribery. If employment is given to make men vote contrary to what they would do, it would be bribery, but there must be proof, first, that men were employed in order to cause them to change their politics and, second, that they voted and voted in favor of the party giving the employment. The presumption is in public service that republicans employ republicans, that democrats employ democrats. The presumption is almost conclusive that men obtaining employment in places controlled by democrats are democrats and in places controlled by republicans are republicans, and the employment does not change their politics. If any presumption arises when a man obtains employment in a navy-yard, it is that he is a republican, and if that be so, the employment does not affect either his vote or the result. Here the employment is the whole evidence of bribery, and is extremely weak—only a link in the chain to prove the charge. Our duty is to act on evidence, not on surmises; to seek fixed data, not make wild guesses; and hence we decline to throw out any portion of the navy-yard vote.

Let me comment on some phrases in this curious apology and defense of the transactions in respect to this navy-yard vote.

The committee say:

> Altogether, the evidence shows that the navy-yard was run just as much in the interests of the party in power and no more than all such institutions usually are.

Now, I ask what right has the administration of this Government of a free people, the Government of the whole people irrespective of parties, to run the Government machinery and use the Government money to keep itself in power? The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BROWN] has asked something of the code of morals by which my friend [Mr. Goode] is controlled. I ask, whence do they who sign their names to this report get their code of ethics when they excuse the republican party for running the machinery of Government, intrusted to them by the whole people for the common good in and for personal interests of the men and the party in power?

The committee speak with bated breath of the procedure before and at the election, thus:

> The evidence in reference to drilling, &c., shows mere organization on the part of the republicans.

As my Lord Coke would say, the "&c." in that passage is full of implied meaning, which the members of the committee will not express, yet cannot all conceal. It involves the understanding that all were to vote for Mr. Platt who were employés; that they were to go to the polls with tickets provided by their official masters; that they were to vote under the surveillance of watchmen; that none should put his hands into his pockets, but keep them unraised; that none should break his allegiance to his party without being marked and "spotted;" that free voters should be driven, like sheep to the shambles, as Government serfs to the polls, to vote not their own but the will of the Executive, and for his candidate.

Mr. Speaker, this is but another illustration of what I have said: that no party can cleanse itself from the corruption of a sixteen-year hold of power.

They say there was nothing to keep a man from going out, if he chose, of the republican party. Ah, sir, when a man contributed to its cause, when a man went into the navy-yard, there was written over the gate-way vestigia nulla retrorsum. It was the lion's den, and there was no step backward for his decoyed and overawed victims. Now, sir, I say those voters from the navy-yard, unawed by the sword and unseduced by the purse, who still voted for Mr. Goode, cannot, ought not to be stricken from his polls.

The man who would not take the bribe, the man who dared the sword and voted his sentiments, cannot have his vote stricken off because you strike off the man who was seduced by the purse or awed by the sword of the Government. And that is just what this committee has done. It is an oversight. Why, sir, look at the evidence of Crismond:

> Question 11. Did the voters employed at the navy-yard turn out and vote at that election as a general thing?
>
> Answer. I think they did.
>
> Q. 12. The returns show that James H. Platt, jr., received in the city of Portsmouth 1,042 votes. Allowing that the negro vote fell off 50 per cent. of their number according to your estimate, and that Mr. Platt received only 450 colored votes, and that he received only 25 white votes outside of the men employed in the navy-yard, making together 475 votes, the subtraction of this number from the whole number (1,042) cast for him, leaves 567 votes as a remainder of votes to be accounted for as cast by men employed in the navy-yard. Please state, according to the best of your knowledge, information, and belief, whether Mr. Platt received from men employed in the navy-yard more than 567 votes of white people?
>
> A. I don't think he did. I should judge that he received about that number in Portsmouth.
>
> Q. 13. The returns show that no candidates for Congress were voted for in Portsmouth except Mr. Platt and Mr. Goode. Allowing that 567 votes of white voters employed in the navy-yard were cast for Mr. Platt, at what number would you estimate the votes of white men employed in the navy-yard that were cast in Portsmouth for Mr. Goode?
>
> A. I think that Colonel Goode received between 150 or 200 white votes of men employed in the navy-yard in Portsmouth at the last election.

Here is a witness for Mr. Platt, who, in reply to a suggestive question from his counsel, declares there were 567 white votes cast for Mr. Platt in Portsmouth alone, not including the other precinct in Norfolk. The counsel and witness bring the number down as low as they can. These votes were cast under the malign influences I have referred to.

But some navy-yard votes, it is said, were cast for Mr. Goode. These votes are good. Undismayed by power and unseduced by money, they voted their free will, and must be sustained as legal, as voting freely, in spite of temptation.

But the 567 navy-yard votes in Portsmouth cast for Mr. Platt are bad, because cast under the illegal and oppressive influences I have spoken of. They are admitted to be bad by seven of the committee (all democrats) against four members, (all republicans,) for they reject the 441 majority for Mr. Platt, as a majority constituted of these navy-yard voters.

Now I ask any man—and this is the gist of the whole argument—if the 441 constituting that majority were illegal voters because of intimidation and fraud by Government officials, does not the same reason apply to the whole 567 who voted for Mr. Platt, or 126 votes more than the 441 declared illegal? If you strike off only the 441 majority that Mr. Platt got, then you do that by striking off 126 good votes cast for Mr. Goode to keep company with the 126 bad votes given to Mr. Platt. Shall the true voters for Goode be balanced by the false voters for Platt? I say, therefore, that the only way of settling it is this: Take Mr. Platt's poll and take from it every voter from the navy-yard who had in him the virus of governmental fraud and intimidation; reject that from his poll and leave Mr. Goode's poll unchallenged, unassailed, and undoubted as it is, to stand. The result in that case would be that Mr. Goode has a majority of 126 at that poll, instead of Mr. Platt having 441 majority. In other words, strike from the majority the republican members of the committee find for Mr. Platt, 512, or from that found by Messrs. THOMPSON and HOUSE, 500, the 567 bad votes from the navy-yard cast in Portsmouth alone, and Mr. Goode is elected by over 50 majority.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask gentlemen to look at it. If you will make that change upon the estimate of my friend Mr. THOMPSON, who strikes off only 441 votes for the navy-yard, and strike off 567, it will destroy the 50 majority that would elect Mr. Platt without the fraudulent 92 voters being brought into account; and if you give the fraudulent 92 voters to Mr. Goode and Mr. Platt in any proportion proposed by any of the committee it will elect Mr. Goode in spite of it all. And I say this, that you may decide every question in this case in favor of Mr. Platt, yet if you decide this one question in my favor Mr. Goode is elected.

But this is not all. It is safe to say Mr. Platt got 1,000 navy-yard votes in Norfolk and Portsmouth. He got 567 in Portsmouth alone. If, now, you strike off every navy-yard vote that was given to Mr. Platt at Portsmouth and Norfolk, I say that Mr. Goode is not only elected, but by a large majority; and I thank God he is elected, sir, not by technicalities, but elected, lifted out of the region of technicalities into the high and serene realm of justice and right, instead of intimidation and fraud by a tyrannical administration of the Government.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if Mr. Platt is permitted to take his seat, it will be as the representative of a rotten borough. The royal rotten boroughs of Parliament have been abolished for forty-odd years under the celebrated reform act. I trust under the great reform act of the American people to be enacted and ordained this year and at this fall's election, that these rotten boroughs will no longer be known in the American Congress, and as institutions run by the Administration will be stricken forever from American history.

But, Mr. Speaker, if this institution of the navy-yard is to be run in the interest of the Administration, is that the way you run a custom-house? Do you make it subserve the interests of party and promote the schemes of the Administration? Is this the way you run a custom-house? With a flag [holding up a photograph] floating over it or nailed to its gable front, as in the city of Norfolk, with this inscription: "National Republican Ticket: For President, Rutherford B. Hayes, of Ohio; for Vice-President, William A. Wheeler, of New York."

I suppose we will see a similar flag over some of the Departments of the Government shortly.

Mr. FOSTER. After March next.

Mr. SPRINGER. It will be a long march you will make before you elect your candidates.

Mr. TUCKER. You will see probably before long over the Department of the Interior, "Zachariah Chandler, Secretary of the Interior, chairman of the national democratic committee."

Mr. FOSTER. Get it right. [Laughter.]

Mr. TUCKER. I will put it right in the RECORD. Did I say "democratic?"

Mr. FOSTER. Yes. [Laughter.]

Mr. TUCKER. You will see over the Department of the Interior, "Zachariah Chandler, Secretary of the Interior, chairman of the national republican committee. No admittance except on business, and no admittance except for republicans."

Now, Mr. Speaker, I merely ask this question in conclusion: How is this Government hereafter to be run? Does Mr. Hayes accept the indorsement of the Administration found written over the custom-house at Norfolk or does he repudiate it?

Under which king, Bezonian? Speak or die.

Mr. Hayes, you are between two horns of a dilemma; you must take the one or the other. Repudiate the Administration and the Administration will repudiate you. Refuse to repudiate it, and the people will repudiate you. You may take either horn. To quote an old Latin maxim, a saying of Horace, and changing it somewhat from the original—and pluralizing the word, in order to suit the name of this singular candidate of the republican party, we may say to him:

Fœnum habet in cornu;

Fœna habemus in cornu.

We will have you, Mr. Hayes, on one horn or the other of the dilemma.

Mr. FOSTER. I am glad you are going to have him anyhow.

Mr. TUCKER. Let not this House seat a man elected by the conjoined influence of the sword and purse of the Government, a member from a rotten borough, a representative of the executive, not of the people, in breach of their elective rights and in violation of the cherished privileges of this House. But let the House leave my friend in the seat he has so highly honored and to which he was chosen by the voices of the free, unawed, and unbribed electors of Virginia!

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, obtained the floor.

Mr. SPRINGER. Unless the gentleman desires to speak to-night I will move that the House adjourn, as it is nearly five o'clock.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. BLAND. Let the case go on.

Mr. SPRINGER. We cannot settle the case to-night. But if the House desires to vote upon the question now, without further discussion, I will withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I think after I have said a word there will be no objection to an adjournment. It is utterly impossible to finish the case to-night, because there are to be two hours of further discussion and I claim the floor and have yielded for a motion to adjourn.

Mr. CONGER. I hope we shall adjourn. I feel that the House ought to have an opportunity to digest the last speech thoroughly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Did the gentleman from Virginia have the floor before the gentleman from Illinois made the motion to adjourn?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I did, and yielded to him to make the motion.

Mr. TUCKER. In the course of my remarks just now, speaking in the heat and excitement of discussion, as I never speak from manuscript, I used an adjective which came upon the end of my tongue without being intended. I used the word "tyrannical." I ask unanimous consent of the House that I may withdraw that word.

Mr. CONGER. I object; I think the speech ought to go in the RECORD with all its beauty and all its adjectives.

Mr. TUCKER. Who objects?

Mr. CONGER. I object.

Mr. TUCKER. Then I desire that my remark and my request be reported and the objection of the gentleman on the other side be also reported.

Mr. CONGER. I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would state that the gentleman from Virginia has the entire right to withdraw the word.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. BAKER, of New York, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 3963) to amend subsections 246 and 251 of section 12 of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes," approved June 23, 1874, and for other purposes, and section 3954 of the Revised Statutes.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. YEATES was granted an extension of the leave of absence heretofore granted him until the 1st of August.

Mr. WILLIS was granted three days' leave of absence to attend to a professional engagement.

The question was then taken on Mr. SPRINGER's motion, and it was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and fifty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, memorials, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. LUTTRELL: Resolutions of the Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association of San Francisco, California, favoring the passage of the Meade bill, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Also, the petition of Daniel Hunsacker, for a pension for services rendered in the Black Hawk war, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a paper relating to the bill to quiet titles to the Albion land grant, signed by E. J. Burr, to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. MAGOON: The petition of Edward Maloy, T. J. Law, and 52 other citizens of Shallsburgh, Wisconsin, against reducing the tariff on lead and zinc, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Also, the petition of Hon. W. M. Fogo and 41 other citizens of Richland County, Wisconsin, for the repeal of the stamp tax on safety-matches, to the same committee.

By Mr. McFARLAND: The petition of George W. Norwood, of Winston, North Carolina, for pay for ninety-four half boxes of tobacco erroneously seized, condemned, and sold by the United States authorities, to the Committee of Claims.

By Mr. RIDDLE: Papers relating to the claim of J. R. Hutchinson, of Sumner County, Tennessee, for whisky furnished the United States Army, to the same committee.

By Mr. SPRINGER: Memorial of J. C. G. Kennedy, late Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, for a correction of the report of the international statistical congress at St. Petersburg, to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. WELLS, of Missouri: The petition of George Haeffner, of Herman, Missouri, for compensation for property destroyed in said town in 1864 by order of General Marmaduke of the confederate army, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. YOUNG: Papers relating to the claim of Mrs. A. G. Bankhead, for compensation for the use and occupation of houses leased by her to the United States Quartermaster's Department, at Memphis, Tennessee, to the same committee.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, July 27, 1876.

The Senate met at eleven o'clock a. m.

DEATH OF MR. CAPERTON.

The Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty and Everlasting God, Father of our spirits and Former of our bodies, Who dwellest in the clouds and makest darkness Thy pavilion, Who holdest life and death in Thy hands and dispenseth them according to Thy pleasure, we come this morning to acknowledge the dispensation of Thy providence by which Thou hast removed another member of the American Senate and caused him to cease forever from his accustomed place. We beseech Thee, O Lord, to comfort all those who mourn on this account, and by this event to impress the lessons of wisdom and of good conduct upon all our hearts. Through Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

Mr. BAYARD. The Senate, I am sure, and the country will be deeply affected by the announcement of the melancholy event of yesterday, the death of our late friend and brother, ALLEN T. CAPERTON, a Senator from West Virginia. I move, as a mark of respect so justly due to the memory of this excellent and honorable man, that the Senate stand adjourned until to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

Mr. STEVENSON, I hope the Senator from Delaware will withdraw the motion for a moment.

Mr. BAYARD. Certainly.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, I concur in all that is said by the Senator from Delaware as to the sad event which clouds the Senate once more with the shadow of sorrow. ALLEN T. CAPERTON died suddenly at his residence in this city last evening at a quarter before six o'clock. I offer the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Senate has received with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. ALLEN T. CAPERTON, late a Senator of the United States from the State of West Virginia.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect for the memory of Mr. CAPERTON the Senate will wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days.

Resolved, That a committee of four Senators be appointed by the Chair to accompany the remains to his late residence at Union, West Virginia.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these proceedings to the House of Representatives.

The resolutions were agreed to unanimously.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. DAVIS, Mr. COOPER, Mr. BOOTH, and Mr. HITCHCOCK as the committee.

Mr. BAYARD. I renew my motion that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at eleven o'clock and ten minutes a. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, July 27, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

SAMUEL JONES.

Mr. LYNDE, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back the bill (S. No. 774) to remove the political disabilities of Samuel Jones, of Virginia.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, communicated to the House the proceedings of the Senate on the announcement of the death of Hon. ALLEN T. CAPERTON, late a Senator from West Virginia.

WASHINGTON MONUMENT.

Mr. FOSTER. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Appropriations the bill (S. No. 982) providing for the completion of the Washington Monument, with amendments.

Mr. BLAND. I will not object providing it leads to no debate.

The bill was read.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations were read, as follows:

On page 1, line 5, strike out "one" and insert in lieu thereof "two," so as to make the amount appropriated $200,000; and after the word "dollars," in line 6, insert "payable in four equal annual installments;" and strike out all after the word "consideration," in line 25, down to and including the word "monument," in line 26, and insert "of the sum herein appropriated: Provided, That nothing herein shall be so construed as to prohibit the said society from continuing its organization for the purpose of soliciting and collecting money and materials from the people in aid of the completion of the monument, and acting in an advisory and co-operative capacity with the commission hereinafter named until the completion and dedication of the same."

In line 2, page 2, strike out the word "and," and after the word "capital," in the same line, insert "the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army and the vice-president of the Washington National Monument Society."

Mr. HOLMAN. I would suggest that perhaps the word "people" as used there would not embrace the States as such. It is well known that many of the States propose to make contributions for the completion of this monument, and I therefore suggest that the words "State, associations, and" be inserted before the word "people."

Mr. FOSTER. I have no objection to that.

By unanimous consent, the amendment was agreed to.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations were then agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, before explaining the amendments to the Senate bill for completing the Washington Monument I propose briefly to refer to its history, the past and present plans, and the resources of the Washington National Monument Society.

Its history is so carefully stated by Mr. Chipman, Delegate from the District of Columbia, in a report made to the Forty-third Congress (report No. 485) as to induce me to copy it entire HISTORICAL REVIEW.

On the 7th of August, 1783, the Continental Congress resolved—

"That an equestrian statue of General Washington be erected at the place where the residence of Congress shall be established." It also directed that "the statue should be supported by a marble pedestal on which should be represented four principal events of the war in which he commanded in person."

On the pedestal were to have been engraved the following words:

"The United States, in Congress assembled, ordered this statue to be erected in the year of our Lord 1783, in honor of George Washington, the illustrious Commander-in-Chief of the Armies of the United States of America during the war which vindicated and secured their liberty, sovereignty, and independence."

Washington had at this time endeared himself to the American people as the great revolutionary leader in their struggle for liberty. As a civil ruler he was yet unknown. The extraordinary powers conferred upon him as the leader of the armies proved to be equally safe in his hands in the management of civil government, and it was as the President of the United States that he earned his proudest title to the gratitude of his country. At his death a joint committee of both Houses of Congress was appointed to consider a suitable manner of paying honor to his memory. It was resolved, among other things, by Congress, December 24, 1799—

"That a marble monument be erected by the United States at the city of Washington, and that the family of General Washington be requested to permit his body to be deposited under it; and that the monument be so designed as to commemorate the great events of his military and political life."

A copy of the resolutions was sent to his widow by the President of the United States. In her reply acceding to the request, she said:

"Taught by the great example which I have so long had before me never to oppose my private wishes to the public will, I need not, I cannot say what a sacrifice of individual feeling I make to a sense of public duty."

Great as must have been the struggle, deep and painful the sacrifice, the resolution of Congress which caused it remains unexecuted.

In the proceedings of the House of Representatives, as reported in the Annals of Congress, May 8, 1800, a select committee, of which Mr. Lee was chairman, submitted a series of resolutions directing that the resolution of Congress passed in 1783, respecting the equestrian statue of Washington, be carried into immediate execution; and that a marble monument be erected by the United States, at the capital, in honor of General Washington, to commemorate his services and to express the feeling of the American people for their irreparable loss.

The third resolution directs the President to carry these objects into execution, and appropriates, for the present, the sum of $100,000.

Upon consideration of this resolution, the first one relating to an equestrian statue was amended by requiring a mausoleum to be erected instead of the statue proposed.

No appropriation was made at that time, but later, on the 1st of January, 1801, a bill passed the House appropriating $200,000 in furtherance of this object, but for some reason the Senate did not concur.

The resolutions of Congress which have been referred to having remained unexecuted, in 1833 some citizens of Washington formed a voluntary association for erecting "a great national monument to the memory of Washington at the seat of the Federal Government." This was the original idea of Congress, and as there seemed no probability of its being carried out according to the original design, this voluntary association formed itself and invoked the aid of the whole people of the country to redeem the plighted faith of their Representatives. Chief Justice Marshall was the first president of this association. At his death, in 1835, he was succeeded by Ex-President Madison. In accepting his appointment, Mr. Madison, then in the eighty-fifth year of his age, said:

"I am very sensible of the distinction conferred by the relations in which the society has placed me, and feeling, like my illustrious predecessor, a deep interest in the object of the association, I cannot withhold, as an evidence of it, the acceptance of the appointment, though aware that in my actual condition it cannot be more than honorary, and that under no circumstances could it supply the loss which the society has sustained. A monument worthy the memory of Washington, reared by the means proposed, will commemorate at the same time a virtue, a patriotism, and a gratitude truly national, with which the friends of liberty everywhere will sympathize, and of which our country may always be proud."

The progress of the society was slow. It began upon the theory that, to allow all an opportunity to contribute, the amount to be received from any one person should be limited to $1.

In 1836 the subscriptions had reached the sum of $28,000, but the financial troubles which overspread the country in 1837 caused the suspension of collections for some time.

In 1845 the restriction upon the subscriptions was removed, and in 1847 the collection had reached the sum of $87,000, sufficient to warrant the commencement of the monument.

On the 31st of January, 1848, Congress passed a resolution authorizing the Washington Monument Society to erect "a monument to the memory of George Washington upon such portion of the public grounds or reservations within the city of Washington not otherwise occupied as shall be selected by the President of the United States and the board of managers of said society as a suitable site on which to erect the said monument and for the necessary protection thereof."

The site selected under the authority of this resolution was public reservation 3, containing upward of thirty acres, being the site where the unfinished monument now stands.

February 26, 1859, Congress incorporated the Washington National Monumental Society, and confirmed the grant of this reservation, as will be seen by the charter hereto appended.

The considerations which led to the selection of this site were stated by the association in its address to the people of the United States, made in 1855, as follows:

"The site selected presents a beautiful view of the Potomac; is so elevated that the monument will be seen from all parts of the surrounding country, and, being a public reservation, it is safe from any future obstruction of the view. It is so near the river that materials for constructing the monument can be conveyed to it from the river at but little expense.

* * * * * * *

"In addition to this, and kindred reasons, the adoption of the site was further and impressively recommended by the consideration that the monument to be erected on it would be in full view of Mount Vernon, where rest the ashes of the chief; and by the evidence that Washington himself, who with unerring judgment had selected this site to be the capital of the nation, had also selected this very spot for a "monument to the American Revolution," which, in the year 1795, it was proposed should "be erected or placed at the permanent seat of Government of the United States." This monument was to have been executed by Cerocihi, a Roman sculptor, and paid for by contributions of individuals. The same site is marked on Major L'Enfant's map of Washington City as the site for the equestrian statue of General Washington ordered by Congress in 1783; which map was examined, approved, and transmitted to Congress by him when President of the United States."

On the 4th of July, 1848, the corner-stone of this monument was laid in the presence of the President, Vice-President, and of Senators, Representatives, heads of Departments, the judiciary, the corporate authorities of Washington, and Georgetown and Alexandria, and delegations from all quarters of the Union. Robert C. Winthrop, then Speaker of the House of Representatives, delivered an oration. The work was commenced, and in about six years the obelisk had reached the height of one hundred and seventy feet, exhausting the funds of the society, amounting to $230,000.

In 1854, the funds being exhausted and all efforts to obtain further sums having proved abortive, the society presented a memorial to Congress representing that they were unable to devise any plan likely to succeed, and under the circumstances asked that Congress might take such action as it deemed proper.

The memorial was referred in the House of Representatives to a select committee of thirteen members, of which committee Hon. Henry May, of Maryland, was chairman.

On the 22d of February, 1855, Mr. May made to the House an eloquent and able report, in which, after a careful examination of the whole subject, the proceedings of the society were reviewed and approved, and an appropriation of $300,000 by Congress recommended "on behalf of the people of the United States to aid the funds of this society."

The report of Mr. May was brought before the House under most auspicious circumstances, but an unfortunate occurrence at the time caused a change of the management, and the temporary control of the society by rival aspiranta resulted in a defeat of the measure.

All progress toward the completion of the monument ceased during this contest for the control of the society. This change in the management demonstrated the difficulty of governing the society by a voluntary association consisting of members in all parts of the Union.

An application was accordingly made to Congress for a charter, which was granted on the 23d day of February, 1859, and was approved by the President on the 26th of the month, incorporating the Washington National Monument Society.

Since the year 1854 only four feet have been added to the obelisk; so that its present height is one hundred and seventy-four feet.

At the last Congress two reports were made, one by a standing committee of the House and the other by a select committee raised for the purpose of considering this subject, both of which strongly urged upon Congress its duty to complete the only monument attempted to be erected to the memory of Washington by the United States. One of these is Report No. 48, second session Forty-second Congress; the other, Report No. 79, third session Forty-second Congress.

And I also copy his report of the history of the plan as originally adopted, as well as the plan recommended by the committee of which Mr. Chipman was chairman:

PLAN OF THE MONUMENT.

That members may see precisely what the design of this monument was, the committee have appended to this report its description as originally prepared by the society.

The plan will be seen to embrace the idea of a grand circular colonnaded building, two hundred and fifty feet in diameter and one hundred feet high, from which springs an obelisk shaft seventy feet square at the base and five hundred feet high. This vast rotunda forming the base was to have been surrounded by thirty columns of massive proportions, surmounted by an entablature twenty feet high and crowned by a massive balustrade fifteen feet in height, the obelisk shaft rising from the pantheon diminishing in size to forty feet square at its apex.

The committee, however, find that the pantheon or base surrounding the obelisk is not necessary to the completion of the obelisk itself. The completion of the shaft may be accomplished at a proper height without reference to this elaborate and expensive pantheon, which is the feature of the plan most criticised.

It is recommended that the obelisk be completed substantially in accordance with the plan suggested by Lieutenant Marshall, of the Engineer Corps of the Army. This plan dispenses with the pantheon and substitutes a terrace at the base of the shaft, 200 feet square at the top, 17 feet high, terminating with slopes of two-thirds, with grass-plots and paved walks, and ascended by appropriate steps. The dimensions of the shaft would be 55 feet square at base, 38.33 feet square at the top, and 437.8 feet from apex to base of foundation. (See report of Lieutenant Marshall, hereto appended.)

This rich and massive shaft, which will when completed be the highest of its kind in the world, though simple and plain, would be a noble monument, worthy the sublime character which it is designed to testify. Within the obelisk and at appropriate places on the inner surface past which the circular stairway leading to the top is constructed are niches, in which are to be placed blocks of marble, stone, and other material which have been contributed by the States and Territories of the Union, by foreign governments, by societies in this country and elsewhere. These embrace some beautiful tributes to the memory of Washington, and have been sent to the society from almost every civilized country in the world. Switzerland, Rome, Bremen, Turkey, Greece, China, Japan, and other countries have united to do honor to our Washington; masonic societies, the order of Odd Fellows, fire companies, and children of the public schools of this country; some of the Indian nations have made contributions that ought to be placed in their appropriate niches as perpetual testimonials of the grateful affection in which the memory of the Father of his Country is cherished. A list of these contributions is hereto appended.

The plan finally adopted by the Washington National Monument Society increases the height to four hundred and eighty-five feet, and is in all other respects the same as adopted by the Chipman committee.

The statement made in the Senate that the total cost to complete the monument is three hundred and ten to three hundred and fifty thousand dollars was based upon the mistake of using the estimates for the plans adopted by the Chipman committee, whereas the present plan, and one now adopted, contemplates an increase of height from four hundred and thirty-seven and eight-tenths feet to four hundred and eighty-five feet. The cost of completing the monument on the present plan (four hundred and eighty-five feet) is estimated at $450,000.

When completed it will be five feet higher than Cheops, the highest point yet reached of any monument, obelisk, dome, or spire. The highest of such structures are the following:

	Feet.
Cheops's pyramid, in Egypt	480
Landshut, (spire,) Germany	465
Strasburg, (spire,) Germany	468
St. Peter's, (dome,) Rome	457
St. Paul's, (spire,) London	365
Capitol, (dome,) Washington	306
Bunker Hill Monument, Boston	221
Washington Monument, Baltimore	191
Washington National Monument, Washington	485

When it is completed the American people will have the satisfaction of looking upon the highest structure in the world.

RESOURCES.

Two hundred and thirty thousand dollars have already been expended. It is believed by the society that with the aid of the $200,000 appropriated in the bill we are considering they can raise the balance ($250,000) by voluntary subscription from the States, associations of all kinds, and the people. They have on hand at this time about $13,000 in money and convertible assets; they have in addition some $70,000 of subscription conditioned to be paid when there appears a reasonable prospect for the completion of the monument.

This society is now actively engaged in soliciting additional subscriptions, and it is not too much to hope that the impetus given by the joint action of Congress in this centennial year of our existence to the efforts made by the society will be responded to to the full extent of their anticipations.

The society is entitled to great credit for its patriotic and self-sacrificing endeavors through all the years of the past to keep alive the interest of the people in the noble work they had in hand. Not a dollar has been paid to any officer or member of the society, nor will there be in the future.

EXPLANATION OF AMENDMENTS TO SENATE BILL.

The first amendment increases the appropriation from $100,000 to $200,000, to be paid in four equal annual installments. We increased the appropriation and limited it to $50,000 annually because we hope by continuing the Washington National Monument Society in existence they can raise from the people the balance of the sum needed, and as it will take at least four years to complete the monument we limit the appropriation to $50,000 a year.

The second amendment, "that the United States hereby agree to complete said monument," we substituted in lieu thereof, as the consideration of the transfer of all the assets of the society to the United States, the words "of the sum herein appropriated." This puts the appropriation of $200,000 in the form of a donation, while at the same time it secures to the United States all the property and rights of every name and nature of the society.

The third amendment is a proviso which continues the organization of the society until the monument is dedicated, as advisory and co-operative with the commission provided for in the bill. We felt that the plan of the society, that all of the people should in their private capacity be permitted to contribute, ought to be continued. The society itself having so far accomplished all that has been done, their high character, their unselfish, untiring, and patriotic devotion to the cause were additional inducements to us for their further recognition.

The third amendment, striking out the word "and," is merely verbal.

The fourth amendment adds to the commission the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army and the first vice-president of the society, thus increasing the board from three members to five.

The present purpose is to complete the monument within five years, and that the dedication shall take place on the 19th of October, 1881, being the centennial of the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown to General Washington; also being the last act of his military career, as well as the last act in the great drama of the Revolution.

No act of this Congress has met with such universal satisfaction by all the people as the one pledging Congress to the completion of this monument.

I express the hope that when in 1881 this monument is completed and dedicated that all the rancors engendered by the war of the rebellion will have ceased and be forgotten. And that then, throughout all and every part of the Republic, every citizen, be he black or white, high or low, may be in the full and unrestrained possession of every right to which he is entitled under the Constitution and the laws.

The bill, as amended, is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2 0,000, payable in four equal annual installments, to continue the construction of the Washington Monument in the city of Washington: Provided, That before any portion of said sum shall be expended the proper officers of the Washington National Monument Society, incorporated by the act approved February 26, 1859, entitled "An act to incorporate the Washington National Monument Society," shall transfer and convey to the United States in due form all the property, easements, rights, and privileges, whether in possession, or in action, or in expectancy, belonging to the said corporation, for the uses and purposes set forth in said act of incorporation; and the said charter is so amended as to authorize the executive officers of said corporation to make said transfer and conveyance in consideration of the sum herein appropriated: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to prohibit said society from continuing its organization for the purpose of soliciting and collecting money and materials from States, associations, and the people in aid of the completion of the monument, and acting in an advisory and co-operative capacity with the commission hereinafter named until the completion and dedication of the same. And the construction of said monument shall be under the direction and supervision of the President of the United States, the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department, the Architect of the Capitol, the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, and the vice-president of the Washington National Monument Association, and in accordance with the laws regulating contracts and the construction of public buildings by the Treasury Department; and detailed reports of such expenditures shall be annually submitted to Congress.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FOSTER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order of business is the consideration of the contested-election case from the second congressional district of Virginia.

BENJAMIN P. RUNKEL.

Mr. HOGE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3996) to restore Benjamin P. Runkel to the retired list of the Army; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MARY CALLAM.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3997) for the relief of Mary Callam; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

HANS S. PETERSEN.

Mr. MORGAN, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back, with favorable recommendation, the bill (S. No. 709) for the relief of Hans S. Petersen; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

A. B. GREENWOOD.

Mr. MORGAN also, by unanimous consent, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 3653) for the relief of A. B. Greenwood, of Barry County, Missouri; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

EUNICE B. PHILLIPS.

Mr. BEEBE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3998) granting a pension to Eunice B. Phillips, of Newburgh, Orange County, New York; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ASHE. I ask unanimous consent to report a private bill from the Committee on the Judiciary for action at this time.

Mr. HURLBUT. I object.

Mr. BLAND. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I rise to a privileged question.

Mr. HILL. I wish the gentleman would allow me a moment.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Under the circumstances I must decline to yield to the request of the gentleman from Georgia, and I now yield to the gentleman from West Virginia, [Mr. WILSON.]

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. I ask that the message from the Senate communicating the proceedings of that body on the death of Hon. A. T. CAPERTON, late a Senator from the State of West Virginia, be now taken up.

The message from the Senate was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has received with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. ALLEN T. CAPERTON, late a Senator of the United States from the State of West Virginia.

Resolved, As a mark of respect for the memory of Mr. CAPERTON, the Senate will wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days.

Resolved, That a committee of four Senators be appointed by the Chair to accompany the remains to his late residence at Union, West Virginia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. DAVIS, Mr. COOPER, Mr. BOOTH, and Mr. HITCHCOCK the committee.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate the proceedings to the House of Representatives.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. In further respect to the memory of the distinguished Senator I offer the resolutions which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That as an additional mark of respect to ALLEN T. CAPERTON, late a Senator from the State of West Virginia, and in accord with the action of the Senate, a committee of seven members of this House be appointed, who, with the committee appointed by the Senate, shall accompany the body of the deceased Senator to its place of burial in the State of West Virginia.

Resolved, That this House do now adjourn.

The question was taken on the resolutions, and they were agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed the following as the committee on the part of the House: Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia, Mr. BANKS, Mr. LUTTRELL, Mr. DOUGLAS, Mr. HARDENBERGH, Mr. FAULKNER, and Mr. KASSON.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. HEREFORD, having arranged to accompany the remains of his relative, the late Senator from West Virginia, and important interests of the State requiring my presence here, I ask to be excused from service on this committee, and suggest that Mr. HEREFORD be appointed in my place.

The SPEAKER pro tempore accordingly appointed Mr. HEREFORD in place of Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia.

Mr. KASSON. My presence being required here on an important conference committee, I shall be unable to accompany my colleagues on this committee. I therefore ask to be excused.

The SPEAKER pro tempore appointed Mr. FORT in place of Mr. KASSON, excused.

The House then (at twelve o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.) adjourned.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, July 28, 1876.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of War, communicating the offer of the State of Texas and the International and Great Northern Railway Company to donate to the United States the land upon which Fort Elliott is built; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a letter of the Attorney-General, transmitting, in answer to a resolution of the 24th instant, a statement of the number of civil officers employed by the Department of Justice from 1859 to 1875, inclusive; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a letter of the Postmaster-General, transmitting, in answer to a resolution of the 24th instant, a statement of the number of civil officers employed by the Post-Office Department from 1859 to 1875, inclusive; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

IMPEACHMENT PROCEEDINGS—ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I offer the following order at this time, because it relates to the lapse in the impeachment business:

Ordered, Pursuant to Rule 25 for impeachments, that the Senate will resume the consideration of the articles of impeachment against William W. Belknap at twelve o'clock noon, this day.

Mr. INGALLS. As there are quite a number of Senators absent on unavoidable business, I would suggest to the Senator from Vermont that it might be advisable to modify the order so that it will read "at twelve o'clock on Monday next," at which time I understand those Senators will return.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am quite willing to submit to the pleasure of the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. I have no preference myself.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My object, of course, is to revive the proceeding; that is all.

Mr. ANTHONY. We might agree to take no vote to-day.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope there will be no postponement.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If we are to adjourn over to-morrow, as the respect we have shown to such occasions has usually led us to do, on account of the funeral of our late associate, [Mr. CAPERTON,] then I am not sure but that it would be better to say that we will take up the impeachment matter on Monday. May I ask any of the Senators if any of them are acquainted with the fact that his funeral at home is to be to-morrow?

Mr. RANDOLPH. That was the statement made yesterday by some of his friends.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was so informed yesterday.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I withdraw the order I offered for a moment, and move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next, for the reason I have stated, that the usual respect that we pay to such occasions is eminently due to this one.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont withdraws the proposed order and moves that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I offer the order again changed to Monday next, the 31st instant, if that be the date.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the order that the Senate will resume the consideration of the articles of impeachment against William W. Belknap at twelve o'clock, noon, Monday, the 31st instant.

The order was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suggest that the House of Representatives and the counsel be notified of this order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Due notice will be given.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WEST presented a petition of citizens of Louisiana, soldiers in the late war, praying for the passage of a law for the equalization of bounties of all soldiers who served during the late war upon the basis of actual term of service; which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. INGALLS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3894) granting a pension to Mrs. Elizabeth Custer, widow of the late George A. Custer, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3896) granting a pension to Marie Custer and Emanuel H. Custer, reported it with amendments.

Mr. BOUTWELL, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was recommitted the bill (H. R. No. 2799) to amend certain sections of titles 48 and 52 of the Revised Statutes of the United States concerning commerce and navigation and the regulation of steam-vessels, reported it with amendments.

Mr. ALLISON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3277) granting a pension to Kate Louise Roy, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2706) granting a pension to George W. Leamy, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 128) granting a pension to Frederick Vogel, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2159) granting a pension to Aaron H. Miller, late private of Company G, Twenty-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. WITHERS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2840) granting a pension to William Thomas, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2704) granting a pension to Joshua W. Black, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2078) granting a pension to George M. D. Thornton, late of Company C, One hundred and nineteenth Illinois Volunteers, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3180) granting a pension to Oscar C. Collins, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2846) granting a pension to Lovina Adeline Bowker, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. WADLEIGH, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 917) to enable Erastus T. Bussell, of Indianapolis, Indiana, to make application to the Commissioner of Patents for extension of letters-patent for a combined rubber and spiral steel spring, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3504) for the relief of Thomas Day, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 515) for the relief of Sarah E. Garland and Frank M. Hoppin, reported it without amendment.

Mr. HARVEY, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2260) providing for the sale of saline lands, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 940) for the relief of Edwin Ebert, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. WALLACE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1006) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to use the surplus of certain moneys heretofore appropriated; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LOGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1007) concerning the employment of Indian scouts; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. WEST. I offer the following order:

Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw the papers of Nolan S. Williams from the files of the Senate, copies of the same being left with the Secretary.

There has been an adverse report in this case, but I understand there is additional testimony.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Copies will be left. The order will be made if there be no objection.

R. H. BUCKNER.

Mr. COCKRELL. If there be no further morning business I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 2161, for the relief of R. H. Buckner.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore put the question on proceeding to the consideration of the bill, and declared that the ayes appeared to prevail.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask for a division.

The question being again put, there were on a division—ayes 19, noes 4; no quorum voting.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

Mr. SARGENT. I ask for the yeas and nays on taking up the bill, which will be equivalent to calling the roll.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask for a call of the Senate. It is the shortest way. My asking a division was not to oppose the taking up of the bill, but I thought there was not a quorum here and we ought not to do business unless we have a quorum.

Mr. SARGENT. Whether there is a quorum here can be ascertained by calling the yeas and nays on taking up the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I know; but it can be ascertained much more easily the other way.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to hear the bill read.

The Chief Clerk again read the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will state for the information of the Senate that this bill was reported from the Committee on Claims by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CAMERON] unanimously. There is no controversy about it. The bill has already passed the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The point we are at is to find whether there is a quorum at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no quorum present, and the roll-call will proceed.

The Secretary called the roll, and thirty-six Senators answered to their names.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Thirty-six Senators are present, which makes a quorum.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Thirty-six? Are there not seventy-two Senators?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] has not been sworn. The rule says "chosen and sworn." Thirty-six therefore now constitute a quorum.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there a quorum present?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a quorum present. The question is, Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of this bill, upon which a division is called?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not insist on a division. My only object was to ascertain if a quorum was present.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 2161) for the relief of R. H. Buckner. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Richard H. Buckner, a citizen of Virginia, $3,470.83, this amount being the proceeds of certain real estate of Buckner, sold for taxes by the Government of the United States in February, 1864, less the amount of tax, penalty, interest, and costs; but before payment is made, Buckner or his legal representatives are to make and execute a valid quitclaim and deed of conveyance of all his right, title, claim, or interest to the property to and in favor of the purchaser of the property at the tax sale, her heirs and assigns, without interest.

Mr. SARGENT. I should like to hear the report read.

The Secretary read the following report submitted by Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Claims, May 22:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2161) for the relief of Richard H. Buckner, have considered the same, and submit the following report:

On the 18th of February last, Mr. ELLIS, from the Committee on War Claims in the House of Representatives, made the following report on this bill, namely:

"In February, 1864, certain real estate, the property of R. H Buckner, a citizen of Virginia, was sold by the United States authorities for non-payment of the United States internal-revenue tax due upon it.

"The property was situated in Alexandria, Virginia. The amount of the tax, costs, penalties, and interest was $29.17. The property was adjudicated to Mrs. Lydia Kelly, at the price of $3,500. This sum, less the tax, costs, &c., amounting to $3,470 83, was covered into the United States Treasury, and is still there.

"Your committee is not aware of any statute under which the proper relief can be given to the claimant. He is clearly entitled to relief at the hands of Congress. Your committee suggest that, inasmuch as the purchaser at the sale by the Government might be evicted hereafter by suit at law for some defect or informality in said sale by the claimant, (Buckner,) provision should be made to secure the ratification by him of the sale.

"Your committee therefore report the accompanying substitute for bill H. R. No. 753, and recommend its passage."

Upon examining the evidence which accompanied the bill from the House, we did not find satisfactory proof that the claimant was the owner of the premises in question at the time the same was sold for the non-payment of said taxes. This defect has been supplied, and it now satisfactorily appears to your committee that the claimant became the owner of said premises in 1853 and was the owner thereof at the time of said sale. There is no general law under which this money can be paid to claimant, and hence the necessity for the passage of this bill.

Your committee therefore recommend that the passage of said bill be concurred in by the Senate.

Mr. HOWE. I wish the Senator in charge of the bill would explain what is meant by the property being adjudicated to somebody for a certain sum of money?

Mr. COCKRELL. I will explain that point. In 1862 a law was passed authorizing these lands to be sold for taxes, called the direct-tax sales. This adjudication was a judgment of sale that the property be sold, and under this adjudication the land was sold, the tax paid, and the balance of the money placed in the Treasury, where it remains to-day.

Mr. HOWE. Does the Senator mean to say that the purchaser at the tax sale paid that amount of money to the Government for the land?

Mr. COCKRELL. The purchaser paid that amount of money to the Government. It was a lot; it had all to be sold in one parcel, and that was the price which was paid.

Mr. HOWE. Let me ask one other question. Has the committee examined the records to see whether there has been a transfer of this title or of this claimant's title since the sale? The bill provides that he shall quitclaim his title. Has he made any disposition of his title heretofore?

Mr. COCKRELL. He has made no disposition of it since.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I see the Senator from Missouri is speaking of this as a direct-tax sale under the tax laws of the United States of all lands, if I correctly understand him.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The report of the House committee says it was a sale for internal-revenue taxes; so that the state of the law about direct taxes does not apply at all. It was a sale for internal-revenue taxes, the House report says. That is all I know about it. The bill does not say either way.

Mr. BOUTWELL. It must have been a sale for a distillery.

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, no; it was for direct taxes in an insurrectionary district. There may have been an internal-revenue tax too.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It could not have been both.

Mr. COCKRELL. If the Senator will turn to volume 12, page 422, of the Statutes he will see the law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is an act for the collection of direct taxes in insurrectionary districts within the United States, and for other purposes. The act refers solely to the direct tax and provides for its collection in insurrectionary States. The report of the committee, taking up the House report, says:

In February, 1864, certain real estate, the property of R. H. Buckner, a citizen of Virginia, was sold by the United States authorities for non-payment of the United States internal-revenue tax due upon it.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I think that is an error. I think it was not an internal-revenue tax, but the direct tax upon land. The word "adjudicated" used in the House report I think is not the correct word. It was sold to Mrs. Kelly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury about it?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. There is.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear it read.

Mr. WRIGHT. If no one has the floor I wish to ascertain if I understand this case.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have the floor but I am looking for the statute, and I yield it with pleasure.

Mr. WRIGHT. I do not wish to take the floor in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary has found the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. WRIGHT. I understand this is the case of the sale of land for the payment of a direct tax under the laws of Congress; that the land was sold, instead of adjudicated to the person here named; and that she paid for the land $3,500, if that is the amount, and this sum was covered into the Treasury, less the tax. There was due to the Government some $29, and the proposition of this bill is to repay the person the balance of the $3,500, less the tax. The officers of the Internal-Revenue Department having no power under the law to repay it, it becomes necessary to provide a law of Congress authorizing the payment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why do you say "internal revenue?"

Mr. WRIGHT. Because those matters are under the supervision of the Internal-Revenue Office.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri whether any inquiry has been made as to whether there were any liens on that property in the shape of mortgages or judgments, the holder of which might have an equitable claim against this money in the Treasury?

Mr. COCKRELL. There was nothing of the kind.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to inquire of my friend from Wisconsin whether this claimant, Buckner, was loyal to the United States during the rebellion.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The evidence was entirely satisfactory to the committee that he was loyal to the United States during the whole period of the rebellion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Did the committee make any inquiry whether anything had been done under the twelfth section of the act of 1862 as to the disposition of the proceeds?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I do not know as to that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The twelfth section, to which I call my friend's attention, provides:

That the proceeds of said leases and sales shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, one-fourth of which shall be paid over to the governor of said State wherein said lands are situated, or his authorized agent, when such insurrection shall be put down, and the people shall elect a Legislature and State officers who shall take an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, and such fact shall be proclaimed by the President for the purpose of re-imbursing the loyal citizens of said State, or such other purposes as said State may direct; and one fourth shall also be paid over to said State as a fund to aid in the colonization or emigration from said State of any free persons of African descent who may desire to remove therefrom to Hayti, Liberia, or any other tropical state or colony.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Nothing has been done under that provision.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I rather think, from what I am told, that that section was repealed in 1863, so that there is no trouble about it.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I ask that the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the letter.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, April 3, 1876.

SIR: Your letter of the 30th ultimo is received, in which you state that certain property in Alexandria, Virginia, assessed in the name of R. H. Buckner, was sold under the direct-tax law for $3,500, the tax, penalty, &c., due being $29.17, and that a bill for the return to Mr. Buckner of the amount received over and above the amount of the tax, penalty, &c., has passed the House of Representatives and is now under consideration by the Senate Committee on Claims, and in which you inquire whether the money can be paid under the provision of section 36 of the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861, and whether there is any general law under which such payment can be made.

The Department has uniformly regarded the section to which you refer as inapplicable to sale made under the act of July 1, 1862, and the laws amendatory thereof; and there is no general statute bearing on the subject.

Very respectfully,

B. H. BRISTOW, Secretary.

Hon. ANGUS CAMERON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION INVESTIGATION.

Mr. SARGENT. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3927) making an appropriation to defray the expenses of the joint select committee to investigate Chinese immigration, to report the same back without amendment and ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill which appropriates $7,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to defray the expenses of the investigation into Chinese immigration by the joint select committee appointed for that purpose, one-half to be paid into the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half into the contingent fund of the House of Representatives.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JULIA A. SCHUTT.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask leave to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. No. 197) granting a pension to Julia A. Schutt, widow of Martin Schutt, a deceased soldier, was indefinitely postponed, and that it be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions.

There being no objection, it was so ordered.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WINDOM. I move that the vacancy in the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. No. 3478) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, caused by the death of the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. CAPERTON,] be filled.

The motion was agreed to; and Mr. KERNAN was appointed to fill the vacancy.

SWAMP LANDS IN ALABAMA.

Mr. WINDOM. If in order, I move that the Senate take up House bill No. 236, and I am sure if the bill is read every Senator will approve it, because it presents a case never before presented in this country, in which a State asks the Congress of the United States to permit a certain application of funds arising from the sale of swamp lands. Usually the States have diverted them to some other purpose than that for which they were granted; but in this case the State of Alabama has the funds in her treasury, and asks that Congress permit those funds to be devoted to the construction of an asylum. I think it is a very proper request, and ought to be granted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What does the law require?

Mr. WINDOM. The law appropriates the swamp lands for the construction of levees and the draining of overflowed lands; but the States have thus far appropriated them to anything they chose, railroads and everything else; but the State of Alabama asks the consent of Congress that she may make this appropriation. I move to take up the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 236) to give consent of the United States to the appropriation of certain proceeds arising from the sale of the swamp and overflowed lands in Alabama for the purpose of furnishing other and additional accommodations for the indigent, insane, and idiotic persons resident in said State, was considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does not the bill provide universally for all sales hereafter as well as existing ones?

Mr. WINDOM. I think not. Let that clause be read again.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It seems to me that it is a general consent to anything.

The bill was read.

Mr. WINDOM. I move to amend by inserting the words "now in the treasury of said State" after the word "lands."

Mr. EDMUNDS. How much are the proceeds?

Mr. WINDOM. I understand the amount is about twenty-five thousand or twenty-six thousand dollars.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask for what purpose this money is to be used?

Mr. WITHERS. For the insane and idiotic.

Mr. WINDOM. It is to be used in the construction of an asylum for the colored people, as I understand.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is a violation of the trust undertaken by the people of the State, a violation of a trust in which the settlers have an interest, an express violation of the only ground on which these grants to the States were defended or are defensible. These lands were given to enable the State to clear away the swamps and improve the rest of the land and enable Congress to sell the residue of the land at an increased price. By the express terms of the law the proceeds of these lands must be devoted to reclaim other lands and improve other lands so as to enable the Government to get back the benefit of this liberal grant in the sale of the remaining public lands.

This may be a small matter, but it is practically a revolution and a surrender of the whole system on which the grants to the States of the swamp lands have been made. I have no doubt this surrender to the States of swamp lands has been more productive of frauds, shameless wrongs, petty stealing, than almost any other law, because lands have been entered under the name of swamp lands that are high, rolling, and beautiful lands. Now to complete the farce it is proposed to appropriate the proceeds of these swamp lands to the ordinary distribution of charity in a State instead of being devoted as the law requires them to be to the improvement of other lands in the neighborhood and thus enable the Government of the United States to sell the residue of its lands at a reasonable price.

Mr. WINDOM. The reason given by the Senator from Ohio would undoubtedly be a good one if the law had ever been complied with in any State, but I think it is a fact that, with the exception of this single application on the part of the State of Alabama, every State to which swamp lands have been granted has appropriated the funds derived therefrom to anything it chose, and seldom, if ever, to the draining of the swamp lands. It seems to me that, this being the first application to make a legal disposition of this thing, to comply with the law, or at least to ask Congress to change it without doing it contrary to the law, it is a case where we ought to receive the application with a good deal of favor.

Mr. SHERMAN. All I can say is that I must express my surprise. I know that in Indiana and Ohio attempts have been made at least to carry on works of draining, and the money has been invested, sometimes foolishly, sometimes wastefully, in the attempt to improve other lands; but I am surprised to hear the broad statement made that this law has been violated in every instance. If so, our first duty is to repeal the law which grants to the States these swamp lands.

Mr. WINDOM. I am glad to hear the testimony from the Senator from Ohio that an attempt has been made in some quarters to appropriate the swamp lands in the way prescribed by law. I should be very glad indeed to have the specific improvements ever made by the swamp-land grants pointed out. I have heard the statement frequently made as broad as I have made it; and, if I am wrong, I am glad to be corrected. I think the instances in which the law has been complied with are very rare. But upon the statement of the Senator from Ohio of course I am now satisfied that there are some exceptions to the broad statement I have made.

Mr. WEST. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, I wish to say in regard to the State of Louisiana that she has spent millions and millions of dollars upon her levee system, protecting the lands of that State granted by the Government, and protecting the remaining lands of the United States Government; and were a balance struck to-day as between the treasury of that State and the Treasury of the United States, we have expended millions upon that account.

Mr. WINDOM. I know that in many of the Western States the proceeds of the swamp lands have been devoted to railroad companies and in every other way rather than to the draining of swamp and overflowed lands, as the law prescribes.

Mr. SARGENT. If any State has given the proceeds of its swamp lands, or the swamp lands themselves, to any railroad company, it was in violation of the agreement with Congress for the reclamation of these lands. I know that in California the proceeds of these lands have been devoted by State statute expressly to the reclamation of the lands. I have never believed, however, in these swamp-land gifts to the States, not because if merely swamp lands were given to the States to be reclaimed it would not have been beneficial, but because by false constructions of the law, by false testimony as to the character of the lands, large amounts of land not swamp in the contemplation of Congress in the original acts or in the subsequent ones have been taken away from the Government of the United States, and, what is worse, from the settlers who had settled upon them and improved them, and who found that any right which they had by pre-emption or homestead was cut out by a pretended grant under the swamp-land law antedating the rights which they had acquired. The whole system of swamp-land grants has been a great curse to the United States; but I never knew that, in addition to other mischiefs brought about by that system, the money had been squandered by giving it to railroads or disposed of illegally and not applied to the reclamation of the lands. I doubt whether it is well for the Government by this bill to sanction a system of this kind. In fact if States have thus squandered the money arising from these lands and have not devoted it to the reclaiming of them, it seems to me it might be well for Congress to require that some proceedings be taken in the courts to compel the execution of the trust which was put in these States for the reclamation of the lands or the payment of the money into the United States Treasury in order that we may so apply it.

Mr. MITCHELL. Has not the Supreme Court of the United States decided that that provision of the law is only directory?

Mr. SARGENT. The provision of law was directory, but it was an express provision of the grant. I am not here to attack or defend the opinions of the Supreme Court of the United States. I know the Supreme Court of the United States once said that after Congress had by most careful laws hedged around the rights of pre-emptors, had stated the manner in which they should proceed under its laws to acquire an inchoate title which should ripen by payment of the purchase-money, yet no right accrued under any of these laws or by compliance with them. I might go on and refer to other decisions of the Supreme Court which in my judgment, not enlighted by them, I should consider to be extremely hard on the settlers, and were it not for these opinions of the Supreme Court I should say extremely unjust. I do not desire, however, to use language of that kind toward that tribunal; but when they come in and say that when Congress gives a grant of land on the express condition that the accepting party shall improve that land the consideration moving from the United States being that by the improvment of this land its own land adjacent is improved, this is not a contract with the accepting party which binds it, I should rank this with the other decision of the Supreme Court which denied pre-emptors any right after Congress by a dozen statutes had endeavored to confer rights on them. If, however, the right does not exist on the part of the United States to require compliance with the conditions of the grants, then it is about time we had legislation on the statute-book so plain and clear that even the Supreme Court of the United States might understand its provisions and hold that the United States had some right to enforce the conditions of grants which it makes to parties who accept them and take the benefit of them.

I trust this bill will not pass, because it is a sanction of a loose theory; it is a sanction of the idea that a party receiving on conditions benefits from the Government of the United States may disregard those conditions, and at any rate may appropriate the money to another purpose and afterward come in and ask Congress to sanction such malappropriation of money. Congress is too much played with in these things. The rights of the people which it endeavors to protect are too much disregarded by those who receive these benefits. Lobbyists come here on behalf of some corporation and ask certain privileges at the hands of Congress. They profess their desire to do a certain great public good; they are as disinterested and patriotic as it is possible for their own language to describe them; but after they have got their hands and their pockets full of benefits from the Congress of the United States, they forget all about their promises, all about the obligations which are put in the law. All the barriers which we raise to protect the Treasury of the United States or the rights of the people these corporations break through as through a net of cobwebs and all the precautions we have taken go for nothing. I am opposed to sanctioning at any rate this course of proceeding on the part of corporations and States that have received these benefits from the Government of the United States. I would hold them to the law. If they see fit to violate it and we have no remedy, then let it go; but I do not desire so far as I am concerned to be particeps criminis in the illegal diversion of the money arising from these lands.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I agree with a great deal of what the Senator from California says; but the Senator from California argues as though there had been an illegal diversion of this fund by the States. I do not understand it so.

Mr. SARGENT. I spoke of this diversion in Alabama. I said in California they had not been so diverted.

Mr. MITCHELL. I understand that the act making these grants incorporated in it a direction as to the disposition of the fund, and I understand that the Supreme Court of the United States has decided that that was merely directory and not binding upon the different States and that they could make any use of this fund they saw proper. I know that as a matter of fact, as stated by the honorable Senator from Minnesota, a great many of the States have made dispositions of the fund different from that pointed out in the statute. In relation to the case in Alabama, the State of Alabama comes to Congress and says to Congress, "Here we would like to make a certain disposition of these funds, we would like to devote these funds for the benefit of the insane and idiotic." They do not propose, although the decision of the Supreme Court is as I have already said, to make any diversion of funds unless with the consent of Congress. It seems to me as they come here and ask this in view of the disposition of the funds by different States, they ought to be allowed to make this disposition of these particular funds in Alabama. It is certainly for a very meritorious purpose.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the express condition on which all these grants were made. I turn to the act of September 28, 1850:

> The proceeds of said lands, whether from sale or by direct appropriation in kind, shall be applied exclusively, as far as necessary, to the reclaiming said lands by means of levees and drains.

That is the sole purpose for which the grants are made.

Mr. HOWE. Where do you find that section?

Mr. SHERMAN. On page 456 of the Revised Statutes, section 2480.

Mr. McDONALD. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio if there should be a surplus of the funds after the necessary improvements have been made, whether that, in his opinion, would revert to the United States?

Mr. SHERMAN. I think not.

Mr. McDONALD. Might not the State in that case very properly ask the consent of Congress to invest it in some benevolent institution?

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the case could not arise, because from the very nature of the grant, these being swamp lands, they want draining, and the draining conducted in almost any way the Senator knows would exhaust the fund.

Mr. McDONALD. But it does not necessarily exhaust the fund; the land may still yield twice the amount that the ditching will cost. I do not understand that the bill under consideration proposes to disregard the terms upon which these grants were made, but that it asks simply the consent of Congress to apply the surplus of the fund now in the treasury of Alabama arising from the sale of swamp lands to the construction of an insane asylum.

Mr. SHERMAN. In other words, it authorizes a repeal or modification of the law by taking the money which is directed to be applied to draining these lands, for some other purpose. These lands are sold to private persons, and this condition runs along with the grant to provide persons, and these private persons have at least an equitable right to demand that the money they have paid for these lands shall be expended in reclaiming these very lands. The proceeds are to be applied for draining as far as necessary. So no question could arise except in the event of the fund being larger than the sum necessary to drain the lands.

Mr. DAWES. I do not know that I quite understand the Senator from Ohio. Am I to understand him to say that the owners of this land have an equitable right to any of the money which lies over?

Mr. SHERMAN. I never said such a thing as that. I said that the owners of the lands, the persons to whom the State sold these lands, have the equitable right to demand that the State should expend the money received for them for the very purpose pointed out by the act of Congress, because that obligation on the part of the State to expend the proceeds is an obligation which attaches throughout.

Mr. DAWES. The condition that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. McDONALD] suggested would be a condition where there would be a surplus after the lands were drained.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is no pretense of a surplus in any case, and this bill does not go on the idea that there is a surplus.

Mr. HOWE. Allow me to ask the Senator who is to be judge under this act of what portion of the proceeds it is necessary to expend?

Mr. SHERMAN. In the first instance the State, and the State is bound in the exercise of this trust and the disbursement of this money, which is not hers but the proceeds of the property of the United States, to do what is just and reasonable. We cannot sue the State; we cannot send the State to the penitentiary, nor can we enforce this equitable claim in a court of equity; but we can demand of the State as a condition of continuing this grant of swamp lands that it shall do what is right according to law between it and the United States and its grantees.

Mr. HOWE. The question of repudiating or rescinding or revoking this grant is not before us. When that comes up, there will be several things to be suggested in reference to the passage of such a bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

The motion was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 32, noes 8.

WILLIAM C. NICHOLS.

Mr. WRIGHT. A little bill introduced by our presiding officer was referred to the Committee on Claims involving $183 about which there is no controversy. Our presiding officer having introduced the bill and seldom occupying the floor, I ask my colleague to yield that I may call up the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection provided it takes no time.

Mr. WRIGHT. The claim ought to be paid. There is no doubt about it. It is Senate bill No. 904.

By unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 904) for the relief of William C. Nichols, late assistant treasurer of the United States at Chicago, Illinois, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It appropriates $183.43 to pay William C. Nichols, late assistant treasurer of the United States at Chicago, Illinois, the difference between the pay of cashier in that office and the full pay of assistant treasurer for a period of twenty-seven days which elapsed between the date of the commission to Nichols appointing him assistant treasurer of the United States and the filing of his official bond thereafter, and for which period he performed the duties of assistant treasurer and received the pay of cashier.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested:

A bill (H. R. No. 3989) for the relief of Catharine and Sophia Germain; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 154) prohibiting supply of special metallic cartridges to hostile Indians.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, with amendments; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (S. No. 614) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to deposit certain funds in the United States Treasury in lieu of investment; and

A bill (S. No. 982) providing for the completion of the Washington Monument.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 774) to remove the political disabilities of Samuel Jones, of Virginia.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker pro tempore of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 3963) to amend subsections 246 and 251 of section 12 of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes," approved June 23, 1874, and for other purposes, and also to amend section 3954 of the Revised Statutes; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

CAPTAIN EDWARD S. MEYER.

Mr. LOGAN. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referrred the bill (H. R. No. 36) to restore the name of Captain Edward S. Meyer to the active list of the Army, to report it with an amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the Senate will pass that bill at once. It is a small matter for a gallant officer.

By unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. No. 36) to restore the name of Captain Edward S. Meyer to the active list of the Army was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was to insert at the end of the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That the time that he has been on the retired list shall not be counted in his service in giving promotion.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. U. S. GRANT, jr., his Secretary, announced that the President had on the 26th instant approved and signed the act (S. No. 332) to amend the act entitled "An act to amend and supplement an act entitled 'An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States,' approved March 2, 1867, and for other purposes," approved June 22, 1874.

JONATHAN WHITE.

Mr. ALLISON. I agreed to yield to the junior Senator from Illinois to pass a little bill that was cut off the other day, which I do today.

Mr. OGLESBY. I hope the Clerk will turn to a bill for the amount or $55.40 for the benefit of a citizen of Minnesota, a bill reported from the Committee on Public Lands, to which there is no exception. The money was paid into the Treasury through mistake. The register and receiver of the land office and the Commissioner of the General Land Office state the fact, and the bill is simply to pay the man back that $55.40. I reported it the other morning.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Meantime may I make a conference report? The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 1594) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, report that, after full and free conference, they have been unable to agree. I move that the Senate further insist and ask another conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Jersey that the Senate further insist on its amendments to House bill No. 1594 and ask a further conference.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President, looking at this matter carefully and considerately, it seems to me that we have about arrived at that point where it becomes the duty of the Senate to itself and to the country to adhere to our former votes amending this bill. I inquire of the Senator or of the Chair, to how many committees of conference has this bill already been committed?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. My impression is to two.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair's impression is three.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I am not certain.

Mr. HAMLIN. I should like to have the papers looked at carefully. I had the impression that the bill had been referred to as many as four committees of conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The impression of the Chair is three.

Mr. HAMLIN. Then this will make the fourth.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed by examining the record this is the third conference committee.

Mr. HAMLIN. The Senate carefully considered this bill, and as it came to us in my judgment it was one of great injury, not to say almost destruction, to a portion of the commerce of the country. The consular portion of it seems to have been treated by men who knew nothing about what they were dealing with. They were like the angels of destruction scattering fire-brands, arrows, and death, and folding their arms careless of results, saying "We are but in sport." The consular system is self-sustaining; it draws no money from your Treasury. It is more than self-sustaining; it contributes of its funds to the support of your Government by the moneys which are gathered into the Treasury, and this bill in instance after instance where consulates are requisite for the purpose of certifying manifests and discharging a variety of duties devolving upon them by law, abolishes them. It is a recklessness in the treatment of the commercial affairs of this country that challenges and demands the attention of this body. When you pass from that and go to the diplomatic portion of it, it proposes to send your agents to foreign governments upon terms and conditions that shall be a reproach to this country. Time after time this bill is to go to a conference committee headed as are other committees by men who may justly be denominated in politics the Titus Oates and the William Bedloe of the day. Is it not time for this body to say what we will do? We want, we demand, our duties require that a bill providing for your consulates and for the diplomatic service should be passed. Why not adhere to our vote and let this enormity die? I suppose all Senators like myself will be glad to get away from this heated place; I suppose we shall get away if we live long enough. Now, in the line of duty and in the line of economy I hold that it is about time to adhere to our vote upon this bill and let it die the death of the unrighteous, and then let the House understand what is the position that we mean to occupy if we do mean to occupy it; at least let us know what we shall do one with the other, and then let a bill appropriate, a bill that shall be commensurate with the dignity and character of this great Republic in foreign lands and one which the just demands of commerce require at our hands be originated and sent to us. I think, sir, I will not submit the motion now, but if the thing ever comes back I will make a motion to adhere and vote for that motion if no other Senator shall vote with me.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did not know that this report was to be made at the present time or I should have been present and had something to say. I a good deal agree with what the Senator from Maine has said. We have had three conferences already upon this bill, and certainly the last one has failed on the distinct issue of whether the Senate of the United States shall be compelled, whether it believes it to be right or not, to change the laws of the United States as the price of having the House of Representatives agree that any money shall be spent for the public service at all. Every possible method of proposing to the House of Representatives—which, I presume, the Senator from New Jersey has explained—the means of fair inquiry into the state of the service and the giving to each House its own independent rights and of providing, where the Houses cannot agree, that that House should recede which proposed something new, has been exhausted. I do not think that the ingenuity of man can contrive any new way of proposing to the House through its conferees a method of adjusting this subject that has not been proposed short of taking the broad step across the line, as was urged upon us by the House conferees, and saying that the provisions of law regulating salaries or any other branch of the public service that directly involved the expenditure of money belonged of right, some said constitutionally of right, and others said of real and philosophic right, to the House of Representatives, and that the Senate would be violating its duty to resist any change in the law that the House of Representatives demanded that affected the expenditure of public money. We have come down by inevitable steps and processes to a disagreement, I believe every time, certainly this time, upon that identical proposition.

The Senate conferees proposed to the House conferees first, through our honorable chairman, if the House thought the total of the money they had appropriated for this purpose was sufficient for the public service, to say "we will grant this sum as a total, leaving it to be expended in the discretion of the President of the United States for the best interests of the public good, limited by existing provisions of law, the law of a year ago in appropriations to the objects, no new ones, for the purposes, no new ones, and in the amounts, no new ones, provided by the pre-existing appropriations." The only discretion under that proposition left to the President would be to discontinue various branches of the diplomatic and consular service in order that out of the money he had he might carry on those that are most important. That was rejected.

Then it was proposed that the Senate would take the sum appropriated specifically by the House of Representatives for the specific object, although it did not cover what the law required, and would agree, and would not only agree but were desirous, as all the Senate is, that every branch of the public service shall be inquired into and economized where justice allows; that there should be a joint committee to inquire into all this consular and diplomatic service, to report at the next session, and if on reporting at the next session the two Houses should be of opinion that reductions could be made, offices dispensed with, such reductions and abolishments of offices should have relation to this present year, so that in that case no possible detriment could happen to the public service. That was rejected.

Then the Senate conferees proposed that they would recommend that the Senate should recede from every one of its amendments increasing appropriations upon the ground that the House had a right to take the responsibility if it thought it just, or if it did not it had the right to take the responsibility of appropriating only one-half, or one-fourth, or one-tenth, or anything at all for branches of the public service existing by law, and that the House should recede from its proposition to change the law into something else. That was rejected.

It ought to be said, however, that in respect to this proposition that applied to all these various ways of getting at it, for a commission to inquire, the House conferees said they were willing to have a commission to inquire, but as a condition to that there must be in this bill the provision that the law should stand as changed, changing the salaries, abolishing the offices that the House did not think were right, until the two Houses hereafter should agree to make it otherwise. In other words, the proposition on the part of the House is, "We will change the law now blindly," because they had no facts to offer us respecting any one of these points, for we took them up on some of the items as leading and test ones; they had no facts to offer except the general talk, which we all agree to, that everybody ought to be economical. They say "You are now to take this change of the law and make the law say that the present sums appropriated shall be the law of salaries and be the law of places of public service in foreign countries until afterward we find out that we are wrong." In other words, "We will change the law now without any definite reason, and if by and by we can find a good reason for believing that it ought to be changed back again, we will change it." That appeared to the Senate conferees not to be a proposition which was just, philosophic, or logical. I cannot properly use any more expressive phrase with the high respect we hold and are bound to hold for the House of Representatives.

